Mr. JUSTICE BRANDEIS delivered the opinion of the Court.

The New Jersey automobile law of 1906, as amended in 1908 (P. L. 1908, p. 613), provides in substance that no person, whether a resident or nonresident of the state, shall drive an automobile upon a public highway unless he shall have been licensed so to do and the automobile shall have been registered under the statute; and also that a nonresident owner shall appoint the Secretary of State his attorney upon whom process may be served "in any action or legal proceeding caused by the operation of his registered motor vehicle, within this state, against such owner." The statute fixes the driver's license fee for cars of less than thirty horse power at two dollars and more than thirty horse power at four dollars. It fixes the registration fee at three dollars for cars of not more than ten horse power; five dollars for those from eleven to twenty-nine horse power; and ten dollars for those of thirty or greater horse power. Both license fees and registration fees, whensoever issued, expire at the close of the calendar year. The moneys received from license and registration fees in excess of the amount required for the maintenance of the Motor Vehicle Department are to be applied to the maintenance of the improved highways. Penalties are prescribed for using the public highways without complying with the requirements of the act. * * *

Kane, a resident of New York, was arrested while driving his automobile on the public highways of New Jersey, and tried in the Recorder's Court. The following facts were stipulated: Kane had been duly licensed as a driver under the laws of both New York and New Jersey. He had registered his car in New York, but not in New Jersey. He had not filed with the secretary of state of New Jersey the prescribed instrument appointing that official his attorney upon whom process might be served. When arrested he was on his way from New York to Pennsylvania. The aggregate receipts from license and registration fees for the year exceeded the amount required to defray the expenses of the Motor Vehicle Department, so that a large sum became available for maintenance of the improved roads of the state. Kane contended that the statute was invalid as to him, a nonresident, because it violated the Constitution and laws of the United States regulating interstate commerce, and also because it violated the Fourteenth Amendment. These contentions were overruled, and he was fined $5. The conviction was duly reviewed both in the supreme court and by the Court of Errors and Appeals. The contentions were repeated in both of those courts; and both courts affirmed the conviction. Kane v. New Jersey, 81 N. J. L. 594. The case was brought here by writ of error.

The power of a state to regulate the use of motor vehicles on its highways has been recently considered by this court and broadly sustained. It extends to nonresidents as well as to residents. It includes the right to exact reasonable compensation for special facilities afforded as well as reasonable provisions to ensure safety. And it is properly exercised in imposing a license fee graduated according to the horse power of the engine. Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 610. Several reasons are urged why that case should not be deemed controlling:

1. The Maryland law did not require the nonresident to appoint an agent within the state upon whom process may be served. But it was recognized in discussing it, that "the movement of motor vehicles over the highways is attended by constant and serious dangers to the public." We know that ability to enforce criminal and civil penalties for transgression is an aid to securing observance of laws. And in view of the speed of the automobile and the habits of men, we cannot say that the legislature of New Jersey was unreasonable in believing that ability to establish, by legal proceedings within the state, any financial liability of nonresident owners, was essential to public safety. There is nothing to show that the requirement is unduly burdensome in practice. It is not a discrimination against nonresidents, denying them equal protection of the law. On the contrary, it puts nonresident owners upon an equality with resident owners.

2. The Maryland law contained a reciprocal provision by which nonresidents whose cars are duly registered in their home state are given, for a limited period, free use of the highways in return for similar privileges granted to residents of Maryland. Such a provision promotes the convenience of owners and prevents the relative hardship of having to pay the full registration fee for a brief use of the highways. It has become common in state legislation; and New Jersey has embodied it in her law since the trial of this case in the lower court. But it is not an essential of valid regulation. Absence of it does not involve discrimination against nonresidents; for any resident similarly situated would be subjected to the same imposition. A resident desiring to use the highways only a single day would also have to pay the full annual fee. The amount of the fee is not so large as to be unreasonable; and it is clearly within the discretion of the state to determine whether the compensation for the use of its highways by automobiles shall be determined by way of a fee, payable annually or semiannually, or by a toll based on mileage or otherwise. Our decision sustaining the Maryland law was not dependent upon the existence of the reciprocal provision. Indeed, the plaintiff in error there was not in a position to avail himself of the reciprocal clause. * * *

3. In Hendrick v. Maryland, it appeared only that the nonresident drove his automobile into the state. In this case it is admitted that he was driving through the state. The distinction is of no significance. As we there said: "In the absence of national legislation covering the subject, a state may rightfully prescribe uniform regulations necessary for public safety and order in respect to the operation upon its highways of all motor vehicles—those moving in interstate commerce as well as others."

4. In the Hendrick case it did not appear, as here, that the fees collected under the motor vehicle law exceeded the amount required to defray the expense of maintaining the regulation and inspection department. But the Maryland statute, like that of New Jersey, contemplated that there would be such excess and provided that it should be applied to the maintenance of improved roads. And it was expressly recognized that the purpose of the Maryland law "was to secure some compensation for the use of facilities provided at great cost from the class for whose needs they are essential and whose operations over them are peculiarly injurious."

The judgment should be

Affirmed.

BRADLEY v. PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1933.

289 U. S. 92, 77 L. ed. 1053, 53 Sup. Ct. 577, 85 A. L. R. 1131.

MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS delivered the opinion of the Court.

Bradley applied to the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio for a certificate of public convenience and necessity to operate by motor as a common carrier of property over State Route No. 20, extending from Cleveland, Ohio, to the Ohio-Michigan line, with Flint, Michigan, as final destination. The New York Central Railroad and the Pennsylvania Railroad opposing, moved that the application be dismissed on the ground of the present congested condition of that highway. Upon a full hearing, the Commission found "that said State Route No. 20, at this time, is so badly congested by established motor vehicle operations, that the addition of the applicant's proposed service would create and maintain an excessive and undue hazard to the safety and security of the traveling public, and the property upon such highway." It therefore ordered: "That in the interest of preserving the public welfare, the application be, and hereby is, denied."

In a petition for a rehearing, which was also denied, Bradley urged, among other things, that denial of the application for the certificate on the ground stated violated rights guaranteed to the applicant by the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution and the equality clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The same claims were asserted in a petition in error to the Supreme Court of the State; were there denied (125 Ohio State 381; 181 N. E. 668) upon the authority of Motor Transport Co. v. Public Utilities Co., 125 Ohio State 374; 181 N. E. 665; and are renewed here upon this appeal. We are of opinion that the claims are unfounded.

First. It is contended that the order of the Commission is void because it excludes Bradley from interstate commerce. The order does not in terms exclude him from operating interstate. The denial of the certificate excludes him merely from Route 20. In specifying the route, Bradley complied with the statutory requirement that an applicant for a certificate shall set forth "the complete route" over which he desires to operate. Ohio General Code, § 614-90(c). But the statute confers upon an applicant the right to amend his application before or after hearing or action by the Commission. § 614-91. And it authorizes him, after the certificate is refused, to "file a new application or supplement any former application, for the purpose of changing" the route. § 614-93. No amendment of the application was made or new application filed. For aught that appears, some alternate or amended route was available on which there was no congestion. If no other feasible route existed and that fact was deemed relevant, the duty to prove it rested upon the applicant. It was not incumbent upon the Commission to offer a certificate over an alternate route.

Second. It is contended that an order denying to a common carrier by motor a certificate to engage in interstate transportation necessarily violates the Commerce Clause. The argument is that under the rule declared in Buck v. Kuykendall, 267 U. S. 307, and Bush & Sons Co. v. Maloy, 267 U. S. 317, an interstate carrier is entitled to a certificate as of right; and that hence the reason for the commission's refusal and its purpose are immaterial. In those cases, safety was doubtless promoted when the certificate was denied, because intensification of traffic was thereby prevented. See Stephenson v. Binford, 287 U. S. 251, 269-272.

But there, promotion of safety was merely an incident of the denial. Its purpose was to prevent competition deemed undesirable. The test employed was the adequacy of existing transportation facilities; and since the transportation in question was interstate, denial of the certificate invaded the province of Congress. In the case at bar, the purpose of the denial was to promote safety; and the test employed was congestion of the highway. The effect of the denial upon interstate commerce was merely an incident.

Protection against accidents, as against crime, presents ordinarily a local problem. Regulation to ensure safety is an exercise of the police power. It is primarily a state function, whether the locus be private property or the public highways. Congress has not dealt with the subject. Hence, even where the motor cars are used exclusively in interstate commerce, a State may freely exact registration of the vehicle and an operator's license, Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 610, 622; Clark v. Poor, 274 U. S. 554, 557; Sprout v. South Bend, 277 U. S. 163, 169; may require the appointment of an agent upon whom process can be served in an action arising out of operation of the vehicle within the State, Kane v. New Jersey, 242 U. S. 160; Hess v. Pawloski, 274 U. S. 352, 356; and may require carriers to file contracts providing adequate insurance for the payment of judgments recovered for certain injuries resulting from their operations. Continental Baking Co. v. Woodring, 286 U. S. 352, 365-366. Compare Packard v. Banton, 264 U. S. 140; Sprout v. South Bend, 277 U. S. 163, 171-172; Hodge Co. v. Cincinnati, 284 U. S. 335, 337. The State may exclude from the public highways vehicles engaged exclusively in interstate commerce, if of a size deemed dangerous to the public safety, Morris v. Doby, 274 U. S. 135, 144; Sproles v. Binford, 286 U. S. 374, 389-390. Safety may require that no additional vehicle be admitted to the highway. The Commerce Clause is not violated by denial of the certificate to the appellant, if upon adequate evidence denial is deemed necessary to promote the public safety. Compare Hammond v. Schappi Bus Line, 275 U. S. 164, 170-171. * * *

Fourth. It is contended that the statute as applied to the plaintiff violates the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. There is no suggestion that the plaintiff was treated less favorably than others who applied at the same time or thereafter for certificates as common carriers; nor is there any suggestion that the classification operates to favor intrastate over interstate carriers. One argument is that the statute discriminates unlawfully against common carriers in favor of shippers who operate their own trucks. In dealing with the problem of safety of the highways, as in other problems of motor transportation, the State may adopt measures which favor vehicles used solely in the business of their owners, as distinguished from those which are operated for hire by carriers who use the highways as their place of business. See Packard v. Banton, 264 U. S. 140, 144. Compare Bekins Van Lines v. Riley, 280 U. S. 80, 82; Continental Baking Co. v. Woodring, 286 U. S. 352, 373;

Sproles v. Binford, 286 U. S. 374, 396. Another objection is that to deny certificates to subsequent applicants discriminates unlawfully in favor of carriers previously certificated. But classification based on priority of authorized operation has a natural and obvious relation to the purpose of the regulation. Conceivably, restriction of the volume of traffic might be secured by limiting the extent of each certificate holder's use. But that would involve re-apportionment whenever a new applicant appeared. The guaranty of equal protection does not prevent the State from adopting the simple expedient of prohibiting operations by additional carriers. * * * Affirmed.

NOTES

1. In South Carolina State Highway Dept. v. Barnwell Bros., 303 U. S. 177, 82 L. ed. 734, 58 Sup. Ct. 510 (1938) the court sustained a South Carolina statute which prohibited use on the state's highways of motor trucks and semi-trailer motor trucks exceeding ninety inches in width or of a weight including load in excess of 20,000 pounds. Mr. Justice Stone, for a unanimous court, said: "Few subjects of state regulation are so peculiarly of local concern as is the use of state highways. There are few, local regulation of which is so inseparable from a substantial effect on interstate commerce. Unlike the railroads, local highways are built, owned and maintained by the state or its municipal subdivisions. The state has a primary and immediate concern in their safe and economical administration. The present regulations, or any others of like purpose, if they are to accomplish their end, must be applied alike to interstate and intrastate traffic both moving in large volume over the highways. The fact that they affect alike shippers in interstate and intrastate commerce in large number within as well as without the state is a safeguard against their abuse. * * * Congress, in the exercise of its plenary power to regulate interstate commerce, may determine whether the burdens imposed on it by state regulation, otherwise permissible, are too great, and may, by legislation designed to secure uniformity or in other respects to protect the national interest in the commerce, curtail to some extent the state's regulatory power. But that is a legislative, not a judicial function, to be performed in the light of congressional judgment of what is appropriate regulation of interstate commerce, and the extent to which, in that field, state power and local interests should be required to yield to the national authority and interest. In the absence of such legislation the judicial function, under the commerce clause as well as the Fourteenth Amendment, stops with the inquiry whether the state legislature in adopting regulations such as the present has acted within its province, and whether the means of regulation chosen are reasonably adapted to the end sought." The court concluded that whether the weight and width restrictions adopted by South Carolina were wise or not they had some rational relation to safety of operation and to conservation of the highways.

2. The Barnwell case exemplifies the difference in judicial approach to problems involving the constitutionality of state regulation of motor carriers from that employed in passing upon the validity of state laws regulatory of other modes of transportation. In the field of highway regulation the court seeks not only to gauge the extent of the burden placed on interstate commerce but to weigh the importance of the state's interest that will be safeguarded by enforcement of the regulation. The court is loath to invalidate state motor vehicle regulation where the social justification for the legislative policy is brought clearly into view. No matter how comprehensive the scheme, how detailed and onerous the requirements or how varied the restrictions imposed upon the several classes of carriers involved, the court is inclined to accept the legislative judgment in the absence of a clear showing of favoritism and arbitrary discrimination. The cases are collected and discussed in a recent annotation in 97 L. ed. 175 (1953). For annotations dealing with decisions under the Federal Motor Carrier Act of 1935, see 83 L. ed. 1168 (1939) and 86 L. ed. 597 (1942).

Section 4.—Limitations on State Taxation of Commerce.

BROWN v. MARYLAND.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1827.
12 Wheat. 419, 6 L. ed. 678.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is a writ of error to a judgment rendered in the Court of Appeals of Maryland, affirming a judgment of the City Court of Baltimore, on an indictment found in that court against the plaintiffs in error, for violating an Act of the Legislature of Maryland. The indictment was founded on the second section of that Act, which is in these words: "And be it enacted, that all importers of foreign articles or commodities, of dry goods, wares, or merchandise, by bale or package, or of wine, rum, brandy, whiskey, and other distilled spirituous liquors, &c., and other persons selling the same by wholesale, bale, or package, hogshead, barrel, or tierce, shall, before they are authorized to sell, take out a license, as by the original act is directed, for which they shall pay fifty dollars; and in case of neglect or refusal to take out such license, shall be subject to the same penalties and forfeitures as are prescribed by the original act to which this is a supplement." The indictment charges the plaintiffs in error with having imported and sold one package of foreign dry goods without having license to do so. A judgment was rendered against them on demurrer for the penalty which the act prescribes for the offence; and that judgment is now before this Court.

The cause depends entirely on the question whether the legislature of a state can constitutionally require the importer of foreign articles to take out a license from the state, before he shall be permitted to sell a bale or package so imported. * * *

1. The first inquiry is into the extent of the prohibition upon states "to lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports." * * *

What, then, is the meaning of the words, "imposts, or duties on imports or exports?"

An impost, or duty on imports, is a custom or a tax levied on articles brought into a country, and is most usually secured before the importer is allowed to exercise his rights of ownership over them, because evasions of the law can be prevented more certainly by executing it while the articles are in its custody. It would not, however, be less an impost or duty on the articles, if it were to be levied on them after they were landed. The policy and consequent practice of levying or securing the duty before, or on entering the port, does not limit the power to that state of things, nor, consequently, the prohibition, unless the true meaning of the clause so confines it. What, then, are "imports"? The lexicons inform us, they are "things imported." If we appeal to usage for the meaning of the word, we shall receive the same answer. They are the articles themselves which are brought into the country. "A duty on imports," then, is not merely a duty on the act of importation, but is a duty on the thing imported. It is not, taken in its literal sense, confined to a duty levied while the article is entering the country, but extends to a duty levied after it has entered the country. * * *

Whether the prohibition to "lay imposts, or duties on imports or exports," proceeded from an apprehension that the power might be so exercised as to disturb that equality among the states which was generally advantageous, or that harmony between them which it was desirable to preserve, or to maintain unimpaired our commercial connections with foreign nations, or to confer this source of revenue on the government of the Union, or whatever other motive might have induced the prohibition, it is plain that the object would be as completely defeated by a power to tax the article in the hands of the importer the instant it was landed, as by a power to tax it while entering the port. There is no difference, in effect, between a power to prohibit the sale of an article and a power to prohibit its introduction into the country. The one would be a necessary consequence of the other. No goods would be imported if none could be sold. No object of any description can be accomplished by laying a duty on importation, which may not be accomplished with equal certainty by laying a duty on the thing imported in the hands of the importer. It is obvious, that the same power which imposes a light duty, can impose a very heavy one, one which amounts to a prohibition. Questions of power do not depend on the degree to which it may be exercised. If it may be exercised at all, it must be exercised at the will of those in whose hands it is placed. * * *

The counsel for the State of Maryland insist, with great reason, that if the words of the prohibition be taken in their utmost latitude, they will abridge the power of taxation, which all admit to be essential to the states, to an extent which has never yet been suspected, and will deprive them of resources which are necessary to supply revenue, and which they have heretofore been admitted to possess. These words must, therefore, be construed with some limitation; and, if this be admitted, they insist that entering the country is the point of time when the prohibition ceases, and the power of the state to tax commences. * * * While we admit that sound principles of construction ought to restrain all courts from carrying the words of the prohibition beyond the object the Constitution is intended to secure; that there must be a point of time when the prohibition ceases, and the power of the state to tax commences; we cannot admit that this point of time is the instant that the articles enter the country. It is, we think, obvious that this construction would defeat the prohibition. * * *

It is sufficient for the present to say, generally, that when the importer has so acted upon the thing imported, that it has become incorporated and mixed up with the mass of property in the country, it has, perhaps, lost its distinctive character as an import, and has become subject to the taxing power of the state; but while remaining the property of the importer, in his warehouse, in the original form or package in which it was imported, a tax upon it is too plainly a duty on imports to escape the prohibition in the Constitution.

The counsel for the plaintiffs in error contend that the importer purchases, by payment of the duty to the United States, a right to dispose of his merchandise, as well as to bring it into the country; and certainly the argument is supported by strong reason, as well as by the practice of nations, including our own. The object of importation is sale; it constitutes the motive for paying the duties; and if the United States possess the power of conferring the right to sell, as the consideration for which the duty is paid, every principle of fair dealing requires that they should be understood to confer it. The practice of the most commercial nations conforms to this idea. Duties, according to that practice, are charged on those articles only which are intended for sale or consumption in the country. Thus, sea stores, goods imported and re-exported in the same vessel, goods landed and carried over land for the purpose of being re-exported from some other port, goods forced in by stress of weather, and landed, but not for sale, are exempted from the payment of duties. The whole course of legislation on the subject shows that, in the opinion of the legislature, the right to sell is connected with the payment of duties. * * *

This indictment is against the importer, for selling a package of dry goods in the form in which it was imported, without a license. This state of things is changed if he sells them, or otherwise mixes them with the general property of the state, by breaking up his packages, and traveling with them as an itinerant peddler. In the first case, the tax intercepts the import, as an import, in its way to become incorporated with the general mass of property, and denies it the privilege of becoming so incorporated until it shall have contributed to the revenue of the state. It denies to the importer the right of using the privilege which he has purchased from the United States, until he shall have also purchased it from the state. In the last cases, the tax finds the article already incorporated with the mass of property by the act of the importer. He has used the privilege he had purchased, and has himself mixed them up with the common mass, and the law may treat them as it finds them. The same observations apply to plate, or other furniture used by the importer. * * *

But if it should be proved, that a duty on the article itself would be repugnant to the Constitution, it is still argued that this is not a tax upon the article, but on the person. The state, it is said, may tax occupations, and this is nothing more.

It is impossible to conceal from ourselves that this is varying the form without varying the substance. It is treating a prohibition which is general, as if it were confined to a particular mode of doing the forbidden thing. All must perceive that a tax on the sale of an article, imported only for sale, is a tax on the article itself. It is true the state may tax occupations generally, but this tax must be paid by those who employ the individual, or is a tax on his business. The lawyer, the physician, or the mechanic, must either charge more on the article in which he deals, or the thing itself is taxed through his person. This the state has a right to do, because no constitutional prohibition extends to it. So, a tax on the occupation of an importer is, in like manner, a tax on importation. It must add to the price of the article, and be paid by the consumer, or by the importer himself, in like manner as a direct duty on the article itself would be made. This the state has not a right to do, because it is prohibited by the Constitution. * * *

We think, then, that the act under which the plaintiffs in error were indicted, is repugnant to that article of the Constitution which declares that "no State shall lay any impost or duties on imports or exports."

2. Is it also repugnant to that clause in the Constitution which empowers "Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes"? * * *

What, then, is the just extent of a power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states? This question was considered in the case of Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. Rep. 1, in which it was declared to be complete in itself, and to acknowledge no limitations other than are prescribed by the Constitution. The power is co-extensive with the subject on which it acts, and cannot be stopped at the external boundary of a state, but must enter its interior.

We deem it unnecessary now to reason in support of these propositions. Their truth is proved by facts continually before our eyes, and was, we think, demonstrated, if they could require demonstration, in the case already mentioned.

If this power reaches the interior of a state, and may be there exercised, it must be capable of authorizing the sale of those articles which it introduces. Commerce is intercourse: one of its most ordinary ingredients is traffic. It is inconceivable, that the power to authorize this traffic, when given in the most comprehensive terms, with the intent that its efficacy should be complete, should cease at the point when its continuance is indispensable to its value. To what purpose should the power to allow importation be given, unaccompanied with the power to authorize a sale of the thing imported? Sale is the object of importation, and is an essential ingredient of that intercourse, of which importation constitutes a part. It is as essential an ingredient, as indispensable to the existence of the entire thing, then, as importation itself. It must be considered as a component part of the power to regulate commerce.

Congress has a right, not only to authorize importation, but to authorize the importer to sell. * * *

We think, then, that if the power to authorize a sale exists in Congress, the conclusion that the right to sell is connected with the law permitting importation, as an inseparable incident, is inevitable.

If the principles we have stated be correct, the result to which they conduct us cannot be mistaken. Any penalty inflicted on the importer for selling the article in his character of importer, must be in opposition to the Act of Congress which authorizes importation. Any charge on the introduction and incorporation of the articles into and with the mass of property in the country, must be hostile to the power given to Congress to regulate commerce, since an essential part of that regulation, and principal object of it, is to prescribe the regular means for accomplishing that introduction and incorporation.

The distinction between a tax on the thing imported, and on the person of the importer, can have no influence on this part of the subject. It is too obvious for controversy, that they interfere equally with the power to regulate commerce.

It has been contended that this construction of the power to regulate commerce, as was contended in construing the prohibition to lay duties on imports, would abridge the acknowledged power of a state to tax its own citizens, or their property within its territory.

We admit this power to be sacred; but cannot admit that it may be used so as to obstruct the free course of a power given to Congress. We cannot admit that it may be used so as to obstruct or defeat the power to regulate commerce. * * * If the states may tax all persons and property found on their territory, what shall restrain them from taxing goods in their transit through the state from one port to another, for the purpose of re-exportation? The laws of trade authorize this operation, and general convenience requires it. Or what should restrain a state from taxing any article passing through it from one state to another, for the purpose of traffic? or from taxing the transportation of articles passing from the state itself to another state, for commercial purposes? These cases are all within the sovereign power of taxation, but would obviously derange the measures of Congress to regulate commerce, and affect materially the purpose for which that power was given.
* * *

It may be proper to add that we suppose the principles laid down in this case to apply equally to importations from a sister state. We do not mean to give any opinion on a tax discriminating between foreign and domestic articles. * * * Reversed.

[Mr. JUSTICE THOMPSON delivered a dissenting opinion.]

NOTES

1. It is the purpose of the cases and notes in this section to supply material, on a purely selective basis, for discussion and analysis of some of the difficult problems which have beset the Supreme Court in passing upon the constitutionality of state tax laws challenged under the commerce clause or other provisions of the Constitution in aid of the commerce power, particularly the so-called import-export clause (Art. I, § 10, cl. 2). Since the taxing power of the states is limited by the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment as well as by the provisions pertaining to commerce, the validity of a tax law as applied to a specific set of facts is frequently attacked on the ground that it is in excess of the state's jurisdiction to tax as well as burdensome to commerce. In the cases in this section, however, objections to the exercise of the states' taxing power based on the commerce provisions of the Constitution assume primary importance. The types of taxation considered in these cases are (1) taxes on imports and exports; (2) state and local property taxes; (3) license, privilege or franchise taxes; (4) excise taxes on use and sales of goods; and (5) gross receipts taxes.

The most recent treatise dealing exclusively with the subject-matter of this section is Hartman, State Taxation of Interstate Commerce (1953), which contains a careful analysis and discussion of Supreme Court decisions. Among the more recent law review articles discussing various problems presented in the cases are the following: Barrett, State Taxation of Interstate Commerce—"Direct Burdens," "Multiple Burdens," or What Have You? 4 Vand. L. Rev. 496 (1951); Brown, State Taxation of Interstate Commerce—What Now? 48 Mich. L. Rev. 899 (1950); Dunham, Gross Receipts Taxes on Interstate Transactions, 47 Col. L. Rev. 211 (1947); Lockhart, Gross Receipts Taxes on Interstate Transportation and Communication, 57 Harv. L. Rev. 40 (1943); Lockhart, State Tax Barriers to Interstate Trade, 53 Harv. L. Rev. 1253 (1940); Lockhart, The Sales Tax in Interstate Commerce, 52 Harv. L. Rev. 617 (1939); Morrison, State Taxation of Interstate Commerce, 36 Ill. L. Rev. 727 (1942); Overton, State Taxation of Interstate Commerce, 19 Tenn. L. Rev. 870 (1947); Powell, New Light on Gross Receipts Taxes, 53 Harv. L. Rev. 909 (1940); Powell, More Ado About Gross Receipts Taxes, 60 Harv. L. Rev. 501, 710 (1947); Powell, Note, State Taxation of Imports, 58 Harv. L. Rev. 858 (1945); Powell, Note, Sales and Use Taxes: Collection from Absentee Vendors, 57 Harv. L. Rev. 1086 (1944); Ratchford, The Measure of Consumption Taxes, 8 Law & Contemp. Prob. 561 (1941); Rockwell, Justice Rutledge on State Taxation of Interstate Commerce, 35 Corn. L. Q. 493 (1950); Traynor, State Taxation and the Supreme Court, 1938 Term, 28 Cal. L. Rev. 1 (1939); Wechsler, Stone and the Constitution, 46 Col. L. Rev. 764 (1946); Comment, General Sales and Use Taxes and the Commerce Clause, 32 Cal. L. Rev. 281 (1944).

2. The question whether commodities moving from one state to another were to be deemed imports upon arrival in the latter state and thus subject to the constitutional provision prohibiting the states from laying taxes on imports or exports (Art. I, § 10, cl. 2) was before the Supreme Court in Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. 123, 19 L. ed. 382 (1869). Here a nondiscriminatory municipal tax on sales at auction of goods brought in from other states in original packages was sustained, the court holding that the term "import" relates only to shipments from foreign countries. As regards the commerce clause, it was held that so long as the articles are not discriminated against, no interference with interstate commerce is caused by their taxation, even in their original packages. The extent to which the "original package rule" has been applied to problems of state police regulation and interstate commerce has been dealt with in the preceding section.

3. A franchise tax imposed upon every foreign corporation doing business in the state and measured by the amount of capital employed by it in the state, cannot be constitutionally applied when the corporation's only property in the state is nitrate of soda imported from Chile into the state and there stored in the original packages for sale there and elsewhere in original packages. Anglo-

Chilean Nitrate Sales Corp. v. Alabama, 288 U. S. 218, 77 L. ed. 710, 53 Sup. Ct. 373 (1933).

4. For a good discussion of the present scope of the "original package rule" as applied to foreign imports, see Chief Justice Stone's opinion for the court in Hooven & Allison Co. v. Evatt, 324 U. S. 652, 89 L. ed. 1252, 65 Sup. Ct. 870 (1945) holding invalid as a tax on imports a nondiscriminatory ad valorem property tax on bales of hemp shipped into Ohio from the Philippines and stored in original packages in the manufacturer's warehouse pending their use in the manufacture of rope. The court said that merchandise brought into the country from a place without is still an import, even though it does not come from a foreign country.

CREW LEVICK CO. v. PENNSYLVANIA.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1917.
245 U. S. 292, 62 L. ed. 295, 38 Sup. Ct. 126.

Error to the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania.

MR. JUSTICE PITNEY delivered the opinion of the Court.

The State of Pennsylvania, by an Act of May 2, 1899, P. L., p. 184, imposes an annual mercantile license tax of three dollars upon each wholesale vender of or dealer in goods, wares, and merchandise, and "one-half mill additional on each dollar of the whole volume, gross, of business transacted annually," and like taxes at another rate upon retail venders, and at still another upon venders at an exchange or board of trade. In the year 1913 plaintiff in error sold and delivered at wholesale, from a warehouse located in that state, merchandise to the value of about $47,000 to purchasers within the state, and merchandise to the value of about $430,000 to customers in foreign countries: the latter sales usually having been negotiated by agents abroad who took orders and transmitted them to plaintiff in error at its office in the State of Pennsylvania, subject to its approval, while in some cases orders were sent direct by the customers in foreign countries to plaintiff in error; and the goods thus ordered, upon the acceptance of the orders, having been shipped direct by plaintiff in error from its warehouse in Pennsylvania to its customers in the foreign countries. Under the Act of 1899 a mercantile license tax was imposed upon plaintiff in error, based upon the amount of its gross annual receipts. Plaintiff in error protested against the assessment of so much of the tax as was based upon the gross receipts from merchandise shipped to foreign countries. The Court of Common Pleas of Philadelphia and, upon appeal, the Supreme Court of the state (256 Pa. St. 508) sustained the tax, overruling the contention that it amounted to a regulation of foreign commerce and also was an impost or duty on exports levied without the consent of Congress, contrary to §§ 8 and 10 of Art. I of the Constitution of the United States.

* * *

The bare question, then, is whether a state tax imposed upon the business of selling goods in foreign commerce, in so far as it is measured by the gross receipts from merchandise shipped to foreign countries, is in effect a regulation of foreign commerce or an impost upon exports, within the meaning of the pertinent clauses of the federal Constitution. Although dual in form, the question may be treated as a single one, since it is obvious that, for the purposes of this case, an impost upon exports and a regulation of foreign commerce may be regarded as interchangeable terms. And there is no suggestion that the tax is limited to the necessities of inspection, or that the consent of Congress has been given.

We are constrained to hold that the answer must be in the affirmative. No question is made as to the validity of the small fixed tax of $3 imposed upon wholesale venders doing business within the state in both internal and foreign commerce; but the additional imposition of a percentage upon each dollar of the gross transactions in foreign commerce seems to us to be, by its necessary effect, a tax upon such commerce, and therefore a regulation of it; and, for the same reason, to be in effect an impost or duty upon exports. * * * [Citations omitted.]

The tax now under consideration, so far as it is challenged, * * * bears no semblance of a property tax, or a franchise tax in the proper sense; nor is it an occupation tax except as it is imposed upon the very carrying on of the business of exporting merchandise. It operates to lay a direct burden upon every transaction in commerce by withholding, for the use of the state, a part of every dollar received in such transactions. That it applies to internal as well as to foreign commerce cannot save it; for, as was said in case of the State Freight Tax, 15 Wall. 232, 277, "The state may tax its internal commerce, but if an act to tax interstate or foreign commerce is unconstitutional, it is not cured by including in its provisions subjects within the domain of the state." That portion of the tax which is measured by the receipts from foreign commerce necessarily varies in proportion to the volume of that commerce, and hence is a direct burden upon it. * * * Reversed.

NOTES

1. The scope of the constitutional immunity of exports from both state and federal taxation is considered in Richfield Oil Corp. v. State Board of Equalization, 329 U. S. 69, 91 L. ed. 80, 67 Sup. Ct. 156 (1946), holding invalid as a tax on exports a state sales tax imposed on the sale of oil to a foreign government. Here the foreign purchaser furnished the ship to carry the oil abroad, delivery being made into the hold of the vessel from the vendor's tanks located at the dock. The court said that "when the oil was pumped into the hold of the vessel, it passed into the control of a foreign purchaser and there was nothing equivocal in the transaction which created even a probability that the oil would be diverted to domestic use."

2. In Joseph v. Carter & Weekes Stevedoring Co., 330 U. S. 422, 91 L. ed. 993, 67 Sup. Ct. 815 (1947) the court held invalid under the commerce clause (Justices Black, Douglas, Murphy and Rutledge dissenting) an excise tax levied by the City of New York upon the gross receipts of stevedoring companies from loading and unloading vessels employed in interstate and foreign commerce. Justice Douglas, with the concurrence of Justice Rutledge, found no violation of the commerce clause but thought that the tax was repugnant to the import-export clause, since loading and unloading are a part of the "exporting process" which that clause protects from state taxation. But a state franchise tax on steam railroads measured by gross receipts apportioned to the length of lines within the state was held not to violate the import-export clause when imposed in respect of a railroad's receipts for services in handling imports and exports at its marine terminal, or to burden interstate commerce. Canton R. Co. v. Rogan, 340 U. S. 511, 95 L. ed. 488, 71 Sup. Ct. 447, 20 A. L. R. (2d) 145 (1951). For recent annotations on state taxation as affected by the import-export clause, see 89 L. ed. 1279 (1945); 91 L. ed. 97 (1947); and 95 L. ed. 496 (1951).

BROWN v. HOUSTON.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1885.

114 U. S. 622, 29 L. ed. 257, 5 Sup. Ct. 1091.

[This was a suit to restrain a state tax-collector in Louisiana from seizing and selling several flat-boat loads of coal to pay taxes levied upon it for the year 1880. The coal belonged to the plaintiffs who were residents and did business in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. It had been mined in Pennsylvania and shipped to New Orleans where, at the time the taxes were assessed, it had just arrived in flat-boats and was lying in the Mississippi River "in its original condition and in its original packages," in the hands of plaintiffs' agents for sale. The taxes were claimed under a Louisiana statute which in terms "levied annual taxes, amounting in the aggregate to six mills on the dollar of the assessed valuation * * * of all property situated within the State of Louisiana." The Supreme Court of Louisiana sustained the tax and this writ of error was taken.]

MR. JUSTICE BRADLEY delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

In short, it may be laid down as the settled doctrine of this court, at this day, that a state can no more regulate or impede commerce among the several states than it can regulate or impede commerce with foreign nations.

This being the recognized law, the question then arises whether the assessment of the tax in question amounted to any interference with, or restriction upon the free introduction of the plaintiffs' coal from the State of Pennsylvania into the State of Louisiana, and the free disposal of the same in commerce in the latter state; in other words, whether the tax amounted to a regulation of, or restriction upon, commerce among the states; or only to an exercise of local administration under the general taxing power, which, though it may incidentally affect the subjects of commerce, is entirely within the power of the state until Congress shall see fit to interfere and make express regulations on the subject.

As to the character and mode of the assessment, little need be added to what has already been said. It was not a tax imposed upon the coal as a foreign product, or as the product of another state than Louisiana, nor a tax imposed by reason of the coal being imported or brought into Louisiana, nor a tax imposed whilst it was in a state of transit through that state to some other place of destination. It was imposed after the coal had arrived at its destination and was put up for sale. The coal had come to its place of rest, for final disposal or use, and was a commodity in the market of New Orleans. It might continue in that condition for a year or two years, or only for a day. It had become a part of the general mass of property in the state, and as such it was taxed for the current year (1880), as all other property in the City of New Orleans was taxed. Under the law, it could not be taxed again until the following year. It was subjected to no discrimination in favor of goods which were the product of Louisiana, or goods which were the property of citizens of Louisiana. It was treated in exactly the same manner as such goods were treated. * * *

We do not mean to say that if a tax-collector should be stationed at every ferry and railroad depot in the City of New York, charged with the duty of collecting a tax on every wagon load, or car load of produce and merchandise brought into the city, that it would not be a regulation of, and restraint upon interstate commerce, so far as the tax should be imposed on articles brought from other states. We think it would be, and that it would be an encroachment upon the exclusive powers of Congress. It would be very different from the tax laid on auction sales of all property indiscriminately, as in the case of Woodruff v. Parham, which had no relation to the movement of goods from one state to another. It would be very different from a tax laid, as in the present case, on property which had reached its destination, and had become part of the general mass of property of the city, and which was only taxed as a part of that general mass in common with all other property in the city, and in precisely the same manner. * * *

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Louisiana is affirmed.

CHAMPLAIN REALTY CO. v. BRATTLEBORO.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1922.

260 U. S. 366, 67 L. ed. 309, 43 Sup. Ct. 146, 25 A. L. R. 1195.

[Certiorari to the Supreme Court of Vermont. Plaintiff cut pulp wood at various places in Vermont and floated it down the West River, thence into the Connecticut River at the junction of these rivers in the town (township) of Brattleboro, Vermont, thence to their mill at Hinsdale, New Hampshire, which was about three miles below Brattleboro, on the Connecticut River. They maintained a log boom at the mill to stop and hold the wood. This boom was not strong enough for these purposes when the waters of the Connecticut were high. At such times plaintiffs detained the wood in a pond, an enlargement of West River, in Brattleboro, near its junction with the Connecticut, holding the wood there by a boom. In March, 1929, plaintiffs had 10,000 cords to float down and some of it reached the pond and boom in Brattleboro on March 29, where the plaintiffs held it because the Connecticut was then at high water. Prior to April 3, 4000 cords had reached and been held there. On that date plaintiffs cut the West River boom and the wood entered the Connecticut. The remainder of the wood coming down later floated on through to Hinsdale without detention. The town of Brattleboro required taxes to be paid on the wood that was in that town on April 1, that is, so much of the wood as was then being held in the pond. To recover the money so paid, the plaintiff brought this suit. The Supreme Court of Vermont reversed the county court's judgment for the plaintiff.]

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE TAFT delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Vermont Supreme Court depended for its conclusions chiefly upon Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, which is the leading case on this subject. There logs had been cut on Wentworth's Location in New Hampshire during the winter and had been drawn down to Errol in the same state, and placed in Clear Stream and on the banks thereof on lands of John Akers and part on land of George C. Demeritt in said town, to be from thence floated down the Androscoggin river to the State of Maine (p. 518).

It is not clear how long they had lain there, but certainly for part of one winter season. This Court, speaking by Mr. Justice Bradley, sought to fix the time when such logs, in the course of their being taken from New Hampshire to Maine, ceased to be part of the mass of property of New Hampshire and passed into the immunity from state taxation as things actually in interstate commerce. The learned Justice states the rule to be:

"That such goods do not cease to be part of the general mass of property in the state, subject, as such, to its jurisdiction, and to taxation in the usual way, until they had been shipped, or entered with a common carrier for transportation to another state, or have been started upon such transportation in a continuous route or journey." * * *

The question here then is: Where did the interstate shipment begin? When the wood was placed in the waters of the West river in the towns of Jamaica, Stratton, Londonderry and Winhall, or at the boom in Brattleboro? The whole drive was 10,000 cords. Six thousand cords of that, shipped from these towns after the 3d of April, went through directly to Hinsdale, N. H., without stopping. Certainly that was a continuous passage, and the wood when floating in the West River was as much in interstate commerce as when on the Connecticut. Why was it any more in interstate commerce than that which had been shipped before April 3d from the same towns for the same destination by the same natural carrying agency, to wit, the flowing water of the West and Connecticut Rivers? Did the fact that before April 3d the waters of the Connecticut were frozen, or so high as to prevent the logs reaching Hinsdale, requiring a temporary halting at the mouth of the West River, break the real continuity of the interstate journey? We think not. The preparation for the interstate journey had all been completed at the towns on the West River where the wood had been put in the stream. The boom at the mouth of the West River did not constitute an entrepôt or depot for the gathering of logs preparatory for the final journey. It was only a safety appliance in the course of the journey. It was a harbor of refuge from danger to a shipment on its way. It was not used by the owner for any beneficial purpose of his own except to facilitate the safe delivery of the wood at Hinsdale on their final journey already begun. The logs were not detained to be classified, measured, counted, or in any way dealt with by the owner for his benefit, except to save them from destruction in the course of their journey that, but for natural causes, over which he could exercise no control, would have been actually continuous. This was not the case in Coe v. Errol. It is evident from the statement of that case, and Mr. Justice Bradley's language that the logs were partly drawn and partly floated to Errol, and deposited some in the stream and some on the banks, where "they were to remain until it should be convenient to send them to their destination," and they were being gathered there for the whole previous winter season. It was an entrepôt or depot, as the Justice several times describes it. The mere fact that the owner intended to send them out of the state under such circumstances did not put them into transit in interstate commerce. But here we have the intention put into accomplishment by launching, and manifested by an actually continuous journey of more than half the drive, with a halting of less than half of it in the course of the interstate journey to save it from loss, and only for that purpose.

The case at bar is easily distinguishable from the other cases cited by the Vermont Supreme Court. In Bacon v. Illinois, 227 U. S. 504, Bacon had bought shipments of grain in transitu from Western states to New York in the contract for which the carriers had given the shipper the right to remove it "for the mere temporary purposes of inspecting, weighing, cleaning, clipping, drying, sacking, grading or mixing, or changing the ownership, consignee or destination." On arrival of the grain in Chicago, Bacon removed the grain from the cars to his private elevator. This removal was for the purpose of inspecting, weighing, grading, mixing, etc., but not to change its ownership, consignee, or destination. It was held that, whatever his intention, the grain was at rest, within his complete power of disposition, and held for his own benefit and was taxable. His storing of the grain was not to facilitate interstate shipment of the grain, or save it from the danger of the journey. It was to enable him to treat the grain, so as to enable him more conveniently to dispose of it. He made his warehouse a depot for its preparation for further shipment and sale. He had thus suspended the interstate commerce journey and brought the grain within the taxable jurisdiction of the state.

So, in General Oil Co. v. Crain, 209 U. S. 211, the Oil Company had its principal place of business in Memphis, Tenn., for the manufacture and sale of illuminating oils in interstate commerce. It imported oil from other states and put it into a tank, appropriately marked for distribution in smaller vessels to fill orders for oil already sold in Arkansas, Louisiana, and Mississippi. The Court held that the first shipment had ended, that its storage at Memphis for division and distribution to various points was for the business purposes and profit of the company. The Court continued:

"It was only there for distribution, it is said, to fulfill orders already received. But to do this required that the property be given a locality in the state beyond a mere halting in its transportation." * * *

The interstate commerce clause of the Constitution does not give immunity to movable property from local taxation which is not discriminative unless it is in actual continuous transit in interstate commerce. When it is shipped by a common carrier from one state to another, in the course of such an uninterrupted journey it is clearly immune. The doubt arises when there are interruptions in the journey, and when the property in its transportation is under the complete control of the owner during the passage. If the interruptions are only to promote the safe or convenient transit, then the continuity of the interstate trip is not broken. State v. Engle, 34 N. J. L. 425; State v. Carrigan, 39 N. J. L. 35. This was the case in Kelley v. Rhoads, 188 U. S. 1, in which sheep driven 500 miles from Utah to Nebraska which traveled nine miles a day were held immune from taxation in Wyoming where they stopped and grazed on their way. Another instance is as to that part of the logs in Coe v. Errol, which were not before this court because the Supreme Court of New Hampshire had found them nontaxable in New Hampshire. They were cut in Maine and were floated down the Androscoggin on their way to Lewiston, Me., but were delayed for a season at Errol, N. H., because of low water. In the cases just cited the transit had begun in one state and was continued through another on the way to a third. This circumstance strengthened the inference that the interruption in the intermediate state did not destroy interstate continuity of the trip. But this was not always so, as Bacon v. Illinois and General Oil Co. v. Crain show. In other words, in such cases interstate continuity of transit is to be determined by a consideration of the various factors of the situation. Chief among these are the intention of the owner, the control he retains to change destination, the agency by which the transit is effected, the actual continuity of the transportation, and the occasion or purpose of the interruption during which the tax is sought to be levied.

Of all the cases in this court where such movable property has been held taxable, none is nearer in its facts than Coe v. Errol to the case at bar. We have pointed out the distinction between the two, which requires a different conclusion here.

Reversed.

NOTES

1. Blasius was a trader in livestock in the stockyards of St. Paul. On April 30, 1929, he bought eleven head of cattle from a commission agent to whom they had been consigned from outside the state. Upon purchase Blasius placed the cattle in a pen in the yards where he offered them for sale to any purchaser. In part May 1 and in part May 2, he sold them for immediate shipment to other states. The Supreme Court held that he was properly required to list as taxable the eleven head held by him on May 1, annual day for assessment, since they were not being held for the purpose of promoting their safe or convenient transit but for the profit of the owner. The "current of commerce" doctrine of Stafford v. Wallace accounted for the power of Congress to regulate the dealings of traders like Blasius, but gave no immunity from state taxation of commodities that had "come to rest" and thus gained a tax situs in the state. Minnesota v. Blasius, 290 U. S. 1, 78 L. ed. 131, 54 Sup. Ct. 34 (1933).

2. In Sonneborn Bros. v. Cureton, 262 U. S. 506, 67 L. ed. 1095, 43 Sup. Ct. 643 (1923), oil shipped into Texas and held there in the owner's warehouses for sale in unbroken original packages was held subject to an occupation tax exacted by Texas. American Steel & Wire Co. v. Speed, 192 U. S. 500, 48 L. ed. 538, 24 Sup. Ct. 365 (1904) held that a merchant's tax might be imposed by Tennessee upon a nonresident manufacturing corporation shipping its products to Memphis as a distributing point, from which they were delivered in the original packages by a local agent to customers in that or other states, according to directions of the manufacturer. A recent case upholding a tax imposed by a township on the storage of coal shipped in interstate commerce from the mines to the place where it was held in storage by the carrier and thereafter reshipped as the shipper might direct, is Independent Warehouses, Inc. v. Scheele, 331 U. S. 70, 91 L. ed. 1346, 67 Sup. Ct. 1062 (1947). See Powell, Taxation of Things in Transit, 7 Va. L. Rev. 167, 245, 429, 497 (1920-21).

ADAMS EXPRESS CO. v. OHIO STATE AUDITOR.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1897.
165 U. S. 194, 41 L. ed. 683, 17 Sup. Ct. 305.

[The case involved the validity of the assessment for taxation by the State of Ohio of the property in Ohio of the Adams Express Company, for three separate years, the assessment for 1893 being typical. The company was organized under the laws of New York. Its only tangible property in Ohio in 1893 consisted of personality, chiefly office furniture, horses and wagons, having a value of $53,080 and real estate valued at $25,170. The latter was taxed separately. The board of assessors fixed the company's assessment at $460,033. This was done under a statute which required every express company doing business in the state to state to the board the par value and the market value of all its shares, its gross receipts from business done within the state, and all its real and personal property in the state. The statute further provided: "Said board of appraisers and assessors shall, in the determining the value of the property of said companies in this state to be taxed within the state and assessed as herein provided, be guided by the value of said property as determined by the value of the entire capital stock of said company, and such other evidence and rules as will enable said board to arrive at the true value in money of the entire property of said companies within the state of Ohio, in the proportion which the same bears to the entire property of said company, as determined by the value of the capital stock thereof, and the other evidence and rules as aforesaid." An affidavit of a member of the board states: "Taking all the information the board had or could secure, the value of the capital stock of the company, its gross receipts within Ohio, the return of the personal property made, and the character thereof, and evidence of undervaluations and omissions therein, the number of officers, the amount of business done, the nature and value of the property and capital required to carry on such business, and other evidence and information, the board, in each instance, ascertained what it considered the fair proportion of the property of the company employed by it in Ohio, and fixed the value of the property of such company situate and taxable therein; being guided, in determining the value of the property, by the value of the entire capital stock, and other evidence and information before the board." 69 Fed. 552.

The company brought a bill in the Circuit Court of the United States to enjoin the board from certifying to the counties the proportion of the gross assessment to be collected in each county. The court dismissed the bill. The dismissal was affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals. 69 Fed. 546, and an appeal was taken to the United States Supreme Court.]

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE FULLER delivered the opinion of the Court.
* * *

This brings us to the only inquiry which it concerns us to examine. The legislation in question is claimed to be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States because in violation of the commerce clause of that instrument, and because operating to deprive appellants of their property without due process of law, and of the equal protection of the laws.

We assume that the assessments complained of were made in pursuance of the definite rule or principle of appraisement recognized and established by the Nichols law, as construed by the Supreme Court of Ohio, and the question is whether the law prescribing that rule is valid under the Federal Constitution.

The principal contention is that the rule contravenes the commerce clause because the assessments, while purporting to be on the property of complainants within the State, are in fact levied on their business, which is largely interstate commerce.

Although the transportation of the subjects of interstate commerce, or the receipts received therefrom, or the occupation or business of carrying it on, cannot be directly subjected to state taxation, yet property belonging to corporations or companies engaged in such commerce may be; and whatever the particular form of the exaction, if it is essentially only property taxation, it will not be considered as falling within the inhibition of the Constitution. Corporations and companies engaged in interstate commerce should bear their proper proportion of the burdens of the governments under whose protection they conduct their operations, and taxation on property, collectible by the ordinary means, does not affect interstate commerce otherwise than incidentally, as all business is affected by the necessity of contributing to the support of government. Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Adams, 155 U. S. 688.

As to railroad, telegraph and sleeping car companies, engaged in interstate commerce, it has often been held by this court that their property, in the several States through which their lines or business extended, might be valued as a unit for the purposes of taxation, taking into consideration the uses to which it was put and all the elements making up aggregate value, and that a proportion of the whole fairly and properly ascertained might be taxed by the particular State, without violating any Federal restriction. * * * The valuation was, thus, not confined to the wires, poles and instruments of the telegraph company; or the roadbed, ties, rails and spikes of the railroad company; or the cars of the sleeping car company; but included the proportionate part of the value resulting from the combination of the means by which the business was carried on, a value existing to an appreciable extent throughout the entire domain of operation. And it has been decided that a proper mode of ascertaining the assessable value of so much of the whole property as is situated in a particular State, is in the case of railroads, to take that part of the value of the entire road which is measured by the proportion of its length therein to the length of the whole, Pittsburgh etc. Railway v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421; or taking as the basis of assessment such proportion of the capital stock of a sleeping car company as the number of miles of railroad over which its cars are run in a particular State bears to the whole number of miles traversed by them in that and other States, Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18; or such a proportion of the whole value of the capital stock of a telegraph company as the length of its lines within a State bears to the length of all its lines everywhere, deducting a sum equal to the value of its real estate and machinery subject to local taxation within the State, Western Un. Tel. Co. v. Taggart, 163 U. S. 1. * * *

No more reason is perceived for limiting the valuation of the property of express companies to horses, wagons and furniture, than that of railroad, telegraph and sleeping car companies, to roadbed, rails and ties; poles and wires; or cars. The unit is a unit of use and management, and the horses, wagons, safes, pouches and furniture; the contracts for transportation facilities; the capital necessary to carry on the business, whether represented in tangible or intangible property, in Ohio, possessed a value in combination and from use in connection with the property and capital elsewhere, which could as rightfully be recognized in the assessment for taxation in the instance of these companies as the others.

We repeat that while the unity which exists may not be physical unity, it is something more than a mere unity of ownership. It is a unity of use, not simply for the convenience of pecuniary profit of the owner, but existing in the very necessities of the case—resulting from the very nature of the business.

The same party may own a manufacturing establishment in one State and a store in another, and may make profit by operating the two, but the work of each is separate. The value of the factory in itself is not conditioned on that of the store or vice versa, nor is the value of the goods manufactured and sold affected thereby. The connection between the two is merely accidental and growing out of the unity of ownership. But the property of an express company distributed through different States is an essential condition of the business united in a single specific use. It constitutes but a single plant, made so by the very character and necessities of the business.

* * *

The line of reasoning thus pursued is in accordance with the decisions of this court already cited. Assuming the proportion of capital employed in each of several States through which such a company conducts its operations has been fairly ascertained, while taxation thereon, or determined with reference thereto, may be said in some sense to fall on the business of the company, it is only indirectly. The taxation is essentially a property tax, and, as such, not an interference with interstate commerce. * * *

Decrees affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE WHITE, with whom concurred MR. JUSTICE FIELD, MR. JUSTICE HARLAN and MR. JUSTICE BROWN, dissented.

On rehearing (166 U. S. 185, 41 L. ed. 965, 17 S. Ct. 604). MR. JUSTICE BREWER said in part:

* * * Again and again has this court affirmed the proposition that no State can interfere with interstate commerce through the imposition of a tax, by whatever name called, which is in effect a tax for the privilege of transacting such commerce. And it has as often affirmed that such restriction upon the power of a State to interfere with interstate commerce does not in the least degree abridge the right of a State to tax at their full value all the instrumentalities used for such commerce.

Now the taxes imposed upon express companies by the statutes of the three States of Ohio, Indiana, and Kentucky are certainly not in terms "privilege taxes." They purport to be upon the property of the companies. They are, therefore, not, in form at least, subject to any of the denunciations against privilege taxes which have so often come from this court. The statutes grant no privilege of doing an express business, charge nothing for doing such a business, and contemplate only the assessment and levy of taxes upon the property of the express companies situated within the respective states. And the only really substantial question is whether, properly understood and administered, they subject to the taxing power of the state property not within its territorial limits. * * *

NOTES

1. In valuing property of companies engaged in interstate commerce for purposes of state taxation, the Supreme Court (as the principal case indicates) has long recognized the so-called "unit rule" which entitles a state to take the aggregate value of all the company's properties wherever located (such valuation including not only the value of the actual physical property but also the enhancement due to the fact that an entire operating system is being dealt with as a unit) and to tax a proportion of such value based on some formula such as the ratio of the mileage of a railroad company's tracks within the state to the whole number of miles over which its cars are run in all states. Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 613, 11 Sup. Ct. 876 (1891). The mileage formula may not be used, however, where it results in taxation of assets outside the state which do not add to the value of the physical property of the company and the rights exercised by it in the state. Wallace v. Hines, 253 U. S. 66, 64 L. ed. 782, 40 Sup. Ct. 435 (1920). The unit rule, while generally upheld, may in some instances produce a valuation so grossly in excess of the actual value of the property and so unreasonable when compared with assessments upon other similar property in the state as to run afoul of the due process and equal protection guaranties of the Fourteenth Amendment, as well as the commerce clause. Union Tank Line v. Wright, 249 U. S. 275, 63 L. ed. 602, 39 Sup. Ct. 276 (1919). See Isaacs, The Unit Rule, 35 Yale L. J. 838 (1926).

2. Ott v. Mississippi Valley Barge Line Co., 336 U. S. 169, 93 L. ed. 585, 69 Sup. Ct. 432 (1949), distinguishing earlier cases denying the states power to tax vessels engaging in interstate commerce, other than at the domicile of the owner, upheld an ad valorem tax on the barges and tow boats of a foreign corporation operating interstate on inland waters in the taxing state, where the tax was apportioned on a ratio of the number of miles of the company's lines in the state and the number of miles of the entire barge line. The court said: "We see no practical difference so far as either the due process clause or the commerce clause is concerned whether it is vessels or railroad cars that are moving in interstate commerce. The problem under the commerce clause is to determine 'what portion of an interstate organism may appropriately be attributed to each of the various states in which it functions.' Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Browning, 310 U. S. 362, 365. So far as due process is concerned the only question is whether the tax in practical operation has relation to opportunities, benefits, or protection conferred or afforded by the taxing state. See Wisconsin v. J. C. Penney Co., 311 U. S. 435, 444. Those requirements are satisfied if the tax is fairly apportioned to the commerce carried on within the state."

3. In Northwest Airlines, Inc. v. Minnesota, 322 U. S. 292, 88 L. ed. 1283, 64 Sup. Ct. 950, 153 A. L. R. 245 (1944) the court, in a five-to-four decision, sustained an ad valorem tax imposed by Minnesota on an entire fleet of airplanes operated in interstate commerce by a domestic corporation, although the scheduled route mileage of the company in Minnesota was only 14% of its total scheduled route mileage and only 16% of the daily plane mileage of the company's interstate planes was within the state. There was no "opinion of the court" as the justices comprising the majority were unable to agree on the reasons. The opinion of Justice Frankfurter, concurred in by two other justices, was based on the view that the state of a corporation's legal domicile, because of the protection and benefits extended by it, is entitled to tax personal property owned by the corporation which has acquired no permanent situs in another state. Justices Black and Jackson wrote separate concurring opinions. Chief Justice Stone's dissenting opinion, in which Justices Roberts, Reed and Rutledge joined, said that in allowing Minnesota to tax an entire fleet of airplanes operated in interstate commerce, the court was leaving other states free to impose further or comparable taxes on the same property for the same tax period, thus making possible a prohibited burden on interstate commerce. See Powell, Note, 57 Harv. L. Rev. 1097 (1944).

4. In Braniff Airways, Inc. v. Nebraska State Board of Equalization and Assessment, 347 U. S. 590, 98 L. ed. 967, 74 Sup. Ct. 757 (1954), a Nebraska apportioned ad valorem property tax levied on the flight equipment of an interstate air carrier which made regularly scheduled stops within the state but was not incorporated there and did not have its place of business or home port there, was upheld against the several contentions that the tax was precluded by federal regulation of interstate air commerce, that it burdened interstate commerce and that the airplanes were immune from taxation, having acquired no taxable situs within the state. Justices Frankfurter and Jackson dissented.

ROBBINS v. SHELBY COUNTY TAXING DISTRICT.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1887.

120 U. S. 489, 30 L. ed. 694, 7 Sup. Ct. 592.

[A Tennessee statute required "all drummers, and all persons not having a regular licensed house of business in the Taxing District, offering for sale or selling goods, * * * therein, by sample," to pay a license tax of $25 per month. Robbins was convicted of drumming without a license, on evidence that he solicited buyers in Shelby County as a drummer for a firm whose place of business was in Cincinnati, Ohio. The state supreme court sustained the conviction and this writ of error was taken.]

MR. JUSTICE BRADLEY delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

In view of these fundamental principles, which are to govern our decision, we may approach the question submitted to us in the present case, and inquire whether it is competent for a state to levy a tax or impose any other restriction upon the citizens or inhabitants of other states for selling or seeking to sell their goods in such state before they are introduced therein. Do not such restrictions affect the very foundation of interstate trade? How is a manufacturer or a merchant of one state to sell his goods in another state, without, in some way, obtaining orders therefor? Must he be compelled to send them at a venture, without knowing whether there is any demand for them? This may, undoubtedly, be safely done with regard to some products for which there is always a market and a demand, or where the course of trade has established a general and unlimited demand. A raiser of farm produce in New Jersey or Connecticut, or a manufacturer of leather or woodenware, may, perhaps, safely take his goods to the city of New York, and be sure of finding a stable and reliable market for them. But there are hundreds, perhaps thousands, of articles which no person would think of exporting to another state without first procuring an order for them. It is true, a merchant or manufacturer in one state may erect or hire a warehouse or store in another state, in which to place his goods, and await the chances of being able to sell them. But this would require a warehouse or store in every state with which he might desire to trade. Surely, he cannot be compelled to take this inconvenient and expensive course. In certain branches of business, it may be adopted with advantage. Many manufacturers do open houses or places of business in other states than those in which they reside and send their goods there to be kept on sale. But this is a matter of convenience, and not of compulsion, and would neither suit the convenience nor be within the ability of many others engaged in the same kind of business, and would be entirely unsuited to many branches of business. In these cases, then, what shall the merchant or manufacturer do, who wishes to sell his goods in other states? Must he sit still in his factory or warehouse, and wait for the people of those states to come to him? This would be a silly and ruinous proceeding.

The only other way, and the one, perhaps, which most extensively prevails, is to obtain orders from persons residing or doing business in those other states. But how is the merchant or manufacturer to secure such orders? If he may be taxed by such states for doing so, who shall limit the tax? It may amount to prohibition. To say that such a tax is not a burden upon interstate commerce, is to speak at least unadvisedly, and without due attention to the truth of things. * * *

The truth is, that in numberless instances, the most feasible, if not the only practicable, way for the merchant or manufacturer to obtain orders in other states is to obtain them by personal application, either by himself or by some one employed by him for that purpose; and in many branches of business he must necessarily exhibit samples for the purpose of determining the kind and quality of the goods he proposes to sell, or which the other party desires to purchase. But the right of taxation, if it exists at all, is not confined to selling by sample. It embraces every act of sale, whether by word of mouth only, or by the exhibition of samples. If the right exists, any New York or Chicago merchant, visiting New Orleans or Jacksonville for pleasure or for his health, and casually taking an order for goods to be sent from his warehouse, could be made liable to pay a tax for so doing, or be convicted of a misdemeanor for not having taken out a license. The right to tax would apply equally as well to the principal as to his agent, and to a single act of sale as to a hundred acts.

But it will be said that a denial of this power of taxation will interfere with the right of the state to tax business pursuits and callings carried on within its limits, and its right to require licenses for carrying on those which are declared to be privileges. This may be true to a certain extent, but only in those cases in which the states themselves, as well as individual citizens, are subject to the restraints of the higher law of the Constitution; and this interference will be very limited in its operation. It will only prevent the levy of a tax, or the requirements of a license, for making negotiations in the conduct of interstate commerce; and it may well be asked where the state gets authority for imposing burdens on that branch of business any more than for imposing a tax on the business of importing from foreign countries, or even on that of postmaster or United States marshal. The mere calling the business of a drummer a privilege, cannot make it so. Can the state legislature make it a Tennessee privilege to carry on the business of importing goods from foreign countries? If not, has it any better right to make it a state privilege to carry on interstate commerce? It seems to be forgotten, in argument, that the people of this country are citizens of the United States, as well as of the individual states, and that they have some rights under the Constitution and laws of the former, independent of the latter, and free from any interference or restraint from them.

To deny to the state the power to lay the tax or require the license in question, will not, in any perceptible degree, diminish its resources, or its just power of taxation. It is very true that, if the goods when sold were in the state, and part of its general mass of property, they would be liable to taxation; but when brought into the state in consequence of the sale, they will be equally liable; so that, in the end, the state will derive just as much revenue from them as if they were there before the sale. As soon as the goods are in the state, and become part of its general mass of property, they will become liable to be taxed in the same manner as other property of similar character, as was distinctly held by this Court in the case of Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622. * * * But to tax the sale of such goods, or the offer to sell them, before they are brought into the state, is a very different thing, and seems to us clearly a tax on interstate commerce itself.

It is strongly urged, as if it were a material point in the case, that no discrimination is made between domestic and foreign drummers,—those of Tennessee and those of other states; that all are taxed alike. But that does not meet the difficulty. Interstate commerce cannot be taxed at all, even though the same amount of tax should be laid on domestic commerce, or that which is carried on solely within the state. This was decided in the case of The State Freight Tax, 15 Wall. 232. The negotiation of sales of goods which are in another state, for the purpose of introducing them into the state in which the negotiation is made, is interstate commerce. * * *

It would not be difficult, however, to show that the tax authorized by the state of Tennessee in the present case is discriminative against the merchants and manufacturers of other states. They can only sell their goods in Memphis by the employment of drummers and by means of samples; whilst the merchants and manufacturers of Memphis, having regular licensed houses of business there, have no occasion for such agents, and, if they had, they are not subject to any tax therefor. They are taxed for their licensed houses, it is true; but so, it is presumable, are the merchants and manufacturers of other states in the places where they reside; and the tax on drummers operates greatly to their disadvantage in comparison with the merchants and manufacturers of Memphis. And such was undoubtedly one of its objects. This kind of taxation is usually imposed at the instance and solicitation of domestic dealers, as a means of protecting them from foreign competition. And in many cases there may be some reason in their desire for such protection. But this shows in a still stronger light the unconstitutionality of the tax. It shows that it not only operates as a restriction upon interstate commerce, but that it is intended to have that effect as one of its principal objects. And if a state can, in this way, impose restrictions upon interstate commerce for the benefit and protection of its own citizens, we are brought back to the condition of things which existed before the adoption of the Constitution, and which was one of the principal causes that led to it.

If the selling of goods by sample, and the employment of drummers for that purpose, injuriously affect the local interest of the states, Congress, if applied to, will undoubtedly make such reasonable regulations as the case may demand. * * *

Judgment reversed.

[MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WAITE, with whom concurred MR. JUSTICE FIELD and MR. JUSTICE GRAY, dissented.]

NOTES

1. The holding of the principal case was reaffirmed in Nippert v. Richmond, 327 U. S. 416, 90 L. ed. 760, 66 Sup. Ct. 586, 162 A. L. R. 844 (1946), where an ordinance of Richmond, Virginia, which imposed an annual license tax on all sales-solicitors was held invalid as applied to Nippert, who solicited orders for the sale of merchandise to be filled by subsequent interstate shipments. Justices Black, Douglas and Murphy dissented.

2. In contrast with the drummer, the itinerant salesman or "peddler" who carries goods with him for immediate delivery to the customer is engaged in intrastate business and hence subject to state or municipal privilege taxes. Wagner v. Covington, 251 U. S. 95, 64 L. ed. 157, 40 Sup. Ct. 93 (1919); Caskey

Baking Co. v. Virginia, 313 U. S. 117, 85 L. ed. 1223, 61 Sup. Ct. 881 (1941). However, license fees which discriminate against the peddler of articles grown, produced or manufactured outside the taxing state are invalid. Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 347 (1876). Cf. Howe Machine Co. v. Gage, 100 U. S. 676, 25 L. ed. 754 (1880), holding that where a state statute applies alike to the sale of articles manufactured within the state and to those manufactured outside the state, and the exaction is not an unreasonable one, the requirement of a license fee for the privilege of peddling within the state is valid.

3. A Mississippi tax upon persons soliciting business for laundries not licensed in the state was held to burden interstate commerce, whether the tax be regarded as one on the solicitation of business or on the activities of picking up and delivering laundry. The court said: "In the long line of 'drummer' cases, beginning with Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing District, 120 U. S. 489, this court has held that a tax imposed upon the solicitation of interstate business is a tax upon interstate commerce itself. Whether or not solicitation of interstate business may be regarded as a local incident of interstate commerce, the court has not permitted state taxation to carve out this incident from the integral economic process of interstate commerce." Memphis Steam Laundry Cleaner, Inc. v. Stone, 342 U. S. 389, 96 L. ed. 436, 72 Sup. Ct. 424 (1952).

BEST & CO. v. MAXWELL.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1940.
311 U. S. 454, 85 L. ed. 275, 61 Sup. Ct. 334.

MR. JUSTICE REED delivered the opinion of the Court.

Appellant, a New York retail merchandise establishment, rented a display room in a North Carolina hotel for several days during February, 1938, and took orders for goods corresponding to samples; it filled the orders by shipping direct to the customers from New York City. Before using the room appellant paid under protest the tax required by chapter 127, § 121 (e), of the North Carolina Laws of 1937, which levies an annual privilege tax of $250 on every person or corporation, not a regular retail merchant in the state, who displays samples in any hotel room rented or occupied temporarily for the purpose of securing retail orders. Appellant not being a regular retail merchant of North Carolina admittedly comes within the statute. Asserting, however, that the tax was unconstitutional, especially in view of the commerce clause, it brought this suit for a refund and succeeded in the trial court. The Supreme Court of North Carolina reversed and then, being evenly divided on rehearing, allowed the reversal to stand. The prevailing opinion characterized the tax as one on the commercial use of temporary quarters, which in its operation did not discriminate against interstate commerce and therefore did not come into conflict with the commerce clause.

The commerce clause forbids discrimination, whether forthright or ingenious. In each case it is our duty to determine whether the statute under attack, whatever its name may be, will in its practical operation work discrimination against interstate commerce. This standard we think condemns the tax at bar. Nominally the statute taxes all who are not regular retail merchants in North Carolina, regardless of whether they are residents or nonresidents. We must assume, however, on this record that those North Carolina residents competing with appellant for the sale of similar merchandise will normally be regular retail merchants. The retail stores of the state are the natural outlets for merchandise, not those who sell only by sample. Some of these local shops may, like appellant, rent temporary display rooms in sections of North Carolina where they have no permanent store, but even these escape the tax at bar because the location of their central retail store somewhere within the state will qualify them as "regular retail merchants in the State of North Carolina." The only corresponding fixed-sum license tax to which appellant's real competitors are subject is a tax of $1 per annum for the privilege of doing business. Nonresidents wishing to display their wares must either establish themselves as regular North Carolina retail merchants at prohibitive expense, or else pay this $250 tax that bears no relation to actual or probable sales but must be paid in advance no matter how small the sales turn out to be. Interstate commerce can hardly survive in so hostile an atmosphere. A $250 investment in advance, required of out-of-state retailers but not of their real local competitors, can operate only to discourage and hinder the appearance of interstate commerce in the North Carolina retail market. Extrastate merchants would be compelled to turn over their North Carolina trade to regular local merchants selling by sample. North Carolina regular retail merchants would benefit, but to the same extent the commerce of the Nation would suffer discrimination.

The freedom of commerce which allows the merchants of each state a regional or national market for their goods is not to be fettered by legislation, the actual effect of which is to discriminate in favor of intrastate businesses, whatever may be the ostensible reach of the language.

Reversed.

RALEY & BROS. v. RICHARDSON.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1924.
264 U. S. 157, 68 L. ed. 615, 44 Sup. Ct. 256.

MR. JUSTICE SUTHERLAND delivered the opinion of the Court.

A statute of Georgia (Acts 1921, p. 46, par. 30) imposes a flat tax of $100 upon any broker or commission merchant buying or selling merchandise on commission for another, or engaged in the business of receiving or distributing articles of merchandise shipped to such broker or merchant for distribution on account of the shipper. The bill filed below sought to enjoin the collection of the tax on the ground that the statute violates the Commerce Clause of the federal Constitution and also, contingently, upon the further ground that the statute is void under the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The complainants were divided into two classes, A and B. The business of those in Class B was to solicit orders for goods from dealers in Georgia, which orders were sent to be filled, sometimes to nonresident and sometimes to resident principals, the greater part of the business being with nonresident principals. The business of those in Class A was wholly confined to representation of nonresident principals. Upon acceptance of an order the goods are shipped by the principal to the purchaser, but remain the property of the former until the time of sale.

The trial court sustained the tax as to Class B and enjoined its collection as to Class A, and its judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court, 154 Ga. 140. We are concerned here with the judgment only in so far as it affects Class B.

The contention is that the tax is laid, expressly, upon all brokers and commission merchants in the state and upon the business done by them, whether interstate or intrastate, without separating one from the other. The state courts, by whose construction we are bound, held that the statute did not apply to interstate business; and we consider it as though it so provided in terms. It was held, however, that inasmuch as Class B complainants were engaged in intrastate business they were subject to the tax, and none the less because they were also engaged in interstate business. With this conclusion we fully agree.

The complainants were definitely engaged in the domestic business described in the statute and were liable to the tax, irrespective of the extent of it and whether they engaged in interstate business in addition or not. That the former was small in comparison with the latter makes no difference; nor does the fact that both were carried on at the same time and in the same establishment. If the two were not distinct, but the former a mere incident of the latter, the burden was upon complainants to furnish the proof; in which case a different question would arise. Kehrer v. Stewart, 197 U. S. 60, 69. Certainly, one cannot avoid a tax upon a taxable business by also engaging in a non-taxable business.

There is nothing in the contention that, because, under the construction placed upon the statute by the state courts, the tax falls upon those engaged in domestic business and does not fall upon those engaged in interstate business, it is void for inequality. It would be a strange application of the equality provision of the Fourteenth Amendment to say that because a state is forbidden by paramount law to impose a tax upon some merchants, it is therefore powerless to impose it upon other merchants to whom the restriction does not apply. It is enough if the state observe the rule of equality among the persons subject to its taxing power.

Affirmed.

NOTE

1. While a foreign corporation engaged in interstate commerce does not, by entering into local business, lose its right to tax immunity on its interstate business, it cannot channel business through a local retail outlet to gain the advantage of a local business, without subjecting itself to a retailer's occupation tax based on gross receipts from sales to its customers within the state. Norton Co. v. Department of Revenue of Illinois, 340 U. S. 534, 95 L. ed. 517, 71 Sup. Ct. 377 (1951), holding, however, that sales to customers sending orders directly to the home office which were filled by shipments directly to the customers should have been excluded from the tax base.

ALPHA PORTLAND CEMENT CO. v. MASSACHUSETTS.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1925.

268 U. S. 203, 69 L. ed. 916, 45 Sup. Ct. 477, 44 A. L. R. 1219.

[Error to judgments of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts which had sustained a tax levied on the New Jersey corporation, plaintiff in error. The Massachusetts tax law provided: "Every foreign corporation shall pay annually, with respect to the carrying on or doing business by it within the Commonwealth, an excise equal to" the sum of (1)  $\frac{1}{2}$  of 1% of that proportion of the cash value of the shares of its capital stock as its assets employed in the state bore to its entire assets and (2)  $2\frac{1}{2}$ % of the net income derived from business done within the state. An elaborate method was prescribed for calculating item (2). The tax imposed on plaintiff for the year 1922 was, item (1), \$379.66 + item (2) \$187.91 = \$567.57. Other facts appear in the opinion.]

MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS delivered the opinion of the Court.

Plaintiff in error claims that the Commonwealth illegally exacted of it $800.45 as an excise tax for the year 1921, and $567.57 plus $22.97 interest for 1922. The court below upheld the tax and definitely ruled that it was not repugnant to the Fourteenth Amendment or the Commerce Clause of the federal Constitution. 244 Mass. 530; 248 Mass. 156. * * *

We accept the following statements in the opinion below: "The petitioner is a corporation organized under the laws of New Jersey. Its business is the manufacture and sale of cement. Its principal office is at Easton, Pennsylvania. Its mills are located in several other states outside of Massachusetts from which shipments are made to various parts of the United States and to foreign countries. It maintains an office in Boston in charge of a district sales manager, with a clerk, where its correspondence and other natural business activities in connection with the receipt of orders and shipments of goods for the New England states are conducted. The office is used as headquarters for travelling salesmen, who solicit orders in Massachusetts and the other New England states. Orders so taken are transmitted at the Boston office by mail to the principal office at Easton, Pennsylvania, where exclusively they are passed upon, and if accepted, the goods are shipped and invoices sent directly to the customer. Remittances usually are made to the petitioner at Easton, though in exceptional instances prepayments or collections are made by the salesmen and immediately transmitted to Easton. No samples or other merchandise are kept in this commonwealth. The only property of the petitioner in Massachusetts is its office furniture, valued at $573. It maintains no bank account here, its salaries and office rent being paid from its principal office. Incidental expenses are paid from an account not exceeding $1,000 kept by the district sales manager in his own name. No corporate books, records, or meetings are in Massachusetts. There is no controversy as to the facts, valuations or computation of the tax. The issues between the parties relate solely to the correct interpretation of our corporate tax law as to foreign corporations and to the constitutionality of that law in its application to the petitioner. * * * It is rightly conceded by the Attorney General that the petitioner was engaged in this commonwealth exclusively in interstate commerce." * * *

Counsel for the Commonwealth assert: "The present tax law imposes an excise on foreign corporations for the privilege of doing business in Massachusetts under the protection of its laws and with the financial, commercial and other advantages flowing therefrom, measured solely by the property and net income fairly attributable to the business done within the state. Payment of the tax is not made a condition precedent to the doing of business. Collection of the tax is to be made by ordinary methods. There is no discrimination either against foreign corporations or against interstate commerce." "The taxes complained of were excises and not property taxes." "Being excises these taxes are not taxes on property or net income, but taxes measured by property and net income, used in or derived from business done in Massachusetts." See Judson Freight Forwarding Co. v. Commonwealth, 242 Mass. 47.

This view of the nature of the exaction was adopted by the court below, and we think it is the correct one. The right to lay taxes on tangible property or on income is not involved; and the inquiry comes to this: May a state impose upon a foreign corporation which transacts only interstate business within her borders an excise tax measured by a combination of two factors—the proportion of the total value of capital shares attributed to transactions therein, and the proportion of net income attributed to such transactions?

Cheney Brothers Co. v. Massachusetts, 246 U. S. 147, 153, 154, necessitates a negative reply. Under St. 1909, c. 490, Part III, § 56, the state demanded an excise of a foreign corporation which transacted therein only interstate business. The excise was laid upon the corporation and the basis of it the same as in the present cause. This Court said: "We think the tax on this company was essentially a tax on doing an interstate business and therefore repugnant to the commerce clause." Here also the excise was demanded on account of interstate business. A new method for measuring the tax had been prescribed, but that cannot save the exaction. Any such excise burdens interstate commerce and is therefore invalid without regard to measure or amount. Looney v. Crane, 245 U. S. 178, 190; International Paper Co. v. Massachusetts, 246 U. S. 135, 142; Heisler v. Thomas Colliery Co., 260 U. S. 245, 259; Texas Transport & Terminal Co. v. New Orleans, 264 U. S. 150. * * *

It must now be regarded as settled that a state may not burden interstate commerce or tax property beyond her borders under the guise of regulating or taxing intrastate business. So to burden interstate commerce is prohibited by the Commerce Clause; and the Fourteenth Amendment does not permit taxation of property beyond the state's jurisdiction. The amount demanded is unimportant when there is no legitimate basis for the tax. * * *

Union Tank Line Co. v. Wright, 249 U. S. 275, 282, et seq., pointed out the limitations which must be observed when property used in interstate commerce is valued for purposes of taxation by a state. We there declined to follow the rule applied in Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 26, and held that determination of real value with fair accuracy is essential. Many methods adapted to that end have been accepted, but this does not tend to support an excise laid upon a foreign corporation on account of interstate transactions.

The local business of a foreign corporation may support an excise measured in any reasonable way, if neither interstate commerce nor property beyond the state is taxed. Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Chamberlain, 254 U. S. 113, approved such an excise measured by income reasonably attributed to intrastate business; but nothing there said was intended to modify well established principles. It must be read with the essential facts in mind. * * *

The excise challenged by plaintiff in error is not materially different from the one declared unconstitutional in Cheney Brothers Co. v. Massachusetts, and cannot be enforced against a foreign corporation which does nothing but interstate business within the state. The introduction of an extremely complicated method for calculating the amount of the exaction does not change its nature or mitigate the burden.

* * *

Reversed.

MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS dissents.

NOTES

1. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Kansas ex rel. Coleman, 216 U. S. 1, 54 L. ed. 355, 30 Sup. Ct. 190 (1910) was an action brought by Kansas in a state court to obtain a decree enjoining the Western Union Telegraph Company, a New York corporation, from transacting a local business within the state. The proceeding was based upon the refusal of the company to pay a fee of a specified per cent of its total authorized capital, representing all of its business and property, within and without the state. A statute of 1908 made the payment of the fee a condition of a foreign corporation's entering the state or continuing to do local business within it. Defendant's entire capitalization was $100,000,000, on which the fee was $20,100. Most of this capital was employed outside of Kansas. From a decree enjoining the company from transacting intrastate business in Kansas but not affecting its interstate or federal governmental business, writ of error was prosecuted to the Supreme Court of the United States. Reversing this judgment, the court held that the condition sought to be enforced violated the commerce and due process clauses of the Constitution. A franchise tax on a foreign corporation engaged within a state in both intrastate and interstate commerce is invalid where it is measured by the total authorized capital stock, representing all its business and property. Such a tax imposes a burden on interstate commerce because it in effect taxes the corporation's entire business, including the interstate, and its property, wherever situated. What part of the tax exacted was to be attributed to the company's domestic business in Kansas and what part to interstate business, the state had made no effort to ascertain and declare.

2. A foreign corporation engaged in interstate commerce may be required, as a condition of being permitted to enter a state to do intrastate business, to pay an entrance fee measured by the amount of the corporation's authorized capital stock. Atlantic Refining Co. v. Virginia, 302 U. S. 22, 82 L. ed. 24, 58 Sup. Ct. 75 (1937). Here the court found no violation of the commerce, due process or equal protection clauses and justified its holding as follows: "The entrance fee is obviously not a charge laid upon interstate commerce; nor a charge furtively directed against interstate commerce; nor a charge measured by such commerce. Its amount does not grow or shrink according to the volume of interstate commerce or the amount of the capital used in it. The size of the fee would be exactly the same if the company did no interstate commerce in Virginia or elsewhere. The entrance fee is comparable to the charter, or incorporation, fee of a domestic corporation—a fee commonly measured by the amount of the capital authorized."

3. In Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 32 L. ed. 311, 8 Sup. Ct. 1380 (1888) a lump sum license tax on the privilege of engaging in the telegraph business in the state was held invalid because no attempt was made to discriminate between the privilege of doing intrastate business and the privilege of doing interstate business, the court saying: "There are sufficient modes in which the internal business, if not already taxed in some other way, may be subjected to taxation, without the imposition of a tax which covers the entire operations of the company."

4. Memphis Natural Gas Co. v. Stone, 335 U. S. 80, 92 L. ed. 1832, 68 Sup. Ct. 1475 (1948) upheld a Mississippi franchise tax imposed upon an interstate pipe-line company doing no local business in the state, based upon the value of capital used, invested or employed within the state, the tax having been construed by the highest state court as a recompense for the protection of the company's "local activities in maintaining, keeping in repair, and otherwise in manning" the pipe-line facilities used in transporting gas through the state. Mr. Justice Reed's opinion stated: "This court has drawn the distinction in the field of pipe-line taxation between state statutes on the privilege of doing business where only interstate business was done and those upon appropriate local incidents." Mr. Justice Frankfurter, with the concurrence of Chief Justice Vinson and Justices Jackson and Burton, dissented. Cf. the recent decision in Michigan-Wisconsin Pipe Line Co. v. Calvert, 347 U. S. 157, 98 L. ed. 583, 74 Sup. Ct. 396 (1954).

UNITED STATES GLUE CO. v. OAK CREEK.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1918.

247 U. S. 321, 62 L. ed. 1135, 38 Sup. Ct. 499, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 748.

[On writ of error to review a decision of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin which had denied recovery by plaintiff, a Wisconsin corporation, of a tax paid under a general income tax law of that state. The statute provided that as to persons and corporations engaged in business the profits should be considered taxable income, and that any person including corporations "engaged in business within and without the state shall, with respect to income other than that derived from rentals, stocks, bonds, securities or evidences of indebtedness, be taxed only upon that proportion of such income as is derived from business transacted and property located within the state," to be determined as stated in the opinion.]

MR. JUSTICE PITNEY delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

In order to determine what part of the income of a corporation engaged in business within and without the state (other than that derived from rentals, stocks, bonds, securities, etc.) is to be taxed as derived from business transacted and property located within the state, * * * the gross business in dollars of the corporation in the state, added to the value in dollars of its property in the state, is made the numerator of a fraction of which the denominator consists of the total gross business in dollars of the corporation both within and without the state. The resulting fraction is taken by the income tax law as representing the proportion of the income which is deemed to be derived from business transacted and property located within the state. This formula was applied in apportioning plaintiff's net "business income" for the year 1911, and upon the portion thus attributed to the state, plus the income from rentals, stocks, bonds, etc., the tax in question was levied.

Plaintiff was and is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin, having its principal office and place of business in the Town of Oak Creek, where it conducted an extensive manufacturing plant, selling its products throughout the state and in other states and foreign countries. Its net "business income" in the year 1911, exclusive of that derived from rentals, stocks, bonds, etc., and after making the deductions allowed by the act, amounted to about $124,000, derived from the following sources: (a) about $16,000 from goods sold to customers within the state and delivered from its factory; (b) about $65,000 from goods sold to customers outside of the state and delivered from its factory; (c) about $31,000 from goods sold to customers outside of the state, the sales having been made and goods shipped from plaintiff's branches in other states, and the goods having been manufactured at plaintiff's factory and shipped before sale to said branches; (d) about $7,000 from goods sold to customers outside of the state, the sales having been made and goods shipped from plaintiff's branches without the state, these goods having been purchased by plaintiff outside of the state and shipped to plaintiff's factory in the state, and thence shipped before sale from the factory to the branches; (e) about $5,000 from goods sold outside of the state, the sales having been made and goods shipped from said branches, and the goods having been purchased by plaintiff outside of the state and shipped from the points of purchase to the branches without coming into the State of Wisconsin.

No contention was made as to the taxability of the income designated in item (a). Plaintiff's contention that items (d) and (e) were not taxable because not derived from property located or business transacted within the state was upheld by the state courts. Thus the controversy is narrowed to the contention, overruled by the supreme court, that items (b) and (c) were not taxable because derived from interstate commerce.

Stated concisely, the question is whether a state, in levying a general income tax upon the gains and profits of a domestic corporation, may include in the computation the net income derived from transactions in interstate commerce without contravening the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States.

It is settled that a state may not directly burden interstate commerce, either by taxation or otherwise. But a tax that only indirectly affects the profits or returns from such commerce is not within the rule. * * *

The distinction between direct and indirect burdens, with particular reference to a comparison between a tax upon the gross returns of carriers in interstate commerce and a general income tax imposed upon all inhabitants incidentally affecting carriers engaged in such commerce, was the subject of consideration in Philadelphia & Southern S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326, 345, where the court, by Mr. Justice Bradley, said: "The corporate franchises, the property, the business, the income of corporations created by a state may undoubtedly be taxed by the state; but in imposing such taxes care should be taken not to interfere with or hamper, directly or by indirection, interstate or foreign commerce, or any other matter exclusively within the jurisdiction of the federal government." Many previous cases were referred to.

The correct line of distinction is so well illustrated in two cases decided at the present term that we hardly need go further. In Crew Levick Co. v. Pennsylvania, 245 U. S. 292, we held that a state tax upon the business of selling goods in foreign commerce, measured by a certain percentage of the gross transactions in such commerce, was by its necessary effect a tax upon the commerce, and at the same time a duty upon exports, contrary to §§ 8 and 10 of Article I of the Constitution, since it operated to lay a direct burden upon every transaction by withholding for the use of the state a part of every dollar received. On the other hand, in Peck & Co. v. Lowe, 247 U. S. 165, we held that the Income Tax Act of October 3, 1913, c. 16, § 2, 38 Stat. 166, 172, when carried into effect by imposing an assessment upon the entire net income of a corporation, approximately three-fourths of which was derived from the export of goods to foreign countries, did not amount to laying a tax or duty on articles exported within the meaning of Art. I, § 9, cl. 5 of the Constitution. The distinction between a direct and an indirect burden by way of tax or duty was developed, and it was shown that an income tax laid generally on net incomes, not on income from exportation because of its source or in the way of discrimination, but just as it was laid on other income, and affecting only the net receipts from exportation after all expenses were paid and losses adjusted and the recipient of the income was free to use it as he chose, was only an indirect burden.

The difference in effect between a tax measured by gross receipts and one measured by net income, recognized by our decisions, is manifest and substantial, and it affords a convenient and workable basis of distinction between a direct and immediate burden upon the business affected and a charge that is only indirect and incidental. A tax upon gross receipts affects each transaction in proportion to its magnitude and irrespective of whether it is profitable or otherwise. Conceivably it may be sufficient to make the difference between profit and loss, or to so diminish the profit as to impede or discourage the conduct of the commerce. A tax upon the net profits has not the same deterrent effect, since it does not arise at all unless a gain is shown over and above expenses and losses, and the tax cannot be heavy unless the profits are large. Such a tax, when imposed upon net incomes from whatever source arising, is but a method of distributing the cost of government, like a tax upon property, or upon franchises treated as property; and if there be no discrimination against interstate commerce, either in the admeasurement of the tax or in the means adopted for enforcing it, it constitutes one of the ordinary and general burdens of government, from which persons and corporations otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the states are not exempted by the federal Constitution because they happen to be engaged in commerce among the states. * * *

Judgment affirmed.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WHITE concurs in the result.

INTERSTATE TRANSIT, INC. v. LINDSEY.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1931.

283 U. S. 183, 75 L. ed. 953, 51 Sup. Ct. 380.

MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Tennessee Act of 1927, c. 89, § 4, imposes upon concerns operating interstate motorbusses on the highways of the state a privilege tax graduated according to carrying capacity. It is $500 a year for each vehicle seating more than twenty and less than thirty passengers. The tax for eight such busses was demanded of Interstate Transit, Inc., an Ohio corporation which operates, exclusively in interstate commerce, a line from Cincinnati, Ohio, to Atlanta, Ga. The company made a quarterly payment under protest, and brought this suit to recover the amount paid, on the ground that the statute as applied violates the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution (Article 1, § 8, cl. 3). The trial court allowed recovery, but its judgment was reversed by the Supreme Court of the state. 161 Tenn. 56, 29 S. W. 2d 257. The case is here on appeal.

While a state may not lay a tax on the privilege of engaging in interstate commerce, Sprout v. South Bend, 277 U. S. 163, it may impose even upon motor vehicles engaged exclusively in interstate commerce a charge, as compensation for the use of the public highways, which is a fair contribution to the cost of constructing and maintaining them and of regulating the traffic thereon. Kane v. New Jersey, 242 U. S. 160, 168, 169; Clark v. Poor, 274 U. S. 554; Sprout v. South Bend, supra, pages 169, 170. As such a charge is a direct burden on interstate commerce, the tax cannot be sustained unless it appears affirmatively, in some way, that it is levied only as compensation for use of the highways or to defray the expense of regulating motor traffic. This may be indicated by the nature of the imposition, such as a mileage tax directly proportioned to the use, Interstate Busses Corp. v. Blodgett, 276 U. S. 245, or by the express allocation of the proceeds of the tax to highway purposes, as in Clark v. Poor, supra, or otherwise. Where it is shown that the tax is so imposed, it will be sustained unless the taxpayer shows that it bears no reasonable relation to the privilege of using the highways or is discriminatory. Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 610, 612; Interstate Busses Corp. v. Blodgett, 276 U. S. 245, 250-252. Compare Interstate Busses Corp. v. Holyoke Street Ry., 273 U. S. 45, 51. But the mere fact that the tax falls upon one who uses the highway is not enough to give it presumptive validity.

A detailed examination of the statute under which the tax here challenged was laid makes it clear that the charge was imposed, not as compensation for the use of the highways, but for the privilege of doing the interstate bus business. Chapter 89 of the Public Acts of 1927 deals with practically all of the taxes laid by the state, except those relating to highways. It is entitled "An Act to provide for General Revenue for the State of Tennessee and the counties and municipalities thereof, to be known as the General Revenue Bill." The scope of this statute conforms to the title. It consists of twenty-one sections. The first three impose general property, inheritance, and merchants' capital taxes. Section 4, under which the tax challenged is laid, declares "that each vocation, occupation and business hereinafter named in this section, is hereby declared to be a privilege, and the rate of taxes on such privileges shall be as hereinafter fixed." Then follows a schedule occupying 53 pages, in which 160 businesses are arranged, in the main, alphabetically, and in which the several motorbus businesses have their appropriate places. This is followed by six additional sections which deal exclusively with similar privilege taxes. The remaining sections relate to enforcement.

The tax on interstate busses is of the same character as the tax laid for the privilege of engaging in every other line of business. The taxes for the several businesses range from $2.50 to $5,000, and since they differ widely in amount even for the same business, appear to be graduated according to the assumed earning capacity. In most, the amount demanded increases with the population of the city, town, or district in which the business is carried on. For some a different basis of gauging probable earning power is adopted. On warehouses the tax is graduated according to storage capacity. On theaters it is graduated according to seating capacity. On the business of operating busses it likewise varies according to seating capacity. The latter tax is specified separately for interstate busses, for intrastate busses operating in more than one county, and for those operating in a single county. But this separation appears to be made solely because of the allocation of the proceeds of the tax. For the rate of taxation is the same for each, and varies solely with the carrying capacity of the bus; there being steep increases from $50 a year for one carrying not more than five passengers to $750 for one carrying over thirty.

The conclusion that the tax challenged is laid for the privilege of doing business and not as compensation for the use of the highways is confirmed by contrasting section 4 of the 1927 act with those statutes which admittedly provide for defraying the cost of constructing and maintaining highways and regulating traffic thereon. The former declares specifically in connection with the privilege tax on interstate busses that the proceeds "shall go and belong exclusively to the General Funds of the State." On the other hand, in the legislation by which Tennessee has provided for defraying the cost of constructing and maintaining the state highways and regulating motor traffic, it has been the consistent practice to prescribe that moneys raised for this purpose shall be segregated and go into the highway fund. The present system of motor regulations was inaugurated in 1915. At the same session, the Legislature created a State Highway Commission with power to construct and maintain highways. In these statutes and in many later ones—prescribing additional fees for the registration and licensing of motor vehicles, imposing gasoline taxes, laying a one-mill road tax, and authorizing the issue of bonds for the construction of highways and bridges—the Legislature provided that the proceeds of the fees, taxes, and bonds, and of the tolls collected on bridges, should be set apart as state highway and bridge funds to be expended by the commission exclusively for the construction and maintenance of highways or bridges. The absence in section 4 of this provision, which characterizes almost every other Tennessee statute relating to the construction and maintenance of highways, or the regulation of motor vehicle traffic, is additional evidence that the present tax was not exacted for such purposes, but merely as a privilege tax on the carrying on of interstate business.

It is suggested that a tax on busses graduated according to carrying capacity is common and is a reasonable measure of compensation for use of the highways. It is true that such a measure is often applied in taxing motor vehicles engaged in intrastate commerce. Being free to levy occupation taxes, states may tax the privilege of doing an intrastate bus business without regard to whether the charge imposed represents merely a fair compensation for the use of their highways. Compare Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 183, 189. But since a state may demand of one carrying on an interstate bus business only fair compensation for what it gives, such imposition, although termed a tax, cannot be tested by standards which generally determine the validity of taxes. Being valid only if compensatory, the charge must be necessarily predicated upon the use made, or to be made, of the highways of the state. Clark v. Poor, supra. In the present act the amount of the tax is not dependent upon such use. It does not rise with an increase in mileage traveled, or even with the number of passengers actually carried on the highways of the state. Nor is it related to the degree of wear and tear incident to the use of motor vehicles of different sizes and weights, except in so far as this is indirectly affected by carrying capacity. The tax is proportioned solely to the earning capacity of the vehicle. Accordingly, there is here no sufficient relation between the measure employed and the extent or manner of use to justify holding that the tax was a charge made merely as compensation for the use of the highways by interstate busses. We need not therefore consider whether the tax exacted from this appellant is unreasonably large or unjustly discriminatory.

Reversed.

MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS is of opinion that the judgment should be affirmed.

EASTERN AIR TRANSPORT, INC. v. SOUTH CAROLINA TAX COMMISSION.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1932.
285 U. S. 147, 76 L. ed. 673, 52 Sup. Ct. 340.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE HUGHES delivered the opinion of the Court.

This suit was brought to restrain the collection of a tax, imposed by the State of South Carolina, of six cents a gallon with respect to gasoline purchased by complainant in that State and used by complainant in interstate commerce. The complainant charged that the state Act placed a direct burden upon interstate commerce and hence was repugnant to the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution. Art. I,

§ 8. The District Court, composed of three judges as required by statute, denied an interlocutory injunction, 52 Fed. (2d) 456, and the complainant appeals to this Court. Jud. Code, § 266; U. S. C., Tit. 28, § 380.

From the findings of the District Court it appears that the complainant is a Delaware corporation operating, in interstate commerce, air transport lines across the State of South Carolina; that its planes make regular stops at various points in the State but do not carry freight or passengers between such points, and practically its entire business is interstate in character; that it purchases gasoline in South Carolina for the use of its planes and that the seller adds to the price the amount of the state gasoline tax which the seller is required to pay under the Act in question, and thus complainant has to pay six cents a gallon more than it otherwise would, the excess amounting to about $5,000 a year.

The tax is described in the statute as a license tax, which, as applied in the instant case against the dealer, is for the privilege of carrying on the business of selling gasoline within the State. The tax is thus imposed upon the seller and the sales in question are intrastate sales. The appellant emphasizes the fact that the tax has been construed by the Supreme Court of the State to be an excise tax and not a property tax. Gregg Dyeing Co. v. Query, Supreme Court of South Carolina, decided April 13, 1931. So far as the present question is concerned, the distinction is not important. If such a license tax for the privilege of making sales within the State were regarded as in effect a tax upon the goods sold, its validity could not be questioned in the circumstances here disclosed, as in that aspect the tax would be upon a part of the general mass of property within the State and hence subject to the State's authority to tax, although the property might actually be used in interstate commerce. "It is elementary," said the Court in New Jersey Telephone Co. v. Tax Board, 280 U. S. 338, 346, "that a State may tax property used to carry on interstate commerce." Treating the tax as an excise tax upon the sales does not change the result in the instant case, as the sales are still purely intrastate transactions. Superior Oil Co. v. Mississippi, 280 U. S. 390, 395. Undoubtedly, purchases of goods within a State may form part of transactions in interstate commerce and hence be entitled to enjoy a corresponding immunity. But the mere purchase of supplies or equipment for use in conducting a business which constitutes interstate commerce is not so identified with that commerce as to make the sale immune from a non-discriminatory tax imposed by the State upon intrastate dealers. There is no substantial distinction between the sale of gasoline that is used in an airplane in interstate transportation and the sale of coal for the locomotives of an interstate carrier, or of the locomotives and cars themselves bought as equipment for interstate transportation. A non-discriminatory tax upon local sales in such cases has never been regarded as imposing a direct burden upon interstate commerce and has no greater or different effect upon that commerce than a general property tax to which all those enjoying the protection of the State may be subjected.

In Helson v. Kentucky, 279 U. S. 245, upon which the appellant relies, the tax was laid by Kentucky with respect to gasoline purchased by the plaintiffs in error in Illinois and used within Kentucky in the operation of a ferry boat on the Ohio River between the two States. The Court found that the tax was laid directly upon the use of the gasoline in interstate transportation. The Court said that "The tax is exacted as the price of the privilege of using an instrumentality of interstate commerce." Id., p. 252. Such a tax is manifestly different from a general property tax or a tax upon purely local sales.

Decree affirmed.

NOTE

1. Interstate traffic equally with intrastate may be required to pay a fair share of the cost and maintenance of the highways reasonably related to the use made thereof. A state may, therefore, because of its proprietary interest in its highways, exact a reasonable and nondiscriminatory fee from those using them for interstate commerce business as well as from those using them for local transportation purposes only. As Interstate Transit v. Lindsey makes clear, the charge is deemed compensation for the use of facilities furnished and necessary to help defray the expense of regulating motor traffic. Taxation of the sale of gasoline used by motor vehicles transporting goods in interstate commerce is justified as a measure suitable to that end. Licensing, registration and permit fees are also permissible for the same reason, if reasonable in amount and nondiscriminatory in character. Sprout v. South Bend, 277 U. S. 163, 72 L. ed. 833, 48 Sup. Ct. 502, 62 A. L. R. 45 (1928); Hicklin v. Coney, 290 U. S. 169, 78 L. ed. 247, 54 Sup. Ct. 142 (1933); Aero Mayflower Transit Co. v. Georgia Public Service Commission, 295 U. S. 285, 79 L. ed. 1439, 55 Sup. Ct. 709 (1935).

As such taxes are not on the use of the highways but on the privilege of using them, without specific limitation as to mileage, the levy of a flat fee not unreasonable in amount, rather than of a fee based on mileage, is not a forbidden burden on interstate commerce. Nor is it necessarily important that a part of the fees collected is not devoted directly to highway maintenance, where some of the cost thereof comes from the proceeds of a general property tax. Such exactions, however, must not be disguised methods for taxing the privilege of doing interstate business and will be held invalid where it is established that they bear no reasonable relation to the costs of the ostensible purposes for which they are levied. For cases containing good discussions of the problems involved, see Morfi v. Bingaman, 298 U. S. 407, 80 L. ed. 1245, 56 Sup. Ct. 756 (1936); Ingels v. Morfi, 300 U. S. 290, 81 L. ed. 653, 57 Sup. Ct. 439 (1937); Clark v. Paul Gray, 306 U. S. 583, 83 L. ed. 1001, 59 Sup. Ct. 744 (1939); Aero Mayflower Transit Co. v. Board of Railroad Commissioners of Montana, 332 U. S. 495, 92 L. ed. 99, 68 Sup. Ct. 167 (1947); Capitol Greyhound Lines v. Brice, 339 U. S. 542, 94 L. ed. 1053, 70 Sup. Ct. 806, 17 A. L. R. (2d) 407 (1950).

State taxation of gasoline introduced into the state in the tank of a vehicle, for use in propelling it in interstate commerce, has been held to burden such commerce where it does not appear on the face of the statute or it is not otherwise demonstrable that the tax has some fair relationship to the use of the highways for which the charge is made. See, e. g., Bingaman v. Golden Eagle

Western Lines, 297 U. S. 626, 80 L. ed. 928, 56 Sup. Ct. 624 (1936); McCarroll v. Dixie Greyhound Lines, Inc., 309 U. S. 176, 84 L. ed. 683, 60 Sup. Ct. 504 (1940). For annotations on state taxation of motor vehicles as affected by the commerce clause, see 75 L. ed. 953 (1931), and 92 L. ed. 109 (1948). For a discussion of the earlier cases, see Kauper, State Taxation of Interstate Motor Carriers, 32 Mich. L. Rev. 1, 71, 351 (1933-1934).

SOUTHERN PACIFIC CO. v. GALLAGHER.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1939.

306 U. S. 167, 83 L. ed. 586, 59 Sup. Ct. 389.

MR. JUSTICE REED delivered the opinion of the Court.

The California Use Tax Act of 1935 is assailed as violative of the commerce clause and the Fourteenth Amendment, when imposed upon tangible personal property, bought outside of the state by the Southern Pacific Company, an interstate railroad, and installed on importation, or kept available for use, as a part of its transportation facilities.

The attack comes by means of a bill of the Southern Pacific Company seeking, before a three-judge district court, an interlocutory and final injunction against the State Board of Equalization of California, its members and the Attorney-General of the state, to restrain them from enforcing the Use Tax Act. The trial court granted an interlocutory injunction and denied a motion to dismiss but later refused a permanent injunction and sustained the motion to dismiss. The case comes here by appeal.

The Use Tax Act is complementary to the California Retail Sales Tax Act of 1933. The latter levies a tax upon the gross receipts of California retailers from sales of tangible personal property; the former imposes an excise on the consumer at the same rate for the storage, use or other consumption in the state of such property when purchased from any retailer. As property covered by the sales tax is exempt under the use tax, all tangible personalty sold or utilized in California is taxed once for the support of the state government. Definitions in the Use Tax Act of taxpayer, retailer, storage and use are designed to make the coverage complete. A retailer is "every person, engaged in the business of making sales for storage, use or other consumption"; use is the exercise of any right or power incident to ownership, except sale in the regular course of business; storage is any "keeping or retention" with a similar exemption; and a taxpayer includes everyone "storing, using or otherwise consuming" the property subject to the use tax.

The principle of the use tax as applied to property brought into the state after its retail purchase for intrastate use has been upheld in Henneford v. Silas Mason Co., [300 U. S. 577] against the charge that it was a tax upon the operations of interstate commerce or a tax upon a foreign sale, violative of the Fourteenth Amendment. * * *

The appellant, the Southern Pacific Company, a Kentucky corporation, handles intrastate, interstate and foreign commerce over its railroad system which traverses a number of states and connects with the lines of carriers covering the continent. The findings and stipulation of facts show continual extrastate purchases of tangible personalty for the operation of the road; rails, equipment, machinery, tools and office supplies. Some of the purchases are used in the general offices of the corporation, located in California, for the supervision of the wide-flung activities; others are for material kept in readiness as a stand-by supply to replace or repair equipment damaged, destroyed or worn out in the operation of the road; and still others are to make improvements, replacements or extensions pursuant to previously determined plans and specifications. Few, if any, of the supplies are stored for long term needs. Storage is merely incidental to protection until use, as office supplies in a closet or an extra frog at a section tool house. For construction or reconstruction upon a large scale, special orders are given and arrangements made, so that the material is fabricated for a particular use in the transportation facilities, shipped to its California destination and installed upon arrival. To avoid delay and cost the movement from loading to final placement is as nearly continuous as managerial efficiency can contrive. While some articles are capable of general use, the major purchases of rails, repair parts and supplies for the maintenance and operation of the system are adapted only to railroad use. The purchases are paid for out of railroad operating capital and move on company material waybills, without transportation charge. All purchases may be said to be dedicated to consumption in the interstate transportation business of appellant. No new rolling stock is involved. Subsequent to repairing and reconditioning, rolling stock moves again in interstate transportation, as do cars after being stocked with supplies. The California tax on storage or use, it is said, cannot apply to these articles, as such a tax would be an unconstitutional burden upon the facilities of interstate commerce, of which the articles are a part.

There is agreement upon the principle involved. Appellant states that an excise tax imposed directly upon the privilege of using instrumentalities in carrying on interstate transportation is a direct and unconstitutional burden on commerce. Appellees do not dispute the premise but contend that the tax is on intrastate storage and use. They point to the definition of use as the exercise of a right of ownership, and of storage as any keeping or retention. By the definitive terms themselves, it is urged, the taxable events are retention and installation, not such storage as warehousing connotes, or use in the sense of consumption or operation. If we conclude retention and installation, under the circumstances here developed, are intrastate taxable events, viewed apart from commerce, we must still inquire whether taxes laid upon them are not, in effect, upon commerce, and forbidden.

Two lines of authority aid in considering the effect of this tax on commerce. The first makes it quite clear that a state tax upon the privilege of operating in, or upon carrying on, interstate commerce is invalid. States cannot tax interstate telegraph messages, or freight shipments. A license tax on sales by samples burdens one selling only goods from other states. A tax as applied to the business of interstate communication is unconstitutional. Where a similar levy by other states may be imposed, with consequent multiplicity of exaction on commerce for the same taxable event, local tax of a privilege, measured by total gross receipts from interstate transactions, is considered identical with an exaction on the commerce itself. This rule is applicable to a tax on gross receipts from interstate transportation; an occupation tax measured by gross receipts from radio broadcasting, and a general tax at specified rates upon the gross income of every resident, construed as "a tax upon gross receipts from commerce" "without apportionment." The measurement of a tax by gross receipts where it cannot result in a multiplication of the levies is upheld.

Appellant selects from this line the Helson case [Helson & Randolph v. Kentucky, 279 U. S. 245] as determinative of the contention that a tax on use of supplies or equipment is a tax on the commerce. A state tax of three cents per gallon was imposed on all gasoline "sold at wholesale." This phrase was defined to include gasoline bought out of the state and used within the state. There was no definition of the word use or used. The taxpayers operated an interstate ferry, purchased gasoline in Ohio and used that portion sought to be taxed in propelling their craft in the territorial waters of Kentucky. The court considered the tax on the consumption of the gas the same as a tax on the operation of the ferry boat and therefore invalid under the rule discussed in the preceding paragraph.

The second line of authority supports the view that use and storage as defined in the California act are taxable intrastate events, separate and apart from interstate commerce. A recent discussion of the topic sets out the precedents in support of a ruling that a tax upon the production of power by the use of which compressors drove natural gas in interstate commerce is valid. Such production is a taxable event distinct from its consumption in commerce. Particular attention is called by the state to the Wallace case. [Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Wallace, 288 U. S. 249]. There the tax was on "selling or storing or distributing gasoline." It became due on withdrawal from storage. The tax was held applicable to gasoline, purchased out of the state and stored in the state, "when all is withdrawn and used * * * as a source of motive power in interstate railway operation" and valid against the objection that "it is in effect a tax upon the use" in interstate commerce. The invalidity of such a tax arises from a levy on commerce itself or its gross receipts, not upon events prior to the commerce.

The principle illustrated by the Helson case forbids a tax upon commerce or consumption in commerce. The Wallace case, and precedents analogous to it, permit state taxation of events preliminary to interstate commerce. The validity of any application of a taxing act depends upon a classification of the facts in the light of these theories. In the present case some of the articles were ordered out of the state under specifications suitable only for utilization in the transportation facilities and installed immediately on arrival at the California destination. If articles so handled are deemed to have reached the end of their interstate transit upon "use or storage," no further inquiry is necessary as to the rest of the articles which are subjected to a retention, by comparison, farther removed from interstate commerce. We think there was a taxable moment when the former had reached the end of their interstate transportation and had not begun to be consumed in interstate operation. At that moment, the tax on storage and use—retention and exercise of a right of ownership, respectively—was effective. The interstate movement was complete. The interstate consumption had not begun. Champlain Co. v. Brattleboro [260 U. S. 366] and Carson Petroleum Co. v. Vial [279 U. S. 95] are therefore inapplicable. Bacon v. Illinois [227 U. S. 504], where taxation of grain during stoppage in transit was validated, presents a closer analogy. "Practical continuity" does not always make an act a part of interstate commerce. This conclusion does not give preponderance to the language of the state act over its effect on commerce. State taxes upon national commerce or its incidents do not depend for their validity upon a choice of words but upon the choice of the thing taxed. It is true, the increased cost to the interstate operator from a tax on installation is the same as from a tax on consumption or operation. This is not significant. The prohibited burden upon commerce between the states is created by state interference with that commerce, a matter distinct from the expense of doing business. A discrimination against it, or a tax on its operations as such, is an interference. A tax on property or upon a taxable event in the state, apart from operation, does not interfere. This is a practical adjustment of the right of the state to revenue from the instrumentalities of commerce and the obligation of the state to leave the regulation of interstate and foreign commerce to the Congress.

But it is urged by the appellant that our former opinions make this conclusion a departure from precedent; the events are so close to or so inseparably intertwined with interstate commerce, as to be a part of it. Cooney v. Mountain States Telephone Co. [294 U. S. 384] is cited to show that a "state excise tax cannot be validly applied indiscriminately and without apportionment to an instrumentality common to interstate and intrastate commerce." The Telephone Company was taxed a sum on each telephone in use. As the instrument was employed part of the time in interstate commerce, this Court held the tax to be upon that commerce and invalid. Since there was no apportionment the entire tax fell. Unless the taxable events here, all of which are intrastate, are in effect a part of interstate commerce, our previous discussion of their separable character would render the Cooney case inapplicable. For this point we are referred to Puget Sound Co. v. Tax Commission [302 U. S. 90] and Ozark Pipe Line Corp. v. Monier [266 U. S. 555].

In the former case, the distinction in the opinion between stevedoring in loading and unloading interstate cargoes, held nontaxable as a burden upon commerce, and the business of supplying longshoremen for others to load and unload, held taxable as a local business, is applicable here. The invalid tax in the Puget Sound case was on the business of stevedoring, measured by a percentage of gross receipts from interstate activity. The valid tax was a similar percentage on the local activity as an employment agency. Here, under our analysis, we find only intrastate events taxed. * * * Affirmed.

[JUSTICE BLACK concurred in the result. JUSTICE ROBERTS took no part, and JUSTICES BUTLER and McREYNOLDS dissented.]

NELSON v. SEARS, ROEBUCK & CO.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1941.

312 U. S. 359, 85 L. ed. 888, 61 Sup. Ct. 586, 132 A. L. R. 475.

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case involves the constitutionality of the Iowa Use Tax (Ia. Code 1939, §§ 6943.102-6943.125) as applied to respondent's mail order business conducted directly between customers in Iowa and respondent's mail order houses located outside Iowa. The Supreme Court of Iowa, in a five to four decision, held for respondent on that issue. 228 Ia. 1273; 292 N. W. 130. We granted certiorari because of the importance of the constitutional question presented. Jud. Code § 237 (b); 28 U. S. C. § 344 (b).

The Iowa Use Tax is complementary to the Iowa Retail Sales Tax. Ia. Code 1939, §§ 6943.074, et seq. It is a tax on the use in Iowa of tangible personal property at the rate of two per cent of the purchase price. "Use," so far as material here, is defined as "the exercise by any person of any right or power over tangible personal property incident to the ownership of that property." § 6943.102. While the tax is imposed on "every person using such property within this state until such tax has been paid" (§ 6943.103), it is further provided (§ 6943.109) that every "retailer maintaining a place of business in this state and making sales of tangible personal property for use in this state * * * shall at the time of making such sales, whether within or without the state, collect the tax imposed by this act from the purchaser. * * * By § 6943.112 the tax constitutes a "debt owed by the retailer" to the state. And if the retailer fails to collect the tax, etc., his retailer's permit (§ 6943.084) may be revoked; and in case of a foreign corporation, its permit to do business in the state as well. § 6943.122.

Respondent is a New York corporation authorized since 1928 to do business in Iowa. It has various retail stores there. It pays the tax on sales made at those stores. It also pays the tax on orders placed at those stores, though shipment is made direct to the purchaser from one of respondent's out of state branches. But it has refused to collect the tax on mail orders sent by Iowa purchasers to its out of state branches and filled by direct shipments through the mails or a common carrier from those branches to the purchasers. On threat of petitioners to revoke respondent's permit because of such refusal, respondent brought this suit for an injunction, alleging, inter alia, that the Act as applied violates § 8 of Article I of the Constitution and the Fourteenth Amendment.

The Iowa Supreme Court held that if respondent had limited its activities to a mail order business of the kind here involved, it would not be doing business in Iowa; that, although technically the tax may be on the purchaser, it must be collected when the sale is made, at which time the property is outside the state; that these sales are separate and distinct from respondent's activities in Iowa. It therefore concluded that the tax as applied was unconstitutional since Iowa has no power to regulate respondent's activities outside the state or to regulate such activities as a condition to respondent's right to continue to do business in the state.

In passing on the constitutionality of a tax law "we are concerned only with its practical operation, not its definition or the precise form of descriptive words which may be applied to it." Lawrence v. State Tax Comm'n, 286 U. S. 276, 280; Southern Pacific Co. v. Gallagher, 306 U. S. 167, 177; Wisconsin v. J. C. Penney Co., 311 U. S. 435. The fact that under Iowa law the sale is made outside of the state does not mean that the power of Iowa "has nothing on which to operate." Wisconsin v. J. C. Penney Co., supra. The purchaser is in Iowa and the tax is upon use in Iowa. The validity of such a tax, so far as the purchaser is concerned, "has been withdrawn from the arena of debate." Henneford v. Silas Mason Co., 300 U. S. 577, 583; Southern Pacific Co. v. Gallagher, supra. It is one of the well-known functions of the integrated use and sales tax to remove the buyers' temptation "to place their orders in other states in the effort to escape payment of the tax on local sales." Henneford v. Silas Mason Co., supra, p. 581. As pointed out in that case (p. 582), the fact that the buyer employs agencies of interstate commerce in order to effectuate his purchase is not material, since the tax is "upon the privilege of use after commerce is at an end." And see Southern Pacific Co. v. Gallagher, supra. Use in Iowa is what is taxed regardless of the time and place of passing title and regardless of the time the tax is required to be paid. Cf. McGoldrick v. Berwind-White Coal Mining Co., 309 U. S. 33, 49.

So the nub of the present controversy centers on the use of respondent as the collection agent for Iowa. The imposition of such a duty, however, was held not to be an unconstitutional burden on a foreign corporation in Monamotor Oil Co. v. Johnson, 292 U. S. 86, and Felt & Tarrant Mfg. Co. v. Gallagher, 306 U. S. 62. But respondent insists that those cases involved local activity by the foreign corporation as a result of which property was sold to its local customers, while in the instant case there is no local activity by respondent which generates or which relates to the mail orders here involved. Yet these orders are still a part of respondent's Iowa business. The fact that respondent could not be reached for the tax if it were not qualified to do business in Iowa would merely be a result of the "impotence of state power." Wisconsin v. J. C. Penney Co., supra. Since Iowa has extended to it that privilege, Iowa can exact this burden as a price of enjoying the full benefits flowing from its Iowa business. Cf. Wisconsin v. J. C. Penney Co., supra. Respondent cannot avoid that burden though its business is departmentalized. Whatever may be the inspiration for these mail orders, however they may be filled, Iowa may rightly assume that they are not unrelated to respondent's course of business in Iowa. They are nonetheless a part of that business though none of respondent's agents in Iowa actually solicited or placed them. Hence to include them in the global amount of benefits which respondent is receiving from Iowa business is to conform to business facts.

Nor is the mode of enforcing the tax on the privileges of these Iowa transactions any discrimination against interstate commerce. As we have seen, the use tax and the sales tax are complementary. Sales made wholly within Iowa carry the same burden as these mail order sales. A tax or other burden obviously does not discriminate against interstate commerce where "equality is its theme." * * *

Respondent, however, insists that the duty of tax collection placed on it constitutes a regulation of and substantial burden upon interstate commerce and results in an impairment of the free flow of such commerce. It points to the fact that in its mail order business it is in competition with out of state mail order houses which need not and do not collect the tax on their Iowa sales. But those other concerns are not doing business in the state as foreign corporations. Hence, unlike respondent, they are not receiving benefits from Iowa for which it has the power to exact a price. Respondent further stresses the cost to it of making these collections and its probable loss as a result of its inability to collect the tax on all sales. But cost and inconvenience inhered in the same duty imposed on the foreign corporations in the Monamotor and Felt & Tarrant cases. And so far as assumed losses on tax collections are concerned, respondent is in no position to found a constitutional right on the practical opportunities for tax avoidance which its method of doing business affords Iowa residents, or to claim a constitutional immunity because it may elect to deliver the goods before the tax is paid.

Prohibited discriminatory burdens on interstate commerce are not to be determined by abstractions. Particular facts of specific cases determine whether a given tax prohibitively discriminates against interstate commerce. Hence a review of prior adjudications based on widely disparate facts, howsoever embedded in general propositions, does not facilitate an answer to the present problem.

The judgment is reversed and the cause is remanded to the Iowa Supreme Court for proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Reversed.

MR. JUSTICE STONE took no part in the consideration or disposition of this case.

[MR. JUSTICE ROBERTS wrote a dissenting opinion with which CHIEF JUSTICE HUGHES concurred.]

MCGOLDRICK v. BERWIND-WHITE COAL MINING CO.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1940.

309 U. S. 33, 84 L. ed. 565, 60 Sup. Ct. 388, 128 A. L. R. 876.

MR. JUSTICE STONE delivered the opinion of the Court.

The question for decision is whether the New York City tax laid upon sales of goods for consumption, as applied to respondent, infringes the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution.

Upon certiorari to review a determination by the Comptroller of the City of New York that respondent was subject to New York City sales tax in the sum of $176,703, the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court held that the taxing statute as applied to respondent does so infringe, 255 App. Div. 961; 8 N. Y. S. 2d 668, on the authority of Matter of National Cash Register Co. v. Taylor, 276 N. Y. 208; 11 N. E. 2d 881, cert. den., 303 U. S. 656; Matter of Compagnie Generale Transatlantique v. McGoldrick, 279 N. Y. 192; 18 N. E. 2d 28. The New York Court of Appeals affirmed without opinion, 281 N. Y. 94, but its amended remittitur declared that the affirmance was upon the sole ground that the taxing statute as applied violated the commerce clause. We granted certiorari, 308 U. S. 546, the question presented being of public importance, upon a petition which challenged the decision of the state court as not in accord with applicable decisions of this Court in Banker Brothers v. Pennsylvania, 222 U. S. 210; Wiloil Corporation v. Pennsylvania, 294 U. S. 169. * * *

Pursuant to this authority [conferred by the New York statute] the municipal assembly of the City of New York adopted Local Law No. 24 of 1934 (published as Local Law No. 25), since annually renewed, which laid a tax upon purchasers for consumption of tangible personal property generally (except foods and drugs furnished on prescription), of utility services in supplying gas, electricity, telephone service, etc., and of meals consumed in restaurants. By § 2 the tax was fixed at "two percentum upon the amount of the receipts from every sale in the city of New York," "sale" being defined by § 1 (e) as "any transfer of title or possession, or both * * * in any manner or by any means whatsoever for a consideration or any agreement therefor." Another clause of § 2 commands that the tax "shall be paid by the purchaser to the vendor, for and on account of the City of New York." By the same clause the vendor, who is authorized to collect the tax, is required to charge it to the purchaser, separately from the sales price; and is made liable, as an insurer, for its payment to the city. By §§ 4 and 5 the vendor is required to keep records and file returns showing the amount of the receipts from sales and the amount of the tax. In event of its nonpayment to the seller the buyer is required, within fifteen days after his purchase, to file a tax return and to pay the tax to the Comptroller, who is authorized by § 2 to set up a procedure for the collection of the tax from the purchaser. Purchases for resale are exempt from the tax, and a purchaser who pays the tax and later resells is entitled to a refund.

The ultimate burden of the tax, both in form and in substance, is thus laid upon the buyer, for consumption, of tangible personal property, and measured by the sales price. Only in event that the seller fails to pay over to the city the tax collected or to charge and collect it as the statute requires, is the burden cast on him. It is conditioned upon events occurring within the state, either transfer of title or possession of the purchased property, or an agreement within the state, "consummated" there, for the transfer of title, or possession. The duty of collecting the tax and paying it over to the Comptroller is imposed on the seller in addition to the duty imposed upon the buyer to pay the tax to the Comptroller when not so collected. Such, in substance, has been the construction of the statute by the state courts.

* * *

Respondent, a Pennsylvania corporation, is engaged in the production of coal of specified grades, said to possess unique qualities, from its mines within that state and in selling it to consumers and dealers. It maintains a sales office in New York City and sells annually to its customers 1,500,000 tons of its product, of which approximately 1,300,000 tons are delivered by respondent to some twenty public utility and steamship companies. The coal moves by rail from mine to dock in Jersey City, thence in most instances by barge to the point of delivery. All the sales contracts with the New York customers in question were entered into in New York City, and with two exceptions, presently to be considered separately, call for delivery of the coal by respondent by barge, alongside the purchasers' plants or steamships. In many instances the price of the coal was stated to be subject to any increase or decrease of mining costs including wages, and of railroad rates between the mines and the Jersey City terminal to which the coal was to be shipped. All the deliveries, with the exceptions already noted, were made within New York City, and all such are concededly subject to the tax except insofar as it infringes the commerce clause.

Section 8 of the Constitution declares that "Congress shall have power * * * to regulate commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States. * * *" In imposing taxes for state purposes a state is not exercising any power which the Constitution has conferred upon Congress. It is only when the tax operates to regulate commerce between the states or with foreign nations to an extent which infringes the authority conferred upon Congress, that the tax can be said to exceed constitutional limitations. See Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 187; South Carolina Highway Dept. v. Barnwell Bros., 303 U. S. 177, 185. Forms of state taxation whose tendency is to prohibit the commerce or place it at a disadvantage as compared or in competition with intrastate commerce, and any state tax which discriminates against the commerce, are familiar examples of the exercise of state taxing power in an unconstitutional manner, because of its obvious regulatory effect upon commerce between the states.

But is was not the purpose of the commerce clause to relieve those engaged in interstate commerce of their just share of state tax burdens, merely because an incidental or consequential effect of the tax is an increase in the cost of doing the business, Western Live Stock v. Bureau, 303 U. S. 250, 254. Not all state taxation is to be condemned because, in some manner, it has an effect upon commerce between the states, and there are many forms of tax whose burdens, when distributed through the play of economic forces, affect interstate commerce, which nevertheless fall short of the regulation of the commerce which the Constitution leaves to Congress. A tax may be levied on net income wholly derived from interstate commerce. Non-discriminatory taxation of the instrumentalities of interstate commerce is not prohibited. The like taxation of property, shipped interstate, before its movement begins, or after it ends, is not a forbidden regulation. An excise for the warehousing of merchandise preparatory to its interstate shipment or upon its use, or withdrawal for use, by the consignee after the interstate journey has ended is not precluded. Nor is taxation of a local business or occupation which is separate and distinct from the transportation or intercourse which is interstate commerce, forbidden merely because in the ordinary course such transportation or intercourse is induced or occasioned by such business, or is prerequisite to it. Western Live Stock v. Bureau, supra, 253, and cases cited.

In few of these cases could it be said with assurance that the local tax does not in some measure affect the commerce or increase the cost of doing it. But in them as in other instances of constitutional interpretation so as to insure the harmonious operation of powers reserved to the states with those conferred upon the national government, courts are called upon to reconcile competing constitutional demands, that commerce between the states shall not be unduly impeded by state action, and that the power to lay taxes for the support of state government shall not be unduly curtailed. * * *

Certain types of tax may, if permitted at all, so readily be made the instrument of impeding or destroying interstate commerce as plainly to call for their condemnation as forbidden regulations. Such are the taxes already noted which are aimed at or discriminate against the commerce or impose a levy for the privilege of doing it, or tax interstate transportation or communication or their gross earnings, or levy an exaction on merchandise in the course of its interstate journey. Each imposes a burden which intrastate commerce does not bear, and merely because interstate commerce is being done places it at a disadvantage in comparison with intrastate business or property in circumstances such that if the asserted power to tax were sustained, the states would be left free to exert it to the detriment of the national commerce.

The present tax as applied to respondent is without the possibility of such consequences. Equality is its theme, cf. Henneford v. Silas Mason Co., 300 U. S. 577, 583. It does not aim at or discriminate against interstate commerce. It is laid upon every purchaser, within the state, of goods for consumption, regardless of whether they have been transported in interstate commerce. Its only relation to the commerce arises from the fact that immediately preceding transfer of possession to the purchaser within the state, which is the taxable event regardless of the time and place of passing title, the merchandise has been transported in interstate commerce and brought to its journey's end. Such a tax has no different effect upon interstate commerce than a tax on the "use" of property which has just been moved in interstate commerce sustained in Monamotor Oil Co. v. Johnson, 292 U. S. 86; Henneford v. Silas Mason Co., supra; Felt & Tarrant Mfg. Co. v. Gallagher, 306 U. S. 62; Southern Pacific Co. v. Gallagher, 306 U. S. 167, or the tax on storage or withdrawal for use by the consignee of gasoline, similarly sustained in Gregg Dyeing Co. v. Query, 286 U. S. 472; Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Wallace, 288 U. S. 249; Edelman v. Boeing Air Transport, 289 U. S. 249, or the familiar property tax on goods by the state of destination at the conclusion of their interstate journey. * * *

If, as guides to decision, we look to the purpose of the commerce clause to protect interstate commerce from discriminatory or destructive state action, and at the same time to the purpose of the state taxing power under which interstate commerce admittedly must bear its fair share of state tax burdens, and to the necessity of judicial reconciliation of these competing demands, we can find no adequate ground for saying that the present tax is a regulation which, in the absence of Congressional action the commerce clause forbids. This Court has uniformly sustained a tax imposed by the state of the buyer upon a sale of goods, in several instances in the "original package," effected by delivery to the purchaser upon arrival at destination after an interstate journey, both when the local seller has purchased the goods extra-state for the purpose of resale, * * * and when the extra-state seller has shipped them into the taxing state for sale there. * * * It has likewise sustained a fixed-sum license tax imposed on the agent of the interstate seller for the privilege of selling merchandise brought into the taxing state for the purpose of sale. * * *

The only challenge made to these controlling authorities is by reference to unconstitutional "burdens" on interstate commerce made in general statements which are inapplicable here because they are torn from their setting in judicial opinions and speak of state regulations or taxes of a different kind laid in different circumstances from those with which we are now concerned. See for example, Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Texas, 210 U. S. 217; Cooney v. Mountain States Telephone Co., 294 U. S. 384; Fisher's Blend Station v. Tax Commission, 297 U. S. 650. Others will presently be discussed. But unless we are now to reject the plain teaching of this line of sales tax decisions, extending back for more than seventy years * * * the present tax must be upheld. As we have seen, the ruling of these decisions does not rest on precedent alone. It has the support of reason and of a due regard for the just balance between national and state power. In sustaining these taxes on sales emphasis was placed on the circumstances that they were not so laid, measured or conditioned as to afford a means of obstruction to the commerce or of discrimination against it, and that the extension of the immunity of the commerce clause contended for would be at the expense of state taxing power by withholding from taxation property and transactions within the state without the gain of any needed protection to interstate commerce. * * *

Apart from these more fundamental considerations which we think are of controlling force in the application of the commerce clause, we can find no adequate basis for distinguishing the present tax laid on the sale or purchase of goods upon their arrival at destination at the end of an interstate journey from the tax which may be laid in like fashion on the property itself. That the latter is a permissible tax has long been established by an unwavering line of authority. * * * As we have often pointed out, there is no distinction in this relationship between a tax on property, the sum of all the rights and powers incident to ownership, and the taxation of the exercise of some of its constituent elements. * * * If coal situated as that in the present case was, before its delivery, subject to a state property tax, * * * transfer of possession of the coal upon a sale is equally taxable, * * * just as was the storage or use of the property in similar circumstances, held taxable in Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Wallace, supra; Henneford v. Silas Mason Co., supra.

Respondent, pointing to the course of its business and to its contracts which contemplate the shipment of the coal interstate upon orders of the New York customers, insists that a distinction is to be taken between a tax laid on sales made, without previous contract, after the merchandise has crossed the state boundary, and sales, the contracts for which when made contemplate or require the transportation of merchandise interstate to the taxing state. Only the sales in the state of destination in the latter class of cases, it is said, are protected from taxation by the commerce clause, a qualification which respondent concedes is a salutary limitation upon the reach of the clause since its use is thus precluded as a means of avoiding state taxation of merchandise transported to the state in advance of the purchase order or contract of sale.

But we think this distinction is without the support of reason or authority. A very large part, if not most of the merchandise sold in New York City, is shipped interstate to that market. In the case of products like cotton, citrus fruits and coal, not to mention many others which are consumed there in vast quantities, all have crossed the state line to seek a market, whether in fulfillment of a contract or not. That is equally the case with other goods sent from without the state to the New York market, whether they are brought into competition with like goods produced within the state or not. We are unable to say that the present tax, laid generally upon all sales to consumers within the state, subjects the commerce involved where the goods sold are brought from other states, to any greater burden or affects it more, in any economic or practical way, whether the purchase order or contract precedes or follows the interstate shipment. Since the tax applies only if a sale is made, and in either case the object of interstate shipment is a sale at destination, the deterrent effect of the tax would seem to be the same on both. Restriction of the scope of the commerce clause so as to prevent recourse to it as a means of curtailing state taxing power seems as salutary in the one case as in the other. * * *

It is also urged that the conclusion which we reach is inconsistent with the long line of decisions of this Court following Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing District, 120 U. S. 489, which have held invalid, license taxes to the extent that they have sought to tax the occupation of soliciting orders for the purchase of goods to be shipped into the taxing state. In some instances the tax appeared to be aimed at suppression or placing at a disadvantage this type of business when brought into competition with competing intrastate sales. See Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing District, supra, 498; Caldwell v. North Carolina, 187 U. S. 622, 632. In all, the statute, in its practical operation, was capable of use, through increase in the tax, and in fact operated to some extent to place the merchant thus doing business interstate at a disadvantage in competition with untaxed sales at retail stores within the state. While a state, in some circumstances may, by taxation suppress or curtail one type of intrastate business to the advantage of another type of competing business which is left untaxed, see Puget Sound Power & Light Co. v. Seattle, 291 U. S. 619, 625, and cases cited, it does not follow that interstate commerce may be similarly affected by the practical operation of a state taxing statute. Compare Hammond Packing Co. v. Montana, 233 U. S. 331, Magnano Co. v. Hamilton, 292 U. S. 40, with Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1; Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing District, supra; Sprout v. South Bend, 277 U. S. 163. It is enough for present purposes that the rule of Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing District, supra, has been narrowly limited to fixed-sum license taxes imposed on the business of soliciting orders for the purchase of goods to be shipped interstate * * * and that the actual and potential effect on the commerce of such a tax is wholly wanting in the present case.

Finally, it is said that the vice of the present tax is that it is measured by the gross receipts from interstate commerce and thus in effect reaches for taxation the commerce carried on both within and without the taxing state. Adams Manufacturing Co. v. Storen, 304 U. S. 307; Gwin, White & Prince v. Henneford, 305 U. S. 434. It is true that a state tax upon the operations of interstate commerce measured either by its volume or the gross receipts derived from it has been held to infringe the commerce clause, because the tax if sustained would exact tribute for the commerce carried on beyond the boundaries of the taxing state, and would leave each state through which the commerce passes free to subject it to a like burden not borne by intrastate commerce. * * *

In Adams Manufacturing Co. v. Storen, supra, 311, 312, a tax on gross receipts, so far as laid by the state of the seller upon the receipts from sales of goods manufactured in the taxing state and sold in other states, was held invalid because there the court found the receipts derived from activities in interstate commerce, as distinguished from the receipts from activities wholly intrastate, were included in the measure of the tax, the sales price, without segregation or apportionment. It was pointed out, pages 310, 311 and 312, that had the tax been conditioned upon the exercise of the taxpayer's franchise or its privilege of manufacturing in the taxing state, it would have been sustained, despite its incidental effect on interstate commerce since the taxpayer's local activities or privileges were sufficient to support such a tax, and that it could fairly be measured by the sales price of the goods. Compare American Manufacturing Co. v. St. Louis, 250 U. S. 459, with Crew Levick Co. v. Pennsylvania, 245 U. S. 292. * * *

The rationale of the Adams Manufacturing Co. case does not call for condemnation of the present tax. Here the tax is conditioned upon a local activity, delivery of goods within the state upon their purchase for consumption. It is an activity which apart from its effect on the commerce, is subject to the state taxing power. The effect of the tax, even though measured by the sales price, as has been shown, neither discriminates against nor obstructs interstate commerce more than numerous other state taxes which have repeatedly been sustained as involving no prohibited regulation of interstate commerce. * * *

Reversed.

[CHIEF JUSTICE HUGHES delivered a dissenting opinion with which JUSTICES McREYNOLDS and ROBERTS concurred.]

McLEOD v. J. E. DILWORTH CO.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1944.
322 U. S. 327, 88 L. ed. 1304, 64 Sup. Ct. 1023.

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER delivered the opinion of the Court.

We are asked to reverse a decision of the Supreme Court of Arkansas holding that the Commerce Clause precludes liability for the sales tax of that State upon the transactions to be set forth.

We take the descriptions of these transactions from the opinion under review. Respondents are Tennessee corporations with home offices and places of business in Memphis where they sell machinery and mill supplies. They are not qualified to do business in Arkansas and have neither sales office, branch plant nor any other place of business in that state. Orders for goods come to Tennessee through solicitation in Arkansas by traveling salesmen domiciled in Tennessee, by mail or telephone. But no matter how an order is placed it requires acceptance by the Memphis office, and on approval the goods are shipped from Tennessee. Title passes upon delivery to the carrier in Memphis, and collection of the sales price is not made in Arkansas. In short, we are here concerned with sales made by Tennessee vendors that are consummated in Tennessee for the delivery of goods in Arkansas. * * *

We agree with the Arkansas Supreme Court that the Berwind-White case presented a situation different from this case and that this case is on the other side of the line which marks off the limits of state power. A boundary line is none the worse for being narrow. Once it is recognized, as it long has been by this Court, that federal and state taxation do not move within wholly different orbits, that there are points of intersection between the powers of the two governments, and that there are transactions of what colloquially may be deemed a single process across state lines which may yet be taxed by the State of their occurrence, "nice distinctions are to be expected," Galveston, H. & S. A.

Ry. Co. v. Texas, 210 U. S. 217, 225. The differentiations made by the court below between this case and the Berwind-White case are relevant and controlling. "The distinguishing point between the Berwind-White Coal case and the cases at bar is that in the Berwind-White Coal case the corporation maintained its sales office in New York City, took its contracts in New York City and made actual delivery in New York City. * * *" 205 Ark. at 786. This, according to practical notions of what constitutes a sale which is reflected by what the law deems a sale, constituted a sale in New York and accordingly we sustained a retail sales tax by New York. Here, as the Arkansas Supreme Court continued, "the offices are maintained in Tennessee, the sale is made in Tennessee, and the delivery is consummated either in Tennessee or in interstate commerce with no interruption from Tennessee until delivery to the consignee essential to complete the interstate journey." Because the relevant factors in the two cases decided together with the Berwind-White case were the same as those in Berwind-White, the decision in that case controlled the two other cases. "In both cases the tax was imposed on all the sales of merchandise for which orders were taken within the city and possession of which was transferred to the purchaser there. Decision in both is controlled by our decision in the Berwind-White Company case." McGoldrick v. Felt & Tarrant Co., 309 U. S. 70, 77. In Berwind-White the Pennsylvania seller completed his sales in New York; in this case the Tennessee seller was through selling in Tennessee. We would have to destroy both business and legal notions to deny that under these circumstances the sale—the transfer of ownership—was made in Tennessee. For Arkansas to impose a tax on such transaction would be to project its powers beyond its boundaries and to tax an interstate transaction.

It is suggested, however, that Arkansas could have levied a tax of the same amount on the use of these goods in Arkansas by the Arkansas buyers, and that such a use tax would not exceed the limits upon state power derived from the United States Constitution. What ever might be the fate of such a tax were it before us, the not too short answer is that Arkansas has chosen not to impose such a use tax, as its Supreme Court so emphatically found. A sales tax and a use tax in many instances may bring about the same result. But they are different in conception, are assessments upon different transactions, and in the interlacings of the two legislative authorities within our federation may have to justify themselves on different constitutional grounds. A sales tax is a tax on the freedom of purchase—a freedom which wartime restrictions serve to emphasize. A use tax is a tax on the enjoyment of that which was purchased. In view of the differences in the basis of these two taxes and the differences in the relation of the taxing state to them, a tax on an interstate sale like the one before us and unlike the tax on the enjoyment of the goods sold, involves an assumption of power by a state which the Commerce Clause was meant to end. The very purpose of the Commerce Clause was to create an area of free trade among the several states. That clause vested the power of taxing a transaction forming an unbroken process of interstate commerce in the Congress, not in the states.

The difference in substance between a sales and a use tax was adverted to in the leading case sustaining a tax on the use after a sale had spent its interstate character: "A tax upon a use so closely connected with delivery as to be in substance a part thereof might be subject to the same objections that would be applicable to a tax upon the sale itself." Henneford v. Silas Mason Co., 300 U. S. 577, 583. Thus we are not dealing with matters of nomenclature even though they be matters of nicety. "The state court could not render valid, by misdescribing it, a tax law which in substance and effect was repugnant to the federal Constitution; neither can it render unconstitutional a tax, that in its actual effect violates no constitutional provision, by inaccurately defining it." Wagner v. City of Covington, 251 U. S. 95, 102. Though sales and use taxes may secure the same revenues and serve complementary purposes, they are, as we have indicated, taxes on different transactions and for different opportunities afforded by a state.

A very different situation underlay Wisconsin v. J. C. Penney Co., 311 U. S. 435. The Wisconsin Supreme Court and this Court were concerned with an exaction on a transaction which the Wisconsin Court described one way and we another. We looked behind the labels of the thing described, and the thing—taxation of the distribution of income earned in Wisconsin—did not offend the federal Constitution. That case affords no ground for rejecting the deliberate choice of a state to impose a tax on a transfer of ownership and sustaining it, where the transfer was made beyond the state limits, as a use tax on that property because the state might, so far as the federal Constitution is concerned, have enacted a use tax and such a use tax might have been collected on the enjoyment of the goods so sold. Such a mode of adjudication would imply a duty of excessive astuteness on our part to contract the area of free trade among the states.

Judgment affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, with whom MR. JUSTICE BLACK and MR. JUSTICE MURPHY concur, dissenting:

The present decision marks a retreat from the philosophy of the Berwind-White case, 309 U. S. 33. It draws a distinction between the use tax (Felt & Tarrant Co. v. Gallagher, 306 U. S. 62) and the sales tax which on the facts of this case seems irrelevant to the power of Arkansas to tax. And it is squarely opposed to McGoldrick v. Felt & Tarrant Co., 309 U. S. 70, which should be overruled if the present decision goes down. * * *

MR. JUSTICE RUTLEDGE also dissents. [For his opinion, see 322 U. S. 349, 88 L. ed. 1319, 64 Sup. Ct. 1030.]

GALVESTON, HARRISBURG & SAN ANTONIO
R. CO. v. TEXAS.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1908.
210 U. S. 217, 52 L. ed. 1031, 28 Sup. Ct. 638.

MR. JUSTICE HOLMES delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is an action against certain railroads to recover taxes and penalties. The Supreme Court of the state held the penalties to be void under the state constitution, but upheld the tax. 97 S. W. Rep. 71. The railroads bring the case here mainly on the ground that the law upon which the action is based is an attempt to regulate commerce among the states.

The act in question is entitled "An Act imposing a tax upon railroad corporations * * * and other persons * * * owning * * * or controlling any line of railroad in this state * * * equal to one per cent. of their gross receipts * * *."

The lines of the railroads concerned are wholly within the state, but they connect with other lines, and a part, in some instances much the larger part, of their gross receipts is derived from the carriage of passengers and freight coming from, or destined to, points without the state. In view of this portion of their business, the railroads contend that the case is governed by Philadelphia & Southern Mail Steamship Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326. The counsel for the state rely upon Maine v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 142 U. S. 217, and maintain, if necessary, that the later overrules the earlier case.

In Philadelphia & Southern Mail S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, supra, it was decided that a tax upon the gross receipts of a steamship corporation of the state, when such receipts were derived from commerce between the states and with foreign countries, was unconstitutional. We regard this decision as unshaken and as stating established law. * * * In Maine v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. supra, the authority of the Philadelphia Steamship Company case was accepted without question, and the decision was justified by the majority as not in any way qualifying or impairing it. The validity of the distinction was what divided the court.

It being once admitted, as of course it must be, that not every law that affects commerce among the states is a regulation of it in a constitutional sense, nice distinctions are to be expected. Regulation and commerce among the states both are practical rather than technical conceptions, and, naturally, their limits must be fixed by practical lines. As the property of companies engaged in such commerce may be taxed, Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, and may be taxed at its value as it is, in its organic relations, and not merely as a congeries of unrelated items, taxes on such property have been sustained that took account of the augmentation of value from the commerce in which it was engaged. Adams Express Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165

U. S. 194; 166 U. S. 171; Fargo v. Hart, 193 U. S. 490, 499. So it has been held that a tax on the property and business of a railroad operated within the state might be estimated prima facie by gross income, computed by adding to the income derived from business within the state the proportion of interstate business equal to the proportion between the road over which the business was carried within the state to the total length of the road over which it was carried. Wisconsin & Michigan Ry. Co. v. Powers, 191 U. S. 379.

Since the commercial value of property consists in the expectation of income from it, and since taxes ultimately, at least in the long run, come out of income, obviously taxes called taxes on property, and those called taxes on income or receipts, tend to run into each other somewhat as fair value and anticipated profits run into each other in the law of damages. The difficulty of distinguishing them became greater when it was decided, not without much debate and difference of opinion, that interstate carriers' property might be taxed as a going concern. In Wisconsin & Michigan Ry. Co. v. Powers, supra, the measure of property by income purported only to be prima facie valid. But the extreme case came earlier. In Maine v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co. supra, "an annual excise tax for the privilege of exercising its franchise" was levied upon everyone operating a railroad in the state, fixed by percentages, varying up to a certain limit, upon the average gross receipts per mile multiplied by the number of miles within the state, when the road extended outside. This seems at first sight like a reaction from the Philadelphia & Southern Mail Steamship Company Case. But it may not have been. The estimated gross receipts per mile may be said to have been made a measure of the value of the property per mile. That the effort of the state was to reach that value, and not to fasten on the receipts from transportation as such, was shown by the fact that the scheme of the statute was to establish a system. The buildings of the railroad and its lands and fixtures outside of its right of way were to be taxed locally, as other property was taxed, and this excise with the local tax were to be in lieu of all taxes. The language shows that the local tax was not expected to include the additional value gained by the property being part of a going concern. That idea came in later. The excise was an attempt to reach that additional value. The two taxes together fairly may be called a commutation tax. See Ficklen v. Taxing District of Shelby County, 145 U. S. 1, 23; Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Adams, 155 U. S. 688, 697; McHenry v. Alford, 168 U. S. 651, 670, 671.

"By whatever name the exaction may be called, if it amounts to no more than the ordinary tax upon property or a just equivalent therefor, ascertained by reference thereto, it is not open to attack as inconsistent with the Constitution." Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Adams, supra. See New York, Lake Erie & Western R. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 158 U. S. 431, 438, 439. The question is whether this is such a tax. It appears sufficiently, perhaps from what has been said, that we are to look for a practical rather than a logical or philosophical distinction. The state must be allowed to tax the property, and to tax it at its actual value as a going concern. On the other hand, the state cannot tax the interstate business. The two necessities hardly admit of an absolute logical reconciliation. Yet the distinction is not without sense. When a legislature is trying simply to value property, it is less likely to attempt or to effect injurious regulation than when it is aiming directly at the receipts from interstate commerce. A practical line can be drawn by taking the whole scheme of taxation into account. That must be done by this court as best it can. Neither the state courts nor the legislatures, by giving the tax a particular name or by the use of some form of words, can take away our duty to consider its nature and effect. If it bears upon commerce among the states so directly as to amount to a regulation in a relatively immediate way, it will not be saved by name or form. Stockard v. Morgan, 185 U. S. 27, 37; Asbell v. Kansas, 209 U. S. 251, 254, 256.

We are of opinion that the statute levying this tax does amount to an attempt to regulate commerce among the states. The distinction between a tax "equal to" one per cent. of gross receipts, and a tax of one per cent. of the same, seems to us nothing, except where the former phrase is the index of an actual attempt to reach the property and to let the interstate traffic and the receipts from it alone. We find no such attempt or anything to qualify the plain inference from the statute, taken by itself. On the contrary, we rather infer from the judgment of the state court and from the argument on behalf of the state that another tax on the property of the railroad is upon a valuation of that property, taken as a going concern. This is merely an effort to reach the gross receipts, not even disguised by the name of an occupation tax, and in no way helped by the words "equal to."

Of course, it does not matter that the plaintiffs in error are domestic corporations, or that the tax embraces indiscriminately gross receipts from commerce within as well as outside of the state.

Judgment reversed.

[MR. JUSTICE HARLAN gave a dissenting opinion, in which concurred CHIEF JUSTICE FULLER and JUSTICES WHITE and McKENNA.]

WESTERN LIVE STOCK v. BUREAU OF REVENUE.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1938.

303 U. S. 250, 82 L. ed. 823, 58 Sup. Ct. 546, 115 A. L. R. 944.

MR. JUSTICE STONE delivered the opinion of the Court.

Section 201, chapter 7, of the New Mexico Special Session Laws of 1934, levies a privilege tax upon the gross receipts of those engaged in certain specified businesses. Subdivision I imposes a tax of 2 per cent. of amounts received from the sale of advertising space by one engaged in the business of publishing newspapers or magazines. The question for decision is whether the tax laid under this statute on appellants, who sell without the state, to advertisers there, space in a journal which they publish in New Mexico and circulate to subscribers within and without the state, imposes an unconstitutional burden on interstate commerce.

Appellants brought the present suit in the state district court to recover the tax, which they had paid under protest, as exacted in violation of the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution. The trial court overruled a demurrer to the complaint and gave judgment for appellants, which the Supreme Court reversed. 41 N. M. 141, 65 P. (2d) 863. Appellants refusing to plead further, the district court gave judgment for the appellees, which the Supreme Court affirmed. 41 N. M. 288, 67 P. (2d) 505. The case comes here on appeal from the second judgment under § 237 of the Judicial Code, as amended, 28 U. S. C. § 344.

Appellants publish a monthly livestock trade journal which they wholly prepare, edit, and publish within the state of New Mexico, where their only office and place of business is located. The journal has a circulation in New Mexico and other states, being distributed to paid subscribers through the mails or by other means of transportation. It carries advertisements, some of which are obtained from advertisers in other states through appellants' solicitation there. Where such contracts are entered into, payment is made by remittances to appellants sent interstate; and the contracts contemplate and provide for the interstate shipment by the advertisers to appellants of advertising cuts, mats, information, and copy. Payment is due after the printing of such advertisements in the journal and its ultimate circulation and distribution, which is alleged to be in New Mexico and other states.

Appellants insist here, as they did in the state courts, that the sums earned under the advertising contracts are immune from the tax because the contracts are entered into by transactions across state lines and result in the like transmission of advertising materials by advertisers to appellants, and also because performance involves the mailing or other distribution of appellants' magazines to points without the state.

That the mere formation of a contract between persons in different states is not within the protection of the commerce clause, at least in the absence of Congressional action, unless the performance is within its protection, is a proposition no longer open to question. Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Deer Lodge County, 231 U. S. 495. Cf. Ware & Leland v. Mobile County, 209 U. S. 405; Engel v. O'Malley, 219 U. S. 128. Hence it is unnecessary to consider the impact of the tax upon the advertising contracts except as it affects their performance, presently to be discussed. Nor is taxation of a local business or occupation which is separate and distinct from the transportation and intercourse which is interstate commerce forbidden merely because in the ordinary course such transportation or intercourse is induced or occasioned by the business. Williams v. Fears, 179 U. S. 270; Ware & Leland v. Mobile County, supra; Browning v. Waycross, 233 U. S. 16; General Railway Signal Co. v. Virginia, 246 U. S. 500, 510; Utah Power & Light Co. v. Pfost, 286 U. S. 165. Here the tax which is laid on the compensation received under the contract is not forbidden either because the contract, apart from its performance, is within the protection of the commerce clause, or because as an incident preliminary to printing and publishing the advertisements the advertisers send cuts, copy and the like to appellants.

We turn to the other and more vexed question, whether the tax is invalid because the performance of the contract, for which the compensation is paid, involves to some extent the distribution, interstate, of some copies of the magazine containing the advertisements. We lay to one side the fact that appellants do not allege specifically that the contract stipulates that the advertisements shall be sent to subscribers out of the state, or is so framed that the compensation would not be earned if subscribers outside the state should cancel their subscriptions. We assume the point in appellants' favor and address ourselves to their argument that the present tax infringes the commerce clause because it is measured by gross receipts which are to some extent augmented by appellants' maintenance of an interstate circulation of their magazine.

It was not the purpose of the commerce clause to relieve those engaged in interstate commerce from their just share of state tax burden even though it increases the cost of doing the business. "Even interstate business must pay its way," Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Richmond, 249 U. S. 252, 259; Ficklen v. Shelby County Taxing District, 145 U. S. 1, 24; Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Adams, 155 U. S. 688, 696; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Texas, 210 U. S. 217, 225, 227, and the bare fact that one is carrying on interstate commerce does not relieve him from many forms of state taxation which add to the cost of his business. He is subject to a property tax on the instruments employed in the commerce, Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Massachusetts, 125 U. S. 530; Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 439; Adams Express Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 194; Adams Express Co. v. Kentucky, 166 U. S. 171; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Missouri ex rel. Gottlieb, 190 U. S. 412; Old Dominion S. Co. v. Virginia, 198 U. S. 299, and if the property devoted to interstate transportation is used both within and without the state, a tax fairly apportioned to its use within the state will be sustained, Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18; Cudahy Packing Co. v. Minnesota, 246 U. S. 450. Net earnings from interstate commerce are subject to income tax, United States Glue Co. v. Oak Creek, 247 U. S. 321, and, if the commerce is carried on by a corporation, a franchise tax may be imposed, measured by the net income from business done within the state, including such portion of the income derived from interstate commerce as may be justly attributable to business done within the state by a fair method of apportionment. Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Chamberlain, 254 U. S. 113. Cf. Bass, Ratcliff & Gretton, Ltd. v. State Tax Commission, 266 U. S. 271.

All of these taxes in one way or another add to the expense of carrying on interstate commerce, and in that sense burden it; but they are not for that reason prohibited. On the other hand, local taxes, measured by gross receipts from interstate commerce, have often been pronounced unconstitutional. The vice characteristic of those which have been held invalid is that they have placed on the commerce burdens of such a nature as to be capable in point of substance, of being imposed, Fargo v. Stevens, Michigan, 121 U. S. 230; Philadelphia & S. M. S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Texas, supra; Meyer v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 223 U. S. 298, or added to, Crew Levick Co. v. Pennsylvania, 245 U. S. 292; Fisher's Blend Station, Inc. v. State Tax Commission, 297 U. S. 650, with equal right by every state which the commerce touches, merely because interstate commerce is being done, so that without the protection of the commerce clause it would bear cumulative burdens not imposed on local commerce. See Philadelphia & S. M. S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, supra, 326, 346; State Freight Tax Case, 15 Wall. 232, 280; Bradley, J., dissenting in Maine v. Grand Trunk Railway Co., 142 U. S. 217, 235. Cf. Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, supra. The multiplication of state taxes measured by the gross receipts from interstate transactions would spell the destruction of interstate commerce and renew the barriers to interstate trade which it was the object of the commerce clause to remove. Baldwin v. G. A. F. Seelig, 294 U. S. 511, 523.

It is for these reasons that a state may not lay a tax measured by the amount of merchandise carried in interstate commerce, State Freight Tax, supra, or upon the freight earned by its carriage, Fargo v. Michigan, supra; Philadelphia & S. M. S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, supra, restricting the effect of State Tax on Railway Gross Receipts, 15 Wall. 284, with which compare Miller, J., dissenting in that case at page 297. Taxation measured by gross receipts from interstate commerce has been sustained when fairly apportioned to the commerce carried on within the taxing state, Wisconsin & M. R. Co. v. Powers, 191 U. S. 379; Maine v. Grand Trunk Railway, supra; Cudahy Packing Co. v. Minnesota, supra; United States Express Co. v. Minnesota, 223 U. S. 335, and in other cases has been rejected only because the apportionment was found to be inadequate or unfair, Fargo v. Michigan, supra; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Texas, supra; Meyer v. Wells, Fargo & Co., supra, with which compare Wisconsin & M. R. Co. v. Powers, supra. Whether the tax was sustained as a fair means of measuring a local privilege or franchise, as in Maine v. Grand Trunk Railway, supra; Ficklen v. Shelby County Taxing District, supra; American Manufacturing Company v. St. Louis, 250 U. S. 459, or as a method of arriving at the fair measure of a tax substituted for local property taxes, Cudahy Packing Co. v. Minnesota, supra; United States Express Company v. Minnesota, supra; cf. Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Adams, supra; see McHenry v. Alford, 168 U. S. 651, 670, 671, it is a practical way of laying upon the commerce its share of the local tax burden without subjecting it to multiple taxation not borne by local commerce and to which it would be subject if gross receipts, unapportioned, could be made the measure of a tax laid in every state where the commerce is carried on. A tax on gross receipts from tolls for the use by interstate trains of tracks lying wholly within the taxing state is valid, New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 158 U. S. 431; cf. Henderson Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 166 U. S. 150, although a like tax on gross receipts from the rental of railroad cars used in interstate commerce both within and without the taxing state is invalid. Fargo v. Michigan, supra. In the one case the tax reaches only that part of the commerce carried on within the taxing state; in the other it extends to the commerce carried on without the state boundaries, and, if valid, could be similarly laid in every other state in which the business is conducted.

In the present case the tax is, in form and substance, an excise conditioned on the carrying on of a local business, that of providing and selling advertising space in a published journal, which is sold to and paid for by subscribers, some of whom receive it in interstate commerce. The price at which the advertising is sold is made the measure of the tax. This Court has sustained a similar tax said to be on the privilege of manufacturing, measured by the total gross receipts from sales of the manufactured goods both intrastate and interstate. American Manufacturing Co. v. St. Louis, supra. The actual sales prices which measured the tax were taken to be no more than the measure of the value of the goods, manufactured, and so an appropriate measure of the value of the privilege, the taxation of which was deferred until the goods were sold. Ficklen v. Shelby County Taxing District, supra, sustained a license tax measured by a percentage of the gross annual commissions received by brokers engaged in negotiating sales within for sellers without the state.

Viewed only as authority, American Manufacturing Co. v. St. Louis, supra, would seem decisive of the present case. But we think the tax assailed here finds support in reason, and in the practical needs of a taxing system which, under constitutional limitations, must accommodate itself to the double demand that interstate business shall pay its way, and that at the same time it shall not be burdened with cumulative exactions which are not similarly laid on local business.

As we have said, the carrying on of a local business may be made the condition of state taxation, if it is distinct from interstate commerce, and the business of preparing, printing and publishing magazine advertising is peculiarly local and distinct from its circulation whether or not that circulation be interstate commerce. Cf. Puget Sound Steve- doring Co. v. Tax Comm'n, 302 U. S. 90. No one would doubt that the tax on the privilege would be valid if it were measured by the amount of advertising space sold. Utah Power & Light Co. v. Pfost, supra; Federal Compress & W. Co. v. McLean, 291 U. S. 17, or by its value. Oliver Iron Mining Co. v. Lord, 262 U. S. 172; Hope Natural Gas Co. v. Hall, 274 U. S. 284. Selling price, taken as a measure of value whose accuracy appellants do not challenge, is for all practical purposes a convenient means of arriving at an equitable measure of the burden which may be imposed on an admittedly taxable subject matter. Unlike the measure of the tax sustained in American Manufacturing Co. v. St. Louis, supra, it does not embrace the purchase price (here the magazine subscription price) of the articles shipped in interstate commerce. So far as the advertising rates reflect a value attributable to the maintenance of a circulation of the magazine interstate, we think the burden on the interstate business is too remote and too attenuated to call for a rigidly logical application of the doctrine that gross receipts from interstate commerce may not be made the measure of a tax. Experience has taught that the opposing demands that the commerce shall bear its share of local taxation, and that it shall not, on the other hand, be subjected to multiple tax burdens merely because it is interstate commerce, are not capable of reconciliation by resort to the syllogism. Practical rather than logical distinctions must be sought. See Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Texas, supra. Recognizing that not every local law that affects commerce is a regulation of it in a constitutional sense, this Court has held that local taxes may be laid on property used in the commerce; that its value for taxation may include the augmentation attributable to the commerce in which it is employed; and, finally, that the equivalent of that value may be computed by a measure related to gross receipts when a tax of the latter is substituted for a tax of the former. See Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Texas, supra.

Here it is perhaps enough that the privilege taxed is of a type which has been regarded as so separate and distinct from interstate transportation as to admit of different treatment for purposes of taxation, Utah Light & Power Co. v. Pfost, supra; Federal Compress & Warehouse Co. v. McLean, supra; Chassaniol v. Greenwood, 291 U. S. 584, and that the value of the privilege is fairly measured by the receipts. The tax is not invalid because the value is enhanced by appellants' circulation of their journal interstate any more than property taxes on railroads are invalid because property value is increased by the circumstance that the railroads do an interstate business.

But there is an added reason why we think the tax is not subject to the objection which has been leveled at taxes laid upon gross receipts derived from interstate communication or transportation of goods. So far as the value contributed to appellants' New Mexico business by circulation of the magazine interstate is taxed, it cannot again be taxed elsewhere any more than the value of railroad property taxed locally. The tax is not one which in form or substance can be repeated by other states in such manner as to lay an added burden on the interstate distribution of the magazine. As already noted, receipts from subscriptions are not included in the measure of the tax. It is not measured by the extent of the circulation of the magazine interstate. All the events upon which the tax is conditioned—the preparation, printing and publication of the advertising matter, and the receipt of the sums paid for it—occur in New Mexico and not elsewhere. All are beyond any control and taxing power which, without the commerce clause, those states could exert through its dominion over the distribution of the magazine or its subscribers. The dangers which may ensue from the imposition of a tax measured by gross receipts derived directly from interstate commerce are absent.

In this and other ways the case differs from Fisher's Blend Station, Inc. v. State Tax Comm'n, supra, on which appellants rely. There the exaction was a privilege tax laid upon the occupation of broadcasting, which the Court held was itself interstate communication, comparable to that carried on by the telegraph and the telephone, and was measured by the gross receipts derived from that commerce. If broadcasting could be taxed, so also could reception. In that event a cumulative tax burden would be imposed on interstate communication such as might ensue if gross receipts from interstate transportation could be taxed. This was the vice of the tax of a percentage of the gross receipts from goods sold by a wholesaler in interstate commerce, held invalid in Crew Levick Co. v. Pennsylvania, supra. In form and in substance the tax was thought not to be one for the privilege of doing a local business separable from interstate commerce. Cf. American Manufacturing Co. v. St. Louis, supra. In none of these respects is the present tax objectionable.

Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS and MR. JUSTICE BUTLER are of opinion that the judgment should be reversed.

MR. JUSTICE CARDOZO took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

NOTES

1. In Gwin, White & Prince v. Henneford, 305 U. S. 434, 83 L. ed. 272, 59 Sup. Ct. 325 (1939) the question was whether a tax of the State of Washington for the privilege of engaging in business activities, at the rate of one-half of 1% of the "gross income of the business," was valid as applied to a domestic corporation whose only activities consisted of acting as the representative of local fruit growers' organizations in marketing in other states fruits grown in the taxing state. Sales of fruit were negotiated, and deliveries and collections were made in other states and in foreign countries, often by representatives at extra-state points. Some of the sales were of fruit in transit interstate and some in storage in various states. Compensation for the marketing service rendered was fixed at a stipulated price per box of fruit sold and delivered. The tax was measured by the entire volume of the interstate commerce in which the corporation participated and was not apportioned to its activities within the state. Though nominally local, the tax in its practical operation was held to discriminate against interstate commerce by imposing upon it the risk of a multiple burden to which local commerce was not exposed. Said Mr. Justice Stone, speaking for the court: "If Washington is free to exact such a tax, other states to which the commerce extends may, with equal right, lay a tax similarly measured for the privilege of conducting within their respective territorial limits the activities there which contribute to the service. * * * Such a multiplication of state taxes, each measured by the volume of the commerce, would re-establish the barriers to interstate trade which it was the object of the commerce clause to remove."

2. A trustee, domiciled in Indiana, of a testamentary trust created and administered under the laws of that state, instructed his Indiana broker to arrange for the sale at stated prices of securities forming part of the trust estate. Through the broker's New York correspondents the securities were sold on the New York Stock Exchange and the proceeds transmitted to the broker, who delivered them less his commission to the trustee. Indiana, under its Gross Income Tax Act, imposed a tax of 1% on the gross receipts of these sales. The Supreme Court, in an opinion written by Justice Frankfurter, invalidated the tax as a burden on interstate commerce. It said that a state could not justify what amounted to a "levy upon the very process of commerce across state lines by pointing to a similar hobble on its local trade." The extent of the economic burden of the tax was said to be irrelevant on the issue of constitutionality, since "an exaction by a state from interstate commerce falls not because of a proven increase in the cost of the product" but because "there is interference by a state with the freedom of interstate commerce." Justice Douglas, with whom Justice Murphy concurred, wrote a dissenting opinion. Justice Black dissented without opinion. Justice Rutledge concurred in the result but dissented from grounding the decision upon a foundation which he thought would not only outlaw properly apportioned taxes but also require striking down many other types of taxation theretofore sustained. Freeman v. Hewitt, 329 U. S. 249, 91 L. ed. 265, 67 Sup. Ct. 274 (1946). For adverse criticisms of the case as undermining the Berwind-White doctrine, discarding the "cumulative burdens" test formulated by Justice Stone in Western Live Stock v. Bureau of Revenue and applied in other cases, and as marking a retreat to the "conceptual approach" of the earlier cases, see Hartman, State Taxation of Interstate Commerce (1953), 200 et seq.; Dunham, Gross Receipts Taxes on Interstate Transactions, 47 Col. L. Rev. 211 (1947); Barrett, State Taxation of Interstate Commerce—"Direct Burdens," "Multiple Burdens," or What Have You? 4 Vand. L. Rev. 496 (1951); Note, Gross Receipts Taxes: A Change in Doctrine, 56 Yale L. J. 898 (1947).

3. Central Greyhound Lines, Inc. v. Mealey, 334 U. S. 653, 92 L. ed. 1633, 68 Sup. Ct. 1260 (1948), while holding that a state tax on a carrier's gross receipts derived from transporting passengers between points within the state over a route a substantial part of which was in other states, unconstitutionally burdened interstate commerce by making it bear more than its "fair share of the cost of the local government whose protection it enjoys," said that such a tax would be permissible when apportioned to total mileage traversed within the state.

4. Interstate Oil Pipe Line Co. v. Stone, 337 U. S. 662, 93 L. ed. 1613, 69 Sup. Ct. 1264 (1949) involved the constitutionality of a state tax measured by gross receipts from the operation of a pipe line wholly within the state. The taxpayer, a foreign corporation, was engaged in transporting oil in its pipelines from lease tanks in oil fields in the state to loading racks adjacent to railroads, where it was loaded into tank cars for shipment outside the state. Four justices (Rutledge, Black, Douglas and Murphy) took the view that the statute was not invalid under the commerce clause merely because it imposed a "direct" tax on the privilege of engaging in interstate commerce. Since the tax did not discriminate against interstate commerce, and since the nature of the subject made apportionment unnecessary, and there was no attempt to tax interstate activity carried on outside the state, they voted to sustain it. Justice Burton concurred solely on the ground that the tax was on the privilege of operating the pipeline in intrastate commerce. The four dissenting justices (Vinson, C. J., Reed, Frankfurter and Jackson) said that the shipment of the oil from the gathering point to the loading racks was interstate transportation, even though both points were in the same state, and that the commerce clause barred a state from taxing the privilege of doing interstate commerce, with or without fair apportionment, and even if not discriminatory. Recent cases have made it clear that a majority of the court support the proposition relied upon by the dissenting justices, i. e., that no tax should be upheld which is construed to be upon the privilege of carrying on business exclusively interstate in character. See Spector Motor Service, Inc. v. O'Connor, 340 U. S. 602, 95 L. ed. 573, 71 Sup. Ct. 508 (1951); Memphis Steam Laundry Cleaner, Inc. v. Stone, 342 U. S. 389, 96 L. ed. 436, 72 Sup. Ct. 424 (1952); Railway Express Agency v. Virginia, 347 U. S. 359, 98 L. ed. 757, 74 Sup. Ct. 558 (1954) (holding that the tax under consideration was invalid as a privilege tax, although the highest state court had labeled it an ad valorem tax on intangible property; Justice Clark, with the concurrence of Chief Justice Warren and Justices Black and Douglas dissenting on the ground that the state court's characterization of the tax should be accepted).

CHAPTER VII

CONSTITUTIONAL LIMITATIONS: DUE PROCESS OF LAW AS TO PROCEDURE

DEN EX DEM. MURRAY v. HOBOKEN LAND & IMPROVE- MENT CO.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1856.
18 How. 272, 15 L. ed. 372.

MR. JUSTICE CURTIS delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case comes before us on a certificate of division of opinion of the judges of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of New Jersey. It is an action of ejectment, in which both parties claim title under Samuel Swartwout—the plaintiffs, under the levy of an execution on the 10th day of April, 1839, and the defendants, under a sale made by the marshal of the United States for the District of New Jersey, on the 1st day of June, 1839—by virtue of what is denominated a distress warrant, issued by the solicitor of the treasury under the Act of Congress of May 15, 1820, * * *.

No objection has been taken to the warrant on account of any defect or irregularity in the proceedings which preceded its issue. It is not denied that they were in conformity with the requirements of the Act of Congress. The special verdict finds that Swartwout was collector of the customs for the port of New York for eight years before the 29th of March, 1838; that, on the 10th of November, 1838, his account, as such collector, was audited by the first auditor, and certified by the first comptroller of the treasury; and for the balance thus found, amounting to the sum of $1,374,119 65/100, the warrant in question was issued by the solicitor of the treasury. Its validity is denied by the plaintiffs, upon the ground that so much of the Act of Congress as authorized it, is in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

In support of this position, the plaintiff relies on that part of the first section of the third article of the Constitution which requires the judicial power of the United States to be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as Congress may, from time to time, ordain and establish; the judges whereof shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office. Also, on the second section of the same article, which declares that the judicial power shall extend to controversies to which the United States shall be a party.

It must be admitted that, if the auditing of this account, and the ascertainment of its balance, and the issuing of this process, was an exercise of the judicial power of the United States, the proceeding was void; for the officers who performed these acts could exercise no part of that judicial power. They neither constituted a court of the United States, nor were they, or either of them, so connected with any such court as to perform even any of the ministerial duties which arise out of judicial proceedings.

The question, whether these acts were an exercise of the judicial power of the United States, can best be considered under another inquiry, raised by the further objection of the plaintiff, that the effect of the proceedings authorized by the Act in question is to deprive the party, against whom the warrant issues, of his liberty and property, "without due process of law;" and, therefore, is in conflict with the fifth article of the amendments of the Constitution.

Taking these two objections together, they raise the questions, whether, under the Constitution of the United States, a collector of the customs, from whom a balance of account has been found to be due by accounting officers of the treasury, designated for that purpose by law, can be deprived of his liberty, or property, in order to enforce payment of that balance, without the exercise of the judicial power of the United States, and yet by due process of law, within the meaning of those terms in the Constitution; and if so, then, secondly, whether the warrant in question was such due process of law?

The words, "due process of law," were undoubtedly intended to convey the same meaning as the words, "by the law of the land," in Magna Charta. Lord Coke, in his commentary on those words (2 Inst. 50), says they mean due process of law. The constitutions which had been adopted by the several states before the formation of the Federal Constitution, following the language of the great charter more closely, generally contained the words, "but by the judgment of his peers, or the law of the land." The ordinance of Congress of July 13, 1787, for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio, used the same words.

The Constitution of the United States, as adopted, contained the provision, that "the trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury." When the fifth article of amendment containing the words now in question was made, the trial by jury in criminal cases had thus already been provided for. By the sixth and seventh articles of amendment, further special provisions were separately made for that mode of trial in civil and criminal cases. To have followed, as in the state constitutions, and in the ordinance of 1787, the words of Magna Charta, and declared that no person shall be deprived of his life, liberty, or property but by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land, would have been in part superfluous and inappropriate. To have taken the clause, "law of the land," without its immediate context, might possibly have given rise to doubts, which would be effectually dispelled by using those words which the great commentator on Magna Charta had declared to be the true meaning of the phrase, "law of the land," in that instrument, and which were undoubtedly then received as their true meaning.

That the warrant now in question is legal process, is not denied. It was issued in conformity with an Act of Congress. But is it "due process of law"? The Constitution contains no description of those processes which it was intended to allow or forbid. It does not even declare what principles are to be applied to ascertain whether it be due process. It is manifest that it was not left to the legislative power to enact any process which might be devised. The article is a restraint on the legislative as well as on the executive and judicial powers of the government, and cannot be so construed as to leave Congress free to make any process "due process of law," by its mere will. To what principles, then, are we to resort to ascertain whether this process, enacted by Congress, is due process? To this the answer must be twofold. We must examine the Constitution itself, to see whether this process be in conflict with any of its provisions. If not found to be so, we must look to those settled usages and modes of proceeding existing in the common and statute law of England, before the emigration of our ancestors, and which are shown not to have been unsuited to their civil and political condition by having been acted on by them after the settlement of this country. We apprehend there has been no period, since the establishment of the English monarchy, when there has not been, by the law of the land, a summary method for the recovery of debts due to the Crown, and especially those due from receivers of the revenues. * * * [The Court here gave an account of such proceedings in England.]

This brief sketch of the modes of proceeding to ascertain and enforce payment of balances due from receivers of the revenue in England, is sufficient to show that the methods of ascertaining the existence and amount of such debts, and compelling their payment, have varied widely from the usual course of the common law on other subjects; and that, as respects such debts due from such officers, "the law of the land" authorized the employment of auditors, and an inquisition without notice, and a species of execution bearing a very close resemblance to what is termed a warrant of distress in the Act of 1820, now in question.

It is certain that this diversity in "the law of the land" between public defaulters and ordinary debtors was understood in this country, and entered into the legislation of the colonies and provinces, and more especially of the states, after the Declaration of Independence and before the formation of the Constitution of the United States. Not only was the process of distress in nearly or quite universal use for the collection of taxes, but what was generally termed a warrant of distress, running against the body, goods, and chattels of defaulting receivers of public money, was issued to some public officer, to whom was committed the power to ascertain the amount of the default, and by such warrant proceed to collect it. [Early state and federal legislation of this character is here referred to.]

Tested by the common and statute law of England prior to the emigration of our ancestors, and by the laws of many of the states at the time of the adoption of this amendment, the proceedings authorized by the Act of 1820 cannot be denied to be due process of law, when applied to the ascertainment and recovery of balances due to the government from a collector of customs, unless there exists in the Constitution some other provision which restrains Congress from authorizing such proceedings. For, though "due process of law" generally implies and includes, actor, reus, judex, regular allegations, opportunity to answer, and a trial according to some settled course of judicial proceedings (2 Inst. 47, 50; Hoke v. Henderson, 4 Dev. N. C. Rep. 15; Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill, 146; Van Zandt v. Waddel, 2 Yerger, 260; State Bank v. Cooper, Ibid. 599; Jones' Heirs v. Perry, 10 Ibid. 59; Greene v. Briggs, 1 Curtis, 311), yet, this is not universally true. There may be, and we have seen that there are, cases, under the law of England after Magna Charta, and as it was brought to this country and acted on here, in which process, in its nature final, issues against the body, lands, and goods of certain public debtors without any such trial; and this brings us to the question, whether those provisions of the Constitution which relate to the judicial power are incompatible with these proceedings?

That the auditing of the accounts of a receiver of public moneys may be, in an enlarged sense, a judicial act, must be admitted. So are all those administrative duties the performance of which involves an inquiry into the existence of facts and the application to them of rules of law. In this sense the act of the President in calling out the militia under the Act of 1795, 12 Wheat. 19, or of a commissioner who makes a certificate for the extradition of a criminal, under a treaty, is judicial. But it is not sufficient to bring such matters under the judicial power, that they involve the exercise of judgment upon law and fact. United States v. Ferreira, 13 How. 40. It is necessary to go further, and show not only that the adjustment of the balances due from accounting officers may be, but from their nature must be, controversies to which the United States is a party, within the meaning of the second section of the third article of the Constitution. We do not doubt the power of Congress to provide by law that such a question shall form the subject-matter of a suit in which the judicial power can be exerted. The Act of 1820 makes such a provision for reviewing the decision of the accounting officers of the treasury. But, until reviewed, it is final and binding; and the question is, whether its subject-matter is necessarily, and without regard to the consent of Congress, a judicial controversy. And we are of opinion it is not. * * *

To apply these principles to the case before us, we say that, though a suit may be brought against the marshal for seizing property under such a warrant of distress, and he may be put to show his justification;

yet the action of the executive power in issuing the warrant, pursuant to the Act of 1820, passed under the powers to collect and disburse the revenue granted by the Constitution, is conclusive evidence of the facts recited in it, and of the authority to make the levy; that though no suit can be brought against the United States without the consent of Congress, yet Congress may consent to have a suit brought, to try the question whether the collector be indebted, that being a subject capable of judicial determination, and may empower a court to act on that determination, and restrain the levy of the warrant of distress within the limits of the debt judicially found to exist. * * * [The Act of 1820 was thus held to be constitutional.]

NOTES

1. The "due process of law" and "law of the land" clauses which were inserted in early American state constitutions carried with them the usual English significance. In England the idea or principle had been borrowed from Magna Charta and referred originally to a method of procedure in criminal trials. Later it came to mean any procedure according to the ancient customary law, and after the Revolution of 1688 it was understood that such procedure might be changed by legislation of Parliament as well as by judicial decisions. The phrase was used to indicate that protection would be afforded against arbitrary and oppressive acts of the Crown and its officers, rather than against legislative authority. During the period antedating the Civil War, a few state courts applied these provisions of their constitutions in accordance with the broader view that they were guaranties against legislative action which offended fundamental principles of justice and reasonableness, such as retrospective laws, or laws which were unequal in their operation or transgressed the natural rights of the individual. But these few state precedents made but slight impression on American constitutional development during this period.

The Fifth Amendment to the Constitution provides that "No person shall * * * be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." This applies to action by the federal government only. The same prohibition is extended to the states by the Fourteenth Amendment, which declares: "Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law," and continues, "nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." The Fourteenth Amendment thus links together the due process and equal protection clauses and the challenged state action is frequently contested in the same litigation on the ground that it offends both guaranties.

The due process requirement of the Fifth Amendment became effective upon ratification of that Amendment in 1791. However, save for the decision in Dred Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. 393, 15 L. ed. 691 (1857), invalidating the Missouri Compromise Act of 1820, no act of either the executive or legislative departments of the federal government was condemned prior to the Civil War. The principal case, in which the administrative procedure in question was upheld, was in fact the first in which the Supreme Court of the United States gave any serious consideration to the scope and meaning of due process. See, generally, Corwin, The Doctrine of Due Process of Law Before the Civil War, 24 Harv. L. Rev. 366, 460 (1911), 1 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 203; Howe, The Meaning of "Due Process of Law" Prior to the Adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, 18 Cal. L. Rev. 583 (1930); Grant, The Natural Law Background of Due Process, 31 Col. L. Rev. 56 (1931).

2. That due process of law does not necessarily involve judicial process is well-established. In Ex parte Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 289, 27 L. ed. 552, 2 Sup. Ct. 569 (1883), holding that an attorney may be disbarred by a court acting without a jury, Mr. Justice Bradley said: "It is a mistaken idea that due process of law requires a plenary suit and a trial by jury, in all cases where property or personal rights are involved. The important right of personal liberty is generally determined by a single judge, on a writ of habeas corpus, using affidavits or depositions for proofs, where facts are to be established. Assessments for damages and benefits occasioned by public improvements are usually made by commissioners in a summary way. Conflicting claims of creditors amounting to thousands of dollars, are often settled by the courts on affidavits or depositions alone. And the courts of chancery, bankruptcy, probate, and admiralty administer immense fields of jurisdiction without trial by jury. In all cases, that kind of procedure is due process of law which is suitable and proper to the nature of the case, and sanctioned by the established customs and usages of the courts."

Summary proceedings for the collection of taxes are not violative of due process. Palmer v. McMahon, 133 U. S. 660, 33 L. ed. 772, 10 Sup. Ct. 324 (1890) (commitment of delinquent property owner); Kentucky Union Co. v. Kentucky, 219 U. S. 140, 55 L. ed. 137, 31 Sup. Ct. 171 (1911) (forfeiture of title to land for non-payment of taxes); Phillips v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 283 U. S. 589, 75 L. ed. 1289, 51 Sup. Ct. 608 (1931) (summary proceeding for collection of unpaid income taxes does not deny due process if taxpayer is allowed an appeal to an administrative agency with a right to review its determination in the courts, or, in the alternative, may sue to recover amount paid).

3. Compare with the principal case Ownbey v. Morgan, 256 U. S. 94, 65 L. ed. 837, 41 Sup. Ct. 433, 17 A. L. R. 873 (1921), where the court sustained, on grounds of English usage and long and previously unchallenged recognition in some states, a harsh procedure whereby a court refused to permit a non-resident of the state, in a suit commenced against him by attachment of property in the state, to defend without first giving security in an amount equal to the plaintiff's claim, and gave judgment on default of such security, collectable only by sale of the property attached, although in the particular case the defendant claimed that the property attached was substantially all that he had and that in spite of every possible effort he was unable to obtain security. For another instance in which a statutory procedure was justified on the ground that it had "its roots in a distant past" and had been unchallenged during its long history, see Coler v. Corn Exchange Bank, 250 N. Y. 136, 164 N. E. 882 (1928), affirmed 280 U. S. 218, 74 L. ed. 378, 50 Sup. Ct. 94 (1930).

4. "A distinction has always been observed in the meaning of due process as affecting property rights, and as applying to procedure in the courts. In the former aspect the requirement is satisfied if no actual injury is inflicted and the substantial rights of the citizen are not infringed; the result rather than the means of reaching it is the important consideration. But where the conduct of a trial is involved, the guaranty of the Fourteenth Amendment is not that a just result shall have been obtained, but that the result, whatever it be, shall be reached in a fair way. Procedural due process has to do with the manner of the trial; dictates that in the conduct of judicial inquiry certain fundamental rules of fairness be observed; forbids the disregard of those rules, and is not satisfied, if, though the hearing was unfair, the result is just." Mr. Justice Roberts, dissenting (with Justices Brandeis, Sutherland and Butler) in Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97, 137, 78 L. ed. 674, 54 Sup. Ct. 330, 90 A. L. R. 575 (1934).

DAVIDSON v. NEW ORLEANS.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1877.

96 U. S. 97, 24 L. ed. 616.

Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana.

MR. JUSTICE MILLER delivered the opinion of the Court [sustaining an assessment levied on certain real estate by the City of New Orleans, as authorized by state legislation, for the drainage of swamp lands].

* * *

The prohibition against depriving the citizen or subject of his life, liberty, or property without due process of law, is not new in the constitutional history of the English race. It is not new in the constitutional history of this country, and it was not new in the Constitution of the United States when it became a part of the Fourteenth Amendment, in the year 1866.

The equivalent of the phrase "due process of law," according to Lord Coke, is found in the words "law of the land," in the Great Charter, in connection with the writ of habeas corpus, the trial by jury, and other guarantees of the rights of the subject against the oppression of the Crown. In the series of amendments to the Constitution of the United States, proposed and adopted immediately after the organization of the government, which were dictated by the jealousy of the states as further limitations upon the power of the federal government, it is found in the Fifth, in connection with other guarantees of personal rights of the same character. Among these are protection against prosecutions for crimes, unless sanctioned by a grand jury; against being twice tried for the same offence; against the accused being compelled, in a criminal case, to testify against himself; and against taking private property for public use without just compensation.

Most of these provisions, including the one under consideration, either in terms or in substance, have been embodied in the constitutions of the several states, and in one shape or another have been the subject of judicial construction.

It must be confessed, however, that the constitutional meaning or value of the phrase "due process of law," remains to-day without that satisfactory precision of definition which judicial decisions have given to nearly all the other guarantees of personal rights found in the constitutions of the several states and of the United States.

It is easy to see that when the great barons of England wrung from King John, at the point of the sword, the concession that neither their lives nor their property should be disposed of by the Crown, except as provided by the law of the land, they meant by "law of the land" the ancient and customary laws of the English people, or laws enacted by the Parliament of which those barons were a controlling element. It was not in their minds, therefore, to protect themselves against the enactment of laws by the Parliament of England. But when, in the year of grace 1866, there is placed in the Constitution of the United States a declaration that "no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law," can a state make anything due process of law which, by its own legislation, it chooses to declare such? To affirm this is to hold that the prohibition to the states is of no avail, or has no application where the invasion of private rights is effected under the forms of state legislation. It seems to us that a statute which declares in terms, and without more, that the full and exclusive title of a described piece of land, which is now in A., shall be and is hereby vested in B., would, if effectual, deprive A. of his property without due process of law, within the meaning of the constitutional provision.

* * *

It is not a little remarkable, that while this provision has been in the Constitution of the United States, as a restraint upon the authority of the federal government, for nearly a century, and while, during all that time, the manner in which the powers of that government have been exercised has been watched with jealousy, and subjected to the most rigid criticism in all its branches, this special limitation upon its powers has rarely been invoked in the judicial forum or the more enlarged theatre of public discussion. But while it has been a part of the Constitution, as a restraint upon the power of the states, only a very few years, the docket of this Court is crowded with cases in which we are asked to hold that state courts and state legislatures have deprived their own citizens of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. There is here abundant evidence that there exists some strange misconception of the scope of this provision as found in the Fourteenth Amendment. In fact, it would seem, from the character of many of the cases before us, and the arguments made in them, that the clause under consideration is looked upon as a means of bringing to the test of the decision of this Court the abstract opinions of every unsuccessful litigant in a state court of the justice of the decision against him, and of the merits of the legislation on which such a decision may be founded. If, therefore, it were possible to define what it is for a state to deprive a person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, in terms which would cover every exercise of power thus forbidden to the State, and exclude those which are not, no more useful construction could be furnished by this or any other court to any part of the fundamental law.

But, apart from the imminent risk of a failure to give any definition which would be at once perspicuous, comprehensive, and satisfactory, there is wisdom, we think, in the ascertaining of the intent and application of such an important phrase in the Federal Constitution, by the gradual process of judicial inclusion and exclusion, as the cases presented for decision shall require, with the reasoning on which such decisions may be founded. This Court is, after an experience of nearly a century, still engaged in defining the obligation of contracts, and regulation of commerce, and other powers conferred on the federal government, or limitations imposed upon the states.

As contributing, to some extent, to this mode of determining what class of cases do not fall within its provision, we lay down the following proposition, as applicable to the case before us:—

That whenever by the laws of a state, or by state authority, a tax, assessment, servitude, or other burden is imposed upon property for the public use, whether it be for the whole state or of some more limited portion of the community, and those laws provide for a mode of confirming or contesting the charge thus imposed, in the ordinary courts of justice, with such notice to the person, or such proceeding in regard to the property as is appropriate to the nature of the case, the judgment in such proceedings cannot be said to deprive the owner of his property without due process of law, however obnoxious it may be to other objections. * * *

This proposition covers the present case. Before the assessment could be collected, or become effectual, the statute required that the tableau of assessments should be filed in the proper district court of the state; that personal service of notice, with reasonable time to object, should be served on all owners who were known and within reach of process, and due advertisement made as to those who were unknown, or could not be found. This was complied with; and the party complaining here appeared, and had a full and fair hearing in the court of the first instance, and afterwards in the Supreme Court. If this be not due process of law, then the words can have no definite meaning as used in the Constitution. * * *

And lastly, and most strongly, it is urged that the court rendered a personal judgment against the owner for the amount of the tax, while it also made it a charge upon the land. It is urged with force,—and some highly respectable authorities are cited to support the proposition,—that while for such improvements as this a part, or even the whole, of a man's property connected with the improvement may be taken, no personal liability can be imposed on him in regard to it. If this were a proposition coming before us sitting in a State court, or, perhaps, in a circuit court of the United States, we might be called upon to decide it; but we are unable to see that any of the provisions of the Federal Constitution authorizes us to reverse the judgment of a State court on that question. It is not one which is involved in the phrase "due process of law," and none other is called to our attention in the present case.

As there is no error in the judgment of the Supreme Court of Louisiana, of which this Court has cognizance, it is

Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE BRADLEY gave a concurring opinion, in which he said: "I think it [the opinion of the Court] narrows the scope of inquiry as to what is due process of law more than it should do. * * *

I think, therefore, we are entitled, under the Fourteenth Amendment, not only to see that there is some process of law; but 'due process of law,' provided by the state law when a citizen is deprived of his property; and that, in judging what is 'due process of law,' respect must be had to the cause and object of the taking, whether under the taxing power, the power of eminent domain, or the power of assessment for local improvements, or none of these; and if found to be suitable or admissible in the special case, it will be adjudged to be 'due process of law;' but if found to be arbitrary, oppressive, and unjust, it may be declared to be not 'due process of law.' Such an examination may be made without interfering with that large discretion which every legislative power has of making wide modifications in the forms of procedure in each case, according as the laws, habits, customs, and preferences of the people of the particular state may require."

NOTES

1. The opinion in the principal case was the first in which dicta appeared to the effect that the substantive rights of life, liberty and property are protected against legislative deprivation by the due process clauses. In other words, the Supreme Court had apparently discovered that the guaranty of due process could be utilized as a constitutional restraint upon the substance of legislation as well as upon forms and modes of procedure. In this connection, the student should note the view expressed in Mr. Justice Bradley's concurring opinion. The case has been viewed as one of the stepping stones by which the scope of due process was gradually extended from protection of procedural rights to the protection of property rights against legislation challenged as arbitrary, capricious or unreasonable.

2. In Hagar v. Reclamation District No. 108, 111 U. S. 701, 28 L. ed. 569, 4 Sup. Ct. 663 (1884), sustaining an assessment on appellant's land of a portion of the cost of reclaiming swamp lands and affirming a judgment ordering sale of the land in foreclosure of the lien of the assessment, the Supreme Court by Mr. Justice Field, said: "Of the different kinds of taxes which the state may impose, there is a vast number of which, from their nature, no notice can be given to the tax-payer, nor would notice be of any possible advantage to him, such as poll-taxes, license taxes, (not dependent upon the extent of his business,) and, generally, specific taxes on things or persons or occupations. In such cases the legislature in authorizing the tax fixes its amount, and that is the end of the matter. If the tax be not paid the property of the delinquent may be sold, and he be thus deprived of his property. Yet there can be no question that the proceeding is due process of law, as there is no inquiry into the weight of evidence, or other element of a judicial nature, and nothing could be changed by hearing the tax-payer. No right of his is therefore invaded. Thus, if the tax on animals be a fixed sum per head, or on articles a fixed sum per yard or bushel or gallon, there is nothing the owner can do which can affect the amount to be collected from him. * * * In such cases there is no necessity for notice or hearing. The amount of the tax would not be changed by it. But where a tax is levied on property not specifically, but according to its value, to be ascertained by assessors appointed for that purpose, upon such evidence as they may obtain, a different principle comes in. The officers in estimating the value act judicially, and in most of the states provision is made for the correction of errors committed by them, through boards of revision or equalization, sitting at designated periods provided by law, to hear complaints respecting the justice of the assessments. The law, in prescribing the time when such complaints will be heard, gives all the notice required, and the proceeding by which the valuation is determined, though it may be followed, if the tax be not paid, by a sale of the delinquent's property, is due process of law. In some states, instead of a board of revision or equalization, the assessment may be revised by proceedings in the courts and be there corrected if erroneous, or set aside if invalid; or objections to the validity or amount of the assessment may be taken when the attempt is made to enforce it. In such cases all the opportunity is given to the tax-payer to be heard respecting the assessment which can be deemed essential to render the proceedings due process of law. * * *

WUCHTER v. PIZZUTTI.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1928.

276 U. S. 13, 72 L. ed. 446, 48 Sup. Ct. 259, 57 A. L. R. 1230.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE TAFT delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

Pizzutti was driving a team of horses attached to a wagon on a public highway in New Jersey. Wuchter was a resident of Pennsylvania, who was following the wagon with his automobile. Wuchter drove his car so as to crash into the rear of the wagon, damaging it, and injuring Pizzutti and his horses. Pizzutti instituted a suit against Wuchter in the Supreme Court of New Jersey. Wuchter was served with process under the provisions of the act known as chapter 232 of the Laws of 1924 (P. L. 1924, p. 517) by leaving process with the secretary of state. Wuchter interposed no defense. A judgment interlocutory was taken against him and a writ of inquiry of damages was issued. Although the statute did not require it, notice of its proposed execution was actually served personally on Wuchter in Pennsylvania. Wuchter did not appear. A final judgment was entered. Wuchter then appealed to the court below, contending that the act under which the process was served upon him was unconstitutional, because it deprived him of his property without due process of law, in contravention of section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution.

Section 1 of the act complained of, under which the process was served in this case, was as follows:

"From and after the passage of this act any chauffeur, operator or owner of any motor vehicle, not licensed under the laws of the State of New Jersey, providing for the registration and licensing of motor vehicles, who shall accept the privilege extended to nonresident chauffeurs, operators and owners by law of driving such a motor vehicle or of having the same driven or operated in the State of New Jersey, without a New Jersey registration or license, shall, by such acceptance and the operation of such automobile within the State of New Jersey, make and constitute the secretary of state of the State of New Jersey, his, her or their agent for the acceptance of process in any civil suit or proceeding by any resident of the State of New Jersey against such chauffeur, operator or the owner of such motor vehicle, arising out of or by reason of any accident or collision occurring within the state in which a motor vehicle operated by such chauffeur, operator, or such motor vehicle is involved." * * *

By the general state motor law, as amended by chapter 211, Laws of 1924, provision is made for the registration and license of automobiles owned by nonresidents who use the highways of the state, P. L. 1924, § 9, par. 4, p. 451. They are required to agree that original process against the owner made by leaving it in the office of the secretary of state shall have the same effect as if served on the owner within the state, and the statute provides that the commissioner of motor vehicles shall notify the owner of such motor car by letter directed to him at the post office address stated in his application for registration and license already filed with the commissioner.

The act first above referred to, No. 232, under which process in this case was served, applies to the owners of automobiles who are not licensed, but who come into the state and use the highways of the state without registration, and is not to be confused with the license act or its provisions.

It is settled by our decisions that a state's power to regulate the use of its highways extends to their use by nonresidents as well as by residents. Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 610, 622. We have further held that, in advance of the operation of a motor vehicle on its highways by a nonresident, a state may require him to take out a license and to appoint one of its officials as his agent, on whom process may be served in suits growing out of accidents in such operation. This was under the license act of New Jersey, last above referred to, and not No. 232. Kane v. New Jersey, 242 U. S. 160, 167. We have also recognized it to be a valid exercise of power by a state, because of its right to regulate the use of its highways by nonresidents, to declare, without exacting a license, that the use of the highway by the nonresident may by statute be treated as the equivalent of the appointment by him of a state official as agent on whom process in such a case may be served. Hess v. Pawloski, 274 U. S. 352.

The question made in the present case is whether a statute, making the secretary of state the person to receive the process, must, in order to be valid, contain a provision making it reasonably probable that notice of the service on the secretary will be communicated to the nonresident defendant who is sued. Section 232 of the Laws of 1924 makes no such requirement and we have not been shown any provision in any applicable law of the State of New Jersey requiring such communication. We think that a law with the effect of this one should make a reasonable provision for such probable communication. We quite agree, and, indeed, have so held in the Pawloski Case, that the act of a nonresident in using the highways of another state may properly be declared to be an agreement to accept service of summons in a suit growing out of the use of the highway by the owner of the automobile, but the enforced acceptance of the service of process on a state officer by the defendant would not be fair or due process unless such officer or the plaintiff is required to mail the notice to the defendant, or to advise him, by some written communication, so as to make it reasonably probable that he will receive actual notice. Otherwise, where the service of summons is limited to a service on the secretary of state or some officer of the state, without more, it will be entirely possible for a person injured to sue any non-resident he chooses, and through service upon the state official obtain a default judgment against a nonresident who has never been in the state, who had nothing to do with the accident, or whose automobile having been in the state has never injured anybody. A provision of law for service that leaves open such a clear opportunity for the commission of fraud (Heinemann v. Pier, 110 Wis. 185), or injustice is not a reasonable provision, and in the case supposed would certainly be depriving a defendant of his property without due process of law. The Massachusetts statute, considered in Hess v. Pawloski, really made necessary actual personal service to be evidenced by the written admission of the defendant. In Kane v. New Jersey, the service provided for by statute was by mail to the necessarily known registered address of the licensed defendant.

In determining the reasonableness of provision for service we should consider the situation of both parties. The person injured must find out to whom the offending automobile belongs. This may be a difficult task. It is easy when the owner of the automobile is present after the accident. That is provided for in the second section of this act by apprehending him or his operator. But the vehicle may be operated by some one who having committed the injury successfully escapes capture or identification. In such a case, the person injured must be left without a remedy by suit at law, as every one must be who does not know or cannot discover the person who injured him. The burden is necessarily on him to investigate and learn. In finding out who it was, and whether the person is of such financial responsibility as to warrant a suit, he almost necessarily will secure knowledge of his post office address or his place of residence, and thereby be enabled to point out how notice may be communicated to him. With this information at hand the state may properly authorize service to be made on one of its own officials, if it also requires that notice of that service shall be communicated to the person sued. Every statute of this kind, therefore, should require the plaintiff bringing the suit to show in the summons to be served the post office address or residence of the defendant being sued, and should impose either on the plaintiff himself or upon the official receiving service or some other, the duty of communication by mail or otherwise with the defendant.

The cases, in which statutes have been upheld providing that non-resident corporations may properly be served by leaving a summons with a state official, where the corporation has not indicated a resident agent to be served, are not especially applicable to the present statute. Pennsylvania Fire Insurance Co. v. Gold Issue Mining Co., 243 U. S. 93; Simon v. Southern Ry. Co., 236 U. S. 115; Old Wayne Mutual Life Association v. McDonough, 204 U. S. 8. Such corporations may properly be required to accept service through a public officer as a condition of their doing business in the state. Their knowledge of the statutory requirement may perhaps prompt frequent inquiry as to suits against them, of their appointed agent or at the office of the public official to be served, but it could hardly be fair or reasonable to require a nonresident individual owner of a motor vehicle who may use the state highways to make constant inquiry of the secretary of state to learn whether he has been sued. Even in cases of nonresident corporations, it has been held that a statute directing service upon them by leaving process with a state official is void if it contains no provision requiring the official, upon whom the service may be made, to give the foreign corporations notice that suit has been brought and citation served. * * *

In McDonald v. Mabec, 243 U. S. 90, 91, a person domiciled in Texas left the state to make his home in another state. An action for money was begun by publication in a newspaper after his departure, and a judgment recovered and sustained by the state Supreme Court was held void by this Court. This Court said:

"The foundation of jurisdiction is physical power, although in civilized times it is not necessary to maintain that power throughout proceedings properly begun, and although submission to the jurisdiction by appearance may take the place of service upon the person. * * * No doubt there may be some extension of the means of acquiring jurisdiction beyond service or appearance, but the foundation should be borne in mind. Subject to its conception of sovereignty even the common law required a judgment not to be contrary to natural justice. * * * And in states bound together by a Constitution and subject to the Fourteenth Amendment, great caution should be used not to let fiction deny the fair play that can be secured only by a pretty close adhesion to fact." See, also, Roller v. Holly, 176 U. S. 398.

These cases and others indicate a general trend of authority toward sustaining the validity of service of process, if the statutory provisions in themselves indicate that there is reasonable probability that if the statutes are complied with, the defendant will receive actual notice, and that is the principle that we think should apply here.

But it is said that the defendant here had actual notice by service out of New Jersey in Pennsylvania. He did not, however, appear in the cause and such notice was not required by the statute. Not having been directed by the statute it cannot, therefore, supply constitutional validity to the statute or to service under it. * * * Judgment reversed.

[JUSTICES BRANDEIS and HOLMES dissented, chiefly on the ground that notice having actually been given, the defendant should not be heard to complain of a defect in the statute which had not operated to his prejudice; and JUSTICE STONE on the ground that it should be left to the state court to decide whether the statute should be construed as impliedly requiring notice to be given a defendant. Otherwise these justices concurred in the principles announced.]

NOTE

1. No legislative act, judicial process or administrative proceeding can meet the requirements of due process of law if it seeks to extend its control or influence beyond the territorial limits of the government on whose behalf the action is taken. To have due process in a judicial proceeding the court undertaking to adjudicate the controversy must have jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action and of the persons whose rights and interests are to be affected by any judgment or decree the court may render. Pennoy v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565 (1877). Cf. Milliken v. Meyer, 311 U. S. 457, 85 L. ed. 278, 61 Sup. Ct. 339, 132 A. L. R. 1357 (1940). Jurisdiction in an action instituted to determine the personal liability of a defendant requires some form of service of process upon him which will reasonably insure that he receive the notice and opportunity to be heard to which he is entitled. The subject of jurisdiction in judicial proceedings is not dealt with further in this case-book.

For discussion of the problems raised in the principal case, see Scott, Jurisdiction over Non-Resident Motorists, 39 Harv. L. Rev. 563 (1926); Culp, Process in Actions Against Non-Resident Motorists, 32 Mich. L. Rev. 325 (1934).

BRINKERHOFF-FARIS TRUST &amp; SAVINGS CO. v. HILL.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1930.

281 U. S. 673, 74 L. ed. 1107, 50 Sup. Ct. 451.

MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS delivered the opinion of the Court.

In 1928, the Brinkerhoff-Faris Trust & Savings Company, acting as trustee for its shareholders, brought this suit in a Missouri court against the Treasurer of Henry County, Missouri, to enjoin him from collecting or attempting to collect a certain part of the taxes assessed against them for the year 1927 on the shares of its stock; and, pending decision in this suit, to restrain the prosecution of an action already brought by him against the plaintiff for that purpose.

The bill alleged that the township assessor had intentionally and systematically discriminated against the shareholders by assessing bank stock at full value, while intentionally and systematically omitting to assess certain classes of property and assessing all other classes of property at 75 per cent or less of their value. It asserted that, to the extent of 25 per cent, the assessments were void because such discrimination violated the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. And it recited that the plaintiff had tendered, and was continuing to tender, payment of the 75 per cent of the taxes assessed, which amount it conceded was due. As grounds for equity jurisdiction, the bill charged that relief could not be had at law, either by way of defense in the pending action brought by the Treasurer or by paying the tax in full under protest and suing for a refund of 25 per cent thereof; and that no administrative remedy for the relief sought was, or ever had been, provided by law either by appeal or otherwise to or from the County Board of Equalization or the State Board of Equalization.

The defendant's answer denied all the allegations of discrimination and further opposed relief in equity on the grounds that the plaintiff had not pursued remedies before the County or State Board of Equalization pursuant to Articles 3 and 5 of Chapter 119 of the Missouri Revised Statutes of 1919; and that the plaintiff was guilty of laches in not so doing. The trial court refused the injunction and dismissed the bill, without opinion or findings of fact.

The Supreme Court of Missouri held, on appeal, that relief from the alleged discriminatory assessment could not be had in any suit at law; that this bill in equity was the appropriate and only remedy, unless relief could have been had by timely application to some administrative board; and that neither of the boards of equalization was charged with the power and duty to grant such relief. But, without passing definitely upon the question of discrimination, it concluded that if the plaintiff had "at any time before the tax books were delivered to the collector, filed complaint before the State Tax Commission, that body, in the proper exercise of its jurisdiction, would have granted a hearing, and would have heard evidence with respect to the valuations complained of, and, if the charges contained in the complaint had been found to be true, the valuations placed on its property would have been lowered, or that on other property raised, the property omitted from the assessment roll would have been placed thereon, and the discrimination complained of thereby removed. The remedy provided by the statute is adequate, certain, and complete." Compare First National Bank of Greeley v. Weld County, 264 U. S. 450. The court held, therefore, that, because plaintiff had this adequate legal remedy, it was not entitled to equitable relief, and because plaintiff had not complained to the Tax Commission, "it was clearly guilty of laches in not so doing." On these grounds, the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the trial court. 323 Mo. 180.

The powers and duties of the State Tax Commission are prescribed by Article 4 of Chapter 119 of the Revised Statutes of 1919. Six years before this suit was begun, those provisions had been construed by the Supreme Court of Missouri in Laclede Land & Improvement Co. v. State Tax Commission, 295 Mo. 298. There, the court had been required to determine whether the Commission had power to grant relief of the character here sought. The Commission had refused, on the ground of lack of power, an application for relief from discrimination similar to that here alleged. The Laclede Company petitioned for a mandamus to compel the Commission to hear its complaint. The Supreme Court denied the petition, saying that it was "preposterous" and "unthinkable" that the statute conferred such power on the Commission; and that if the statute were thus construed, it would violate section 10 of article 10 of the constitution of Missouri. That decision was thereafter consistently acted upon by the Commission; and it was followed by the Supreme Court itself in later cases. [Citations omitted.]

No one doubted the authority of the Laclede case until it was expressly overruled in the case at bar. While the defendant's answer asserted that the plaintiff had not availed itself of the administrative remedies under Articles 3 and 5 of Chapter 119 by application to the boards of equalization and was guilty of laches in not so doing (contentions which the state court held to be unsound), the answer significantly omitted any contention that there had been a remedy by application to the State Tax Commission, whose powers are dealt with in the intervening Article 4. The possibility of relief before the Tax Commission was not suggested by anyone in the entire litigation until the Supreme Court filed its opinion on June 29, 1929. Then it was too late for the plaintiff to avail itself of the newly found remedy. For, under that decision, the application to the Tax Commission could not be made after the tax books were delivered to the collector; and this had been done about October 1, 1927.

The plaintiff seasonably filed a petition for a rehearing in which it recited the above facts and asserted, in addition to its claims on the merits, that, in applying the new construction of Article 4 of Chapter 119 to the case at bar, and in refusing relief because of the newly found powers of the Commission, the court transgressed the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The additional federal claim thus made was timely, since it was raised at the first opportunity. Missouri ex rel. Missouri Ins. Co. v. Gehner, 281 U. S. 313. The petition was denied without opinion. This Court granted certiorari, 280 U. S. 550. We are of opinion that the judgment of the Supreme Court of Missouri must be reversed, because it has denied to the plaintiff due process of law—using that term in its primary sense of an opportunity to be heard and to defend its substantive right.

First. It is plain that the practical effect of the judgment of the Missouri court is to deprive the plaintiff of property without affording it at any time an opportunity to be heard in its defense. The plaintiff asserted an invasion of its substantive right under the Federal Constitution to equality of treatment. Greene v. Louisville & Interurban R. R. Co., 244 U. S. 499; Sioux City Bridge Co. v. Dakota County, 260 U. S. 441. If the allegations of the complaint could be established, the Federal Constitution conferred upon the plaintiff the right to have the assessments abated by 25 per cent. In order to protect its property from being seized in payment of the part of the tax alleged to be unlawful, the plaintiff invoked the appropriate judicial remedy provided by the State. Second Employers' Liability Cases, 223 U. S. 1, 55-57.

Under the settled law of the State, that remedy was the only one available. That a bill in equity is appropriate and that the court has power to grant relief, even under the new construction of the statute dealing with the Tax Commission, is not questioned. And it is held by the state court in this case that no other judicial remedy is open to the plaintiff and that no administrative remedy, other than that before the State Tax Commission, has been provided. But, after the decision in the Laclede case, it would have been entirely futile for the plaintiff to apply to the Commission. That body had persistently refused to entertain such applications; and the Supreme Court of the State had supported it in its refusal. Thus, until June 29, 1929, when the opinion in the case at bar was delivered, the Tax Commission could not, because of the rule of the Laclede case, grant the relief to which the plaintiff was entitled on the facts alleged. After June 29, 1929, the Commission could not grant such relief to this plaintiff because, under the decision of the court in this case, the time in which the Commission could act had long expired. Obviously, therefore, at no time did the State provide to the plaintiff an administrative remedy against the alleged illegal tax; and in invoking the appropriate judicial remedy, the plaintiff did not omit to comply with any existing condition precedent. Montana National Bank v. Yellowstone County, 276 U. S. 499, 505.

If the judgment is permitted to stand, deprivation of plaintiff's property is accomplished without its ever having had an opportunity to defend against the exaction. The state court refused to hear the plaintiff's complaint and denied it relief, not because of lack of power or because of any demerit in the complaint, but because, assuming power and merit, the plaintiff did not first seek an administrative remedy which, in fact, was never available and which is not now open to it. Thus, by denying to it the only remedy ever available for the enforcement of its right to prevent the seizure of its property, the judgment deprives the plaintiff of its property.

Second. If the result above stated were attained by an exercise of the State's legislative power, the transgression of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment would be obvious. Ettor v. Tacoma, 228 U. S. 148. The violation is none the less clear when that result is accomplished by the state judiciary in the course of construing an otherwise valid (First National Bank of Greeley v. Weld County, 264 U. S. 450) state statute. The federal guaranty of due process extends to state action through its judicial as well as through its legislative, executive or administrative branch of government.

It is true that the courts of a State have the supreme power to interpret and declare the written and unwritten laws of the State; that this Court's power to review decisions of state courts is limited to their decisions on federal questions; and that the mere fact that a state court has rendered an erroneous decision on a question of state law, or has overruled principles or doctrines established by previous decisions on which a party relied, does not give rise to a claim under the Fourteenth Amendment or otherwise confer appellate jurisdiction on this Court.

But our decision in the case at bar is not based on the ground that there has been a retrospective denial of the existence of any right or a retroactive change in the law of remedies. We are not now concerned with the rights of the plaintiff on the merits, although it may be observed that the plaintiff's claim is one arising under the Federal Constitution and, consequently, one on which the opinion of the state court is not final; or with the accuracy of the state court's construction of the statute in either the Laclede case or in the case at bar. Our present concern is solely with the question whether the plaintiff has been accorded due process in the primary sense,—whether it has had an opportunity to present its case and be heard in its support. Undoubtedly, the state court had the power to construe the statute dealing with the State Tax Commission; and to reexamine and overrule the Laclede case. Neither of these matters raises a federal question; neither is subject to our review. But, while it is for the state courts to determine the adjective as well as the substantive law of the State, they must, in so doing, accord the parties due process of law. Whether acting through its judiciary or through its legislature, a State may not deprive a person of all existing remedies for the enforcement of a right, which the State has no power to destroy, unless there is, or was, afforded to him some real opportunity to protect it. Compare Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Newport, 247 U.S. 464, 475-6. * * *

Reversed.

MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS did not hear the argument and took no part in the decision of this case.

NOTES

1. "The vice which underlies the entire argument of the plaintiff in error arises from a failure to distinguish between the essentials of due process of law under the Fourteenth Amendment, and matters which may or may not be essential under the terms of a state assessing or taxing law. The two are neither correlative or coterminous. The first, due process of law, must be found in the state statute, and cannot be departed from without violating the Constitution of the United States. The other depends on the lawmaking power of the state, and, as it is solely the result of such authority, may vary or change as the legislative will of the state sees fit to ordain. It follows that, to determine the existence of the one, due process of law, is the final province of this court, whilst the ascertainment of the other, that is, what is merely essential under the state statute, is a state question within the final jurisdiction of courts of last resort of the several states. When, then, a state court decides that a particular formality was or was not essential under the state statute, such decision presents no federal question, providing always the statute as thus construed does not violate the Constitution of the United States, by depriving of property without due process of law. This paramount requirement being fulfilled, as to other matters the state interpretation of its own law is controlling and decisive." Mr. Justice White in Castillo v. McConnico, 168 U.S. 674, 683, 42 L. ed. 622, 18 Sup. Ct. 229 (1898).

Compare with the above the following dicta: "Whenever a wrong judgment is entered against a defendant his property is taken when it should not have been, but whatever the ground may be, if the mistake is not so gross as to be impossible in a rational administration of justice, it is no more than the imperfection of man, not a denial of constitutional rights." Mr. Justice Holmes in Chicago Life Ins. Co. v. Cherry, 244 U. S. 25, 30, 61 L. ed. 966, 37 Sup. Ct. 492 (1917).

2. It is the general rule that a taxpayer who fails to take advantage of the statutory opportunity afforded him for a hearing cannot thereafter object to the legality of an assessment. Nor is it essential to due process of law that a taxpayer be given notice and hearing before the value of his property is originally assessed, if he is granted the right to be heard before the valuation is finally determined. Chicago, M., St. P. & P. R. Co. v. Risty, 276 U. S. 567, 72 L. ed. 703, 48 Sup. Ct. 396 (1928); McGregor v. Hogan, 263 U. S. 234, 68 L. ed. 282, 44 Sup. Ct. 50 (1923); Winona & St. P. Land Co. v. Minnesota, 159 U. S. 526, 40 L. ed. 247, 16 Sup. Ct. 83 (1895). See also Stason, Judicial Review of Tax Errors—Effect of Failure to Resort to Administrative Remedies, 28 Mich. L. Rev. 637 (1930).

WONG WING v. UNITED STATES.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1896.
163 U. S. 228, 41 L. ed. 140, 16 Sup. Ct. 977.

On July 15, 1892, Wong Wing, Lee Poy, Lee Yon Tong and Chan Wah Dong were brought before John Graves, a commissioner of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Michigan, by virtue of a warrant issued upon the complaint of T. E. McDonough, deputy collector of customs, upon a charge of being Chinese persons unlawfully within the United States and not entitled to remain within the same. The commissioner found that said persons were unlawfully within the United States and not entitled to remain within the same, and he adjudged that they be imprisoned at hard labor at and in the Detroit house of correction for a period of sixty days from and including the day of commitment, and that at the expiration of said time they be removed from the United States to China.

A writ of habeas corpus was sued out of the Circuit Court of the United States, directed to Joseph Nicholson, superintendent of the Detroit house of correction, alleging that said persons were by him unlawfully detained; the superintendent made a return setting up the action of the commissioner; and, after argument, the writ of habeas corpus was discharged, and the prisoners were remanded to the custody of said Nicholson, to serve out their original sentence. From this decision an appeal was taken to this Court.

MR. JUSTICE SHIRAS, after stating the case, delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

The question now presented is whether Congress can promote its policy in respect to Chinese persons by adding to its provisions for their exclusion and expulsion punishment by imprisonment at hard labor, to be inflicted by the judgment of any justice, judge or commissioner of the United States, without a trial by jury. In other words, we have to consider the meaning and validity of the fourth section of the act of

May 5, 1892, in the following words: "That any such Chinese person, or person of Chinese descent, convicted and adjudged to be not lawfully entitled to be and remain in the United States, shall be imprisoned at hard labor for a period of not exceeding one year, and thereafter removed from the United States, as hereinbefore provided."

We think it clear that detention, or temporary confinement, as part of the means necessary to give effect to the provisions for the exclusion or expulsion of aliens would be valid. Proceedings to exclude or expel would be vain if those accused could not be held in custody pending the inquiry into their true character and while arrangements were being made for their deportation. Detention is a usual feature of every case of arrest on a criminal charge, even when an innocent person is wrongfully accused; but it is not imprisonment in a legal sense.

So, too, we think it would be plainly competent for Congress to declare the act of an alien in remaining unlawfully within the United States to be an offence, punishable by fine or imprisonment, if such offence were to be established by a judicial trial.

But the evident meaning of the section in question, and no other is claimed for it by the counsel for the Government, is that the detention provided for is an imprisonment at hard labor, which is to be undergone before the sentence of deportation is to be carried into effect, and that such imprisonment is to be adjudged against the accused by a justice, judge or commissioner, upon a summary hearing. Thus construed, the fourth section comes before this court for the first time for consideration as to its validity. * * *

Our views, upon the question thus specifically pressed upon our attention, may be briefly expressed thus: We regard it as settled by our previous decisions that the United States can, as a matter of public policy, by Congressional enactment, forbid aliens or classes of aliens from coming within their borders, and expel aliens or classes of aliens from their territory, and can, in order to make effectual such decree of exclusion or expulsion, devolve the power and duty of identifying and arresting the persons included in such decree, and causing their deportation, upon executive or subordinate officials.

But when Congress sees fit to further promote such a policy by subjecting the persons of such aliens to infamous punishment at hard labor, or by confiscating their property, we think such legislation, to be valid, must provide for a judicial trial to establish the guilt of the accused.

No limits can be put by the courts upon the power of Congress to protect, by summary methods, the country from the advent of aliens whose race or habits render them undesirable as citizens, or to expel such if they have already found their way into our land and unlawfully remain therein. But to declare unlawful residence within the country to be an infamous crime, punishable by deprivation of liberty and property, would be to pass out of the sphere of constitutional legislation, unless provision were made that the fact of guilt should first be established by a judicial trial. It is not consistent with the theory of our government that the legislature should, after having defined an offense as an infamous crime, find the fact of guilt and adjudge the punishment by one of its own agents. * * *

Our conclusion is that the commissioner, in sentencing the appellants to imprisonment at hard labor at and in the Detroit house of correction, acted without jurisdiction, and that the Circuit Court erred in not discharging the prisoners from such imprisonment, without prejudice to their detention according to the law for deportation.

[Mr. JUSTICE FIELD concurred in part and dissented in part.]

NOTE

1. An offense punishable by imprisonment at hard labor is an infamous crime within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment, and the trial of a defendant in a federal court for such a crime without indictment by a grand jury violates the guaranty of that Amendment. Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S. 417, 29 L. ed. 89, 5 Sup. Ct. 935 (1885). It is such if the crime is punishable by imprisonment in a state prison or penitentiary, with or without hard labor. Mackin v. United States, 117 U. S. 348, 29 L. ed. 909, 6 Sup. Ct. 777 (1886). The nature of the crime is still the same if the punishment is by imprisonment at hard labor in a workhouse. United States v. Moreland, 258 U. S. 433, 66 L. ed. 700, 42 Sup. Ct. 368, 24 A. L. R. 992 (1922).

OCEANIC STEAM NAVIGATION CO. v. STRANAHAN.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1909.
214 U. S. 320, 53 L. ed. 1013, 29 Sup. Ct. 671.

Mr. JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

The steamship company sought the recovery of money paid to the collector of customs of the port of New York which was exacted by that official under an order of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. * * *

Both the Secretary and the collector were expressly authorized by law, the one to impose and the other to collect the exactions which were made. The only question, therefore, is whether the power conferred upon the named officials was consistent with the Constitution. The provision under which the officials acted is § 9 of the act of March 3, 1903, entitled, "An Act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States." c. 1012, 32 Stat. 1213. * * *

Section 9, * * * is as follows:

"That it shall be unlawful for any person, including any transportation company other than railway lines entering the United States from foreign contiguous territory, or the owner, master, agent, or consignee of any vessel, to bring to the United States any alien afflicted with a loathsome or with a dangerous contagious disease; and it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury (Secretary of Commerce and Labor) that any alien so brought to the United States was afflicted with such a disease at the time of foreign embarkation, and that the existence of such disease might have been detected by means of a competent medical examination at such time, such person or transportation company, or the master, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel, shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the port of arrival is located the sum of one hundred dollars for each and every violation of the provisions of this section; and no vessel shall be granted clearance papers while any such fine imposed upon it remains unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted." * * *

We think it is also certain that the power thus lodged in the Secretary of Commerce and Labor was intended to be exclusive, and that its exertion was authorized as the result of the probative force attributed to the official medical examination for which the statute provides, and that the power to refuse clearance to vessels was lodged for the express purpose of causing both the imposition of the exaction and its collection to be acts of administrative competency, not requiring a resort to judicial power for their enforcement. * * *

1. It is insisted that, however complete may be the power of Congress to legislate concerning the exclusion of aliens and to entrust the enforcement of legislation of that character to administrative officers, nevertheless the particular legislation here in question is repugnant to the Constitution because it defines a criminal offense and authorizes a purely administrative official to determine whether the defined crime has been committed, and, if so, to inflict punishment. Conclusive support for the legal proposition upon which this contention must rest, it is insisted, results from the ruling in Wong Wing v. United States, 163 U. S. 228. * * *

But in so far as the case of Wong Wing held that the trial and punishment for an infamous offense was not an administrative but a judicial function, it is wholly inapposite to this case, since, on the face of the section which authorizes the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to impose the exaction which is complained of, it is apparent that it does not purport to define and punish an infamous crime, or indeed any criminal offense whatever. * * * The sole purpose of § 9 was to impose a penalty, based upon the medical examination for which the statute provided, thus tending, by the avoidance of controversy and delay, to secure the efficient performance by the steamship company of the duty to examine in the foreign country, before embarkation, and thereby aid in carrying out the policy of Congress to exclude from the United States aliens afflicted with loathsome or dangerous contagious diseases as defined in the act. The contention that because the exaction which the statute authorizes the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to impose is a penalty, therefore its enforcement is necessarily governed by the rules controlling in the prosecution of criminal offenses, is clearly without merit, and is not open to discussion. Hepner v. United States, 213 U. S. 103.

2. But it is argued that even though it be conceded that Congress may in some cases impose penalties for the violation of a statutory duty and provide for their enforcement by civil suit instead of by criminal prosecution, as held in Hepner v. United States, nevertheless that doctrine does not warrant the conclusion that a penalty may be authorized, and its collection committed to an administrative officer without the necessity of resorting to the judicial power. In all cases of penalty or punishment, it is contended, enforcement must depend upon the exertion of judicial power, either by civil or criminal process, since the distinction between judicial and administrative functions cannot be preserved consistently with the recognition of an administrative power to enforce a penalty without resort to judicial authority. But the proposition magnifies the judicial to the detriment of all other departments of the government, disregards many previous adjudications of this Court and ignores practices often manifested and hitherto deemed to be free from any possible constitutional question. * * *

3. It is urged that the fines which constituted the exactions were repugnant to the Fifth Amendment, because amounting to a taking of property without due process of law, since, as asserted, the fines were imposed, in some cases, without any previous notice, and in all cases without any adequate notice or opportunity to defend. Stated in the briefest form, the findings below show that on the arrival of a vessel, if the examining medical officers discovered that an immigrant was afflicted with one of the prohibited diseases, the owner of the vessel was notified of the fact, and, indeed, that the steamship company had at the place where the examination was made what is known as a landing agent, whose business it was to keep informed as to the result of medical examinations, and to know when an immigrant was detained by the medical officers because afflicted with a prohibited disease. * * *

It is not denied that there was full power in Congress to provide for the examination of the alien by medical officers and to attach conclusive effect to the result of that examination for the purposes of exclusion or deportation. But it is said the power to do so does not include the right to make the medical examination conclusive for the purpose of imposing a penalty upon the vessel for the negligent bringing in of an alien. We think the argument rests upon a distinction without a difference. It disregards the purpose which, as we have already pointed out, Congress had in view in the enactment of the provision, that is, the guarding against the danger to arise from the wrongful taking on board of an alien afflicted with a contagious malady, not only to other immigrant passengers, but ultimately it might be to the entire people of the United States, a danger arising from the possible admission of aliens who might contract the contagion during the voyage and yet be entitled to admission because apparently not afflicted with the prohibited disease, owing to the fact that the time had not elapsed for the manifestation of its presence. In effect, all the contentions pressed in argument concerning the repugnancy of the statute to the due process clause really disregarded the complete and absolute power of Congress over the subject with which the statute deals. They mistakenly assume that mere form and not substance may be made by the courts the conclusive test as to the constitutional power of Congress to enact a statute. These conclusions are apparent, we think, since the plenary power of Congress as to the admission of aliens leaves no room for doubt as to its authority to impose the penalty, and its complete administrative control over the granting or refusal of a clearance also leaves no doubt of the right to endow administrative officers with discretion to refuse to perform the administrative act of granting a clearance as a means of enforcing the penalty which there was lawful authority to impose. * * * Affirmed.

UNITED STATES v. JU TOY.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1905.
198 U. S. 253, 49 L. ed. 1040, 25 Sup. Ct. 644.

MR. JUSTICE HOLMES delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case comes here on a certificate from the Circuit Court of Appeals presenting certain questions of law. It appears that the appellee, being detained by the master of the Steamship Doric for return to China, presented a petition for habeas corpus to the District Court, alleging that he was a native-born citizen of the United States, returning after a temporary departure, and was denied permission to land by the collector of the port of San Francisco. It also appears from the petition that he took an appeal from the denial, and that the decision was affirmed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. No further grounds are stated. The writ issued and the United States made return, and answered showing all the proceedings before the Department, which are not denied to have been in regular form, and setting forth all of the evidence and the orders made. The answer also denied the allegations of the petition. Motions to dismiss the writ were made on the grounds that the decision of the Secretary was conclusive and that no abuse of authority was shown. These were denied, and the District Court decided seemingly on new evidence, subject to exceptions, that Ju Toy was a native-born citizen of the United States. An appeal was taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals alleging errors the nature of which has been indicated. Thereupon the latter court certified the following questions:

[(1) Should a District Court issue a writ of habeas corpus in an exclusion case where the detention is claimed to be unlawful solely because of alleged error of the administrative officers in deciding the disputed question of birth in and consequent citizenship of the United States?

(2) If yes, should the District Court give a new or further hearing upon the evidence offered? or,

(3) Should the District Court "treat the finding and action of such executive officers upon the question of citizenship and other questions of fact as having been made by a tribunal authorized to decide the same and as final and conclusive unless it be made affirmatively to appear that such officers, in the case submitted to them, abused the discretion vested in them or in some other way in hearing and determining the same committed prejudicial error?"

We assume in what we have to say, as the questions assume, that no abuse of authority of any kind is alleged. * * *

The broad question is presented whether or not the decision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is conclusive. It was held in United States v. Sing Tuck, 194 U. S. 161, 167, that the act of August 18, 1894, c. 301, § 1, 28 Stat. 372, 390, purported to make it so, but whether the statute could have that effect constitutionally was left untouched, except by a reference to cases where an opinion already had been expressed. To quote the latest first, in The Japanese Immigrant Case (Yamataya v. Fisher), 189 U. S. 86, 97, it was said: "That Congress may exclude aliens of a particular race from the United States; prescribe the terms and conditions upon which certain classes of aliens may come to this country; establish regulations for sending out of the country such aliens as come here in violation of law; and commit the enforcement of such provisions, conditions and regulations exclusively to executive officers, without judicial intervention, are principles firmly established by the decisions of this court." See also Turner v. Williams, 194 U. S. 279, 290, 291; Chin Bak Kan v. United States, 186 U. S. 193, 200. In Fok Young Yo v. United States, 185 U. S. 296, 304, 305, it was held that the decision of the collector of customs on the right of transit across the territory of the United States was conclusive, and, still more to the point, in Lem Moon Sing v. United States, 158 U. S. 538, where the petitioner for habeas corpus alleged facts which, if true, gave him a right to enter and remain in the country, it was held that the decision of the collector was final as to whether or not he belonged to the privileged class.

It is true that it may be argued that these cases are not directly conclusive of the point now under decision. It may be said that the parties concerned were aliens, and that although they alleged absolute rights, and facts which it was contended went to the jurisdiction of the officer making the decision, still their rights were only treaty or statutory rights, and therefore were subject to the implied qualification imposed by the later statute, which made the decision of the collector with regard to them final. The meaning of the cases and the language which we have quoted is not satisfied by so narrow an interpretation, but we do not delay upon them. They can be read.

It is established, as we have said, that the act purports to make the decision of the Department final, whatever the ground on which the right to enter the country is claimed—as well when it is citizenship as when it is domicil and the belonging to a class excepted from the exclusion acts. United States v. Sing Tuck, 194 U. S. 161, 167; Lem Moon Sing v. United States, 158 U. S. 538, 546, 547. * * *

The petitioner, although physically within our boundaries, is to be regarded as if he had been stopped at the limit of our jurisdiction and kept there while his right to enter was under debate. If, for the purpose of argument, we assume that the Fifth Amendment applies to him and that to deny entrance to a citizen is to deprive him of liberty, we nevertheless are of opinion that with regard to him due process of law does not require a judicial trial. That is the result of the cases which we have cited and the almost necessary result of the power of Congress to pass exclusion laws. That the decision may be intrusted to an executive officer and that his decision is due process of law was affirmed and explained in Nishimura Ekiu v. United States, 142 U. S. 651, 660, and in Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698, 713, before the authorities to which we already have referred. * * *

We are of opinion that the first question should be answered, no; that the third question should be answered, yes, with the result that the second question should be answered that the writ should be dismissed, as it should have been dismissed in this case. It will be so certified.

[MR. JUSTICE BREWER delivered a dissenting opinion, in which MR. JUSTICE PECKHAM concurred. MR. JUSTICE DAY also dissented.]

NOTE

1. Since authority to exclude from the country depends on alienage, the holding of the Ju Toy case makes it possible for an administrative agency, by passing finally on the fact of citizenship, to determine its own jurisdiction. Courts have no power to interfere unless there was either a denial of a fair hearing, Chin Yow v. United States, 208 U. S. 8, 52 L. ed. 369, 28 Sup. Ct. 201 (1908), or the finding was not supported by evidence, American School of Magnetic Healing v. McAnnulty, 187 U. S. 94, 47 L. ed. 90, 23 Sup. Ct. 33 (1902), or there was an application of an erroneous rule of law, Gegiow v. Uhl, 239 U. S. 3, 60 L. ed. 114, 36 Sup. Ct. 2 (1915).

In Ng Fung Ho v. White, 259 U. S. 276, 66 L. ed. 938, 42 Sup. Ct. 492 (1922) the question was whether the claim of citizenship by a resident, supported by evidence both before the immigration officer and upon petition for a writ of habeas corpus, which is sufficient, if believed, to justify a finding of citizenship, entitles him to a judicial trial of this claim. In answering this question in the affirmative the court pointed out that "to deport one who so claims to be a citizen obviously deprives him of liberty" and "may result also in loss of both property and life; or of all that makes life worth living." The court continued: "Against the danger of such deprivation, without the sanction afforded by judicial proceedings, the Fifth Amendment affords protection in its guarantee of due process of law. The difference in security of judicial over administrative action has been adverted to by this court." While deportation without a fair hearing or on charges unsupported by any evidence is a denial of due process of law which may be corrected on habeas corpus, such want of due process is not established by showing merely that the decision is erroneous, Chin Yow v. United States, supra, or that incompetent evidence was received and considered. United States ex rel. Tisi v. Tod, 264 U. S. 131, 68

L. ed. 590, 44 Sup. Ct. 260 (1924). See, generally, Van Vleck, The Administrative Control of Aliens (1932); Konvitz, The Alien and the Asiatic in American Law (1946).

LAWTON v. STEELE.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1894.
152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. 499.

[In the Supreme Court of the county of Jefferson, New York, the plaintiff sued to recover the value of fifteen fish nets belonging to him, destroyed by defendant Steele. The facts were undisputed, that Steele acted in his official capacity as a game and fish protector, that he found most of the nets set to catch fish and the rest on the shore having recently been used for the same purpose. The defendant justified under a game and fish statute which authorized the summary destruction of nets used in illegal fishing. The plaintiff replied that if the statute purported to justify Steele's action it was unconstitutional. On a verdict of $216, plaintiff was given judgment. On appeal to the General Term this judgment was reversed, and upon further appeal the Court of Appeals ordered a judgment for the defendant. Now on writ of error:]

MR. JUSTICE BROWN delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

The main, and only real difficulty connected with the act in question is in its declaration that any net, etc., maintained in violation of any law for the protection of fisheries, is to be treated as a public nuisance, "and may be abated and summarily destroyed." * * * The legislature, however, undoubtedly possessed the power not only to prohibit fishing by nets in these waters, but to make it a criminal offence, and to take such measures as were reasonable and necessary to prevent such offences in the future. * * *

In this case there can be no doubt of the right of the legislature to authorize judicial proceedings to be taken for the condemnation of the nets in question, and their sale or destruction by process of law. Congress has assumed this power in a large number of cases, by authorizing the condemnation of property which has been made use of for the purpose of defrauding the revenue. Examples of this are vessels illegally registered or owned, or employed in smuggling or other illegal traffic; distilleries or breweries illegally carried on or operated, and buildings standing upon or near the boundary line between the United States and another country, and used as depots for smuggling goods. In all these cases, however, the forfeiture was decreed by judicial proceeding. But where the property is of little value, and its use for the illegal purpose is clear, the legislature may declare it to be a nuisance, and subject to summary abatement. Instances of this are the power to kill diseased cattle; to pull down houses in the path of conflagrations; the destruction of decayed fruit or fish or unwholesome meats, or infected clothing, obscene books or pictures, or instruments which can only be used for illegal purposes. While the legislature has no right arbitrarily to declare that to be a nuisance which is clearly not so, a good deal must be left to its discretion in that regard, and if the object to be accomplished is conducive to the public interests, it may exercise a large liberty of choice in the means employed. * * *

It is not easy to draw the line between cases where property illegally used may be destroyed summarily and where judicial proceedings are necessary for its condemnation. If the property were of great value, as, for instance, if it were a vessel employed for smuggling or other illegal purposes, it would be putting a dangerous power in the hands of a custom officer to permit him to sell or destroy it as a public nuisance, and the owner would have good reason to complain of such act as depriving him of his property without due process of law. But where the property is of trifling value, and its destruction is necessary to effect the object of a certain statute, we think it is within the power of the legislature to order its summary abatement. * * *

The value of the nets in question was but $15 apiece. The cost of condemning one (and the use of one is as illegal as the use of a dozen), by judicial proceedings, would largely exceed the value of the net, and doubtless the state would, in many cases, be deterred from executing the law by the expense. They could only be removed from the water with difficulty, and were liable to injury in the process of removal. The object of the law is undoubtedly a beneficent one, and the state ought not to be hampered in its enforcement by the application of constitutional provisions which are intended for the protection of substantial rights of property. It is evident that the efficacy of this statute would be very seriously impaired by requiring every net illegally used to be carefully taken from the water, carried before a court or magistrate, notice of the seizure to be given by publication, and regular judicial proceedings to be instituted for its condemnation. * * *

Nor is a person whose property is seized under the act in question without his legal remedy. If in fact his property has been used in violation of the act, he has no just reason to complain; if not, he may replevy his nets from the officer seizing them, or, if they have been destroyed, may have his action for their value. In such cases the burden would be upon the defendant to prove a justification under the statute. * * *

It is said, however, that the nets are not in themselves a nuisance, but are perfectly lawful acts of manufacture, and are ordinarily used for a lawful purpose. This is, however, by no means a conclusive answer. Many articles, such, for instance, as cards, dice, and other articles used for gambling purposes, are perfectly harmless in themselves, but may become nuisances by being put to an illegal use, and in such cases fall within the ban of the law and may be summarily destroyed. * * *

The power of the legislature to declare that which is perfectly innocent in itself to be unlawful is beyond question (People v. West, 106 N. Y. 293), and in such case the legislature may annex to the prohibited act all the incidents of a criminal offence, including the destruction of property denounced by it as a public nuisance. * * *

Judgment Affirmed.

[CHIEF JUSTICE FULLER delivered a dissenting opinion, concurred in by JUSTICES FIELD and BREWER.]

NOTES

1. Where statutes authorizing the summary seizure and destruction of property used in violation of law or dangerous to the public health and safety fail to provide for a preliminary hearing, due process requires that the owner be afforded a subsequent judicial determination of the legality of the seizure and destruction, as well as compensation for his loss, either from the public or the officials responsible therefor, in the event such action was illegal. North American Cold Storage Co. v. Chicago, 211 U. S. 306, 53 L. ed. 195, 29 Sup. Ct. 101, 15 Ann. Cas. 276 (1908). Statutes in many states have provided for compensation to the owners of property thus destroyed. See the annotations in 12 A. L. R. 734 (1921), and 67 A. L. R. 208 (1930).

2. The property rights of an innocent owner may be forfeited if his property is used in violating the law by a person who has been entrusted by the owner with possession thereof. This principle has been applied to sustain statutes providing for forfeitures of vehicles, vessels, boats and other property used as a means of violating statutes prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors and of the federal revenue laws. See J. W. Goldsmith, Jr. v. Grant Co. v. United States, 254 U. S. 505, 65 L. ed. 376, 41 Sup. Ct. 189 (1921), where the court said: "In breaches of revenue provisions, some forms of property are facilities, and therefore it may be said, that Congress interposes the care and responsibility of their owners in aid of the prohibitions of the law and its punitive provisions, by ascribing to the property a certain personality, a power of complicity and guilt in the wrong. * * * It is the illegal use that is the material consideration, it is that which works the forfeiture, the guilt or innocence of its owner being accidental."

3. It has been previously noted that due process of law does not require judicial process in administrative procedure. The power of legislative bodies to delegate authority to administrative officers and agencies to find facts and apply the law to these facts has long been recognized. Finality may even be given to certain administrative findings of fact. However, administrative determinations are held to violate due process when they exceed the statutory authority of the agency, or are not supported by evidence, or the agency has not afforded the litigant due notice and an opportunity to be heard, or has not been fair and impartial in its investigatory procedure. In Morgan v. United States, 304 U. S. 1, 14-15, 82 L. ed. 1129, 58 Sup. Ct. 773 (1938), Mr. Chief Justice Hughes, speaking for the court, said: "The vast expansion in this field of administrative regulation in response to the pressure of social needs is made possible under our system by adherence to the basic principles that the legislature shall appropriately determine the standards of administrative action and that in administrative proceedings of a quasi-judicial character the liberty and property of the citizen shall be protected by the rudimentary requirements of fair play. These demand a 'fair and open hearing,'—essential alike to the legal validity of the administrative regulation and to the maintenance of public confidence in the value and soundness of this important governmental process."

The Federal Administrative Procedure Act, enacted in 1946 with the objective of improving the administration of justice by prescribing fair administrative procedure, establishes standards of procedure in federal agencies and also standards of judicial review, except where statutes preclude judicial review or agency action is by law committed to agency discretion. Since constitutional problems involved in administrative adjudication and enforcement are dealt with in courses in Administrative Law, this case-book omits further case materials in this field.

HURTADO v. CALIFORNIA.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1884.
110 U. S. 516, 28 L. ed. 232, 4 Sup. Ct. 111.

[The Constitution of California of 1879 provided: "Offenses heretofore required to be prosecuted by indictment shall be prosecuted by information, after examination and commitment by a magistrate, or by indictment with or without such examination and commitment, as may be prescribed by law." A statute of 1880 provided that when a committing magistrate upon giving an arrested person a preliminary examination should find sufficient cause to believe the person guilty of a public offense he should commit him to custody or bail, as the case might be, not for examination before a grand jury as theretofore but to stand trial, and the statute declared, "it shall be the duty of the district attorney, within thirty days thereafter, to file in the superior court of the county in which the offense is triable an information charging the defendant with such offense." By this method of accusation Hurtado was prosecuted and convicted on a charge of murder and given a death sentence. The Supreme Court of California affirmed the judgment and this writ of error was taken.]

MR. JUSTICE MATTHEWS delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

It is claimed on behalf of the prisoner that the conviction and sentence are void, on the ground that they are repugnant to that clause of the Fourteenth Article of Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which is in these words:

"Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."

The proposition of law we are asked to affirm is that an indictment or presentment by a grand jury, as known to the common law of England, is essential to that "due process of law," when applied to prosecutions for felonies, which is secured and guaranteed by this provision of the Constitution of the United States, and which accordingly it is forbidden to the states respectively to dispense with in the administration of criminal law. * * *

It is maintained on behalf of the plaintiff in error that the phrase "due process of law" is equivalent to "law of the land," as found in the 29th chapter of Magna Charta; that by immemorial usage it has acquired a fixed, definite, and technical meaning; that it refers to and includes, not only the general principles of public liberty and private right, which lie at the foundation of all free government, but the very institutions which, venerable by time and custom, have been tried by experience and found fit and necessary for the preservation of those principles, and which, having been the birthright and inheritance of every English subject, crossed the Atlantic with the colonists and were transplanted and established in the fundamental laws of the state; that, having been originally introduced into the Constitution of the United States as a limitation upon the powers of the government, brought into being by that instrument, it has now been added as an additional security to the individual against oppression by the states themselves; that one of these institutions is that of the grand jury, an indictment or presentment by which against the accused in cases of alleged felonies is an essential part of due process of law, in order that he may not be harassed or destroyed by prosecutions founded only upon private malice or popular fury.

This view is certainly supported by the authority of the great name of Chief Justice Shaw and of the court in which he presided, which, in Jones v. Robbins, 8 Gray, 329, decided that the 12th article of the Bill of Rights of Massachusetts, a transcript of Magna Charta in this respect, made an indictment or presentment of a grand jury essential to the validity of a conviction in cases of prosecutions for felonies. In delivering the opinion of the court in that case, Merrick, J., alone dissenting, the Chief Justice said:

"The right of individual citizens to be secure from an open and public accusation of crime, and from the trouble, expense, and anxiety of a public trial before a probable cause is established by the presentment and indictment of a grand jury, in case of high offences, is justly regarded as one of the securities to the innocent against hasty, malicious, and oppressive public prosecutions, and as one of the ancient immunities and privileges of English liberty." * * *

[After commenting at length upon Coke's discussion of "the law of the land" clause of Magna Charta, referred to by Shaw, C. J., the opinion continues:]

Mr. Reeve, in 2 History of Eng. Law, 43 translates the phrase, nisi per legale iudicium parium suorum vel per legem terre, "but by the judgment of his peers, or by some other legal process or proceeding adapted by the law to the nature of the case."

Chancellor Kent, 2 Com. 13, adopts this mode of construing the phrase. Quoting the language of Magna Charta, and referring to Lord Coke's comment upon it, he says: "The better and larger definition of due process of law is that it means law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice."

This accords with what is said in Westervelt v. Gregg, 12 N. Y. 202, by Denio, J., p. 212: "The provision was designed to protect the citizen against all mere acts of power, whether flowing from the legislative or executive branches of the government."

The principal and true meaning of the phrase has never been more tersely or accurately stated than by Mr. Justice Johnson, in Bank of Columbia v. Okely, 4 Wheat. 235-244: "As to the words from Magna Charta, incorporated into the Constitution of Maryland, after volumes spoken and written with a view to their exposition, the good sense of mankind has at last settled down to this: that they were intended to secure the individual from the arbitrary exercise of the powers of government, unrestrained by the established principles of private right and distributive justice." * * *

The Constitution of the United States was ordained, it is true, by descendants of Englishmen, who inherited the traditions of English law and history; but it was made for an undefined and expanding future, and for a people gathered and to be gathered from many nations and of many tongues. And while we take just pride in the principles and institutions of the common law, we are not to forget that in lands where other systems of jurisprudence prevail, the ideas and processes of civil justice are also not unknown. Due process of law, in spite of the absolutism of continental governments, is not alien to that code which survived the Roman Empire as the foundation of modern civilization in Europe, and which has given us that fundamental maxim of distributive justice,—sum cuique tribuere. There is nothing in Magna Charta, rightly construed as a broad charter of public right and law, which ought to exclude the best ideas of all systems and of every age; and as it was the characteristic principle of the common law to draw its inspiration from every fountain of justice, we are not to assume that the sources of its supply have been exhausted. On the contrary, we should expect that the new and various experiences of our own situation and system will mould and shape it into new and not less useful forms.

The concessions of Magna Charta were wrung from the king as guarantees against the oppressions and usurpations of his prerogative. It did not enter into the minds of the barons to provide security against their own body or in favor of the Commons by limiting the power of Parliament; so that bills of attainder, ex post facto laws, laws declaring forfeitures of estates, and other arbitrary acts of legislation which occur so frequently in English history, were never regarded as inconsistent with the law of the land; for notwithstanding what was attributed to Lord Coke in Bonham's Case, 8 Rep. 115, 118 a, the omnipotence of Parliament over the common law was absolute, even against common right and reason. The actual and practical security for English liberty against legislative tyranny was the power of a free public opinion represented by the Commons.

In this country written constitutions were deemed essential to protect the rights and liberties of the people against the encroachments of power delegated to their governments, and the provisions of Magna Charta were incorporated into bills of rights. They were limitations upon all the powers of government, legislative as well as executive and judicial.

It necessarily happened, therefore, that as these broad and general maxims of liberty and justice held in our system a different place and performed a different function from their position and office in English constitutional history and law, they would receive and justify a corresponding and more comprehensive interpretation. Applied in England only as guards against executive usurpation and tyranny, here they have become bulwarks also against arbitrary legislation; but, in that application, as it would be incongruous to measure and restrict them by the ancient customary English law, they must be held to guarantee, not particular forms of procedure, but the very substance of individual rights to life, liberty, and property.

Restraints that could be fastened upon executive authority with precision and detail, might prove obstructive and injurious when imposed on the just and necessary discretion of legislative power; and, while in every instance, laws that violated express and specific injunctions and prohibitions might, without embarrassment, be judicially declared to be void, yet, any general principle or maxim, founded on the essential nature of law, as a just and reasonable expression of the public will and of government, as instituted by popular consent and for the general good, can only be applied to cases coming clearly within the scope of its spirit and purpose, and not to legislative provisions merely establishing forms and modes of attainment. Such regulations, to adopt a sentence of Burke's, "may alter the mode and application, but have no power over the substance of original justice."

* * *

We are to construe this phrase in the Fourteenth Amendment by the usus loquendi of the Constitution itself. The same words are contained in the Fifth Amendment. That article makes specific and express provision for perpetuating the institution of the grand jury, so far as relates to prosecutions for the more aggravated crimes under the laws of the United States. It declares that:

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall he be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself." [It then immediately adds:] "Nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."

According to a recognized canon of interpretation, especially applicable to formal and solemn instruments of constitutional law, we are forbidden to assume, without clear reason to the contrary, that any part of this most important Amendment is superfluous. The natural and obvious inference is, that in the sense of the Constitution, "due process of law" was not meant or intended to include, ex vi termini, the institution and procedure of a grand jury in any case. The conclusion is equally irresistible, that when the same phrase was employed in the Fourteenth Amendment to restrain the action of the states, it was used in the same sense and with no greater extent; and that if in the adoption of that Amendment it had been part of its purpose to perpetuate the institution of the grand jury in all the states, it would have embodied, as did the Fifth Amendment, express declarations to that effect. Due process of law in the latter refers to that law of the land which derives its authority from the legislative powers conferred upon Congress by the Constitution of the United States, exercised within the limits therein prescribed, and interpreted according to the principles of the common law. In the Fourteenth Amendment, by parity of reason, it refers to that law of the land in each state which derives its authority from the inherent and reserved powers of the state, exerted within the limits of those fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at the base of all our civil and political institutions, and the greatest security for which resides in the right of the people to make their own laws, and alter them at their pleasure.

* * *

But it is not to be supposed that these legislative powers are absolute and despotic, and that the Amendment prescribing due process of law is too vague and indefinite to operate as a practical restraint. It is not every act, legislative in form, that is law. Law is something more than mere will exerted as an act of power. It must be not a special rule for a particular person or a particular case, but, in the language of Mr. Webster, in his familiar definition, "the general law, a law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial," so "that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities under the protection of the general rules which govern society;" and thus excluding, as not due process of law, acts of attainder, bills of pains and penalties, acts of confiscation, acts reversing judgments, and acts directly transferring one man's estate to another, legislative judgments and decrees, and other similar special, partial, and arbitrary exertions of power under the forms of legislation. Arbitrary power, enforcing its edicts to the injury of the persons and property of its subjects, is not law, whether manifested as the decree of a personal monarch or of an impersonal multitude. And the limitations imposed by our constitutional law upon the action of the governments, both state and national, are essential to the preservation of public and private rights, notwithstanding the representative character of our political institutions. The enforcement of these limitations by judicial process is the device of self-governing communities to protect the rights of individuals and minorities, as well against the power of numbers as against the violence of public agents transcending the limits of lawful authority, even when acting in the name and wielding the force of the government.

* * *

It follows that any legal proceeding enforced by public authority, whether sanctioned by age and custom, or newly devised in the discretion of the legislative power, in furtherance of the general public good, which regards and preserves these principles of liberty and justice, must be held to be due process of law. * * *

Tried by these principles, we are unable to say that the substitution for a presentment or indictment by a grand jury of the proceeding by information, after examination and commitment by a magistrate, certifying to the probable guilt of the defendant, with the right on his part to the aid of counsel, and to the cross-examination of the witnesses produced for the prosecution, is not due process of law. It is, as we have seen, an ancient proceeding at common law, which might include every case of an offence of less grade than a felony, except misprision of treason; and in every circumstance of its administration, as authorized by the statute of California, it carefully considers and guards the substantial interest of the prisoner. It is merely a preliminary proceeding, and can result in no final judgment, except as the consequence of a regular judicial trial, conducted precisely as in cases of indictments. * * *

For these reasons, finding no error therein, the judgment of the Supreme Court of California is

Affirmed.

[Mr. JUSTICE HARLAN delivered a dissenting opinion.]

NOTES

1. The provision of the national Constitution (Art. III, § 2, cl. 3) that in the federal courts "the trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury" has been interpreted to require the common-law number of twelve jurors and conviction only by unanimous verdict. Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 42 L. ed. 1061, 18 Sup. Ct. 620 (1898). The right of trial by jury in criminal prosecutions, guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment, is not a privilege or immunity of national citizenship, and a provision of the Utah Constitution for a jury of eight persons in all criminal trials other than for capital offenses (instead of the twelve required by the court's interpretation of the Sixth Amendment) is not a violation of the due process of law guaranty of the Fourteenth Amendment, the court saying that "trial by jury has never been affirmed to be a necessary requisite of due process of law." Maxwell v. Dow, 176 U. S. 581, 44 L. ed. 597, 20 Sup. Ct. 448 (1900) (criminal case). The right of trial by jury in suits at common law, guaranteed by the Seventh Amendment, is not a privilege or immunity of national citizenship, nor is it protected by the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment against violation by the states. Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. ed. 678 (1876) (civil suit). A trial for felony in the federal courts may be without a jury but "the consent of government counsel and the sanction of the court must be had, in addition to the express and intelligent consent of the defendant." Patton v. United States, 281 U. S. 276, 74 L. ed. 854, 50 Sup. Ct. 253, 70 A. L. R. 263 (1930).

2. "The due process clause does not guarantee to the citizen of a state any particular form or method of state procedure. Under it he may neither claim a right to trial by jury nor a right of appeal. Its requirements are satisfied if he has reasonable notice and reasonable opportunity to be heard and to present his claim or defense, due regard being had to the nature of the proceeding and the character of the rights which may be affected by it." Dohany v. Rogers, 281 U. S. 362, 369, 74 L. ed. 904, 50 Sup. Ct. 299, 68 A. L. R. 434 (1930).

3. In Galloway v. United States, 319 U. S. 372, 87 L. ed. 1458, 63 Sup. Ct. 1077 (1943) the Supreme Court, reaffirming earlier decisions, held (Justices Black, Douglas and Murphy dissenting) that the guaranty of a jury trial in suits at common law, given by the Seventh Amendment, does not deprive the federal courts of the power in a jury case to direct a verdict upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence.

EILENBECKER v. PLYMOUTH COUNTY.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1890.

134 U. S. 31, 33 L. ed. 801, 10 Sup. Ct. 424.

[The statute involved in the case was "Whoever shall erect or establish or continue or use any building, erection or place for [the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquor] shall be deemed guilty of a nuisance, and may be prosecuted and punished accordingly, and upon conviction shall pay a fine of not exceeding $1000 and costs of prosecution, and stand committed until the fine and costs are paid. * * * Any citizen of the county where such nuisance exists, or is kept or maintained, may maintain an action in equity, to abate and perpetually enjoin the same, and any person violating the terms of any injunction granted in such proceeding shall be punished as for contempt, by fine of not less than five hundred nor more than one thousand dollars or by imprisonment in the county jail not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court."]

Appeals from the trial court in the six cases stated in the opinion below being taken to the Supreme Court of Iowa were there treated as one, the judgment of the trial court affirmed and this writ of error taken.]

MR. JUSTICE MILLER delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

The judgment which we are called upon to review is one affirming the judgment of the District Court of Plymouth County in that state. This judgment imposed a fine of five hundred dollars and costs on each of the six plaintiffs in error in this case, and imprisonment in the jail of Plymouth County for a period of three months, but they were to be released from confinement if the fine imposed was paid within thirty days from the date of the judgment.

This sentence was pronounced by the court as a punishment for contempt in refusing to obey a writ of injunction issued by that court, enjoining and restraining each of the defendants from selling, or keeping for sale, any intoxicating liquors, including ale, wine and beer, in Plymouth County, and the sentence was imposed upon a hearing by the court, without a jury, and upon evidence in the form of affidavits.

It appears that on the 11th day of June, 1885, separate petitions in equity were filed in the District Court of Plymouth County against each of these plaintiffs in error, praying that they should be enjoined from selling, or keeping for sale, intoxicating liquors, including ale, wine and beer, in that county. On the 6th of July the court ordered the issue of preliminary injunctions as prayed. On the 7th of July the writs were served on each of the defendants in each proceeding by the sheriff of Plymouth County. On the 24th of October, complaints were filed, alleging that these plaintiffs in error had violated this injunction by selling intoxicating liquors contrary to the law and the terms of the injunction served on them, and asking that they be required to show cause why they should not be punished for contempt of court. A rule was granted accordingly, and the court, having no personal knowledge of the facts charged, ordered that a hearing be had at the next term of the court, upon affidavits; and on the 8th day of March, 1886, it being at the regular term of said District Court, separate trials were had upon evidence in the form of affidavits, by the court without a jury, upon which the plaintiffs were found guilty of a violation of the writs of injunction issued in said cause, and a sentence of fine and imprisonment, as already stated, entered against them. * * *

The contention of these parties is, that they were entitled to a trial by jury on the question as to whether they were guilty or not guilty of the contempt charged upon them, and because they did not have this trial by jury they say that they were deprived of their liberty without due process of law within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

If it has ever been understood that proceedings according to the common law for contempt of court have been subject to the right of trial by jury, we have been unable to find any instance of it. It has always been one of the attributes—one of the powers necessarily incident to a court of justice—that it should have this power of vindicating its dignity, of enforcing its orders, of protecting itself from insult, without the necessity of calling upon a jury to assist it in the exercise of this power. * * *

The [federal] statute, now embodied in § 725 of the Revised Statutes, reads as follows: "The power of the several courts of the United States to issue attachments and inflict summary punishments for contempts of court shall not be construed to extend to any cases except the misbehavior of any person or persons in the presence of the said courts or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice, the misbehavior of any of the officers of the said courts in their official transactions, and the disobedience or resistance by any officer of the said courts, party, juror, witness, or any other person or persons to any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command of the said courts."

It will thus be seen that even in the act of Congress, intended to limit the power of the courts to punish for contempts of its authority by summary proceedings, there is expressly left the power to punish in this summary manner the disobedience of any party, to any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree or command of said court. * * *

So far from any statute on this subject limiting the power of the courts of Iowa, the act of the legislature of that state, authorizing the injunction which these parties are charged with violating, expressly declares that for violating such injunction a person doing so shall be punished for the contempt by a fine of not less than five hundred or more than a thousand dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. So that the proceeding by which the fine and imprisonment imposed upon these parties for contempt in violating the injunction of the court, regularly issued in a suit to which they were parties, is due process of law, and always has been due process of law, and is the process or proceeding by which courts have from time immemorial enforced the execution of their orders and decrees, and cannot be said to deprive the parties of their liberty or property without due process of law.

The counsel for plaintiffs in error seek to evade the force of this reasoning by the proposition that the entire statute under which this injunction was issued is in the nature of a criminal proceeding, and that the contempt of court of which these parties have been found guilty is a crime for the punishment of which they have a right to trial by jury.

We cannot accede to this view of the subject. Whether an attachment for a contempt of court, and the judgment of the court punishing the party for such contempt, is in itself essentially a criminal proceeding or not, we do not find it necessary to decide. We simply hold that, whatever its nature may be, it is an offence against the court and against the administration of justice, for which courts have always had the right to punish the party by summary proceeding and without trial by jury; and that in that sense it is due process of law within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution. We do not suppose that that provision of the Constitution was ever intended to interfere with or abolish the powers of the courts in proceedings for contempt, whether this contempt occurred in the course of a criminal proceeding or of a civil suit. * * *

We think it was within the power of the court of Plymouth County to issue the writs of injunction in these cases, and that the disobedience to them by the plaintiffs in error subjected them to the proceedings for contempt which were had before that court.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Iowa is affirmed.

NOTES

1. Several sections of the National Prohibition Act, repealed by the Twenty-first Amendment, were similar to the Iowa legislation above, except that the action to obtain an injunction might be brought only by an official prosecutor.

Neither in the proceeding to obtain an injunction nor in the contempt proceeding was provision made for jury trial. The act declared any building, boat, vehicle, etc. in which liquor was manufactured, kept, or sold a nuisance and also that any person who should, with intent to effect a sale, carry around on his person any prohibited liquor or who should travel to solicit orders for sale of such liquor was "guilty of a nuisance" and might be enjoined permanently and punished summarily for violation of the injunction. By other sections of the statute these acts were made criminal offenses to be prosecuted by the usual criminal procedure.

2. On topics related to the issues of the principal case see Ralston, Governments by Injunction, 5 Corn. L. Q. 424 (1920); Golding, Constitutional Question Involved in the Abatement and Injunction Sections of the National Prohibition Act, 19 Ill. L. Rev. 71 (1924); Ballantine, Injunctions; Extension of Criminal Equity; Criminal Syndicalism Punishable as Contempt of Court, 13 Cal. L. Rev. 63 (1924), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938) 1331.

POWELL v. ALABAMA.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1932.

287 U. S. 45, 77 L. ed. 158, 53 Sup. Ct. 55, 84 A. L. R. 527.

Certiorari to the Supreme Court of Alabama to review judgments affirming sentences of death based upon convictions of several defendants.

MR. JUSTICE SUTHERLAND delivered the opinion of the Court.

These cases were argued together and submitted for decision as one case.

The petitioners, hereinafter referred to as defendants, are negroes charged with the crime of rape, committed upon the persons of two white girls. The crime is said to have been committed on March 25, 1931, [on a freight train passing through the state, upon which the defendants, the girls and others were riding]. The indictment was returned in a state court of first instance on March 31, and the record recites that on the same day the defendants were arraigned and entered pleas of not guilty. * * *

There was a severance upon the request of the state, and the defendants were tried in three several groups. * * * Each of the three trials was completed within a single day. Under the Alabama statute the punishment for rape is to be fixed by the jury, and in its discretion may be from ten years imprisonment to death. The juries found defendants guilty and imposed the death penalty upon all. The trial court overruled motions for new trials and sentenced the defendants in accordance with the verdicts. The judgments were affirmed by the state supreme court. Chief Justice Anderson thought the defendants had not been accorded a fair trial and strongly dissented. 224 Ala. 524; id. 531; id. 540; 141 So. 215, 195, 201.

In this Court the judgments are assailed upon the grounds that the defendants, and each of them, were denied due process of law * * * in contravention of the Fourteenth Amendment, specifically as follows:

(1) they were not given a fair, impartial and deliberate trial; (2) they were denied the right of counsel, with the accustomed incidents of consultation and opportunity of preparation for trial. * * *

The only one of the assignments which we shall consider is the second, in respect of the denial of counsel. * * *

First. The record shows that immediately upon the return of the indictment defendants were arraigned and pleaded not guilty. Apparently they were not asked whether they had, or were able to employ, counsel, or wished to have counsel appointed; or whether they had friends or relatives who might assist in that regard if communicated with. That it would not have been an idle ceremony to have given the defendants reasonable opportunity to communicate with their families and endeavor to obtain counsel is demonstrated by the fact that, very soon after conviction, able counsel appeared in their behalf. This was pointed out by Chief Justice Anderson in the course of his dissenting opinion. "They were nonresidents," he said, "and had little time or opportunity to get in touch with their families and friends who were scattered throughout two other states, and time has demonstrated that they could or would have been represented by able counsel had a better opportunity been given by a reasonable delay in the trial of the cases, judging from the number and activity of counsel that appeared immediately or shortly after their conviction." 224 Ala., at pp. 554-555; 141 So. 201.

It is hardly necessary to say that, the right to counsel being conceded, a defendant should be afforded a fair opportunity to secure counsel of his own choice. Not only was that not done here, but such designation of counsel as was attempted was either so indefinite or so close upon the trial as to amount to a denial of effective and substantial aid in that regard. * * * [On the morning of the trial, six days after the arraignment, the trial judge in a "casual fashion" appointed Mr. Moody, of the local bar, as counsel, and Mr. Roddy, a nonresident lawyer, volunteered to assist. These two conducted the defense in the trials.]

It thus will be seen that until the very morning of the trial no lawyer had been named or definitely designated to represent the defendants. Prior to that time, the trial judge had "appointed all the members of the bar" for the limited "purpose of arraigning the defendants." * * * The defendants, young, ignorant, illiterate, surrounded by hostile sentiment, haled back and forth under guard of soldiers, charged with an atrocious crime regarded with especial horror in the community where they were to be tried, were thus put in peril of their lives within a few moments after counsel for the first time charged with any degree of responsibility began to represent them.

It is not enough to assume that counsel thus precipitated into the case thought there was no defense, and exercised their best judgment in proceeding to trial without preparation. Neither they nor the court could say what a prompt and thorough-going investigation might disclose as to the facts. No attempt was made to investigate. No opportunity to do so was given. Defendants were immediately hurried to trial. Chief Justice Anderson, after disclaiming any intention to criticize harshly counsel who attempted to represent defendants at the trials, said: "* * * the record indicates that the appearance was rather pro forma than zealous and active. * * *" Under the circumstances disclosed, we hold that defendants were not accorded the right of counsel in any substantial sense. To decide otherwise, would simply be to ignore actualities. * * *

Second. The Constitution of Alabama provides that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to have the assistance of counsel; and a state statute requires the court in a capital case, where the defendant is unable to employ counsel, to appoint counsel for him. The state Supreme Court held that these provisions had not been infringed, and with that holding we are powerless to interfere. The question, however, which it is our duty, and within our power, to decide, is whether the denial of the assistance of counsel contravenes the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution.

If recognition of the right of a defendant charged with a felony to have the aid of counsel depended upon the existence of a similar right at common law as it existed in England when our Constitution was adopted, there would be great difficulty in maintaining it as necessary to due process. Originally, in England, a person charged with treason or felony was denied the aid of counsel, except in respect of legal questions which the accused himself might suggest. At the same time parties in civil cases and persons accused of misdemeanors were entitled to the full assistance of counsel. After the revolution of 1688, the rule was abolished as to treason, but was otherwise steadily adhered to until 1836, when by act of Parliament the full right was granted in respect of felonies generally. 1 Cooley's Const. Lim., 8th ed., 698, et seq., and notes.

An affirmation of the right to the aid of counsel in petty offenses, and its denial in the case of crimes of the gravest character, where such aid is most needed, is so outrageous and so obviously a perversion of all sense of proportion that the rule was constantly, vigorously and sometimes passionately assailed by English statesmen and lawyers. As early as 1758, Blackstone, although recognizing that the rule was settled at common law, denounced it as not in keeping with the rest of the humane treatment of prisoners by the English law. "For upon what face of reason," he says, "can that assistance be denied to save the life of a man, which yet is allowed him in prosecutions for every petty trespass?" 4 Blackstone 355. One of the grounds upon which Lord Coke defended the rule was that in felonies the court itself was counsel for the prisoner, 1 Cooley's Const. Lim., supra. But how can a judge, whose functions are purely judicial, effectively discharge the obligations of counsel for the accused? He can and should see to it that in the proceedings before the court the accused shall be dealt with justly and fairly. He cannot investigate the facts, advise and direct the defense, or participate in those necessary conferences between counsel and accused which sometimes partake of the inviolable character of the confessional. * * *

[Here the opinion quotes from the first constitutions of several states and from statutes enacted either in the colonial or statehood periods to show that quite early in twelve of the original thirteen states] the rule of the English common law, in the respect now under consideration, had been definitely rejected and the right to counsel fully recognized in all criminal prosecutions, save that in one or two instances the right was limited to capital offenses or to the more serious crimes. * * *

One test which has been applied to determine whether due process of law has been accorded in given instances is to ascertain what were the settled usages and modes of proceeding under the common and statute law of England before the Declaration of Independence, subject, however, to the qualification that they be shown not to have been unsuited to the civil and political conditions of our ancestors by having been followed in this country after it became a nation. Lowe v. Kansas, 163 U. S. 81, 85. Compare Murray's Lessee v. Hoboken Land & Improvement Co., 18 How. 272, 276-277; Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 100-101. Plainly, as appears from the foregoing, this test, as thus qualified, has not been met in the present case.

We do not overlook the case of Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, where this Court determined that due process of law does not require an indictment by a grand jury as a prerequisite to prosecution by a state for murder. In support of that conclusion the Court (pp. 534-535) referred to the fact that the Fifth Amendment, in addition to containing the due process of law clause, provides in explicit terms that "No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, * * *", and said that since no part of this important amendment could be regarded as superfluous, the obvious inference is that in the sense of the Constitution due process of law was not intended to include, ex vi termini, the institution and procedure of a grand jury in any case; and that the same phrase, employed in the Fourteenth Amendment to restrain the action of the states, was to be interpreted as having been used in the same sense and with no greater extent; and that if it had been the purpose of that Amendment to perpetuate the institution of the grand jury in the states, it would have embodied, as did the Fifth Amendment, an express declaration to that effect.

The Sixth Amendment, in terms, provides that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right "to have the assistance of counsel for his defense." In the face of the reasoning of the Hurtado case, if it stood alone, it would be difficult to justify the conclusion that the right to counsel, being thus specifically granted by the Sixth Amendment, was also within the intendment of the due process of law clause. But the Hurtado case does not stand alone. In the later case of Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 241, this Court held that a judgment of a state court, even though authorized by statute, by which private property was taken for public use without just compensation, was in violation of the due process of law required by the Fourteenth Amendment, notwithstanding that the Fifth Amendment explicitly declares that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. This holding was followed in Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 277; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 524; and San Diego Land Co. v. National City, 174 U. S. 739, 754.

Likewise, this Court has considered that freedom of speech and of the press are rights protected by the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, although in the First Amendment, Congress is prohibited in specific terms from abridging the right. Gitlow v. New York, 268 U. S. 652, 666; Stromberg v. California, 283 U. S. 359, 368; Near v. Minnesota, 283 U. S. 697, 707.

These later cases established that notwithstanding the sweeping character of the language in the Hurtado case, the rule laid down is not without exceptions. The rule is an aid to construction, and in some instances may be conclusive; but it must yield to more compelling considerations whenever such considerations exist. The fact that the right involved is of such a character that it cannot be denied without violating those "fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at the base of all our civil and political institutions" (Hebert v. Louisiana, 272 U. S. 312, 316), is obviously one of those compelling considerations which must prevail in determining whether it is embraced within the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, although it be specifically dealt with in another part of the federal Constitution. Evidently this Court, in the later cases enumerated, regarded the rights there under consideration as of this fundamental character. * * *

It never has been doubted by this Court, or any other so far as we know, that notice and hearing are preliminary steps essential to the passing of an enforceable judgment, and that they, together with a legally competent tribunal having jurisdiction of the case, constitute basic elements of the constitutional requirement of due process of law. The words of Webster, so often quoted, that by "the law of the land" is intended "a law which hears before it condemns," have been repeated in varying forms of expression in a multitude of decisions. * * *

What, then, does a hearing include? Historically and in practice, in our own country at least, it has always included the right to the aid of counsel when desired and provided by the party asserting the right. The right to be heard would be, in many cases, of little avail if it did not comprehend the right to be heard by counsel. Even the intelligent and educated layman has small and sometimes no skill in the science of law. If charged with crime, he is incapable, generally, of determining for himself whether the indictment is good or bad. He is unfamiliar with the rules of evidence. Left without the aid of counsel he may be put on trial without a proper charge, and convicted upon incompetent evidence, or evidence irrelevant to the issue or otherwise inadmissible. He lacks both the skill and knowledge adequately to prepare his defense, even though he have a perfect one. He requires the guiding hand of counsel at every step in the proceedings against him. Without it, though he be not guilty, he faces the danger of conviction because he does not know how to establish his innocence. If that be true of men of intelligence, how much more true is it of the ignorant and illiterate, or those of feeble intellect. If in any case, civil or criminal, a state or federal court were arbitrarily to refuse to hear a party by counsel, employed by and appearing for him, it reasonably may not be doubted that such a refusal would be a denial of a hearing, and, therefore, of due process in the constitutional sense.

* * *

In the light of the facts outlined in the forepart of this opinion—the ignorance and illiteracy of the defendants, their youth, the circumstances of public hostility, the imprisonment and the close surveillance of the defendants by the military forces, the fact that their friends and families were all in other states and communication with them necessarily difficult, and above all that they stood in deadly peril of their lives—we think the failure of the trial court to give them reasonable time and opportunity to secure counsel was a clear denial of due process.

But passing that, and assuming their inability, even if opportunity had been given, to employ counsel, as the trial court evidently did assume, we are of opinion that, under the circumstances just stated, the necessity of counsel was so vital and imperative that the failure of the trial court to make an effective appointment of counsel was likewise a denial of due process within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment. Whether this would be so in other criminal prosecutions, or under other circumstances, we need not determine. All that it is necessary now to decide, as we do decide, is that in a capital case, where the defendant is unable to employ counsel, and is incapable adequately of making his own defense because of ignorance, feeble-mindedness, illiteracy, or the like, it is the duty of the court, whether requested or not, to assign counsel for him as a necessary requisite of due process of law; and that duty is not discharged by an assignment at such a time or under such circumstances as to preclude the giving of effective aid in the preparation and trial of the case. * * *

The United States by statute and every state in the Union by express provision of law, or by the determination of its courts, make it the duty of the trial judge, where the accused is unable to employ counsel, to appoint counsel for him. In most states the rule applies broadly to all criminal prosecutions, in others it is limited to the more serious crimes, and in a very limited number, to capital cases. A rule adopted with such unanimous accord reflects, if it does not establish the inherent right to have counsel appointed, at least in cases like the present, and lends convincing support to the conclusion we have reached as to the fundamental nature of that right.

The judgments must be reversed and the causes remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Judgments reversed.

MR. JUSTICE BUTLER, dissenting. * * *

If there had been any lack of opportunity for preparation, trial counsel would have applied to the court for postponement. No such application was made. There was no suggestion, at the trial or in the motion for a new trial which they made, that Mr. Roddy or Mr. Moody was denied such opportunity or that they were not in fact fully prepared. The amended motion for new trial, by counsel who succeeded them, contains the first suggestion that defendants were denied counsel or opportunity to prepare for trial. But neither Mr. Roddy nor Mr. Moody has given any support to that claim. Their silence requires a finding that the claim is groundless, for if it had any merit they would be bound to support it. And no one has come to suggest any lack of zeal or good faith on their part.

If correct, the ruling that the failure of the trial court to give petitioners time and opportunity to secure counsel was denial of due process is enough, and with this the opinion should end. But the Court goes on to declare that "the failure of the trial court to make an effective appointment of counsel was likewise a denial of due process within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment." This is an extension of federal authority into a field hitherto occupied exclusively by the several States. Nothing before the Court calls for a consideration of the point. It was not suggested below, and petitioners do not ask for its decision here. The Court, without being called upon to consider it, adjudges without a hearing an important constitutional question concerning criminal procedure in state courts. * * *

The record wholly fails to reveal that petitioners have been deprived of any right guaranteed by the Federal Constitution, and I am of opinion that the judgment should be affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS concurs in this opinion.

NOTES

1. In Betts v. Brady, 316 U. S. 455, 86 L. ed. 1595, 62 Sup. Ct. 1252 (1942) defendant, charged in a Maryland court with the noncapital offense of robbery, was unable to employ counsel and asked that one be assigned to defend him. The request was refused on the ground that it was not the practice to appoint counsel for indigent defendants except in cases of murder and rape. In upholding defendant's conviction the Supreme Court held that the refusal to appoint counsel was not a denial of due process of law, the opinion stating that although "the Fourteenth Amendment prohibits the conviction and incarceration of one whose trial is offensive to the common and fundamental ideas of fairness and right, and while want of counsel in a particular case may result in a conviction lacking in such fundamental fairness, we cannot say that the Amendment embodies an inexorable command that no trial for any offense, or in any court, can be fairly conducted and justice accorded a defendant who is not represented by counsel." In reaching this conclusion the court stressed the fact that "in the great majority of the states, it has been the considered judgment of the people, their representatives and their courts that appointment of counsel is not a fundamental right, essential to a fair trial. On the contrary, the matter has generally been deemed one of legislative policy. In the light of this evidence we are unable to say that the concept of due process incorporated in the Fourteenth Amendment obligates the states, whatever may be their own views, to furnish counsel in every such case." The dissenting justices (Black, Douglas and Murphy) took the view that the Fourteenth Amendment made the Sixth Amendment applicable to the states and that the consequence of the failure to provide counsel was "to defeat the promise of our democratic society to provide equal justice under the law."

The rule of Betts v. Brady was followed in Foster v. Illinois, 332 U. S. 134, 91 L. ed. 1955, 67 Sup. Ct. 1716 (1947) and Bute v. Illinois, 333 U. S. 640, 92 L. ed. 986, 68 Sup. Ct. 763 (1948), the court saying in the latter case: "In a noncapital state felony case, this court has recognized the constitutional right of the accused to the assistance of counsel for his defense when there are special circumstances showing that, otherwise, the defendant would not enjoy that fair notice and adequate hearing which constitutes the foundation of due process of law in the trial of any criminal charge." In Wade v. Mayo, 334 U. S. 672, 92 L. ed. 1647, 68 Sup. Ct. 1270 (1948) it was held that assistance of counsel must be provided if the defendant is unable to conduct his defense because of youth, ignorance or mental incapacity, and refusal to appoint counsel under such circumstances is a denial of due process of law. In Uveges v. Pennsylvania, 335 U. S. 437, 93 L. ed. 127, 69 Sup. Ct. 184 (1948), where the accused was a seventeen year old boy who pleaded guilty to four burglary indictments and received sentences totaling twenty to forty years, the factors of youth and inexperience in the intricacies of criminal procedure were of major importance in causing the court to conclude that assistance of counsel was a necessary element of a fair hearing. However, in the Uveges case other "special circumstances" were present in that the trial court made no effort to explain the consequences of a plea of guilty and at no time advised the accused of any right to counsel. Prejudice was also found in Townsend v. Burke, 334 U. S. 736, 92 L. ed. 1690, 68 Sup. Ct. 1252 (1948), where the court concluded that "while disadvantaged by lack of counsel, this prisoner was sentenced on the basis of assumptions concerning his criminal record which were materially untrue" and that "such a result, whether caused by carelessness or design, is inconsistent with due process of law." In Palmer v. Ashe, 342 U. S. 134, 96 L. ed. 154, 72 Sup. Ct. 191 (1951) a state prisoner, eighteen years after he had pleaded guilty to armed robbery, instituted habeas corpus proceedings in the state courts, alleging that his plea of guilty was entered without benefit of counsel, as a result of statements made by police officers at the time of his arrest that he was charged only with breaking and entering. Without giving him an opportunity to offer evidence, the state courts dismissed the petition on the ground that the prisoner's allegations failed to show probable cause for his discharge. On certiorari the Supreme Court reversed and remanded on the ground that the particular circumstances alleged were sufficient to entitle the prisoner to a judicial hearing, and if proved to be true "would present compelling reasons why petitioner desperately needed legal counsel and services." For further analysis of Supreme Court decisions on the right to counsel, see the comprehensive annotation in 93 L. ed. 137 (1950), supplemented in 94 L. ed. 1193 (1950) and 96 L. ed. 161 (1952). See also 3 A. L. R. (2d) 1003 (1949).

2. By virtue of the specific guaranty of the Sixth Amendment, in all criminal prosecutions in the federal courts the accused is entitled to have counsel appointed by the court when, for lack of funds or other reasons, he fails to engage counsel or has not intelligently waived his right thereto. Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U. S. 458, 82 L. ed. 1461, 58 Sup. Ct. 1019, 146 A. L. R. 357 (1938); Glasser v. United States, 315 U. S. 60, 86 L. ed. 680, 62 Sup. Ct. 457 (1942).

MOORE v. DEMPSEY.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1923.

261 U. S. 86, 67 L. ed. 543, 43 Sup. Ct. 265.

MR. JUSTICE HOLMES delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is an appeal from an order of the District Court for the Eastern District of Arkansas dismissing a writ of habeas corpus upon demurrer, the presiding judge certifying that there was probable cause for allowing the appeal. There were two cases originally, but by agreement they were consolidated into one. The appellants are five negroes who were convicted of murder in the first degree and sentenced to death by the court of the State of Arkansas. The ground of the petition for the writ is that the proceedings in the State court, although a trial in form, were only a form, and that the appellants were hurried to conviction under the pressure of a mob without any regard for their rights and without according to them due process of law.

The case stated by the petition is as follows, and it will be understood that while we put it in narrative form, we are not affirming the facts to be as stated but only what we must take them to be, as they are admitted by the demurrer: On the night of September 30, 1919, a number of colored people assembled in their church were attacked and fired upon by a body of white men, and in the disturbance that followed a white man was killed. The report of the killing caused great excitement and was followed by the hunting down and shooting of many negroes and also by the killing on October 1 of one Clinton Lee, a white man, for whose murder the petitioners were indicted. They seem to have been arrested with many others on the same day. The petitioners say that Lee must have been killed by other whites, but that, we leave on one side as what we have to deal with is not the petitioners' innocence or guilt but solely the question whether their constitutional rights have been preserved. They say that their meeting was to employ counsel for protection against extortions practiced upon them by the landowners and that the landowners tried to prevent their effort, but that again we pass by as not directly bearing upon the trial. It should be mentioned, however, that O. S. Bratton, a son of the counsel who is said to have been contemplated and who took part in the argument here, arriving for consultation on October 1, is said to have barely escaped being mobbed; that he was arrested and confined during the month on a charge of murder and on October 31 was indicted for barratry, but later in the day was told that he would be discharged but that he must leave secretly by a closed automobile to take the train at West Helena, four miles away, to avoid being mobbed. It is alleged that the judge of the court in which the petitioners were tried facilitated the departure and went with Bratton to see him safely off.

A Committee of Seven was appointed by the Governor in regard to what the committee called the "insurrection" in the county. The newspapers daily published inflammatory articles. On the 7th a statement by one of the committee was made public to the effect that the present trouble was "a deliberately planned insurrection of the negroes against the whites, directed by an organization known as the 'Progressive Farmers' and 'Household Union of America' established for the purpose of banding negroes together for the killing of white people." According to the statement the organization was started by a swindler to get money from the blacks.

Shortly after the arrest of the petitioners a mob marched to the jail for the purpose of lynching them but were prevented by the presence of the United States troops and the promise of some of the Committee of Seven and other leading officials that if the mob would refrain, as the petition puts it, they would execute those found guilty in the form of law. The Committee's own statement was that the reason that the people refrained from mob violence was "that this Committee gave our citizens their solemn promise that the law would be carried out." According to affidavits of two white men and the colored witnesses on whose testimony the petitioners were convicted, produced by the petitioners since the last decision of the Supreme Court hereafter mentioned, the Committee made good their promise by calling colored witnesses and having them whipped and tortured until they would say what was wanted, among them being the two relied on to prove the petitioners' guilt. However this may be, a grand jury of white men was organized on October 27 with one of the Committee of Seven and, it is alleged, with many of a posse organized to fight the blacks, upon it, and on the morning of the 29th the indictment was returned. On November 3 the petitioners were brought into court, informed that a certain lawyer was appointed their counsel and were placed on trial before a white jury—blacks being systematically excluded from both grand and petit juries. The court and neighborhood were thronged with an adverse crowd that threatened the most dangerous consequences to anyone interfering with the desired result. The counsel did not venture to demand delay or a change of venue, to challenge a jurymen or to ask for separate trials. He had had no preliminary consultation with the accused, called no witnesses for the defence although they could have been produced, and did not put the defendants on the stand. The trial lasted about three-quarters of an hour and in less than five minutes the jury brought in a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree. According to the allegations and affidavits there never was a chance for the petitioners to be acquitted; no jurymen could have voted for an acquittal and continued to live in Phillips County and if any prisoner by any chance had been acquitted by a jury he could not have escaped the mob.

The averments as to the prejudice by which the trial was environed have some corroboration in appeals to the Governor, about a year later, earnestly urging him not to interfere with the execution of the petitioners. One came from five members of the Committee of Seven, and stated in addition to what has been quoted heretofore that "all our citizens are of the opinion that the law should take its course." Another from a part of the American Legion protests against a contemplated commutation of the sentence of four of the petitioners and repeats that a "solemn promise was given by the leading citizens of the community that if the guilty parties were not lynched, and let the law take its course, that justice would be done and the majesty of the law upheld." A meeting of the Helena Rotary Club attended by members representing, as it said, seventy-five of the leading industrial and commercial enterprises of Helena, passed a resolution approving and supporting the action of the American Legion post. The Lions Club of Helena at a meeting attended by members said to represent sixty of the leading industrial and commercial enterprises of the city passed a resolution to the same effect. In May of the same year, a trial of six other negroes was coming on and it was represented to the Governor by the white citizens and officials of Phillips County that in all probability those negroes would be lynched. It is alleged that in order to appease the mob spirit and in a measure secure the safety of the six the Governor fixed the date for the execution of the petitioners at June 10, 1921, but that the execution was stayed by proceedings in court; we presume the proceedings before the Chancellor to which we shall advert.

In Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S. 309, 335, it was recognized of course that if in fact a trial is dominated by a mob so that there is an actual interference with the course of justice, there is a departure from due process of law; and that "if the state, supplying no corrective process, carries into execution a judgment of death or imprisonment based upon a verdict thus produced by mob domination, the state deprives the accused of his life or liberty without due process of law." We assume in accordance with that case that the corrective process supplied by the state may be so adequate that interference by habeas corpus ought not to be allowed. It certainly is true that mere mistakes of law in the course of a trial are not to be corrected in that way. But if the case is that the whole proceeding is a mask—that counsel, jury and judge were swept to the fatal end by an irresistible wave of public passion, and that the state courts failed to correct the wrong, neither perfection in the machinery for correction nor the possibility that the trial court and counsel saw no other way of avoiding an immediate outbreak of the mob can prevent this court from securing to the petitioners their constitutional rights.

In this case a motion for a new trial on the ground alleged in this petition was overruled and upon exceptions and appeal to the Supreme Court the judgment was affirmed. The Supreme Court said that the complaint of discrimination against petitioners by the exclusion of colored men from the jury came too late and by way of answer to the objection that no fair trial could be had in the circumstances, stated that it could not say "that this must necessarily have been the case"; that eminent counsel was appointed to defend the petitioners, that the trial was had according to law, the jury correctly charged, and the testimony legally sufficient. On June 8, 1921, two days before the date fixed for their execution, a petition for habeas corpus was presented to the Chancellor and he issued the writ and an injunction against the execution of the petitioners; but the Supreme Court of the state held that the Chancellor had no jurisdiction under the state law whatever might be the law of the United States. The present petition perhaps was suggested by the language of the court: "What the result would be of an application to a Federal Court we need not inquire." It was presented to the District Court on September 21. We shall not say more concerning the corrective process afforded to the petitioners than that it does not seem to us sufficient to allow a Judge of the United States to escape the duty of examining the facts for himself when if true as alleged they make the trial absolutely void. We have confined the statement to facts admitted by the demurrer. We will not say that they cannot be met, but it appears to us unavoidable that the District Judge should find whether the facts alleged are true and whether they can be explained so far as to leave the state proceedings undisturbed.

Order reversed. The case to stand for hearing before the District Court.

MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS, dissenting.

We are asked to overrule the judgment of the District Court discharging a writ of habeas corpus by means of which five negroes sought to escape electrocution for the murder of Clinton Lee. Sec. 753, Rev. Stats. They were convicted and sentenced in the circuit court of Phillips county, Arkansas, two years before the writ issued. The petition for the writ was supported by affidavits of these five ignorant men whose lives were at stake, the ex parte affidavits of three other negroes who had pleaded guilty and were then confined in the penitentiary under sentences for the same murder, and the affidavits of two white men—low villains according to their own admissions. It should be remembered that to narrate the allegations of the petition is but to repeat statements from these sources. Considering all the circumstances—the course of the cause in the state courts and upon application here for certiorari, etc.—the District Court held the alleged facts insufficient prima facie to show nullity of the original judgment.

The matter is one of gravity. If every man convicted of crime in a state court may thereafter resort to the federal court and by swearing, as advised, that certain allegations of fact tending to impeach his trial are "true to the best of his knowledge and belief," and thereby obtain as of right further review, another way has been added to a list already unfortunately long to prevent prompt punishment. * * *

Under the disclosed circumstances I cannot agree that the solemn adjudications by courts of a great state, which this court has refused to review, can be successfully impeached by the mere ex parte affidavits made upon information and belief of ignorant convicts joined by two white men—confessedly atrocious criminals. The fact that petitioners are poor and ignorant and black naturally arouses sympathy; but that does not release us from enforcing principles which are essential to the orderly operation of our federal system.

I am authorized to say that MR. JUSTICE SUTHERLAND concurs in this dissent.

NOTES

1. Prior to granting habeas corpus in the reported case the Supreme Court had denied certiorari. For an adverse criticism of this procedure, see Note, 33 Yale L. J. 82 (1923). The hearing ordered by the court was never held, as the death sentence imposed upon the petitioners in the state court was commuted to twelve years by the Governor of Arkansas and the habeas corpus proceedings in the federal court were finally dismissed for want of prosecution. Subsequently the six prisoners were indefinitely furloughed after serving less than six years in the penitentiary. See Waterman and Overton, The Aftermath of Moore v. Dempsey, 18 St. Louis L. Rev. 117 (1933), reprinted in 6 Ark. L. Rev. 1 (1931-52). See also, Overton and Waterman, Federal Habeas Corpus Statutes and Moore v. Dempsey, 1 U. of Chi. L. Rev. 307 (1933), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 1477; Kaplan, Federal Review of Criminal Trials in State Courts Through Due Process, 23 J. Crim. Law and Criminology 841 (1933), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 1491. The significance of Moore v. Dempsey is thus seen to be that it established the principle that the Fourteenth Amendment extends to a defendant in a criminal prosecution in a state court the right to have a fair and impartial trial, at least so far as freedom from mob coercion is concerned; and that this right may be enforced in the federal courts. For a case in which a federal court on habeas corpus found upon trial that the state trial court had been dominated by a mob and discharged the accused, see Downer v. Dunaway, 1 F. Supp. 1001 (1932).

2. In a criminal prosecution the defendant has a constitutional right under the due process clause to trial before an unbiased judge. In Tumey v. Ohio, 273 U. S. 510, 71 L. ed. 749, 47 Sup. Ct. 437 (1927), statutes provided for trial by the mayor of a village of offenses against the state prohibition law, half the fines collected going to the treasury of the municipality, and a municipal ordinance provided that the mayor should receive, in addition to his salary, the amount of his costs in such cases, the costs being paid by the defendant only in the event of his conviction. The Supreme Court, in reversing Tumey's conviction, said: "Every procedure which would offer a possible temptation to the average man as a judge to forget the burden of proof required to convict the defendant, or which might lead him not to hold the balance nice, clear, and true between the state and the accused denies the latter due process of law."

3. If the hearing in the court of first instance satisfies the requirements of due process, the right of appeal may be dispensed with. In McKane v. Durston, 153 U. S. 684, 38 L. ed. 867, 14 Sup. Ct. 913 (1894), sustaining a New York statute making admission to bail pending appeal discretionary, though in most states the right is absolute, the court said, through Mr. Justice Harlan: "An appeal from a judgment of conviction is not a matter of absolute right, independently of constitutional or statutory provisions allowing such appeal. A review by an appellate court of the final judgment in a criminal case, however grave the offense of which the accused is convicted, was not at common law and is not now a necessary element of due process of law. It is wholly within the discretion of the state to allow or not to allow such a review. A citation of authorities upon the point is unnecessary. It is, therefore, clear that the right of appeal may be accorded by the state to the accused upon such terms as in its wisdom may be deemed proper." In England, before the enactment of the Criminal Appeal Act of 1907 (7 Edw. VII, ch. 23) there was no right of direct appeal from the verdict of a jury on the merits of the case, and not even on a point of law unless the judge of the trial court saw fit to "state a case" for the ultimate decision of the King's Bench Division. See Howard, Criminal Justice in England (1931), 275 et seq.

4. The right to a public trial, guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment, and long considered an effective restraint on the abuse of judicial power, has recently been under consideration. In In re Oliver, 333 U. S. 257, 92 L. ed. 682, 68 Sup. Ct. 499 (1948) it was held that commitment of a witness for contempt in a secret proceeding without public trial on a charge of giving false and evasive testimony, by a judge sitting as a "one-man grand jury" as authorized by a Michigan statute, constituted a denial of procedural due process. Mr. Justice Black, speaking for the court, declared it to be "the law of the land" that no person's life, liberty or property should be forfeited under circumstances such as those disclosed by the record in this case, "in view of this nation's historic distrust of secret proceedings, their inherent dangers to freedom, and the universal requirement of our federal and state governments that criminal trials be public." Justices Frankfurter and Jackson, dissenting, thought that the record before the court was insufficient to justify it in passing on the constitutional issues until after they had been more fully considered in the state courts. In United States v. Koblitz, 172 F. (2d) 919 (C. A. 3d 1949) it was held that the indiscriminate exclusion of the public from the courtroom during a trial for violation of the Mann Act was a deprivation of the defendant's right to a public trial under the Sixth Amendment. Here the judge, feeling that the indecent nature of the case required it, directed that the courtroom be cleared of all people except defendants, counsel, witnesses and members of the press. For a discussion of the cases, state and federal, see Note, 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 91 (1949). See also Radin, The Right to a Public Trial, 6 Temp. L. Q. 381 (1932); Notes, 49 Col. Law Rev. 110 (1949), 97 U. of Pa. L. Rev. 276 (1948). In general, on the Sixth Amendment guaranties, see Heller, The Sixth Amendment (1951).

5. Defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree. In imposing the death penalty, over the recommendation of the jury of life imprisonment, the trial judge considered probation reports and privately obtained information indicating participation by the defendant in thirty burglaries of which he had not been convicted. This pre-sentence investigation information concerning defendant's background, though relevant to the question of punishment and permitted by a New York statute, could not have been brought to the attention of the jury in its consideration of the issue of guilt. Defendant contended that this statutory procedure violated the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment in that the death sentence was based upon information supplied by witnesses with whom the accused had not been confronted and as to whom he had no opportunity for cross-examination or rebuttal. In upholding the challenged procedure the court recognized that due process required "that no person shall be tried and convicted of an offense unless he is given reasonable notice of the charges against him and is afforded an opportunity to examine adverse witnesses" and that "these salutary and time-tested protections" were essential where the question under consideration was the defendant's guilt. Here, however, where the question of punishment was involved, the court said that it could not treat the due process clause as "a uniform command that courts throughout the nation abandon their age-old practice of seeking information from out-of-court sources to guide their judgment toward a more enlightened and just sentence." Justices Murphy and Rutledge dissented. Williams v. New York, 337 U. S. 241, 93 L. ed. 1337, 69 Sup. Ct. 1079 (1949).

6. The due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment gives a defendant a right to be present at his trial only when his presence is reasonably necessary to insure his right to an opportunity to be heard. In Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97, 78 L. ed. 674, 54 Sup. Ct. 330, 90 A. L. R. 575 (1934) the court affirmed a conviction for murder although the accused had not been permitted to accompany the jury on a view of the premises where the crime was alleged to have been committed. The court said that the right to be present at a view of the locale was not a "fundamental" right but only one to be granted when the defendant's presence "has a relation, reasonably substantial, to the fullness of his opportunity to defend against the charge." Justices Roberts, Brandeis, Sutherland and Butler dissented.

TWINING v. NEW JERSEY.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1908.

211 U. S. 78, 53 L. ed. 97, 29 Sup. Ct. 14.

[Defendant and another were indicted for a criminal offense in a New Jersey court, convicted and sentenced to six and four years imprisonment respectively. At the trial the accused refrained from testifying and objected to the judge's instruction: "Because a man does not go upon the stand you are not necessarily justified in drawing an inference of guilt. But you have a right to consider the fact that he does not go upon the stand where a direct accusation is made against him" by other testimony. The court of last resort of the state affirmed the conviction over the contention that the trial judge's instruction violated an immunity of an accused from testifying against himself and that this immunity was secured by the Fourteenth Amendment. This writ of error was taken.]

MR. JUSTICE MOODY delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

The exemption from testimonial compulsion, that is, from disclosure as a witness of evidence against oneself, forced by any form of legal process, is universal in American law, though there may be differences as to its exact scope and limits. At the time of the formation of the Union the principle that no person could be compelled to be a witness against himself had become embodied in the common law and distinguished it from all other systems of jurisprudence. It was generally regarded then, as now, as a privilege of great value, a protection to the innocent though a shelter to the guilty, and a safeguard against heedless, unfounded or tyrannical prosecutions. Five of the original thirteen states (North Carolina, 1776; Pennsylvania, 1776; Virginia, 1776; Massachusetts, 1780; New Hampshire, 1784) had then guarded the principle from legislative or judicial change by including it in constitutions or bills of rights; Maryland had provided in her constitution (1776) that "no man ought to be compelled to give evidence against himself, in a common court of law, or in any other court, but in such cases as have been usually practiced in this state or may hereafter be directed by the legislature;" and in the remainder of those states there seems to be no doubt that it was recognized by the courts. The privilege was not included in the federal Constitution as originally adopted, but was placed in one of the ten Amendments which were recommended to the states by the first Congress, and by them adopted. Since then all the states of the Union have, from time to time, with varying form but uniform meaning, included the privilege in their constitutions, except the States of New Jersey and Iowa, and in those states it is held to be part of the existing law [common law or statute]. State v. Zdanowicz, 69 N. J. L. 619; State v. Height, 117 Iowa, 650. It is obvious from this short statement that it has been supposed by the states that, so far as the state courts are concerned, the privilege had its origin in the constitution and laws of the states, and that persons appealing to it must look to the state for their protection. Indeed, since by the unvarying decisions of this court the first ten Amendments of the federal Constitution are restrictive only of national action, there was nowhere else to look, up to the time of the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, and the state, at least until then, might give, modify or withhold the privilege at its will. The Fourteenth Amendment withdrew from the states powers theretofore enjoyed by them to an extent not yet fully ascertained, or rather, to speak more accurately, limited those powers and restrained their exercise. There is no doubt of the duty of this court to enforce the limitations and restraints whenever they exist, and there has been no hesitation in the performance of the duty. But whenever a new limitation or restriction is declared it is a matter of grave import, since, to that extent, it diminishes the authority of the state, so necessary to the perpetuity of our dual form of government, and changes its relation to its people and to the Union.

The question in the case at bar has been twice before us, and been left undecided, as the cases were disposed of on other grounds. Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585; Consolidated Rendering Co. v. Vermont, 207 U. S. 541. The defendants contend, in the first place, that the exemption from self-incrimination is one of the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States which the Fourteenth Amendment forbids the states to abridge. It is not argued that the defendants are protected by that part of the Fifth Amendment which provides that "no person * * * shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself," for it is recognized by counsel that by a long line of decisions the first ten Amendments are not operative on the states. Barron v. Baltimore, 7 Pet. 243; Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131; Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172; Barrington v. Missouri, 205 U. S. 483. But it is argued that this privilege is one of the fundamental rights of national citizenship, placed under national protection by the Fourteenth Amendment, and it is specifically argued that the "privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States," protected against state action by that Amendment, include those fundamental personal rights which were protected against national action by the first eight Amendments; that this was the intention of the framers of the Fourteenth Amendment, and that this part of it would otherwise have little or no meaning and effect. These arguments are not new to this court and the answer to them is found in its decisions. The meaning of the phrase "privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States," as used in the Fourteenth Amendment, came under early consideration in the Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36. * * *

We conclude, therefore, that the exemption from compulsory self-incrimination is not a privilege or immunity of national citizenship guaranteed by this clause of the Fourteenth Amendment against abridgment by the states.

The defendants, however, do not stop here. They appeal to another clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, and insist that the self-incrimination, which they allege the instruction to the jury compelled, was a denial of due process of law. This contention requires separate consideration, for it is possible that some of the personal rights safeguarded by the first eight Amendments against national action may also be safe-guarded against state action because a denial of them would be a denial of due process of law. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226. If this is so, it is not because those rights are enumerated in the first eight Amendments, but because they are of such a nature that they are included in the conception of due process of law. Few phrases of the law are so elusive of exact apprehension as this. * * *

The question under consideration may first be tested by the application of these settled doctrines of this Court. If the statement of Mr.

Justice Curtis, as elucidated in Hurtado v. California, is to be taken literally, that alone might almost be decisive. For nothing is more certain, in point of historical fact, than that the practice of compulsory self-incrimination in the courts and elsewhere existed for four hundred years after the granting of Magna Charta, continued throughout the reign of Charles I (though then beginning to be seriously questioned), gained at least some foothold among the early colonists of this country, and was not entirely omitted at trials in England until the eighteenth century. * * *

But without repudiating or questioning the test proposed by Mr. Justice Curtis for the court, or rejecting the inference drawn from English law, we prefer to rest our decision on broader grounds, and inquire whether the exemption from self-incrimination is of such a nature that it must be included in the conception of due process. * * * One aid to the solution of the question is to inquire how the right was rated during the time when the meaning of due process was in a formative state and before it was incorporated in American constitutional law. Did those who then were formulating and insisting upon the rights of the people entertain the view that the right was so fundamental that there could be no due process without it? It has already appeared that, prior to the formation of the American constitutions, in which the exemption from compulsory self-incrimination was specifically secured, separately, independently, and side by side with the requirement of due process, the doctrine was formed, as other doctrines of the law of evidence have been formed, by the course of decisions in the courts covering a long period of time. Searching further, we find nothing to show that it was then thought to be other than a just and useful principle of law. None of the great instruments in which we are accustomed to look for the declaration of the fundamental rights made reference to it. The privilege was not dreamed of for hundreds of years after Magna Charta (1215), and could not have been implied in the "law of the land" there secured. The Petition of Right (1629), though it insists upon the right, secured by Magna Charta to be condemned only by the law of the land, and sets forth by way of grievance divers violations of it, is silent upon the practice of compulsory self-incrimination, though it was then a matter of common occurrence in all the courts of the realm. The Bill of Rights of the first year of the reign of William and Mary (1689) is likewise silent, though the practice of questioning the prisoner at his trial had not then ceased. The negative argument which arises out of the omission of all reference to any exemption from compulsory self-incrimination in these three great declarations of English liberty (though it is not supposed to amount to a demonstration) is supported by the positive argument that the English Courts and Parliaments, as we have seen, have dealt with the exemption as they would have dealt with any other rule of evidence, apparently without a thought that the question was affected by the law of the land of Magna Charta, or the due process of law which is its equivalent.

We pass by the meager records of the early colonial time, so far as they have come to our attention, as affording light too uncertain for guidance. * * *

But the history of the incorporation of the privilege in an amendment to the National Constitution is full of significance in this connection. Five states, Delaware, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Georgia and Connecticut, ratified the Constitution without proposing amendments. Massachusetts then followed with a ratification, accompanied by a recommendation of nine amendments, none of which referred to the privilege; Maryland with a ratification without proposing amendments; South Carolina with a ratification accompanied by a recommendation of four amendments, none of which referred to the privilege, and New Hampshire with a ratification accompanied by a recommendation of twelve amendments, none of which referred to the privilege. The nine states requisite to put the Constitution in operation ratified it without a suggestion of incorporating this privilege. Virginia was the tenth state to ratify, proposing, by separate resolution, an elaborate Bill of Rights under twenty heads, and in addition twenty amendments to the body of the Constitution. Among the rights enumerated as "essential and inalienable" is that no man "can be compelled to give evidence against himself," and "no freeman ought to be deprived of his life, liberty or property but by the law of the land." New York ratified with a proposal of numerous amendments and a declaration of rights which the convention declared ought not be violated and were consistent with the Constitution. One of these rights was that "No person ought to be taken, imprisoned or deprived of his freehold, or be exiled or deprived of his privileges, franchises, life, liberty or property but by due process of law;" and another was that "in all criminal prosecutions the accused * * * should not be compelled to give evidence against himself." North Carolina and Rhode Island were the last to ratify, each proposing a large number of amendments, including the provision that no man "can be compelled to give evidence against himself;" and North Carolina, that "no freeman ought to be * * * deprived of his life, liberty or property but by the law of the land;" and Rhode Island, that "no freeman ought to be * * * deprived of his life, liberty or property but by the trial by jury, or by the law of the land."

Thus it appears that four only of the thirteen original states insisted upon incorporating the privilege in the Constitution, and they separately and simultaneously with the requirement of due process of law, and that three states proposing amendments were silent upon this subject. It is worthy of note that two of these four states did not incorporate the privilege in their own constitutions, where it would have had much wider field of usefulness, until many years after. New York in 1821 and Rhode Island in 1842 (its first constitution). This survey does not tend to show that it was then in this country the universal or even general belief that the privilege ranked among the fundamental and inalienable rights of mankind; and what is more important here, it affirmatively shows that the privilege was not conceived to be inherent in due process of law, but on the other hand a right separate, independent and outside of due process. Congress, in submitting the amendments to the several states, treated the two rights as exclusive of each other. Such also has been the view of the states in framing their own constitutions, for in every case, except in New Jersey and Iowa, where the due process clause or its equivalent is included, it has been thought necessary to include separately the privilege clause. Nor have we been referred to any decision of a state court save one (State v. Height, 117 Iowa, 650), where the exemption has been held to be required by due process of law. The inference is irresistible that it has been the opinion of constitution makers that the privilege, if fundamental in any sense, is not fundamental in due process of law, nor an essential part of it. We believe that this opinion is proved to have been correct by every historical test by which the meaning of the phrase can be tried.

The decisions of this court, though they are silent on the precise question before us, ought to be searched to discover if they present any analogies which are helpful in its decision. The essential elements of due process of law, already established by them, are singularly few, though of wide application and deep significance. We are not here concerned with the effect of due process in restraining substantive laws, as, for example, that which forbids the taking of private property for public use without compensation. We need notice now only those cases which deal with the principles which must be observed in the trial of criminal and civil causes. Due process requires that the court which assumes to determine the rights of parties shall have jurisdiction, Pennoy v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 733; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34; Old Wayne Life Association v. McDonough, 204 U. S. 8, and that there shall be notice and opportunity for hearing given the parties, Hovey v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 409; Roller v. Holly, 176 U. S. 398; and see Londoner v. Denver, 210 U. S. 373. Subject to these two fundamental conditions, which seem to be universally prescribed in all systems of law established by civilized countries, this court has up to this time sustained all state laws, statutory or judicially declared, regulating procedure, evidence and methods of trial, and held them to be consistent with due process of law. * * *

Salutary as the principle may seem to the great majority, it cannot be ranked with the right to hearing before condemnation, the immunity from arbitrary power not acting by general laws, and the inviolability of private property. The wisdom of the exemption has never been universally assented to since the days of Bentham; many doubt it today, and it is best defended not as an unchangeable principle of universal justice but as a law proved by experience to be expedient. See Wigmore, § 2251. It has no place in the jurisprudence of civilized and free countries outside the domain of the common law, and it is nowhere observed among our own people in the search for truth outside the administration of the law. It should, must and will be rigidly observed where it is secured by specific constitutional safeguards, but there is nothing in it which gives it a sanctity above and before constitutions themselves. Much might be said in favor of the view that the privilege was guaranteed against state impairment as a privilege and immunity of national citizenship, but, as has been shown, the decisions of this court have foreclosed that view. There seems to be no reason whatever, however, for straining the meaning of due process of law to include this privilege within it, because, perhaps, we may think it of great value. The states had guarded the privilege to the satisfaction of their own people up to the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment. No reason is perceived why they cannot continue to do so. The power of their people ought not to be fettered, their sense of responsibility lessened, and their capacity for sober and restrained self-government weakened by forced construction of the federal Constitution. If the people of New Jersey are not content with the law as declared in repeated decisions of their courts, the remedy is in their own hands. They may, if they choose, alter it by legislation, as the people of Maine did when the courts of that state made the same ruling. * * *

We have assumed only for the purpose of discussion that what was done in the case at bar was an infringement of the privilege against self-incrimination. We do not intend, however, to lend any countenance to the truth of that assumption. The courts of New Jersey, in adopting the rule of law which is complained of here, have deemed it consistent with the privilege itself and not a denial of it. The reasoning by which this view is supported will be found in the cases cited from New Jersey and Maine, and see Reg. v. Rhodes (1899), 1 Q. B. 77; Ex parte Kops (1894), A. C. 650. The authorities upon the question are in conflict. We do not pass upon the conflict, because, for the reasons given, we think that the exemption from compulsory self-incrimination in the courts of the states is not secured by any part of the Federal Constitution.

Judgment affirmed.

[A dissenting opinion by Mr. JUSTICE HARLAN is omitted.]

NOTES

1. In Adamson v. California, 332 U. S. 46, 91 L. ed. 1903, 67 Sup. Ct. 1672, 171 A. L. R. 1223 (1947) the holding of the principal case was reaffirmed in a five-to-four decision, Justices Black, Douglas, Murphy and Rutledge dissenting. The California Constitution and penal code provide that the failure of the defendant in a criminal prosecution to explain or deny by his testimony any evidence against him, whether he takes the stand or not, may be commented upon by the court and counsel and may be considered by the court and jury. In upholding these provisions the majority, relying upon the judicial history of the Fourteenth Amendment, refused to hold that the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment drew all the guaranties of the federal Bill of Rights under its protection. The dissenting justices contended that the framers and ratifiers of the Amendment intended to safeguard against state action all the privileges and immunities contained in the first eight amendments and deplored the consequences of "the court's practice of substituting its own concepts of decency and fundamental justice for the language of the Bill of Rights as its point of departure in interpreting and enforcing that Bill of Rights." In the course of a concurring opinion Mr. Justice Frankfurter said: "Even the boldest innovator would shrink from suggesting to more than half the states that they may no longer initiate prosecutions without indictment by grand jury, or that thereafter all the states of the Union must furnish a jury of twelve for every case involving a claim above twenty dollars." For an extensive analysis and criticism from the historical standpoint, of the issues raised by the dissent, see Fairman and Morrison, Does the Fourteenth Amendment Incorporate the Bill of Rights? 2 Stanf. L. Rev. 5, 140 (1949). See also Flack, The Adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment (1908); Kendrick, The Journal of the Joint Committee of Fifteen on Reconstruction, 39th Congress, 1865-1867 (1914); Green, The Bill of Rights, the Fourteenth Amendment and the Supreme Court, 46 Mich. L. Rev. 869 (1948); Green, The Supreme Court, the Bill of Rights and the States, 97 U. of Pa. L. Rev. 608 (1949).

2. In Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U. S. 278, 80 L. ed. 682, 56 Sup. Ct. 461 (1936) the conviction of three Negroes for murder solely upon the basis of confessions obtained by brutality and physical torture was held to constitute a denial of due process of law. Chief Justice Hughes said for a unanimous court that while the state was free to regulate the procedure of its courts in accordance with its own conceptions of policy, it was limited by the requirements of due process of law. "Because a state may dispense with a jury trial, it does not follow that it may substitute trial by ordeal. The rack and torture chamber may not be substituted for the witness stand." Moreover, the failure of counsel for the accused, who had objected to the admissibility of the confessions, to move for their exclusion after they had been introduced and the fact of coercion had been proved, was no bar to relief. Petitioners' complaint here was not of "the commission of mere error, but of a wrong so fundamental that it made the whole proceeding a mere pretense of a trial and rendered the conviction and sentence wholly void." The same result was reached in Ashcraft v. Tennessee, 322 U. S. 143, 88 L. ed. 1192, 64 Sup. Ct. 921 (1944) where the prisoner confessed to a murder after thirty-six hours of continuous questioning under powerful electric lights, by relays of officers, experienced investigators and highly trained lawyers, though without any physical torture.

Other cases in which confessions were found to be procured under circumstances violative of the due process clause are Chambers v. Florida, 309 U. S. 227, 84 L. ed. 716, 60 Sup. Ct. 742 (1940); White v. Texas, 309 U. S. 631, 84 L. ed. 989, 60 Sup. Ct. 706 (1940); Canty v. Alabama, 309 U. S. 629, 84 L. ed. 988, 60 Sup. Ct. 612 (1940); White v. Texas, 310 U. S. 530, 84 L. ed. 1342, 60 Sup. Ct. 1032 (1940); Vernon v. Alabama, 313 U. S. 547, 85 L. ed. 1513, 61 Sup. Ct. 1092 (1941); Lomax v. Texas, 313 U. S. 544, 85 L. ed. 1511, 61 Sup. Ct. 956 (1941); Ward v. Texas, 316 U. S. 547, 86 L. ed. 1663, 62 Sup. Ct. 1139 (1942); Malinski v. New York, 324 U. S. 401, 89 L. ed. 1029, 65 Sup. Ct. 781 (1945); Haley v. Ohio, 332 U. S. 596, 92 L. ed. 224, 68 Sup. Ct. 302 (1948); Watts v. Indiana, 338 U. S. 49, 93 L. ed. 1801, 69 Sup. Ct. 1347 (1949); Turner v. Pennsylvania, 338 U. S. 62, 93 L. ed. 1810, 69 Sup. Ct. 1352 (1949); Harris v. South Carolina, 338 U. S. 68, 93 L. ed. 1815, 69 Sup. Ct. 1354 (1949); Johnson v. Pennsylvania, 340 U. S. 881, 95 L. ed. 640, 71 Sup. Ct. 191 (1950).

Confessions were found to have been procured under circumstances not violative of the due process clause in Lyons v. Oklahoma, 322 U. S. 596, 88 L. ed. 1481, 64 Sup. Ct. 1208 (1944); Lisenba v. California, 314 U. S. 219, 86 L. ed. 166, 62 Sup. Ct. 280 (1941); Gallegos v. Nebraska, 342 U. S. 55, 96 L. ed. 86, 72 Sup. Ct. 141 (1951).

3. Although the nature of the due process clause gives wide range to the reviewing power of the Supreme Court over convictions in state courts, the court does not have the extent of corrective power over state courts that it has over the lower federal courts. In McNabb v. United States, 318 U. S. 332, 87 L. ed. 819, 63 Sup. Ct. 608 (1943) the record showed that confession to a murder was obtained while the prisoners were being held by federal officers for a two-day period before being brought before any judicial officer for arraignment, as required by federal statutes. During this period of apparently illegal confinement they were subjected to unremitting questioning, without benefit of counsel. In reversing a conviction based upon the confession thus obtained, the court said, through Mr. Justice Frankfurter: "Judicial supervision of the administration of criminal justice in the federal courts implies the duty of establishing and maintaining civilized standards of procedure and evidence. Such standards are not satisfied merely by observance of those minimal historic safeguards for securing trial by reason which are summarized as 'due process of law' and below which we reach what is really trial by force. Moreover, review by this court of state action expressing its notion of what will best further its own security in the administration of criminal justice demands appropriate respect for the deliberative judgment of a state in so basic an exercise of its jurisdiction. Considerations of large policy in making the necessary accommodations in our federal system are wholly irrelevant to the formulation and application of proper standards for the enforcement of the federal criminal law in the federal courts."

In United States v. Carignan, 342 U. S. 36, 96 L. ed. 48, 72 Sup. Ct. 97 (1951) the court refused to extend the McNabb fixed rule of exclusion to statements to police or wardens concerning other crimes while prisoners are legally in detention on criminal charges. "Complete protection is afforded the civil rights of an accused who makes an involuntary confession or statement when such confession must be excluded by the judge or disregarded by the jury upon proof that it is not voluntary." Here the court, affirming the reversal of a conviction for murder, rested its decision on the ground that, while the admission of the confession did not violate due process or federal rules of evidence because made before arraignment and while defendant was legally in detention on another charge, the trial judge erred in refusing to admit defendant's testimony relating to its alleged involuntary character. The purpose of the McNabb rule was said to be "to abolish unlawful detention." Justices Douglas, Black and Frankfurter, concurring in the result, said that the confession should not have been admitted. "The rule of evidence we announce today gives sanction to a police practice which makes detention the means of investigation. Therein lies its vice."

4. In Stroble v. California, 343 U. S. 181, 96 L. ed. 872, 72 Sup. Ct. 599 (1952), affirming by a six-to-three vote a state court conviction for murder, the court considered five separate grounds for petitioner's claim that his conviction lacked due process of law: (1) use of a coerced confession; (2) impossibility of a fair trial because of inflammatory newspaper reports inspired by the district attorney; (3) deprivation of effective counsel when trial by jury was waived on the issue of insanity; (4) unwarranted delay in arraignment, and (5) unjustifiable refusal of prosecuting officers to permit an attorney to consult petitioner shortly after his arrest.

5. Convictions in state courts obtained by prosecuting officials through fraud or trickery, misrepresentation as to the consequences of a plea of guilty, the knowing use of perjured testimony, or deliberate suppression of testimony favorable to the accused, constitute a violation of due process. Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103, 79 L. ed. 791, 55 Sup. Ct. 340, 98 A. L. R. 406 (1935); Smith v. O'Grady, 312 U. S. 329, 85 L. ed. 859, 61 Sup. Ct. 572 (1941); Pyle v. Kansas, 317 U. S. 213, 87 L. ed. 214, 63 Sup. Ct. 177 (1942). See the annotation in 87 L. ed. 217 (1943).

ROCHIN v. CALIFORNIA.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1952.

342 U. S. 165, 96 L. ed. 183, 72 Sup. Ct. 205, 25 A. L. R. (2d) 1396.

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER delivered the opinion of the Court.

Having "some information that [the petitioner here] was selling narcotics," three deputy sheriffs of the County of Los Angeles, on the morning of July 1, 1949, made for the two-story dwelling house in which Rochin lived with his mother, his common-law wife, brothers and sisters. Finding the outside door open, they entered and then forced open the door to Rochin's room on the second floor. Inside they found petitioner sitting partly dressed on the side of the bed, upon which his wife was lying. On a "night stand" beside the bed the deputies spied two capsules. When asked "Whose stuff is this?" Rochin seized the capsules and put them in his mouth. A struggle ensued, in the course of which the three officers "jumped upon him" and attempted to extract the capsules. The force they applied proved unavailing against Rochin's resistance. He was hand-cuffed and taken to a hospital. At the direction of one of the officers a doctor forced invito an emetic solution into Rochin's stomach by means of a tube. This "stomach pumping" produced vomiting. In the vomited matter were found two capsules which proved to contain morphine.

Rochin was brought to trial before a California Superior Court, sitting without a jury, on the charge of possessing "a preparation of morphine" in violation of the California Health and Safety Code 1947, § 11500. Rochin was convicted and sentenced to sixty days' imprisonment. The chief evidence against him was the two capsules. They were admitted over petitioner's objection, although the means of obtaining them was frankly set forth in the testimony by one of the deputies, substantially as here narrated.

On appeal, the District Court of Appeal affirmed the conviction, despite the finding that the officers "were guilty of unlawfully breaking into and entering defendant's room and were guilty of unlawfully assaulting and battering defendant while in the room," and "were guilty of unlawfully assaulting, battering, torturing and falsely imprisoning the defendant at the alleged hospital." 101 Cal. App. 2d 140, 143, 225 P. 2d 1, 3. One of the three judges, while finding that "the record in this case reveals a shocking series of violations of constitutional rights," concurred only because he felt bound by the decisions of his Supreme Court. These, he asserted, "have been looked upon by law enforcement officers as an encouragement, if not an invitation, to the commission of such lawless acts." Ibid. The Supreme Court of California denied without opinion Rochin's petition for a hearing. Two justices dissented from this denial, and in doing so expressed themselves thus: "* * * a conviction which rests upon evidence of incriminating objects obtained from the body of the accused by physical abuse is as invalid as a conviction which rests upon a verbal confession extracted from him by such abuse. * * * Had the evidence forced from defendant's lips consisted of an oral confession that he illegally possessed a drug * * * he would have the protection of the rule of law which excludes coerced confessions from evidence. But because the evidence forced from his lips consisted of real objects the People of this state are permitted to base a conviction upon it. [We] find no valid ground of distinction between a verbal confession extracted by physical abuse and a confession wrested from defendant's body by physical abuse." 101 Cal. App. 2d 143, 149-150, 225 P. 2d 913, 917-918.

This Court granted certiorari, 341 U. S. 939, because a serious question is raised as to the limitations which the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment imposes on the conduct of criminal proceedings by the States.

In our federal system the administration of criminal justice is predominantly committed to the care of the States. The power to define crimes belongs to Congress only as an appropriate means of carrying into execution its limited grant of legislative powers. U. S. Const. Art. I, § 8, cl. 18. Broadly speaking, crimes in the United States are what the laws of the individual States make them, subject to the limitations of Art. I, § 10, cl. 1, in the original Constitution, prohibiting bills of attainder and ex post facto laws, and of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments.

These limitations, in the main, concern not restrictions upon the power of the States to define crime, except in the restricted area where Federal authority has pre-empted the field, but restrictions upon the manner in which the States may enforce their penal code. Accordingly, in reviewing a State criminal conviction under a claim of right guaranteed by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, from which is derived the most far-reaching and most frequent federal basis of challenging State criminal justice, "we must be deeply mindful of the responsibilities of the States for the enforcement of criminal laws, and exercise with due humility our merely negative function in subjecting convictions from state courts to the very narrow scrutiny which the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment authorizes." Malinski v. New York, 324 U. S. 401, 412, 418. Due process of law, "itself a historical product," Jackman v. Rosenbaum Co., 260 U. S. 22, 31, is not to be turned into a destructive dogma against the States in the administration of their systems of criminal justice.

However, this Court too has its responsibility. Regard for the requirements of the Due Process Clause "inescapably imposes upon this Court an exercise of judgment upon the whole course of the proceedings [resulting in a conviction] in order to ascertain whether they offend those canons of decency and fairness which express the notions of justice of English speaking peoples even toward those charged with the most heinous offenses." Malinski v. New York, supra, 324 U. S. at pages 416-417. These standards of justice are not authoritatively formulated anywhere as though they were specifics. Due process of law is a summarized constitutional guarantee of respect for those personal immunities which, as Mr. Justice Cardozo twice wrote for the Court, are "so rooted in the traditions and conscience of our people as to be ranked as fundamental," Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97, 105, or are "implicit in the concept of ordered liberty." Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U. S. 319, 325.

The Court's function in the observance of this settled conception of the Due Process Clause does not leave us without adequate guides in subjecting State criminal procedures to constitutional judgment. In dealing not with the machinery of government but with human rights, the absence of formal exactitude, or want of fixity of meaning, is not an unusual or even regrettable attribute of constitutional provisions. Words being symbols do not speak without a gloss. On the one hand the gloss may be the deposit of history, whereby a term gains technical content. Thus the requirements of the Sixth and Seventh Amendments for trial by jury in the Federal courts have a rigid meaning. No changes or chances can alter the content of the verbal symbol of "jury"—a body of twelve men who must reach a unanimous conclusion if the verdict is to go against the defendant. On the other hand, the gloss of some of the verbal symbols of the Constitution does not give them a fixed technical content. It exacts a continuing process of application.

When the gloss has thus not been fixed but is a function of the process of judgment, the judgment is bound to fall differently at different times and differently at the same time through different judges. Thus it is that even more specific provisions, such as the guaranty of freedom of speech and the detailed protection against unreasonable searches and seizures, have inevitably evoked as sharp divisions in this Court as the least specific and most comprehensive protection of liberties, the Due Process Clause.

The vague contours of the Due Process Clause do not leave judges at large. We may not draw on our merely personal and private notions and disregard the limits that bind judges in their judicial function. Even though the concept of due process of law is not final and fixed, these limits are derived from considerations that are fused in the whole nature of our judicial process. See Cardozo, The Nature of the Judicial Process; The Growth of the Law; The Paradoxes of Legal Science. These are considerations deeply rooted in reason and in the compelling traditions of the legal profession. The Due Process Clause places upon this Court the duty of exercising a judgment, within the narrow confines of judicial power in reviewing State convictions, upon interests of society pushing in opposite directions.

Due process of law thus conceived is not to be derided as resort to a revival of "natural law." To believe that this judicial exercise of judgment could be avoided by freezing "due process of law" at some fixed stage of time or thought is to suggest that the most important aspect of constitutional adjudication is a function for inanimate machines and not for judges, for whom the independence safeguarded by Article III of the Constitution was designed and who are presumably guided by established standards of judicial behavior. Even cybernetics has not yet made that haughty claim. To practice the requisite detachment and to achieve sufficient objectivity no doubt demands of judges the habit of self-discipline and self-criticism, incertitude that one's own views are incontestable and alert tolerance toward views not shared. But these are precisely the presuppositions of our judicial process. They are precisely the qualities society has a right to expect from those entrusted with ultimate judicial power.

Restraints on our jurisdiction are self-imposed only in the sense that there is from our decisions no immediate appeal short of impeachment or constitutional amendment. But that does not make due process of law a matter of judicial caprice. The faculties of the Due Process Clause may be definite and vague, but the mode of their ascertainment is not self-willed. In each case "due process of law" requires an evaluation based on a disinterested inquiry pursued in the spirit of science, on a balanced order of facts exactly and fairly stated, on the detached consideration of conflicting claims, see Hudson County Water Co. v. McCarter, 209 U. S. 349, 355, on a judgment not ad hoc and episodic but duly mindful of reconciling the needs both of continuity and of change in any progressive society.

Applying these general considerations to the circumstances of the present case, we are compelled to conclude that the proceedings by which this conviction was obtained do more than offend some fastidious squeamishness or private sentimentalism about combatting crime too energetically. It is conduct that shocks the conscience. Illegally breaking into the privacy of the petitioner, the struggle to open his mouth and remove what was there, the forcible extraction of his stomach's contents—this course of proceeding by agents of government to obtain evidence is bound to offend even hardened sensibilities. They are methods too close to the rack and the screw to permit of constitutional differentiation.

It has long since ceased to be true that due process of law is heedless of the means by which otherwise relevant and credible evidence is obtained. It was not true even before the series of recent cases enforced the constitutional principle that the States may not base convictions upon confessions, however much verified, but obtained by coercion. These decisions are not arbitrary exceptions to the comprehensive right of States to fashion their own rules of evidence for criminal trials. They are not sports in our constitutional law but applications of a general principle. They are only instances of the general requirement that States in their prosecutions respect certain decencies of civilized conduct. Due process of law, as a historic and generative principle, precludes defining, and thereby confining, these standards of conduct more precisely than to say that prosecutions cannot be brought about by methods that offend "a sense of justice." See Mr. Chief Justice Hughes, speaking for a unanimous Court in Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U. S. 278, 285-286. It would be a stultification of the responsibility which the course of constitutional history has cast upon this Court to hold that in order to convict a man the police cannot extract by force what is in his mind but can extract what is in his stomach.

To attempt in this case to distinguish what lawyers call "real evidence" from verbal evidence is to ignore the reasons for excluding coerced confessions. Use of involuntary verbal confessions in State criminal trials is constitutionally obnoxious not only because of their unreliability. They are inadmissible under the Due Process Clause even though statements contained in them may be independently established as true. Coerced confessions offend the community's sense of fair play and decency. So here, to sanction the brutal conduct which naturally enough was condemned by the court whose judgment is before us, would be to afford brutality the cloak of law. Nothing would be more calculated to discredit law and thereby to brutalize the temper of a society.

In deciding this case we do not heedlessly bring into question decisions in many States dealing with essentially different, even if related, problems. We therefore put to one side cases which have arisen in the State courts through use of modern methods and devices for discovering wrongdoers and bringing them to book. It does not fairly represent these decisions to suggest that they legalize force so brutal and so offensive to human dignity in securing evidence from a suspect as is revealed by this record. Indeed the California Supreme Court has not sanctioned this mode of securing a conviction. It merely exercised its discretion to decline a review of the conviction. All the California judges who have expressed themselves in this case have condemned the conduct in the strongest language.

We are not unmindful that hypothetical situations can be conjured up, shading imperceptibly from the circumstances of this case and by gradations producing practical differences despite seemingly logical extensions. But the Constitution is "intended to preserve practical and substantial rights, not to maintain theories." Davis v. Mills, 194 U. S. 451, 457.

On the facts of this case the conviction of the petitioner has been obtained by methods that offend the Due Process Clause. The judgment below must be reversed. Reversed.

MR. JUSTICE MINTON took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

MR. JUSTICE BLACK, concurring.

Adamson v. California, 332 U. S. 46, 68-123, sets out reasons for my belief that state as well as federal courts and law enforcement officers must obey the Fifth Amendment's command that "No person * * * shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself." I think a person is compelled to be a witness against himself not only when he is compelled to testify, but also when as here, incriminating evidence is forcibly taken from him by a contrivance of modern science. Cf. Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616; Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 562; Bram v. United States, 168 U. S. 532; Chambers v. Florida, 309 U. S. 227. California convicted this petitioner by using against him evidence obtained in this manner, and I agree with MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS that the case should be reversed on this ground.

In the view of the majority of the Court, however, the Fifth Amendment imposes no restraint of any kind on the states. They nevertheless hold that California's use of this evidence violated the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Since they hold as I do in this case, I regret my inability to accept their interpretation without protest. But I believe that faithful adherence to the specific guarantees in the Bill of Rights insures a more permanent protection of individual liberty than that which can be afforded by the nebulous standards stated by the majority.

What the majority hold is that the Due Process Clause empowers this Court to nullify any state law if its application "shocks the conscience," offends "a sense of justice" or runs counter to the "decencies of civilized conduct." The majority emphasize that these statements do not refer to their own consciences or to their senses of justice and decency. For we are told that "[w]e may not draw on our merely personal and private notions"; our judgment must be grounded on "considerations deeply rooted in reason and in the compelling traditions of the legal profession." We are further admonished to measure the validity of state practices, not by our reason, or by the traditions of the legal profession, but by "the community's sense of fair play and decency"; by the "traditions and conscience of our people"; or by "those canons of decency and fairness which express the notions of justice of English-speaking peoples." These canons are made necessary, it is said, because of "interests of society pushing in opposite directions."

If the Due Process Clause does vest this Court with such unlimited power to invalidate laws, I am still in doubt as to why we should consider only the notions of English-speaking peoples to determine what are immutable and fundamental principles of justice. Moreover, one may well ask what avenues of investigation are open to discover "canons" of conduct so universally favored that this Court should write them into the Constitution? All we are told is that the discovery must be made by an "evaluation based on a disinterested inquiry pursued in the spirit of science, on a balanced order of facts." * * *

What paralyzing role this same philosophy will play in the future economic affairs of this country is impossible to predict. Of even graver concern, however, is the use of the philosophy to nullify the Bill of Rights. I long ago concluded that the accordion-like qualities of this philosophy must inevitably imperil all the individual liberty safeguards specifically enumerated in the Bill of Rights. Reflection and recent decisions of this Court sanctioning abridgment of the freedom of speech and press have strengthened this conclusion.

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, concurring.

The evidence obtained from this accused's stomach would be admissible in the majority of states where the question has been raised. So far as the reported cases reveal, the only states which would probably exclude the evidence would be Arkansas, Iowa, Michigan, and Missouri. Yet the Court now says that the rule which the majority of the states have fashioned violates the "decencies of civilized conduct." To that I cannot agree. It is a rule formulated by responsible courts with judges as sensitive as we are to the proper standards for law administration.

As an original matter it might be debatable whether the provision in the Fifth Amendment that no person "shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself" serves the ends of justice. Not all civilized legal procedures recognize it. But the choice was made by the Framers, a choice which sets a standard for legal trials in this country. The Framers made it a standard of due process for prosecutions by the Federal Government. If it is a requirement of due process for a trial in the federal courthouse, it is impossible for me to say it is not a requirement of due process for a trial in the state courthouse. That was the issue recently surveyed in Adamson v. California, 332 U. S. 46. The Court rejected the view that compelled testimony should be excluded and held in substance that the accused in a state trial can be forced to testify against himself. I disagree. Of course an accused can be compelled to be present at the trial, to stand, to sit, to turn this way or that, and to try on a cap or a coat. See Holt v. United States, 218 U. S. 245, 252-253. But I think that words taken from his lips, capsules taken from his stomach, blood taken from his veins are all inadmissible provided they are taken from him without his consent. They are inadmissible because of the command of the Fifth Amendment.

That is an unequivocal, definite and workable rule of evidence for state and federal courts. But we cannot in fairness free the state courts from that command and yet excoriate them for flouting the "decencies of civilized conduct" when they admit the evidence. That is to make the rule turn not on the Constitution but on the idiosyncrasies of the judges who sit here.

The damage of the view sponsored by the Court in this case may not be conspicuous here. But it is part of the same philosophy that produced Betts v. Brady, 316 U. S. 455, denying counsel to an accused in a state trial against the command of the Sixth Amendment and Wolf v. Colorado, 338 U. S. 25, allowing evidence obtained as a result of a search and seizure that is illegal under the Fourth Amendment to be introduced in a state trial. It is part of the process of erosion of civil rights of the citizen in recent years.

NOTE

1. At a trial of three defendants (Stein, Wissner and Cooper) in a New York state court on charges of felony murder, the evidence included confessions by two of the defendants (Cooper and Stein), implicating all three defendants. All objected to introduction of each confession on the ground that it was coerced. Wissner further moved as to each that, if Cooper's and Stein's confessions were admitted, all reference to him be stricken from them. The trial court heard evidence in the presence of the jury as to the issue of coercion and left determination of the question to the jury, under instructions to consider the confessions only if it found them to be voluntary. None of the defendants testified. The jury returned a general verdict of guilty and defendants were sentenced to death. The New York Court of Appeals affirmed. The defendants contended that the use of these confessions created a constitutional infirmity which required reversal. On certiorari, however, the Supreme Court upheld the convictions, holding that due process is not violated by state practice under which the question of voluntariness of a confession is left to the jury for ultimate determination by a general verdict, even though in case of a verdict of guilty it cannot be known whether or not the confession issue was decided in accused's favor. The jury could, without constitutional error, either find that the confessions were admissible or, finding them not admissible, convict upon other evidence; and a conviction upon a general verdict of guilty is not subject to reversal merely because the jury might have rejected the confessions as coerced. Nor is due process denied by state practice under which the accused, if he does testify as to police coercion in obtaining a confession, is subject to cross-examination testing his credibility, even if such cross-examination discloses a prior criminal record. The admission of the confessions was further held not to violate any federal right of defendant Wissner, even if the confessions were considered to have been involuntary. Justices Black, Frankfurter and Douglas dissented in separate opinions. Stein v. New York, 346 U. S. 156, 97 L. ed. 1522, 73 Sup. Ct. 1077 (1953). The case is discussed in Gorfinkel, The Fourteenth Amendment and State Criminal Proceedings—"Ordered Liberty" or "Just Deserts," 41 Cal. L. Rev. 672 (1953).

PALCO v. CONNECTICUT.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1937.
302 U. S. 319, 82 L. ed. 288, 58 Sup. Ct. 149.

MR. JUSTICE CARDOZO delivered the opinion of the Court.

A statute of Connecticut permitting appeals in criminal cases to be taken by the state is challenged by appellant as an infringement of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. Whether the challenge should be upheld is now to be determined.

Appellant was indicted in Fairfield County, Connecticut, for the crime of murder in the first degree. A jury found him guilty of murder in the second degree, and he was sentenced to confinement in the state prison for life. Thereafter the State of Connecticut, with the permission of the judge presiding at the trial, gave notice of appeal to the Supreme Court of Errors. This it did pursuant to an act adopted in 1886 * * *. Public Acts, 1886, p. 560; now § 6494 of the General Statutes. Upon such appeal, the Supreme Court of Errors reversed the judgment and ordered a new trial. State v. Palko, 121 Conn. 669; 186 Atl. 657. It found that there had been error of law to the prejudice of the state (1) in excluding testimony as to a confession by defendant; (2) in excluding testimony upon cross-examination of defendant to impeach his credibility, and (3) in the instructions to the jury as to the difference between first and second degree murder.

Pursuant to the mandate of the Supreme Court of Errors, defendant was brought to trial again. Before a jury was impaneled and also at later stages of the case he made the objection that the effect of the new trial was to place him twice in jeopardy for the same offense, and in so doing to violate the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. Upon the overruling of the objection the trial proceeded. The jury returned a verdict of murder in the first degree, and the court sentenced the defendant to the punishment of death. The Supreme Court of Errors affirmed the judgment of conviction, 122 Conn. 529; 191 Atl. 320, adhering to a decision announced in 1894, State v. Lee, 65 Conn. 265; 30 Atl. 1110, which upheld the challenged statute. Cf. State v. Muolo, 118 Conn. 373; 172 Atl. 875. The case is here upon appeal. 28 U. S. C., § 344.

1. The execution of the sentence will not deprive appellant of his life without the process of law assured to him by the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution.

The argument for appellant is that whatever is forbidden by the Fifth Amendment is forbidden by the Fourteenth also. The Fifth Amendment, which is not directed to the states, but solely to the federal government, creates immunity from double jeopardy. No person shall be "subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb." The Fourteenth Amendment ordains, "nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." To retry a defendant, though under one indictment and only one, subjects him, it is said, to double jeopardy in violation of the Fifth Amendment, if the prosecution is one on behalf of the United States. From this the consequence is said to follow that there is a denial of life or liberty without due process of law, if the prosecution is one on behalf of the People of a State. Thirty-five years ago a like argument was made to this court in Dreyer v. Illinois, 187 U. S. 71, 85, and was passed without consideration of its merits as unnecessary to a decision. The question is now here.

We do not find it profitable to mark the precise limits of the prohibition of double jeopardy in federal prosecutions. The subject was much considered in Kepner v. United States, 195 U. S. 100, decided in 1904 by a closely divided court. The view was there expressed for a majority of the court that the prohibition was not confined to jeopardy in a new and independent case. It forbade jeopardy in the same case if the new trial was at the instance of the government and not upon defendant's motion. Cf. Trono v. United States, 199 U. S. 521. All this may be assumed for the purpose of the case at hand, though the dissenting opinions (195 U. S. 100, 134, 137) show how much was to be said in favor of a different ruling. Right-minded men, as we learn from those opinions, could reasonably, even if mistakenly, believe that a second trial was lawful in prosecutions subject to the Fifth Amendment, if it was all in the same case. Even more plainly, right-minded men could reasonably believe that in espousing that conclusion they were not favoring a practice repugnant to the conscience of mankind. Is double jeopardy in such circumstances, if double jeopardy it must be called, a denial of due process forbidden to the states? The tyranny of labels, Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U. S. 97, 114, must not lead us to leap to a conclusion that a word which in one set of facts may stand for oppression or enormity is of like effect in every other.

We have said that in appellant's view the Fourteenth Amendment is to be taken as embodying the prohibitions of the Fifth. His thesis is even broader. Whatever would be a violation of the original bill of rights (Amendments I to VIII) if done by the federal government is now equally unlawful by force of the Fourteenth Amendment if done by a state. There is no such general rule.

The Fifth Amendment provides, among other things, that no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury. This Court has held that, in prosecutions by a state, presentment or indictment by a grand jury may give way to informations at the instance of a public officer. Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516; Gaines v. Washington, 277 U. S. 81, 86. The Fifth Amendment provides also that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself. This court has said that, in prosecutions by a state, the exemption will fail if the state elects to end it. Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 106, 111, 112. Cf. Snyder v. Massachusetts, supra, p. 105; Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U. S. 278, 285. The Sixth Amendment calls for a jury trial in criminal cases and the Seventh for a jury trial in civil cases at common law where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars. This court has ruled that consistently with those amendments trial by jury may be modified by a state or abolished altogether. Walker v.

Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90; Maxwell v. Dow, 176 U. S. 581; New York Central R. Co. v. White, 243 U. S. 188, 208; Wagner Electric Mfg. Co. v. Lyndon, 262 U. S. 226, 232. As to the Fourth Amendment, one should refer to Weeks v. United States, 232 U. S. 383, 398, and as to other provisions of the Sixth, to West v. Louisiana, 194 U. S. 258.

On the other hand, the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment may make it unlawful for a state to abridge by its statutes the freedom of speech which the first Amendment safeguards against encroachment by the Congress, De Jonge v. Oregon, 299 U. S. 353, 364; Herndon v. Lowry, 301 U. S. 242, 259; or the like freedom of the press, Grosjean v. American Press Co., 297 U. S. 233; Near v. Minnesota ex rel. Olson, 283 U. S. 697, 707; or the free exercise of religion, Hamilton v. Regents, 293 U. S. 245, 262; cf. Grosjean v. American Press Co., supra; Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U. S. 510; or the right of peaceable assembly, without which speech would be unduly trammelled, De Jonge v. Oregon, supra; Herndon v. Lowry, supra; or the right of one accused of crime to the benefit of counsel, Powell v. Alabama, 287 U. S. 45. In these and other situations immunities that are valid as against the federal government by force of the specific pledges of particular amendments have been found to be implicit in the concept of ordered liberty, and thus, through the Fourteenth Amendment, become valid as against the states.

The line of division may seem to be wavering and broken if there is a hasty catalogue of the cases on the one side and the other. Reflection and analysis will induce a different view. There emerges the perception of a rationalizing principle which gives to discrete instances a proper order and coherence. The right to trial by jury and the immunity from prosecution except as the result of an indictment may have value and importance. Even so, they are not of the very essence of a scheme of ordered liberty. To abolish them is not to violate a "principle of justice so rooted in the traditions and conscience of our people as to be ranked as fundamental." Snyder v. Massachusetts, supra, p. 105; Brown v. Mississippi, supra, p. 285; Hebert v. Louisiana, 272 U. S. 312, 316. Few would be so narrow or provincial as to maintain that a fair and enlightened system of justice would be impossible without them. What is true of jury trials and indictments is true also, as the cases show, of the immunity from compulsory self-incrimination. Twining v. New Jersey, supra. This too might be lost, and justice still be done. Indeed, today as in the past there are students of our penal system who look upon the immunity as a mischief rather than a benefit, and who would limit its scope, or destroy it altogether. No doubt there would remain the need to give protection against torture, physical or mental. Brown v. Mississippi, supra. Justice, however, would not perish if the accused were subject to a duty to respond to orderly inquiry. The exclusion of these immunities and privileges from the privileges and immunities protected against the action of the states has not been arbitrary or casual. It has been dictated by a study and appreciation of the meaning, the essential implications, of liberty itself.

We reach a different plane of social and moral values when we pass to the privileges and immunities that have been taken over from the earlier articles of the federal bill of rights and brought within the Fourteenth Amendment by a process of absorption. These in their origin were effective against the federal government alone. If the Fourteenth Amendment has absorbed them, the process of absorption has had its source in the belief that neither liberty nor justice would exist if they were sacrificed. Twining v. New Jersey, supra, p. 99. This is true, for illustration, of freedom of thought, and speech. Of that freedom one may say that it is the matrix, the indispensable condition, of nearly every other form of freedom. With rare aberrations a pervasive recognition of that truth can be traced in our history, political and legal. So it has come about that the domain of liberty, withdrawn by the Fourteenth Amendment from encroachment by the states, has been enlarged by latter-day judgments to include liberty of the mind as well as liberty of action. The extension became, indeed, a logical imperative when once it was recognized, as long ago it was, that liberty is something more than exemption from physical restraint, and that even in the field of substantive rights and duties the legislative judgment, if oppressive and arbitrary, may be overridden by the courts. Cf. Near v. Minnesota ex rel. Olson, supra; De Jonge v. Oregon, supra. Fundamental too in the concept of due process, and so in that of liberty, is the thought that condemnation shall be rendered only after trial. Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34; Blackmer v. United States, 284 U. S. 421. The hearing, moreover, must be a real one, not a sham or a pretense. Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86; Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103. For that reason, ignorant defendants in a capital case were held to have been condemned unlawfully when in truth, though not in form, they were refused the aid of counsel. Powell v. Alabama, supra, pp. 67, 68. The decision did not turn upon the fact that the benefit of counsel would have been guaranteed to the defendants by the provisions of the Sixth Amendment if they had been prosecuted in a federal court. The decision turned upon the fact that in the particular situation laid before us in the evidence the benefit of counsel was essential to the substance of a hearing.

Our survey of the cases serves, we think, to justify the statement that the dividing line between them, if not unflinching throughout its course, has been true for the most part to a unifying principle. On which side of the line the case made out by the appellant has appropriate location must be the next inquiry and the final one. Is that kind of double jeopardy to which the statute has subjected him a hardship so acute and shocking that our polity will not endure it? Does it violate those "fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at the base of all our civil and political institutions"? Hebert v. Louisiana, supra. The answer surely must be "no." What the answer would have to be if the state were permitted after a trial free from error to try the accused over again or to bring another case against him, we have no occasion to consider. We deal with the statute before us and no other. The state is not attempting to wear the accused out by a multitude of cases with accumulated trials. It asks no more than this, that the case against him shall go on until there shall be a trial free from the corrosion of substantial legal error. State v. Felch, 92 Vt. 477; 105 Atl. 23; State v. Lee, supra. This is not cruelty at all, nor even vexation in any immoderate degree. If the trial had been infected with error adverse to the accused, there might have been review at his instance, and as often as necessary to purge the vicious taint. A reciprocal privilege, subject at all times to the discretion of the presiding judge, State v. Carabetta, 106 Conn. 114; 127 Atl. 394, has now been granted to the state. There is here no seismic innovation. The edifice of justice stands, its symmetry, to many, greater than before.

2. The conviction of appellant is not in derogation of any privileges or immunities that belong to him as a citizen of the United States.

There is argument in his behalf that the privileges and immunities clause of the Fourteenth Amendment as well as the due process clause has been flouted by the judgment.

Maxwell v. Dow, supra, p. 584, gives all the answer that is necessary.

The judgment is

Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE BUTLER dissents.

NOTES

1. Not the least importance of the Palko decision lies in the fact that it gives the court's official explanation, up to the year 1937, of the reasons why some of the guaranties of the federal Bill of Rights had been classified as essential to due process of law and thus binding on the states under the Fourteenth Amendment, and others had not been deemed to be implicit in the due process concept and hence not protected against adverse state action.

2. The double jeopardy guaranty of the Fifth Amendment prevents an appeal from being taken by the government in a criminal prosecution in the federal courts and a verdict of not guilty is therefore final. United States v. Sanges, 144 U. S. 310, 36 L. ed. 445, 12 Sup. Ct. 609 (1892); United States v. Ball, 163 U. S. 662, 41 L. ed. 300, 16 Sup. Ct. 1192 (1896). If a jury is discharged for failure to agree upon a verdict, or if a verdict is not obtained for any cause whatever, retrial of the defendant does not constitute double jeopardy. United States v. Perez, 9 Wheat. 579, 6 L. ed. 165 (1824). A defendant who is convicted and procures a reversal of the judgment upon appeal thereby waives his defense of double jeopardy and at his second trial may be convicted of an offense of a higher degree than that of which he was originally convicted. Trono v. United States, 199 U. S. 521, 50 L. ed. 292, 26 Sup. Ct. 121, 4 Ann. Cas. 773 (1905).

3. At the trial of accused in a state court two participants in the crime, who in a separate trial had been found guilty but had not yet been sentenced, declined to testify for the state on the ground of self-incrimination. Thereupon the trial court granted the prosecutor's motion for a mistrial and continuance of the case pending final judgment against the witnesses. After such final judgment had been entered, the defendant was retried and convicted over his objection that he was placed in double jeopardy and denied due process of law, contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment. The Supreme Court, noting that the issue of whether such a procedure would be double jeopardy under the Fifth Amendment was not raised in the case, held that no violation of due process had resulted. The decision was rested on the doctrine of the Palko case. "Justice to either or both parties may indicate to the wise discretion of the trial judge that he declare a mistrial and require the defendant to stand trial before another jury. As in all cases involving what is or is not due process, so in this case, no hard and fast rule can be laid down. The pattern of due process is picked out in the facts and circumstances of each case. The pattern here, long in use in North Carolina, does not deny the fundamental essentials of a trial, 'the very essence of a scheme of ordered justice,' which is due process." Chief Justice Vinson and Mr. Justice Douglas delivered separate dissenting opinions and Mr. Justice Black did not participate. Brock v. North Carolina, 344 U. S. 424, 97 L. ed. 456, 73 Sup. Ct. 349 (1953).

4. The prohibition of the Fifth Amendment against the taking of private property for public use without just compensation is applicable to the states through the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Chicago B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. 581 (1897). See, however, Roberts v. New York, 295 U. S. 264, 79 L. ed. 1429, 55 Sup. Ct. 689 (1935), holding that to constitute a taking of property without due process of law by force of a judgment in a condemnation proceeding, "the error must be gross and obvious, coming close to the boundary of arbitrary action."

5. The guaranty of the Eighth Amendment against the infliction of cruel and unusual punishments was invoked by the petitioner in Louisiana ex rel. Francis v. Resweber, 329 U. S. 459, 91 L. ed. 422, 67 Sup. Ct. 374 (1947), which involved a conviction for murder and a sentence of electrocution which, however, because of accidental failure of the mechanism, did not result in death. A majority of the court held that the new death warrant which followed the unsuccessful attempt to impose the death penalty did not amount to double jeopardy or to cruel and unusual punishment in the constitutional sense. However, Mr. Justice Reed, speaking for four justices and announcing the court's judgment, said: "Prohibition against the wanton infliction of pain has come into our law from the Bill of Rights of 1688. The identical words appear in our Eighth Amendment. The Fourteenth would prohibit by its due process clause execution by a state in a cruel manner." Four dissenting justices, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Burton, said that the judgment of the state court should be vacated and the cause remanded for further investigation as to certain material facts (including the extent, if any, to which electric current had been applied), in order to determine whether the sentence could be imposed without violating the constitutional guaranty. See also Johnson v. Dye, 175 F. (2d) 250 (C. A. 3d 1949), noted in 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 86 (1949), applying the test of the Palko case and holding that freedom from cruel and unusual punishment guaranteed by the Eighth Amendment is a basic and fundamental right which, through the Fourteenth Amendment, is protected against abridgment by the states. Judgment was reversed per curiam by the Supreme Court for failure of petitioner, who had escaped from a Georgia chain gang and was being held for interstate rendition in Pennsylvania, to exhaust remedies available in the state courts before seeking relief in a federal court. Dye v. Johnson, 338 U. S. 864, 94 L. ed. 530, 70 Sup. Ct. 146 (1949).

WOLF v. COLORADO.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1949.
338 U. S. 25, 93 L. ed. 1782, 69 Sup. Ct. 1359.

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER delivered the opinion of the Court.

The precise question for consideration is this: Does a conviction by a State court for a State offense deny the "due process of law" required by the Fourteenth Amendment, solely because evidence that was admitted at the trial was obtained under circumstances which would have rendered it inadmissible in a prosecution for violation of a federal law in a court of the United States because there deemed to be an infraction of the Fourth Amendment as applied in Weeks v. United States, 232 U. S. 383? The Supreme Court of Colorado has sustained convictions in which such evidence was admitted, 117 Colo. 279, 187 P. 2d 926; 117 Colo. 321, 187 P. 2d 928, and we brought the cases here. 333 U. S. 879.

Unlike the specific requirements and restrictions placed by the Bill of Rights (Amendments 1 to 8) upon the administration of criminal justice by federal authority, the Fourteenth Amendment did not subject criminal justice in the States to specific limitations. The notion that the "due process of law" guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment is shorthand for the first eight amendments of the Constitution and thereby incorporates them has been rejected by this Court again and again, after impressive consideration. See, e. g., Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516; Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78; Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U. S. 278; Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U. S. 319. Only the other day the Court reaffirmed this rejection after thorough reexamination of the scope and function of the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Adamson v. California, 332 U. S. 46. The issue is closed.

For purposes of ascertaining the restrictions which the Due Process Clause imposed upon the States in the enforcement of their criminal law, we adhere to the views expressed in Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U. S. 319, supra. That decision speaks to us with the great weight of the authority, particularly in matters of civil liberty, of a court that included Mr. Chief Justice Hughes, Mr. Justice Brandeis, Mr. Justice Stone and Mr. Justice Cardozo, to speak only of the dead. In rejecting the suggestion that the Due Process Clause incorporated the original Bill of Rights, Mr. Justice Cardozo reaffirmed on behalf of that Court a different but deeper and more pervasive conception of the Due Process Clause. This Clause exacts from the States for the lowliest and the most outcast all that is "implicit in the concept of 'ordered liberty.'" 302 U. S. at 325.

Due process of law thus conveys neither formal nor fixed nor narrow requirements. It is the compendious expression for all those rights which the courts must enforce because they are basic to our free society.

But basic rights do not become petrified as of any one time, even though, as a matter of human experience, some may not too rhetorically be called eternal verities. It is of the very nature of a free society to advance in its standards of what is deemed reasonable and right. Representing as it does a living principle, due process is not confined within a permanent catalogue of what may at a given time be deemed the limits or the essentials of fundamental rights.

To rely on a tidy formula for the easy determination of what is a fundamental right for purposes of legal enforcement may satisfy a longing for certainty but ignores the movements of a free society. It belittles the scale of the conception of due process. The real clue to the problem confronting the judiciary in the application of the Due Process Clause is not to ask where the line is once and for all to be drawn but to recognize that it is for the Court to draw it by the gradual and empiric process of "inclusion and exclusion." Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 104. This was the Court's insight when first called upon to consider the problem; to this insight the Court has on the whole been faithful as case after case has come before it since Davidson v. New Orleans was decided.

The security of one's privacy against arbitrary intrusion by the police—which is at the core of the Fourth Amendment—is basic to a free society. It is therefore implicit in "the concept of ordered liberty" and as such enforceable against the States through the Due Process Clause. The knock at the door, whether by day or by night, as a prelude to a search, without authority of law but solely on the authority of the police, did not need the commentary of recent history to be condemned as inconsistent with the conception of human rights enshrined in the history and the basic constitutional documents of English-speaking peoples.

Accordingly, we have no hesitation in saying that were a State affirmatively to sanction such police incursion into privacy it would run counter to the guaranty of the Fourteenth Amendment. But the ways of enforcing such a basic right raise questions of a different order. How such arbitrary conduct should be checked, what remedies against it should be afforded, the means by which the right should be made effective, are all questions that are not to be so dogmatically answered as to preclude the varying solutions which spring from an allowable range of judgment, for these are issues not susceptible of quantitative solutions. In Weeks v. United States, supra, this Court held that in a federal prosecution the Fourth Amendment barred the use of evidence secured through an illegal search and seizure. This ruling was made for the first time in 1914. It was not derived from the explicit requirements of the Fourth Amendment; it was not based on legislation expressing Congressional policy in the enforcement of the Constitution. The decision was a matter of judicial implication. Since then it has been frequently applied and we stoutly adhere to it. But the immediate question is whether the basic right to protection against arbitrary intrusion by the police demands the exclusion of logically relevant evidence obtained by an unreasonable search and seizure because, in a federal prosecution for a federal crime, it would be excluded. As a matter of inherent reason, one would suppose this to be an issue as to which men with complete devotion to the protection of the right of privacy might give different answers. When we find that in fact most of the English-speaking world does not regard as vital to such protection the exclusion of evidence thus obtained, we must hesitate to treat this remedy as an essential ingredient of the right. The contrariety of views of the States is particularly impressive in view of the careful reconsideration which they have given the problem in the light of the Weeks decision.

I. Before the Weeks decision 27 States had passed on the admissibility of evidence obtained by unlawful search and seizure.

(a) Of these, 26 States opposed the Weeks doctrine. * * *

(b) Of these, 1 State anticipated the Weeks doctrine. * * *

II. Since the Weeks decision 47 States all told have passed on the Weeks doctrine. * * *

(a) Of these, 20 passed on it for the first time.

(1) Of the foregoing States, 6 followed the Weeks doctrine.
* * *

(2) Of the foregoing States, 14 rejected the Weeks doctrine.
* * *

(b) Of these, 26 States reviewed prior decisions contrary to the Weeks doctrine.

(1) Of these, 10 States have followed Weeks, overruling or distinguishing their prior decisions. * * *

(2) Of these, 16 States adhered to their prior decisions against Weeks. * * *

(c) Of these, 1 State adhered to its prior formulation of the Weeks doctrine. * * *

III. As of today 30 States reject the Weeks doctrine, 17 States are in agreement with it. * * *

IV. Of 10 jurisdictions within the United Kingdom and the British Commonwealth of Nations which have passed on the question, none has held evidence obtained by illegal search and seizure inadmissible.
* * *

The jurisdictions which have rejected the Weeks doctrine have not left the right to privacy without other means of protection. Indeed, the exclusion of evidence is a remedy which directly serves only to protect those upon whose person or premises something incriminating has been found. We cannot, therefore, regard it as a departure from basic standards to remand such persons, together with those who emerge scatheless from a search, to the remedies of private action and such protection as the internal discipline of the police, under the eyes of an alert public opinion, may afford. Granting that in practice the exclusion of evidence may be an effective way of deterring unreasonable searches, it is not for this Court to condemn as falling below the minimal standards assured by the Due Process Clause a State's reliance upon other methods which, if consistently enforced, would be equally effective. Weighty testimony against such an insistence on our own view is furnished by the opinion of Mr. Justice, then Judge, Cardozo in People v. Defore, 242 N. Y. 13, 150 N. E. 585. We cannot brush aside the experience of States which deem the incidence of such conduct by the police too slight to call for a deterrent remedy not by way of disciplinary measures but by overriding the relevant rules of evidence. There are, moreover, reasons for excluding evidence unreasonably obtained by the federal police which are less compelling in the case of police under State or local authority. The public opinion of a community can far more effectively be exerted against oppressive conduct on the part of police directly responsible to the community itself than can local opinion, sporadically aroused, be brought to bear upon remote authority pervasively exerted throughout the country.

We hold, therefore, that in a prosecution in a State court for a State crime the Fourteenth Amendment does not forbid the admission of evidence obtained by an unreasonable search and seizure. And though we have interpreted the Fourth Amendment to forbid the admission of such evidence, a different question would be presented if Congress under its legislative powers were to pass a statute purporting to negate the Weeks doctrine. We would then be faced with the problem of the respect to be accorded the legislative judgment on an issue as to which, in default of that judgment, we have been forced to depend upon our own. Problems of a converse character, also not before us, would be presented should Congress under § 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment undertake to enforce the rights there guaranteed by attempting to make the Weeks doctrine binding upon the States.

Affirmed.

[An elaborate series of tables follows showing the acceptance or rejection of the Weeks rule by the various states.]

MR. JUSTICE BLACK, concurring.

In this case petitioner was convicted of a crime in a state court on evidence obtained by a search and seizure conducted in a manner that this Court has held "unreasonable" and therefore in violation of the Fourth Amendment. And under a rule of evidence adopted by this Court evidence so obtained by federal officers cannot be used against defendants in federal courts. For reasons stated in my dissenting opinion in Adamson v. California, 332 U. S. 46, 68, I agree with the conclusion of the Court that the Fourth Amendment's prohibition of "unreasonable searches and seizures" is enforceable against the states. Consequently, I should be for reversal of this case if I thought the Fourth Amendment not only prohibited "unreasonable searches and seizures," but also, of itself, barred the use of evidence so unlawfully obtained. But I agree with what appears to be a plain implication of the Court's opinion that the federal exclusionary rule is not a command of the Fourth Amendment but is a judicially created rule of evidence which Congress might negate. See McNabb v. United States, 318 U. S. 332. This leads me to concur in the Court's judgment of affirmance.

It is not amiss to repeat my belief that the Fourteenth Amendment was intended to make the Fourth Amendment in its entirety applicable to the states. The Fourth Amendment was designed to protect people against unrestrained searches and seizures by sheriffs, policemen and other law enforcement officers. Such protection is an essential in a free society. And I am unable to agree that the protection of people from over-zealous or ruthless state officers is any less essential in a country of "ordered liberty" than is the protection of people from over-zealous or ruthless federal officers. Certainly there are far more state than federal enforcement officers and their activities, up to now, have more frequently and closely touched the intimate daily lives of people than have the activities of federal officers. A state officer's "knock at the door * * * as a prelude to a search, without authority of law," may be, as our experience shows, just as ominous to "ordered liberty" as though the knock were made by a federal officer.

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, dissenting.

I believe for the reasons stated by MR. JUSTICE BLACK in his dissent in Adamson v. California, 332 U. S. 46, 68, that the Fourth Amendment is applicable to the States. I agree with MR. JUSTICE MURPHY that the evidence obtained in violation of it must be excluded in state prosecutions as well as in federal prosecutions, since in absence of that rule of evidence the Amendment would have no effective sanction. I also agree with him that under that test this evidence was improperly admitted and that the judgments of conviction must be reversed.

MR. JUSTICE MURPHY, with whom MR. JUSTICE RUTLEDGE joins, dissenting.

It is disheartening to find so much that is right in an opinion which seems to me so fundamentally wrong. Of course I agree with the Court that the Fourteenth Amendment prohibits activities which are proscribed by the search and seizure clause of the Fourth Amendment. * * * Quite apart from the blanket application of the Bill of Rights to the States, a devotee of democracy would ill suit his name were he to suggest that his home's protection against unlicensed governmental invasion was not "of the very essence of a scheme of ordered liberty." Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U. S. 319, 325. It is difficult for me to understand how the Court can go this far and yet be unwilling to make the step which can give some meaning to the pronouncements it utters.
* * *

The conclusion is inescapable that but one remedy exists to deter violations of the search and seizure clause. That is the rule which excludes illegally obtained evidence. Only by exclusion can we impress upon the zealous prosecutor that violation of the Constitution will do him no good. And only when that point is driven home can the prosecutor be expected to emphasize the importance of observing constitutional demands in his instructions to the police. * * *

I cannot believe that we should decide due process questions by simply taking a poll of the rules in various jurisdictions, even if we follow the Palko "test." Today's decision will do inestimable harm to the cause of fair police methods in our cities and states. Even more important, perhaps, it must have tragic effect upon public respect for our judiciary. For the Court now allows what is indeed shabby business: lawlessness by officers of the law.

Since the evidence admitted was secured in violation of the Fourth Amendment, the judgment should be reversed.

[MR. JUSTICE RUTLEDGE also dissented in an opinion in which MR. JUSTICE MURPHY joined.]

NOTES

1. Petitioners sought equitable relief in a federal district court to prevent the use in state criminal proceedings then pending of evidence alleged to have been seized by state officers in violation of the Fourth Amendment as embodied in the Fourteenth Amendment. The suit was brought under the Civil Rights Act (8 U. S. C. § 43; now 42 U. S. C. § 1983; F. C. A. 42 § 1983) which provides for redress against anyone who, acting under color of state law, subjects a person to the deprivation of rights secured by the Constitution. In affirming denial of relief the Supreme Court, through Mr. Justice Frankfurter, said that federal courts should refuse to intervene in state criminal proceedings to suppress the use of evidence even when claimed to have been secured by unlawful search and seizure. No irreparable injury, clear and imminent, was threatened here. "At worst, the evidence sought to be suppressed may provide the basis for conviction of the petitioners in the New Jersey courts. Such a conviction, we have held, would not deprive them of due process of law" (citing Wolf v. Colorado). Justices Black and Clark concurred in the result. Mr. Justice Douglas dissented on the ground that evidence obtained as a result of an unreasonable search and seizure should be excluded from state as well as federal trials. "To hold first that the evidence may be admitted and second that its use may not be enjoined is to make the Fourth Amendment an empty and hollow guarantee so far as state prosecutions are concerned." Stefanelli v. Minard, 342 U. S. 117, 96 L. ed. 138, 72 Sup. Ct. 118 (1951).

2. Applying the rule of Wolf v. Colorado and distinguishing Rochin v. California, the Supreme Court affirmed a conviction for violating anti-gambling laws of California, where evidence was introduced at the trial of defendant's federal wagering tax stamp, his application therefor, and certain other evidence obtained through the following means: The police and their agents first made a key to defendant's front door. Then they bored a hole in the roof of his house. Using the key they entered the house, installed a microphone, and attached it to a wire which ran through the hole in the roof to a nearby garage where officers listened in relays. Twice more they used the key to enter the house in order to adjust the microphone. First they moved it into the bedroom where defendant and his wife slept. Next, they put the microphone into the bedroom closet. Then they used the key to enter the house to arrest the suspect. They had no search warrant; but they ransacked the house. There was no "opinion of the court." Chief Justice Warren and Justices Reed and Minton joined in Justice Jackson's opinion announcing the judgment of the court; Justice Clark concurrent in the result; Justices Black, Douglas, Frankfurter and Burton dissented, but for varying reasons. Irvine v. California, 347 U. S. 128, 98 L. ed. 561, 74 Sup. Ct. 381 (1954).

3. For a discussion of the way in which the search and seizure provision of the Fourth Amendment and the self-incrimination clause of the Fifth Amendment have been read together in Supreme Court decisions and jointly support an important segment of constitutional law, see Corwin, The Supreme Court's Construction of the Self-Incrimination Clause, 29 Mich. L. Rev. 1, 191 (1930), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 1398. The federal rule of exclusion is now incorporated in Rule 41 (e) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, 18 U. S. C. § 3771 note; F. C. A. Rules c. 2. State and federal decisions involving the admissibility of evidence illegally obtained are collected in Wigmore, Evidence (3d ed. 1940), §§ 2183-2184. See also 150 A. L. R. 566 (1944), supplementing several earlier annotations. Among the many articles dealing with various problems related to searches and seizures the following are recent and timely: Fraenkel, Recent Developments in the Federal Law of Searches and Seizures, 33 Iowa L. Rev. 472 (1948); Reynard, Freedom from Unreasonable Search and Seizure—A Second Class Constitutional Right? 25 Ind. L. J. 259 (1950); Allen, The Wolf Case: Search and Seizure, Federalism, and the Civil Liberties, 45 Ill. L. Rev. 1 (1950); Ramsey, Acquisition of Evidence by Search and Seizure, 47 Mich. L. Rev. 1137 (1949); Farrelly, Searches and Seizures During the Truman Era, 25 So. Cal. L. Rev. 1 (1951); Rudd, Present Significance of Constitutional Guarantees Against Unreasonable Searches and Seizures, 18 U. of Cin. L. Rev. 387 (1949).

UNITED STATES v. JEFFERS.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1951.
342 U. S. 48, 96 L. ed. 59, 72 Sup. Ct. 93.

MR. JUSTICE CLARK delivered the opinion of the Court.

Here we are faced with troublesome questions as to the exclusion from evidence, on motion of the accused, of contraband narcotics claimed by him which were seized on the premises of other persons in the course of a search without a warrant. On the basis of the seized narcotics, the accused, respondent here, was convicted of violation of the narcotics laws, 26 U. S. C. § 2553(a) [F. C. A. 26 § 2553(a)], and 21 U. S. C. § 174 [F. C. A. 21 § 174]. Prior to trial the District Court had denied respondent's motion to suppress, as evidence at the trial, the property seized. The Court of Appeals reversed the conviction by a divided court, 88 U. S. App. D. C. 58, 187 F. (2d) 498. Since a determination of the question is important in the administration of criminal justice, we brought the case here.

The evidence showed that one Roberts had come to the Dunbar Hotel in the District of Columbia on Monday, September 12, 1949, at about 3 p. m., sought out the house detective Scott, and offered him $500 to let him into a room in the hotel occupied by respondent's two aunts, the Misses Jeffries. Roberts told Scott that respondent had "some stuff stashed" in the room. The house detective told Roberts to call back later in the evening and he would see about it. He then immediately reported the incident to Lieut. Karper, in charge of the narcotics squad of the Metropolitan Police, who came to the hotel about 4 p. m. Karper went with Scott to the room occupied by the Misses Jeffries. When there was no answer to their knock on the door the two officers then went to the assistant manager and obtained a key to the room. Although neither officer had either a search or an arrest warrant they unlocked the door, entered the room and in the absence of the Misses Jeffries as well as the respondent, proceeded to conduct a detailed search thereof. On the top shelf of a closet they discovered a pasteboard box containing 19 bottles of cocaine, of which only two had U. S. tax stamps attached, and one bottle of codeine, also without stamps. The bottles were seized and taken to Scott's office where Lieut. Karper telephoned the federal narcotics agent and upon the latter's arrival turned the seized articles over to him. Respondent was arrested the following day on the charges before us, at which time he claimed ownership of the narcotics seized.

It appeared from the evidence at the pretrial hearing that the Misses Jeffries had given respondent a key to their room, that he had their permission to use the room at will, and that he often entered the room for various purposes. They had not given him permission to store narcotics there and had no knowledge any were so stored. The hotel records reflected that the room was assigned to and paid for by them alone.

We agree with the Court of Appeals that the seizure was made in violation of the Fourth Amendment and on motion of respondent its fruitage should have been excluded as evidence on his trial.

The Fourth Amendment prohibits both unreasonable searches and unreasonable seizures, and its protection extends to both "houses" and "effects." Over and again this Court has emphasized that the mandate of the Amendment requires adherence to judicial processes. See Weeks v. United States, 232 U. S. 383; Agnello v. United States, 269 U. S. 20. Only where incident to a valid arrest, United States v. Rabinowitz, 339 U. S. 56, or in "exceptional circumstances," Johnson v. United States, 333 U. S. 10, may an exemption lie and then the burden is on those seeking the exemption to show the need for it, McDonald v. United States, 335 U. S. 451, 456. In so doing the Amendment does not place an unduly oppressive weight on law enforcement officers but merely interposes an orderly procedure under the aegis of judicial impartiality that is necessary to attain the beneficent purposes intended. Johnson v. United States, supra. Officers instead of obeying this mandate have too often, as shown by the numerous cases in this Court, taken matters in their own hands and invaded the security of the people against unreasonable search and seizure.

The law does not prohibit every entry, without a warrant, into a hotel room. Circumstances might make exceptions and certainly implied or express permission is given to such persons as maids, janitors or repair men in the performance of their duties. But here the Government admits that the search of the hotel room, as to the Misses Jeffries, was unlawful. They were not even present when the entry, search or seizure were conducted; nor were exceptional circumstances present to justify the action of the officers. There was no question of violence, no movable vehicle was involved, nor was there an arrest or imminent destruction, removal, or concealment of the property intended to be seized. In fact, the officers admit they could have easily prevented any such destruction or removal by merely guarding the door. Instead, in entering the room and making the search for the sole purpose of seizing respondent's narcotics, the officers not only proceeded without a warrant or other legal authority, but their intrusion was conducted surreptitiously and by means denounced as criminal.

The Government argues, however, that the search did not invade respondent's privacy and he, therefore, lacked the necessary standing to suppress the evidence seized. The significant act, it says, is the seizure of the goods of the respondent without a warrant. We do not believe the events are so easily isolable. Rather they are bound together by one sole purpose—to locate and seize the narcotics of respondent. The search and seizure are, therefore, incapable of being untied. To hold that this search and seizure were lawful as to the respondent would permit a quibbling distinction to overturn a principle which was designed to protect a fundamental right. The respondent unquestionably had standing to object to the seizure made without warrant or arrest unless the contraband nature of the narcotics seized precluded his assertion, for purposes of the exclusionary rule, of a property interest therein.

It is urgently contended by the Government that no property rights within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment exist in the narcotics seized here because they are contraband goods in which Congress has declared that "no property rights shall exist." The Government made the same contention in Trupiano v. United States, 334 U. S. 699. This Court disposed of the contention saying: "It follows that it was error to refuse petitioners' motion to exclude and suppress the property which was improperly seized. But since this property was contraband, they have no right to have it returned to them."

The same section declaring that "no property rights shall exist" in contraband goods provides for the issuance of search warrants "for the seizure" of such property. The Government's view in Trupiano was that the latter provision applies "when the entry must be made to seize"; but not "where, after a lawful entry for another purpose, the contraband property is before the eyes of the enforcing officers." This construction would make it necessary for the officers to have a search warrant here. We are of the opinion that Congress in abrogating property rights in such goods merely intended to aid in their forfeiture and thereby prevent the spread of the traffic in drugs rather than to abolish the exclusionary rule formulated by the courts in furtherance of the high purposes of the Fourth Amendment. See In re Fried, 2 Cir., 161 F. (2d) 453.

Since the evidence illegally seized was contraband the respondent was not entitled to have it returned to him. It being his property, for purposes of the exclusionary rule, he was entitled on motion to have it suppressed as evidence on his trial. Affirmed.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE VINSON and MR. JUSTICE REED dissent.

MR. JUSTICE MINTON took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

NOTES

1. It is only "unreasonable" searches and seizures that are prohibited by the Fourth Amendment. The Supreme Court has taken the view that the test of reasonableness cannot be stated in rigid and absolute terms but that each case is to be decided on its own facts and circumstances. The Amendment has never been held to require that every valid search and seizure be effected under the authority of a search warrant. The legality of a search and seizure incident to a lawful arrest has long been recognized both in federal and state law enforcement procedures. In many recent Supreme Court decisions the crucial issue has been whether the search and seizure in question, made without a warrant, could be justified on this ground. The three cases summarized below are typical. For a discussion of additional cases see the annotation in 94 L. ed. 671 (1950).

In Harris v. United States, 331 U. S. 145, 91 L. ed. 1399, 67 Sup. Ct. 1098 (1947) defendant was charged with two federal offenses involved in forging and cashing a check. Five FBI agents, armed with valid warrants of arrest, went to defendant's apartment and arrested him. Following the arrest, which took place in the living room, the agents searched the entire apartment for approximately five hours. The object of their search was to find two stolen canceled checks which were thought to have been used in effecting the forgery, as well as any other means that might have been employed for this purpose. Near the end of the search, in a bedroom bureau drawer, a sealed envelope was discovered containing classification cards and registration certificates used in the administration of the Selective Service Act of 1940. Defendant was convicted of illegal possession of these cards, in violation of this statute. The Supreme Court, affirming the conviction, held that the search and seizure were lawful as an incident to a valid arrest. They were not rendered invalid by the fact that a dwelling place, instead of business premises, was subjected to search or because the search extended beyond the room in which defendant was arrested. Nor did it matter that the draft cards were not related to the crimes for which defendant was arrested, since they were property of the United States in his illegal custody. Justices Frankfurter, Murphy, Jackson and Rutledge dissented.

In Johnson v. United States, 333 U. S. 10, 92 L. ed. 436, 68 Sup. Ct. 367 (1948), a police officer, accompanied by federal narcotics agents, smelling burning opium, knocked on the door of defendant's room in a hotel, announcing themselves as officers. Upon admission to the room the officers placed defendant under arrest. A search of the premises turned up incriminating opium and smoking apparatus warm from recent use. The government defended the legality of the search as incident to a lawful arrest. The evidence was admitted over defendant's objection at the trial and defendant was convicted of violating federal narcotic laws. The Supreme Court held that the evidence obtained by the search should have been suppressed, since the search was made without a warrant and was not justifiable as an incident of a legal arrest. Here the government was obliged to justify the arrest not on the smell of the opium before entry, but on the knowledge that defendant was alone in the room, gained only after entry. This attempted justification of the arrest by the search and the search by the arrest was held to be fallacious. The court conceded that, at the time entry was demanded, the officers were possessed of evidence which a magistrate might have found to be probable cause for issuing a search warrant. But it held unjustified the contention that evidence sufficient to support a magistrate's issuance of a search warrant would legalize the officers' search without a warrant. Chief Justice Vinson and Justices Black, Reed and Burton dissented.

In United States v. Rabinowitz, 339 U. S. 56, 94 L. ed. 653, 70 Sup. Ct. 430 (1950) federal officers, armed with a valid warrant for the arrest of defendant, charged with selling and having in his possession forged and altered government stamps, arrested him at his place of business and thereupon searched, without a warrant, the desk, safe, and file cabinets therein, from which they seized a number of such stamps. The evidence thus obtained was, over the accused's timely objections, admitted at his trial and he was convicted. The court said that here the officers had a warrant for arrest which, as far as could be ascertained, was broad enough to cover the crime of possessing the stamps as well as selling them. But even if the warrant were not sufficient to authorize arrest for possession, the arrest was nevertheless valid because the officers had probable cause to believe that a felony was being committed in their presence. Overruling Trupiano v. United States, 334 U. S. 699, 92 L. ed. 1663, 68 Sup. Ct. 1229 (1948), the court held that a search without a warrant does not violate the constitutional prohibition merely because the officers who conducted it failed to procure a search warrant, although they had time to do so, since the legality of such a search turns upon its reasonableness, under all the circumstances, and not upon the practicability of procuring a search warrant. "A rule of thumb requiring that a search warrant always be procured whenever practicable may be appealing from the vantage point of easy administration. But we cannot agree that this requirement should be crystallized into a sine qua non to the reasonableness of a search." Justices Frankfurter and Jackson dissented in an opinion which contains a valuable review of the cases. Justice Black also dissented and Justice Douglas did not participate.

2. In Carroll v. United States, 267 U. S. 132, 69 L. ed. 543, 45 Sup. Ct. 280, 39 A. L. R. 790 (1925) the court sustained a search without a warrant of an automobile where the officer making it had reasonable or probable cause to believe that it contained contraband goods being illegally transported. In a recent case, United States v. Di Re, 332 U. S. 581, 92 L. ed. 210, 68 Sup. Ct. 222 (1948), the court refused to expand the ruling in the Carroll case to include the right to search the person of an occupant of the car where there were no reasonable grounds for belief that he was implicated in the illegal transactions occurring in the car. The court pointed out that if the government had procured a warrant for search of the car only it could not have claimed the right to search the occupants thereof as an incident to its execution. Consequently, no greater latitude should exist to search the occupants in the absence of a warrant. "We are not convinced that a person, by mere presence in a suspected car, loses immunities from search of his person to which he would otherwise be entitled." Chief Justice Vinson and Mr. Justice Black dissented.

3. In Olmstead v. United States, 277 U. S. 438, 72 L. ed. 944, 48 Sup. Ct. 564, 66 A. L. R. 376 (1928), the court (Justices Holmes, Brandeis, Butler and Stone dissenting) held that the tapping of a person's telephone wires by federal officers does not constitute an unreasonable search or seizure within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment, and that the use of evidence so obtained is not in violation of the self-incrimination provision of the Fifth Amendment. The Federal Communications Act of 1934, however, contains a provision (47 U. S. C. § 605) to the effect that "no person not being authorized by the sender shall intercept any communication and divulge or publish the existence, contents, substance, purport, effect or meaning of such intercepted communication to any person." In Nardone v. United States, 302 U. S. 379, 82 L. ed. 314, 58 Sup. Ct.

275 (1937) the court held that this section forbade wiretapping by federal officers as well as by others and rendered inadmissible in a federal criminal trial evidence of federal officers as to an interstate communication intercepted by tapping telephone wires.

Subsequent decisions, however, have been less hostile to the use of evidence secured as a result of wiretapping. In Goldstein v. United States, 316 U. S. 114, 86 L. ed. 1312, 62 Sup. Ct. 1000 (1942), co-conspirators of defendants were induced to confess and turn state's evidence when confronted with intercepted telephone messages, but none of the defendants were parties to the intercepted conversations. In upholding the conviction, the court invoked the rule that one not the victim of an unconstitutional search and seizure has no standing in court to object to the introduction in evidence of that which was seized. Here the testimony of the co-conspirators was not rendered inadmissible at the trial of defendants, who were not parties to the intercepted messages, even though the use made of the communications to induce the parties to them to testify was held to be a violation of the federal statute. Mr. Justice Murphy, joined by Chief Justice Stone and Mr. Justice Frankfurter, dissented. In Goldman v. United States, 316 U. S. 129, 86 L. ed. 1322, 62 Sup. Ct. 993 (1942) the court held that the use of a detectaphone by federal agents to listen to a conversation in an adjoining room between persons suspected of crime is not a violation of the Fourth Amendment. Nor did the overhearing and divulgence of what was said into a telephone receiver violate the statutory prohibition. In On Lee v. United States, 343 U. S. 747, 96 L. ed. 1270, 72 Sup. Ct. 967 (1952) the use in a federal criminal prosecution of testimony as to damaging admissions by the defendant in a conversation on the premises of the defendant which the witness, outside these premises, was enabled to overhear by a radio transmitter concealed on the person of the other party to the conversation, was held not to infringe the Fourth Amendment or the federal statute. The court further refused to exclude the testimony in the exercise of its supervisory authority over criminal justice in the federal courts. Justices Black, Frankfurter, Douglas and Burton dissented. And in Schwartz v. Texas, 344 U. S. 199, 97 L. ed. 231, 73 Sup. Ct. 232 (1952) it was held that the prohibition of the federal statute did not render inadmissible evidence obtained in violation thereof in a state criminal trial. The court said that it did not believe that Congress intended to impose a rule of evidence on the state courts, and it was unnecessary to decide whether it had the power to do so. The federal cases on the use of wiretapping, as affected by the Federal Communications Act, are collected in 97 L. ed. 237 (1953). For a recent discussion see Westin, The Wiretapping Problem: An Analysis and a Legislative Proposal, 52 Col. L. Rev. 165 (1952).

UNITED STATES v. L. COHEN GROCERY CO.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1921.

255 U. S. 81, 65 L. ed. 516, 41 Sup. Ct. 298, 14 A. L. R. 1045.

In error to the District Court of the United States for the eastern district of Missouri to review a judgment which quashed an indictment for charging excessive prices for necessities.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

Required on this direct appeal to decide whether Congress under the Constitution had authority to adopt section 4 of the Lever Act as re-enacted in 1919, we reproduce the section so far as relevant (Act Oct. 22, 1919, c. 80, § 2, 41 Stat. 297):

"That it is hereby made unlawful for any person willfully * * * to make any unjust or unreasonable rate or charge in handling or dealing in or with any necessities; to conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person * * * (e) to exact excessive prices for any necessities. * * * Any person violating any of the provisions of this section upon conviction thereof shall be fined not exceeding $5,000 or be imprisoned for not more than two years, or both. * * *

The text thus reproduced is followed by two provisos exempting from the operation either of the section or of the act enumerated persons or classes of persons engaged in agricultural or similar pursuits. * * *

In each of two counts the defendant, the Cohen Grocery Company, alleged to be a dealer in sugar and other necessities in the city of St. Louis, was charged with violating this section by willfully and feloniously making an unjust and unreasonable rate and charge in handling and dealing in a certain necessary; the specification in the first count being a sale for $10.07 of about 50 pounds of sugar, and that in the second, of a 100-pound bag of sugar for $19.50.

The defendant demurred on the following grounds: (a) That both counts were so vague as not to inform it of the nature and cause of the accusation; (b) that the statute upon which the indictment was based was subject to the same infirmity because it was so indefinite as not to enable it to be known what was forbidden, and therefore amounted to a delegation by Congress of legislative power to courts and juries to determine what acts should be held to be criminal and punishable; and (c) that as the country was virtually at peace Congress had no power to regulate the subject with which the section dealt. In passing on the demurrer the court, declaring that this court had settled that until the official declaration of peace there was a status of war, nevertheless decided that such conclusion was wholly negligible as to the other issues raised by the demurrer, since it was equally well settled by this court that the mere status of war did not of its own force suspend or limit the effect of the Constitution, but only caused limitations which the Constitution made applicable as the necessary and appropriate result of the status of war, to become operative. Holding that this latter result was not the case as to the particular provisions of the Fifth and Sixth Amendments, which it had under consideration; that is, as to the prohibitions which those amendments imposed upon Congress against delegating legislative power to courts and juries, against penalizing indefinite acts, and against depriving the citizen of the right to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him, the court, giving effect to the amendments in question, came to consider the grounds of demurrer relating to those subjects. In doing so and referring to an opinion previously expressed by it in charging a jury, the court said:

"Congress alone has power to define crimes against the United States. This power cannot be delegated either to the courts or to the juries of this country. * * *

"Therefore, because the law is vague, indefinite, and uncertain, and because it fixes no immutable standard of guilt, but leaves such standard to the variant views of the different courts and juries which may be called on to enforce it, and because it does not inform defendant of the nature and cause of the accusation against him, I think it is constitutionally invalid, and that the demurrer offered by the defendant ought to be sustained."

The indictment was therefore quashed. * * *

The sole remaining inquiry, therefore, is the certainty or uncertainty of the text in question, that is, whether the words "that it is hereby made unlawful for any person willfully * * * to make any unjust or unreasonable rate or charge in handling or dealing in or with any necessities," constituted a fixing by Congress of an ascertainable standard of guilt and are adequate to inform persons accused of violation thereof of the nature and cause of the accusation against them. That they are not, we are of opinion, so clearly results from their mere statement as to render elaboration on the subject wholly unnecessary. Observe that the section forbids no specific or definite act. It confines the subject-matter of the investigation which it authorizes to no element essentially inhering in the transaction as to which it provides. It leaves open, therefore, the widest conceivable inquiry, the scope of which no one can foresee and the result of which no one can foreshadow or adequately guard against. In fact, we see no reason to doubt the soundness of the observation of the court below in its opinion to the effect that, to attempt to enforce the section would be the exact equivalent of an effort to carry out a statute which in terms merely penalized and punished all acts detrimental to the public interest when unjust and unreasonable in the estimation of the court and jury. And that this is not a mere abstraction, finds abundant demonstration in the cases now before us, since in the briefs in these cases the conflicting results which have arisen from the painstaking attempts of enlightened judges in seeking to carry out the statute in cases brought before them are vividly portrayed. * * * And again, this condition would be additionally obvious if we stopped to recur to the persistent efforts which, the records disclose, were made by administrative officers, doubtless inspired by a zealous effort to discharge their duty, to establish a standard of their own to be used as a basis to render the section possible of execution.

That it results from the consideration which we have stated that the section before us was void for repugnancy to the Constitution is not open to question. United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 219-220; United States v. Brewer, 139 U. S. 278, 288; Todd v. United States, 158 U. S. 278, 282. * * *

It follows from what we have said that, not forgetful of our duty to sustain the constitutionality of the statute if ground can possibly be found to do so, we are nevertheless compelled in this case to say that we think the court below was clearly right in holding the statute void for repugnancy to the Constitution, and its judgment quashing the indictment on that ground must be, and it is, hereby affirmed.

Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE PITNEY and MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS concur in the result.

NOTES

1. The requirement that penal statutes shall not be phrased in such vague and indefinite terms as will fail to supply an ascertainable standard of guilt or innocence has been enforced in many cases. The due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment imposes upon the states the same requirement as to definiteness that the Fifth and Sixth Amendments impose upon Congress. Recent cases in which this requirement was considered include Gorin v. United States, 312 U. S. 19, 85 L. ed. 488, 61 Sup. Ct. 429 (1941) (summarizing many prior decisions); Screws v. United States, 325 U. S. 91, 89 L. ed. 1495, 65 Sup. Ct. 1031, 162 A. L. R. 1330 (1945); Musser v. Utah, 333 U. S. 95, 92 L. ed. 562, 68 Sup. Ct. 397 (1948); Winters v. New York, 333 U. S. 507, 92 L. ed. 840, 68 Sup. Ct. 665 (1948); United States v. Petrillo, 332 U. S. 1, 91 L. ed. 1877, 67 Sup. Ct. 1538 (1947); Jordan v. De George, 341 U. S. 223, 95 L. ed. 886, 71 Sup. Ct. 703 (1951); Boyce Motor Lines v. United States, 342 U. S. 337, 96 L. ed. 367, 72 Sup. Ct. 329 (1952); United States v. Cardiff, 344 U. S. 174, 97 L. ed. 200, 73 Sup. Ct. 189 (1952); United States v. Kahriger, 345 U. S. 22, 97 L. ed. 754, 73 Sup. Ct. 510 (1953); United States v. Harriss, 347 U. S. 612, 98 L. ed. 989, 74 Sup. Ct. 808 (1954). Many cases are discussed in the annotation in 96 L. ed. 374 (1952). See also, Aigler, Legislation in Vague or General Terms, 21 Mich. L. Rev. 831 (1923); Note, 23 Ind. L. J. 272 (1948).

2. Statutory presumptions usually take the form of legislation providing that proof of one fact shall constitute prima facie evidence of some other fact or facts. For such presumptions to meet the yardstick of due process, not only must there be a rational connection between the fact proved and the fact presumed, but the inference must be a reasonably probable one and must not be conclusive of the rights of the person against whom it is raised. A prima facie presumption casts upon the person against whom it is applied the duty of going forward with his evidence on the point to which the presumption relates. See, for example, Western & A. R. Co. v. Henderson, 279 U. S. 639, 73 L. ed. 884, 49 Sup. Ct. 445 (1929) (invalidating statute providing that a railroad company shall be liable for damages to persons or property by the running of locomotives unless the company shall make it appear that their agents have exercised all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence, the presumption in all cases being against the company); Manley v. Georgia, 279 U. S. 1, 73 L. ed. 575, 49 Sup. Ct. 215 (1929) (invalidating statute making directors criminally liable for insolvency of a bank, with the burden of repelling statutory presumption of fraud by affirmatively showing that the business of the bank was properly administered); Tot v. United States, 319 U. S. 463, 87 L. ed. 1519, 63 Sup. Ct. 1241 (1943) (invalidating statutory declaration that from prisoner's prior conviction of a crime of violence and his present possession of a firearm or ammunition, it shall be presumed (1) that the article was received by him in interstate or foreign commerce, and (2) that such receipt occurred subsequent to the effective date of the statute). See McCormick, The Validity of Statutory Presumptions of Crime Under the Federal Constitution, 22 Tex. L. Rev. 75 (1943).

CHAPTER VIII

CONSTITUTIONAL LIMITATIONS: DUE PROCESS OF LAW AS TO THE SUBSTANCE OR PURPOSE OF LEGISLATION

Section 1.—The Scope of the Police Power in its Relation to Due Process.

COMMONWEALTH v. ALGER.

Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, 1851.
7 Cush. 53, 61 Mass. 53.

[The defendant was convicted for violation of statutes forbidding the building of wharves beyond harbor lines established by one of the statutes. By the agreed statement of facts the defendant built his wharf on his own flatland, not beyond low water-mark, and although it extended beyond the statutory line, it did not interfere with navigation. The case was reserved for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court on questions of law.]

SHAW, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

Assuming, then, that the defendant was owner in fee of the soil and flats upon which the wharf in question was built, it becomes necessary to inquire whether it was competent for the legislature to pass the Acts establishing the harbor lines, and what is the legal validity and effect of those Acts. * * *

The manifest object of these statutes is to prevent injurious obstructions in the harbor of Boston, and to secure the free, common, and unobstructed use thereof, for the citizens of the Commonwealth, and all other persons, for navigation with ships, boats, and vessels of all kinds, as a common and public right. If this can be done, without an unwarrantable encroachment on the rights of private property, it is an object of great importance, and one in which the holders of riparian rights, as well as all other holders of real estate, and the whole community, have a deep and abiding interest.

We think it is a settled principle, growing out of the nature of well-ordered civil society, that every holder of property, however absolute and unqualified may be his title, holds it under the implied liability that his use of it may be so regulated, that it shall not be injurious to the equal enjoyment of others, having an equal right to the enjoyment of their property, nor injurious to the rights of the community. All property in this Commonwealth, as well that in the interior as that bordering on tide-waters, is derived directly or indirectly from the government, and held subject to those general regulations which are necessary to the common good and general welfare. Rights of property, like all other social and conventional rights, are subject to such reasonable limitations in their enjoyment, as shall prevent them from being injurious, and to such reasonable restraints and regulations established by law, as the legislature, under the governing and controlling power vested in them by the Constitution, may think necessary and expedient.

This is very different from the right of eminent domain, the right of a government to take and appropriate private property to public use, whenever the public exigency requires it; which can be done only on condition of providing a reasonable compensation therefor. The power we allude to is rather the police power, the power vested in the legislature by the Constitution, to make, ordain, and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable laws, statutes, and ordinances, either with penalties or without, not repugnant to the Constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of the Commonwealth and of the subjects of the same.

It is much easier to perceive and realize the existence and sources of this power, than to mark its boundaries, or prescribe limits to its exercise. There are many cases in which such a power is exercised by all well-ordered governments, and where its fitness is so obvious, that all well-regulated minds will regard it as reasonable. Such are the laws to prohibit the use of warehouses for the storage of gunpowder near habitations or highways; to restrain the height to which wooden buildings may be erected in populous neighborhoods, and require them to be covered with slate or other incombustible material; to prohibit buildings from being used for hospitals for contagious diseases, or for the carrying on of noxious or offensive trades; to prohibit the raising of a dam, and causing stagnant water to spread over meadows, near inhabited villages, thereby raising noxious exhalations, injurious to health and dangerous to life.

Nor does the prohibition of such noxious use of property, a prohibition imposed because such use would be injurious to the public, although it may diminish the profits of the owner, make it an appropriation to a public use, so as to entitle the owner to compensation. If the owner of a vacant lot in the midst of a city could erect thereon a great wooden building, and cover it with shingles, he might obtain a larger profit of his land, than if obliged to build of stone or brick, with a slated roof. If the owner of a warehouse in a cluster of other buildings could store quantities of gunpowder in it for himself and others, he might be saved the great expense of transportation. If a landlord could let his building for a small-pox hospital, or a slaughter-house, he might obtain an increased rent. But he is restrained; not because the public have occasion to make the like use, or to make any use of the property, or to take any benefit or profit to themselves from it; but because it would be a noxious use, contrary to the maxim, Sic utere tuo, ut alienum non laedas. It is not an appropriation of the property to a public use, but the restraint of an injurious private use by the owner, and is therefore not within the principle of property taken under the right of eminent domain. The distinction, we think, is manifest in principle, although the facts and circumstances of different cases are so various, that it is often difficult to decide whether a particular exercise of legislation is properly attributable to the one or the other of these two acknowledged powers. * * *

And so in the exercise of the more general power of government, so to restrain the injurious use of property, it seems to apply more significantly and more directly to real estate thus situated on the seashore, separating the upland from the sea, to which the public have a common and acknowledged right, so that such estate should be held subject to somewhat more restrictive regulations in its use, than interior and upland estate remote from places in which the public have a common right. The circumstances are different. In respect to land lying in the interior, and used for agricultural purposes, there is little occasion to impose any restraint upon the absolute dominion of the owner, because such restraint is not necessary to prevent it from being injurious. But the circumstances are entirely different in regard to the seashore, which lies between the sea, admitted to be common to all, and the use of which is of vast importance to the public, and ports and places, without access to which, the use of the sea for navigation would be of little value. * * *

Wherever there is a general right on the part of the public, and a general duty on the part of a land-owner, or any other person, to respect such rights, we think it is competent for the legislature, by a specific enactment, to prescribe a precise, practical rule for declaring, establishing, and securing such right, and enforcing respect for it. It may be said in general terms, independently of any positive enactment, that it is the right of society, in the midst of a populous settlement, to be exempt from the proximity of dangerous and noxious trades; and that it is the duty of the owner of real estate, in the midst of many habitations, to abstain from erecting buildings thereon, or otherwise using it, for carrying on a trade dangerous to the lives, health, or comfort of the inhabitants of such dwellings; although a trade in itself useful and beneficial to the public. But such general duty and obligation not being fixed by a rule precise enough for practical purposes, we think it is competent for the legislature to interpose, and by a specific enactment to declare what shall be deemed a dangerous or noxious trade, under what circumstances and within what distance of habitations it may or shall not be set up, how the use of it shall be regulated, and to prohibit any other than such regulated use, by specific penalties. * * *

But in reference to the present case, and to the Act of the Legislature, establishing lines in the harbor, beyond which private proprietors are prohibited from building wharves, it is urged that such a restraint upon the estate of an individual, debarring him to some extent from the most beneficial use of it, is in effect taking his estate. If such restraint were in fact imposed upon the estate of one proprietor only, out of several estates on the same line of shore, the objection would be much more formidable. But we are to consider the subject-matter, to which such restraint applies. The value of this species of estate, that of shore and flats, consists mainly in the means it affords of building wharves from the upland towards deep water, to place merchandise and build wharves upon, and principally to afford access, to vessels requiring considerable depth of water, from the sea to suitable landings. Now, if along a shore where there are flats of considerable extent, one were restrained to a certain length, whilst others were allowed to extend further, the damage might be great. So if one were allowed to extend, and the coterminous proprietors adjacent were restrained, it would be obviously more injurious. The one extended would stop or check the current along the others, cause mud to accumulate near them, and thus render the water shoal at those wharves. But where all are permitted to extend alike, and all are restrained alike, by a line judiciously adapted to the course of the current, so that all have the benefit of access to their wharves, with the same depth of water, and the same strength of current at their heads, the damage must be comparatively less.

But of this the legislature must judge. Having once come to the conclusion that a case exists, in which it is competent for the legislature to make a law on the subject, it is for them, under a high sense of duty to the public and to individuals, with a sacred regard to the rights of property and all other private rights, to make such reasonable regulations as they may judge necessary to protect public and private rights, and to impose no larger restraints upon the use and enjoyment of private property, than are in their judgment strictly necessary to preserve and protect the rights of others. * * *

In regard to the other suggestion, that it is found by the case that the particular wharf of Mr. Alger did not obstruct or impede navigation, it is proper to say, that if we are right in principle, we are bound to hold that this circumstance can afford no defence. A consideration of this fact illustrates the principles we have been discussing. The reason why it is necessary to have a certain and authoritative law, is shown by the difficulty, not to say impracticability, of inquiring and deciding as a fact, in each particular case, whether a certain erection in tide-water is a nuisance at common law or not; and when ascertained and adjudged, it affords no rule for any other case, and can have little effect in maintaining and protecting the acknowledged public right. It is this consideration (the expediency and necessity of defining and securing the rights of the public), which creates the exigency, and furnishes the legislature with the authority to make a general and precise law; but when made, because it was just and expedient, and because it is law, it becomes the duty of every person to obey it and comply with it. The question under the statute therefore is, not whether any wharf, built after the statute was made and promulgated, was an actual obstruction to navigation, but whether it was within the prohibited limit.

principle of property taken under the right of eminent domain. The distinction, we think, is manifest in principle, although the facts and circumstances of different cases are so various, that it is often difficult to decide whether a particular exercise of legislation is properly attributable to the one or the other of these two acknowledged powers. * * *

And so in the exercise of the more general power of government, so to restrain the injurious use of property, it seems to apply more significantly and more directly to real estate thus situated on the seashore, separating the upland from the sea, to which the public have a common and acknowledged right, so that such estate should be held subject to somewhat more restrictive regulations in its use, than interior and upland estate remote from places in which the public have a common right. The circumstances are different. In respect to land lying in the interior, and used for agricultural purposes, there is little occasion to impose any restraint upon the absolute dominion of the owner, because such restraint is not necessary to prevent it from being injurious. But the circumstances are entirely different in regard to the seashore, which lies between the sea, admitted to be common to all, and the use of which is of vast importance to the public, and ports and places, without access to which, the use of the sea for navigation would be of little value. * * *

Wherever there is a general right on the part of the public, and a general duty on the part of a land-owner, or any other person, to respect such rights, we think it is competent for the legislature, by a specific enactment, to prescribe a precise, practical rule for declaring, establishing, and securing such right, and enforcing respect for it. It may be said in general terms, independently of any positive enactment, that it is the right of society, in the midst of a populous settlement, to be exempt from the proximity of dangerous and noxious trades; and that it is the duty of the owner of real estate, in the midst of many habitations, to abstain from erecting buildings thereon, or otherwise using it, for carrying on a trade dangerous to the lives, health, or comfort of the inhabitants of such dwellings; although a trade in itself useful and beneficial to the public. But such general duty and obligation not being fixed by a rule precise enough for practical purposes, we think it is competent for the legislature to interpose, and by a specific enactment to declare what shall be deemed a dangerous or noxious trade, under what circumstances and within what distance of habitations it may or shall not be set up, how the use of it shall be regulated, and to prohibit any other than such regulated use, by specific penalties. * * *

But in reference to the present case, and to the Act of the Legislature, establishing lines in the harbor, beyond which private proprietors are prohibited from building wharves, it is urged that such a restraint upon the estate of an individual, debarring him to some extent from the most beneficial use of it, is in effect taking his estate. If such restraint were in fact imposed upon the estate of one proprietor only, out of several estates on the same line of shore, the objection would be much more formidable. But we are to consider the subject-matter, to which such restraint applies. The value of this species of estate, that of shore and flats, consists mainly in the means it affords of building wharves from the upland towards deep water, to place merchandise and build wharves upon, and principally to afford access, to vessels requiring considerable depth of water, from the sea to suitable landings. Now, if along a shore where there are flats of considerable extent, one were restrained to a certain length, whilst others were allowed to extend further, the damage might be great. So if one were allowed to extend, and the coterminous proprietors adjacent were restrained, it would be obviously more injurious. The one extended would stop or check the current along the others, cause mud to accumulate near them, and thus render the water shoal at those wharves. But where all are permitted to extend alike, and all are restrained alike, by a line judiciously adapted to the course of the current, so that all have the benefit of access to their wharves, with the same depth of water, and the same strength of current at their heads, the damage must be comparatively less.

But of this the legislature must judge. Having once come to the conclusion that a case exists, in which it is competent for the legislature to make a law on the subject, it is for them, under a high sense of duty to the public and to individuals, with a sacred regard to the rights of property and all other private rights, to make such reasonable regulations as they may judge necessary to protect public and private rights, and to impose no larger restraints upon the use and enjoyment of private property, than are in their judgment strictly necessary to preserve and protect the rights of others. * * *

In regard to the other suggestion, that it is found by the case that the particular wharf of Mr. Alger did not obstruct or impede navigation, it is proper to say, that if we are right in principle, we are bound to hold that this circumstance can afford no defence. A consideration of this fact illustrates the principles we have been discussing. The reason why it is necessary to have a certain and authoritative law, is shown by the difficulty, not to say impracticability, of inquiring and deciding as a fact, in each particular case, whether a certain erection in tide-water is a nuisance at common law or not; and when ascertained and adjudged, it affords no rule for any other case, and can have little effect in maintaining and protecting the acknowledged public right. It is this consideration (the expediency and necessity of defining and securing the rights of the public), which creates the exigency, and furnishes the legislature with the authority to make a general and precise law; but when made, because it was just and expedient, and because it is law, it becomes the duty of every person to obey it and comply with it. The question under the statute therefore is, not whether any wharf, built after the statute was made and promulgated, was an actual obstruction to navigation, but whether it was within the prohibited limit.

On the whole, the court are of opinion that the Act fixing a line within the harbor of Boston, beyond which no riparian proprietor should erect a wharf or other permanent structure, although to some extent it prohibited him from building such structure on flats of which he owned the fee, was a constitutional law, and one which it was competent for the legislature to make; that it was binding on the defendant, and rendered him obnoxious to its penalties, if he violated its provisions.

NOTES

1. The opinion of Chief Justice Shaw in this celebrated case contains one of the earliest judicial discussions of the meaning and scope of the police power. Perhaps the chief significance of the decision lies in the apparent assumption of the court that some apology must be found for discovering that the powers of a legislature are extensive. That there are limits to such powers, however, seems to be assumed, though not definitely disclosed in the opinion. It has been supposed that Chief Justice Shaw's thinking may have been influenced by the peculiar terms in which the Constitution of Massachusetts made one of its grants of power to the legislature: "to make, ordain and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable orders, laws, statutes and ordinances * * *; so as the same be not repugnant or contrary to this Constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of this Commonwealth. * * *" Was there an implication here that the legislature must not pass unreasonable laws? Or does the passage make the legislators judges of the reasonableness of their own enactments? It seems probable that the Chief Justice merely shared the view common to judges elsewhere that there were limitations on legislative power to be found outside of the provisions of a constitution. It should be noted that he, like many other judges of the period, did not assert that such limitations were to be found in the "law of the land" clause, the form that the due process clause took in the Massachusetts Constitution. It should be noted also that the grant of legislative powers made in other state constitutions of that day was expressed in no such limiting phraseology.

2. Compare the following judicial pronouncements on the meaning and scope of the police power:

"State police in its widest sense comprehends the whole system of internal regulation by which the state seeks not only to preserve the public order and to prevent offenses against her authority, but also to establish for the intercourse of one citizen with another those rules of justice, morality and good conduct which are calculated to prevent a conflict of interests and to insure to everyone the uninterrupted enjoyment of his own, as far as is reasonably consistent with a like enjoyment of equal rights by others." Mr. Justice Clifford, dissenting, in Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 257, 300, 25 L. ed. 648 (1880).

"What are the police powers of a state? They are nothing more or less than the powers of government inherent in every sovereignty to the extent of its dominions. And whether a state passes a quarantine law, or a law to punish offenses, or to establish courts of justice, or requiring certain instruments to be recorded, or to regulate commerce within its own limits, in every case it exercises the same power; that is to say, the power of sovereignty, the power to govern men and things within the limits of its dominion. It is by virtue of this power that it legislates; and its authority to make regulations of commerce is as absolute as its power to pass health laws, except in so far as it has been restricted by the Constitution of the United States." Mr. Chief Justice Taney in License Cases, 5 How. 504, 583, 12 L. ed. 256 (1847).

"That there is a power, sometimes called the police power, which has never been surrendered by the states, in virtue of which they may, within certain limits, control everything within their respective territories, and upon the proper exercise of which, under some circumstances, may depend the public health, the public morals, or the public safety, is conceded in all the cases. Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 203. In its broadest sense, as sometimes defined, it includes all legislation and almost every function of civil government. Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 31. As thus defined, we may, not improperly, refer to that power the authority of the state to create educational and charitable institutions, and provide for the establishment, maintenance, and control of public highways, turnpike roads, canals, wharves, ferries, and telegraph lines, and the draining of swamps. Definitions of the police power must, however, be taken, subject to the condition that the state cannot, in its exercise, for any purpose whatever, encroach upon the powers of the general government, or rights granted or secured by the supreme law of the land." Mr. Justice Harlan, in New Orleans Gas-Light Co. v. Louisiana Light & Heat Producing Mfg. Co., 115 U. S. 650, 661, 29 L. ed. 516, 6 Sup. Ct. 252 (1885).

"The Fourteenth Amendment, in declaring that no state 'shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws,' undoubtedly intended not only that there should be no arbitrary deprivation of life or liberty, or arbitrary spoliation of property, but that equal protection and security should be given to all under like circumstances in the enjoyment of their personal and civil rights. * * * But neither the Amendment—broad and comprehensive as it is—nor any other amendment, was designed to interfere with the power of the state, sometimes termed its police power, to prescribe regulations to promote the health, peace, morals, education, and good order of the people, and to legislate so as to increase the industries of the state, develop its resources, and add to its wealth and prosperity." Mr. Justice Field, in Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 31, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. 357 (1885).

3. On the character and limitations of governmental power over property and business, see generally, Cushman, The Social and Economic Interpretation of the Fourteenth Amendment, 20 Mich. L. Rev. 737 (1922), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 60; Brown, Due Process of Law, Police Power, and the Supreme Court, 40 Harv. L. Rev. 943 (1927), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 94; Hamilton, Property—According to Locke, 41 Yale L. J. 864 (1932), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 115. For a recent study of the function of the Supreme Court as the "creator of fundamental law" in its adjudication of due process cases, see Brockelbank, The Role of Due Process in American Constitutional Law, 39 Corn. L. Q. 561 (1954).

MUGLER v. KANSAS.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1887.
123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. 273.

[Mugler was tried and convicted upon two separate prosecutions, in Kansas, in one for selling beer and in the other for manufacturing beer, in violation of a Kansas statute, enacted in 1881, which prohibited the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquor in the state except for medical, scientific and mechanical uses. He built and owned the brewery in which the beer was made, before the statute was enacted. The Supreme Court of Kansas sustained each conviction, and writs of error were taken. The cases were considered together in the United States Supreme Court.]

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

That legislation by a state prohibiting the manufacture within her limits of intoxicating liquors, to be there sold or bartered for general use as a beverage, does not necessarily infringe any right, privilege, or immunity secured by the Constitution of the United States, is made clear by the decisions of this Court, rendered before and since the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment; to some of which, in view of questions to be presently considered, it will be well to refer. * * *

It is, however, contended, that, although the state may prohibit the manufacture of intoxicating liquors for sale or barter within her limits, for general use as a beverage, "no convention or legislature has the right, under our form of government, to prohibit any citizen from manufacturing for his own use, or for export, or storage, any article of food or drink not endangering or affecting the rights of others." The argument made in support of the first branch of this proposition, briefly stated, is, that in the implied compact between the state and the citizen certain rights are reserved by the latter, which are guaranteed by the constitutional provision protecting persons against being deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, and with which the state cannot interfere; that among those rights is that of manufacturing for one's use either food or drink; and that while, according to the doctrines of the Commune, the state may control the tastes, appetites, habits, dress, food, and drink of the people, our system of government, based upon the individuality and intelligence of the citizen, does not claim to control him, except as to his conduct to others, leaving him the sole judge as to all that only affects himself.

It will be observed that the proposition, and the argument made in support of it, equally concede that the right to manufacture drink for one's personal use is subject to the condition that such manufacture does not endanger or affect the rights of others. If such manufacture does prejudicially affect the rights and interests of the community, it follows, from the very premises stated, that society has the power to protect itself, by legislation, against the injurious consequences of that business. As was said in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 124, while power does not exist with the whole people to control rights that are purely and exclusively private, government may require "each citizen to so conduct himself, and so use his own property, as not unnecessarily to injure another."

But by whom, or by what authority, is it to be determined whether the manufacture of particular articles of drink, either for general use or for the personal use of the maker, will injuriously affect the public? Power to determine such questions, so as to bind all, must exist somewhere; else society will be at the mercy of the few, who, regarding only their own appetites or passions, may be willing to imperil the peace and security of the many, provided only they are permitted to do as they please. Under our system that power is lodged with the legislative branch of the government. It belongs to that department to exert what are known as the police powers of the state, and to determine, primarily, what measures are appropriate or needful for the protection of the public morals, the public health, or the public safety.

It does not at all follow that every statute enacted ostensibly for the promotion of these ends, is to be accepted as a legitimate exertion of the police powers of the state. There are, of necessity, limits beyond which legislation cannot rightfully go. * * *

The courts are not bound by mere forms, nor are they to be misled by mere pretences. They are at liberty—indeed, are under a solemn duty—to look at the substance of things, whenever they enter upon the inquiry whether the legislature has transcended the limits of its authority. If, therefore, a statute purporting to have been enacted to protect the public health, the public morals, or the public safety, has no real or substantial relation to those objects, or is a palpable invasion of rights secured by the fundamental law, it is the duty of the courts to so adjudge, and thereby give effect to the Constitution.

Keeping in view these principles, as governing the relations of the judicial and legislative departments of government with each other, it is difficult to perceive any ground for the judiciary to declare that the prohibition by Kansas of the manufacture or sale, within her limits, of intoxicating liquors for general use there as a beverage, is not fairly adapted to the end of protecting the community against the evils which confessedly result from the excessive use of ardent spirits. There is no justification for holding that the state, under the guise merely of police regulations, is here aiming to deprive the citizen of his constitutional rights; for we cannot shut out of view the fact, within the knowledge of all, that the public health, the public morals, and the public safety, may be endangered by the general use of intoxicating drinks; nor the fact, established by statistics accessible to every one, that the idleness, disorder, pauperism, and crime existing in the country are, in some degree at least, traceable to this evil. If, therefore, a state deems the absolute prohibition of the manufacture and sale, within her limits, of intoxicating liquors for other than medical, scientific, and manufacturing purposes, to be necessary to the peace and security of society, the courts cannot, without usurping legislative functions, override the will of the people as thus expressed by their chosen representatives. They have nothing to do with the mere policy of legislation. Indeed, it is a fundamental principle in our institutions, indispensable to the preservation of public liberty, that one of the separate departments of government shall not usurp powers committed by the Constitution to another department. And so, if, in the judgment of the legislature, the manufacture of intoxicating liquors for the maker's own use, as a beverage, would tend to cripple, if it did not defeat, the effort to guard the community against the evils attending the excessive use of such liquors, it is not for the courts, upon their views as to what is best and safest for the community, to disregard the legislative determination of that question. So far from such a regulation having no relation to the general end sought to be accomplished, the entire scheme of prohibition, as embodied in the Constitution and laws of Kansas, might fail, if the right of each citizen to manufacture intoxicating liquors for his own use as a beverage were recognized. Such a right does not inhere in citizenship. Nor can it be said that government interferes with or impairs any one's constitutional rights of liberty or of property, when it determines that the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks, for general or individual use, as a beverage, are, or may become, hurtful to society, and constitute, therefore, a business in which no one may lawfully engage. Those rights are best secured, in our government, by the observance, upon the part of all, of such regulations as are established by competent authority to promote the common good. No one may rightfully do that which the law making power, upon reasonable grounds, declares to be prejudicial to the general welfare. * * *

It is contended that, as the primary and principal use of beer is as a beverage; as their respective breweries were erected when it was lawful to engage in the manufacture of beer for every purpose; as such establishments will become of no value as property, or, at least, will be materially diminished in value, if not employed in the manufacture of beer for every purpose; the prohibition upon their being so employed is, in effect, a taking of property for public use without compensation, and depriving the citizen of his property without due process of law. In other words, although the state, in the exercise of her police powers, may lawfully prohibit the manufacture and sale, within her limits, of intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage, legislation having that object in view cannot be enforced against those who, at the time, happen to own property, the chief value of which consists in its fitness for such manufacturing purposes, unless compensation is first made for the diminution in the value of their property, resulting from such prohibitory enactments.

This interpretation of the Fourteenth Amendment is inadmissible. It cannot be supposed that the states intended, by adopting that Amendment, to impose restraints upon the exercise of their powers for the protection of the safety, health, or morals of the community. * * *

As already stated, the present case must be governed by principles that do not involve the power of eminent domain, in the exercise of which property may not be taken for public use without compensation. A prohibition simply upon the use of property for purposes that are declared, by valid legislation, to be injurious to the health, morals, or safety of the community, cannot, in any just sense, be deemed a taking or an appropriation of property for the public benefit. Such legislation does not disturb the owner in the control or use of his property for lawful purposes, nor restrict his right to dispose of it, but is only a declaration by the state that its use by any one, for certain forbidden purposes, is prejudicial to the public interests. Nor can legislation of that character come within the Fourteenth Amendment, in any case, unless it is apparent that its real object is not to protect the community, or to promote the general well-being, but, under the guise of police regulation, to deprive the owner of his liberty and property, without due process of law. The power which the states have of prohibiting such use by individuals of their property as will be prejudicial to the health, the morals, or the safety of the public, is not—and, consistently with the existence and safety of organized society, cannot be—burdened with the condition that the state must compensate such individual owners for pecuniary losses they may sustain, by reason of their not being permitted, by a noxious use of their property, to inflict injury upon the community. The exercise of the police power by the destruction of property which is itself a public nuisance, or the prohibition of its use in a particular way, whereby its value becomes depreciated, is very different from taking property for public use, or from depriving a person of his property without due process of law. In the one case, a nuisance only is abated; in the other, unoffending property is taken away from an innocent owner.

It is true, that, when the defendants in these cases purchased or erected their breweries, the laws of the state did not forbid the manufacture of intoxicating liquors. But the state did not thereby give any assurance, or come under an obligation, that its legislation upon that subject would remain unchanged. * * * Judgments affirmed.

SAMUELS v. McCURDY.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1925.

267 U. S. 188, 69 L. ed. 568, 45 Sup. Ct. 264, 37 A. L. R. 1378.

[Samuels filed a petition in the Superior Court of DeKalb County, Georgia, for an injunction to restrain the sheriff from destroying a large quantity of whiskeys, wines, beer, cordials and liquors which under a search warrant the latter had carried away from Samuels' residence. The sheriff acted under Georgia statutes of 1915 and 1917 which declared it unlawful for any person to have or possess any intoxicating liquor "whether intended for personal use or otherwise," except for medicinal, mechanical or sacramental purposes on special permits, and authorized seizure and destruction of liquor unlawfully kept. The petition averred that the liquor seized had been acquired by Samuels in manners that were lawful at the time of acquisition and were kept by him for the use of his family and friends at his own home. A general demurrer to the petition was sustained and the case dismissed. The Supreme Court of Georgia affirmed the judgment and this writ of error was taken.]

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE TAFT delivered the opinion of the Court.
* * *

First. This law is not an ex post facto law. It does not provide a punishment for a past offense. It does not fix a penalty for the owner for having become possessed of the liquor. The penalty it imposes is for continuing to possess the liquor after the enactment of the law. * * *

Second. Does the seizure of this liquor and its destruction deprive the plaintiff in error of his property without due process of law, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment?

In Crane v. Campbell, 245 U. S. 304, Crane was arrested for having in his possession a bottle of whiskey for his own use, and not for the purpose of giving away or selling the same to any person. This was under a provision of the statute of Idaho that it should be unlawful for any person to import, ship, sell, transport, deliver, receive or have in his possession any intoxicating liquors. It was held that the law was within the police power of the state. * * *

The Court pointed out that as the state had the power to prohibit, it might adopt such measures as were reasonably appropriate or needful to render exercise of that power effective; and that considering the notorious difficulties always attendant upon efforts to suppress traffic in liquors, the court was unable to say that the challenged inhibition of their possession was arbitrary and unreasonable or without proper relation to the legitimate legislative purpose, that the right to hold intoxicating liquor for personal use was not one of those fundamental privileges of a citizen of the United States which no state could abridge, and that a contrary view would be incompatible with the undoubted power to prevent manufacture, gift, sale, purchase or transportation of such articles—the only feasible ways of getting them. It did not appear in that case when the liquor seized had been acquired, but presumably after the prohibitory act.

In Barbour v. Georgia, 249 U. S. 454, it was held that the Georgia prohibitory law, approved November 18, 1915, but which did not become effective until May 1, 1916, was not invalid under the Fourteenth Amendment when applied to the possession of liquor by one who had acquired it after the approval of the law and before it became effective.

These cases it is said do not apply, because the liquor here was lawfully acquired by Samuels before the Act of 1917 making it unlawful for one to be possessed of liquor in his residence for use of his family and his guests. * * *

[Mugler v. Kansas is here stated and quotations made from the opinion.]

The ultimate legislative object of prohibition is to prevent the drinking of intoxicating liquor by any one because of the demoralizing effect of drunkenness upon society. The state has the power to subject those members of society who might indulge in the use of such liquor without injury to themselves to a deprivation of access to liquor in order to remove temptation from those whom its use would demoralize and to avoid the abuses which follow in its train. Accordingly laws have been enacted by the states, and sustained by this court, by which it has been made illegal to manufacture liquor for one's own use or for another's, to transport it or to sell it or to give it away to others. The legislature has this power whether it affects liquor lawfully acquired before the prohibition or not. Without compensation it may thus seek to reduce the drinking of liquor. It is obvious that if men are permitted to maintain liquor in their possession, though only for their own consumption, there is danger of its becoming accessible to others. Legislation making possession unlawful is therefore within the police power of the states as a reasonable mode of reducing the evils of drunkenness, as we have seen in the Crane and Barbour cases. The only question which arises is whether for the shrunken opportunity of the possessor of liquor who acquired it before the law, to use it only for his own consumption, the state must make compensation. By valid laws, his property rights have been so far reduced that it would be difficult to measure their value. That which had the qualities of property has, by successive provisions of law in the interest of all, been losing its qualities as property. For many years, every one who has made or stored liquor has known that it was a kind of property which because of its possible vicious uses might be denied by the state the character and attributes as such; that legislation calculated to suppress its use in the interest of public health and morality was lawful and possible, and this without compensation. Why should compensation be made now for the mere remnant of the original right if nothing was paid for the loss of the right to sell the liquor, give it away or transport it? The necessity for its destruction is claimed under the same police power to be for the public betterment as that which authorized its previous restrictions. * * *

Finally, it is said that the petitioner here has no day in court provided by the law, and therefore that in this respect the liquors have been taken from him without due process. * * * As a search warrant issued the seizure was presumably valid. The law provides for an order of destruction by a court, but it does not provide for notice to the previous possessor of the liquor and a hearing before the order is made. Under the circumstances prima facie the liquor existed contrary to law and it was for the possessor to prove the very narrow exceptions under which he could retain it as lawful. If he desired to try the validity of the seizure or the existence of the exception by which his possession could be made to appear legal, he could resort to suit to obtain possession and to enjoin the destruction under the Georgia law, as he has done in this case. This under the circumstances, it seems to us, constitutes sufficient process of law under the federal Constitution as respects one in his situation. * * *

Judgment affirmed.

[Mr. JUSTICE BUTLER delivered a dissenting opinion.]

NOTE

1. A state may prohibit the sale of malt beverages without alcoholic content because a legislature may reasonably believe that this is necessary to effective enforcement of its statutes against the sale of intoxicants. Purity Extract & Tonic Co. v. Lynch, 226 U. S. 192, 57 L. ed. 184, 33 Sup. Ct. 44 (1912).

POWELL v. PENNSYLVANIA.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1888.

127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. 992.

[Powell was indicted for selling oleomargarine in violation of a Pennsylvania statute of 1885 which made it a criminal offense to manufacture, sell, offer for sale, or keep for sale any article designed to take the place of butter, made from any oleaginous substance other than unadulterated milk or cream. For the purpose of the trial it was agreed that the two packages sold were sold and bought as butterine and not as butter and were plainly marked, "Oleomargarine Butter." The defendant offered evidence to show that the article sold was made of pure animal fats; that it contained all the elements of butter, including butterine though in a smaller proportion than butter contains; that butterine only gives flavor to butter and has nothing to do with its wholesomeness, and that the process of manufacture was clean and wholesome. He also offered evidence that the packages sold had been owned by him before the statute was enacted. This evidence was excluded as irrelevant. The State Supreme Court sustained a conviction, and now on writ of error:]

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

The main proposition advanced by the defendant is that his enjoyment upon terms of equality with all others in similar circumstances of the privilege of pursuing an ordinary calling or trade, and of acquiring, holding, and selling property, is an essential part of his rights of liberty and property, as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. The Court assents to this general proposition as embodying a sound principle of constitutional law. But it cannot adjudge that the defendant's rights of liberty and property, as thus defined, have been infringed by the statute of Pennsylvania, without holding that, although it may have been enacted in good faith for the objects expressed in its title, namely, to protect the public health and to prevent the adulteration of dairy products and fraud in the sale thereof, it has, in fact, no real or substantial relation to those objects. Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 661. The Court is unable to affirm that this legislation has no real or substantial relation to such objects.

It will be observed that the offer in the court below was to show by proof that the particular articles the defendant sold, and those in his possession for sale, in violation of the statute, were, in fact, wholesome or nutritious articles of food. It is entirely consistent with that offer that many, indeed, that most kinds of oleomargarine butter in the market contain ingredients that are or may become injurious to health. The Court cannot say, from anything of which it may take judicial cognizance, that such is not the fact. Under the circumstances disclosed in the record, and in obedience to settled rules of constitutional construction, it must be assumed that such is the fact. * * *

Whether the manufacture of oleomargarine, or imitation butter, of the kind described in the statute, is, or may be, conducted in such a way, or with such skill and secrecy, as to baffle ordinary inspection, or whether it involves such danger to the public health as to require, for the protection of the people, the entire suppression of the business, rather than its regulation in such manner as to permit the manufacture and sale of articles of that class that do not contain noxious ingredients, are questions of fact and of public policy which belong to the legislative department to determine. And as it does not appear upon the face of the statute, or from any facts of which the court must take judicial cognizance, that it infringes rights secured by the fundamental law, the legislative determination of those questions is conclusive upon the courts. It is not a part of their functions to conduct investigations of facts entering into questions of public policy merely, and to sustain or frustrate the legislative will, embodied in statutes, as they may happen to approve or disapprove its determination of such questions. The power which the legislature has to promote the general welfare is very great, and the discretion which that department of the government has, in the employment of means to that end, is very large. While both its power and its discretion must be so exercised as not to impair the fundamental rights of life, liberty, and property; and while, according to the principles upon which our institutions rest, "the very idea that one man may be compelled to hold his life, or the means of living, or any material right essential to the enjoyment of life, at the mere will of another, seems to be intolerable in any country where freedom prevails, as being the essence of slavery itself;" yet, "in many cases of mere administration, the responsibility is purely political, no appeal lying except to the ultimate tribunal of the public judgment, exercised either in the pressure of public opinion or by means of the suffrage." Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 370.

The case before us belongs to the latter class. The Legislature of Pennsylvania, upon the fullest investigation, as we must conclusively presume, and upon reasonable grounds, as must be assumed from the record, has determined that the prohibition of the sale, or offering for sale, or having in possession to sell, for purposes of food, of any article manufactured out of oleaginous substances or compounds other than those produced from unadulterated milk or cream from unadulterated milk, to take the place of butter produced from unadulterated milk or cream from unadulterated milk, will promote the public health, and prevent frauds in the sale of such articles. If all that can be said of this legislation is that it is unwise, or unnecessarily oppressive to those manufacturing or selling wholesome oleomargarine, as an article of food, their appeal must be to the legislature, or to the ballot-box, not to the judiciary. The latter cannot interfere without usurping powers committed to another department of government.

It is argued, in behalf of the defendant, that if the statute in question is sustained as a valid exercise of legislative power, then nothing stands in the way of the destruction by the legislative department of the constitutional guarantees of liberty and property. But the possibility of the abuse of legislative power does not disprove its existence. That possibility exists even in reference to powers that are conceded to exist. Besides, the judiciary department is bound not to give effect to statutory enactments that are plainly forbidden by the Constitution. This duty, the Court has said, is always one of extreme delicacy; for, apart from the necessity of avoiding conflicts between co-ordinate branches of the government, whether state or national, it is often difficult to determine whether such enactments are within the powers granted to or possessed by the legislature. Nevertheless, if the incompatibility of the Constitution and the statute is clear or palpable, the courts must give effect to the former. And such would be the duty of the court if the state legislature, under the pretense of guarding the public health, the public morals, or the public safety, should invade the rights of life, liberty, or property, or other rights, secured by the supreme law of the land.

* * *

Judgment affirmed.

[MR. JUSTICE FIELD delivered a dissenting opinion.]

NOTES

1. A state statute of Washington levying an excise tax of fifteen cents per pound on all butter substitutes sold within the state was upheld in A. Magnano Co. v. Hamilton, 292 U. S. 40, 78 L. ed. 1109, 54 Sup. Ct. 599 (1934), as against the claim, inter alia, that it violated due process of law. The court said that "except in rare and special instances, the due process of law clause contained in the Fifth Amendment is not a limitation upon the taxing power conferred upon Congress by the Constitution" and that consequently "no reason exists for applying a different rule against a state in the case of the Fourteenth Amendment."

2. In Price v. Illinois, 238 U. S. 446, 59 L. ed. 1400, 35 Sup. Ct. 892 (1915) it was held that a state might validly prohibit the sale of food preservatives containing boric acid although the harmful effects of such acid were "debatable." The power derived from the right to protect the public health and unless "palpably unreasonable and arbitrary" must be sustained. "If it be debatable, the legislature is entitled to its own judgment, and that judgment is not to be superseded by the verdict of a jury upon the issue which the legislature has decided."

WEAVER v. PALMER BROS. CO.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1926.
270 U. S. 402, 70 L. ed. 654, 46 Sup. Ct. 320.

Appeal from a decree of the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Pennsylvania granting an injunction to restrain the defendant (appellant), an official of Pennsylvania, from enforcing against the plaintiff (appellee), a manufacturer and seller of bedding, a statute of Pennsylvania in so far as the statute forbade the use of shoddy in the manufacture of comfortables. The statute defined shoddy as any material which has been spun into yarn, knit or woven into fabric, and subsequently cut up, torn up, broken up or ground up.

MR. JUSTICE BUTLER delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

The question for decision is whether the provision purporting absolutely to forbid the use of shoddy in comfortables violates the due process clause or the equal protection clause. The answer depends on the facts of the case. Legislative determinations express or implied are entitled to great weight; but it is always open to interested parties to show that the legislature has transgressed the limits of its power. Penna. Coal Co. v. Mahon, 260 U. S. 393, 413. Invalidity may be shown by things which will be judicially noticed (Quong Wing v. Kirkendall, 223 U. S. 59, 64) or by facts established by evidence. The burden is on the attacking party to establish the invalidating facts. See Minnesota Rate Cases, 230 U. S. 352, 452.

For many years prior to the passage of the act comfortables made in appellee's factories had been sold in Pennsylvania. In 1923 its business in that state exceeded $558,000, of which more than $188,000 was for comfortables filled with shoddy. About 5,000 dozens of these were filled with shoddy made of new materials, and about 3,000 dozens with secondhand shoddy. Appellee makes approximately 3,000,000 comfortables annually, and about 750,000 of these are filled with materials defined by the act as shoddy. New material from which appellee makes shoddy consists of clippings and pieces of new cloth obtained from cutting tables in garment factories; secondhand shoddy is made of secondhand garments, rags, and the like. The record shows that annually many million pounds of fabric, new and secondhand, are made into shoddy. It is used for many purposes. It is rewoven into fabric, made into pads to be used as filling material for bedding, and is used in the manufacture of blankets, clothing, underwear, hosiery, gloves, sweaters and other garments. The evidence is to the effect that practically all the woolen cloth woven in this country contains some shoddy. That used to make comfortables is a different grade from that used in the textile industry. Some used by appellee for that purpose is made of clippings from new woolen underwear and other high grade and expensive materials. Comfortables made of secondhand shoddy sell at lower prices than those filled with other materials.

Appellant claims that, in order properly to protect health, bedding materials should be sterilized. The record shows that for the sterilization of secondhand materials from which it makes shoddy, appellee uses effective steam sterilizers. There is no controversy between the parties as to whether shoddy may be rendered harmless by disinfection or sterilization. While it is sometimes made from filthy rags, and from other materials that have been exposed to infection, it stands undisputed that all dangers to health may be eliminated by appropriate treatment at low cost. * * *

There was no evidence that any sickness or disease was ever caused by the use of shoddy, and the record contains persuasive evidence, and by citation discloses the opinions of scientists eminent in fields related to public health that the transmission of disease-producing bacteria is almost entirely by immediate contact with, or close proximity to, infected persons; that such bacteria perish rapidly when separated from human or animal organisms; and that there is no probability that such bacteria or vermin likely to carry them survive after the period usually required for the gathering of the materials, the production of shoddy, and the manufacture and the shipping of comfortables. This evidence tends strongly to show that in the absence of sterilization or disinfection there would be little, if any, danger to the health of the users of comfortables filled with shoddy, new or secondhand; and confirms the conclusion that all danger from the use of shoddy may be eliminated by sterilization.

The state has wide discretion in selecting things for regulation. We need not consider whether the mere failure to forbid the use of other filling materials that are mentioned in the act is sufficient in itself to invalidate the provision prohibiting the use of shoddy, as a violation of the equal protection clause. But the number and character of the things permitted to be used in such manufacture properly may be taken into account in deciding whether the prohibition of shoddy is a reasonable and valid regulation or is arbitrary and violative of the due process clause. Shoddy-filled comfortables made by appellee are useful articles for which there is much demand; and it is a matter of public concern that the production and sale of things necessary or convenient for use should not be forbidden. They are to be distinguished from things that the state is deemed to have power to suppress as inherently dangerous. * * *

The appellant insists that this case is ruled by Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678. But the cases are essentially different. * * *

The facts clearly distinguish this case from the Powell case. There it was assumed that most kinds of oleomargarine in the market were or might become injurious to health. Here it is established that sterilization eliminates the dangers, if any, from the use of shoddy. As against that fact, the provision in question cannot be sustained as a measure to protect health; and the fact that the act permits the use of numerous materials, prescribing sterilization if they are secondhand, also serves to show that the prohibition of the use of shoddy, new or old, even when sterilized, is unreasonable and arbitrary.

Nor can such prohibition be sustained as a measure to prevent deception. In order to ascertain whether the materials used and the finished articles conform to its requirements, the act expressly provides for inspection of the places where such articles are made, sold or kept for sale. Every article of bedding is required to bear a tag showing the materials used for filling and giving the names and addresses of makers and vendors, and bearing the word "secondhand" where there has been prior use, and giving the number of the permit for sterilizing and disinfecting where secondhand materials or feathers are used for filling. Obviously, these regulations or others that are adequate may be effectively applied to shoddy-filled articles.

The constitutional guaranties may not be made to yield to mere convenience. Schlesinger v. Wisconsin, 270 U. S. 230. The business here involved is legitimate and useful; and, while it is subject to all reasonable regulation, the absolute prohibition of the use of shoddy in the manufacture of comfortables is purely arbitrary and violates the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Adams v. Tanner, 244 U. S. 590, 596; Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U. S. 390; Burns Baking Co. v. Bryan, 264 U. S. 504.

Decree affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE HOLMES, dissenting. If the legislature of Pennsylvania was of opinion that disease is likely to be spread by the use of unsterilized shoddy in comfortables I do not suppose that this Court would pronounce the opinion so manifestly absurd that it could not be acted upon. If we should not, then I think that we ought to assume the opinion to be right for the purpose of testing the law. The legislature may have been of opinion further that the actual practice of filling comfortables with unsterilized shoddy gathered from filthy floors was wide spread, and this again we must assume to be true. It is admitted to be impossible to distinguish the innocent from the infected product in any practicable way, when it is made up into the comfortables. On these premises, if the legislature regarded the danger as very great and inspection and tagging as inadequate remedies, it seems to me that in order to prevent the spread of disease it constitutionally could forbid any use of shoddy for bedding and upholstery. Notwithstanding the broad statement in Schlesinger v. Wisconsin the other day, I do not suppose that it was intended to overrule Purity Extract & Tonic Co. v. Lynch, 226 U. S. 192, and other cases to which I referred there. * * *

MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS and MR. JUSTICE STONE concur in this opinion.

CAROLENE PRODUCTS CO. v. UNITED STATES.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1944.

323 U. S. 18, 89 L. ed. 15, 65 Sup. Ct. 1, 155 A. L. R. 1371.

MR. JUSTICE REED delivered the opinion of the Court.

The limited writ of certiorari in this case was granted to review petitioners' conviction, affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals, for a violation of the Filled Milk Act. The Court was moved to allow the petition in order to examine the contentions that the accused articles of food cannot, under the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution, be banned from commerce when these compounds are nutritionally sufficient and not "in imitation or semblance" of milk or any milk product within the meaning of the statute and are not sold as milk or a milk product.

The contentions which are raised by petitioners to avoid their conviction were not dealt with in our prior decision which upheld the act's validity upon demurrer to an earlier indictment which charged its violation. United States v. Carolene Products Co., 304 U. S. 144. Since these issues are important to those affected by the act, certiorari was granted. 321 U. S. 760. Questions of due process under the Fourteenth Amendment, similar to those presented here, had arisen from state filled milk legislation with varying results. Consideration by this Court of the filled milk legislation of Kansas appears in Sage Stores et al. v. Kansas, 323 U. S. 32.

The facts which are undisputed are fully set out in the opinions of the District Court and the Circuit Court of Appeals. It is sufficient for our purposes to summarize them as follows. The corporate petitioner sells the products mentioned in the indictment which are manufactured for it by another corporation from skim milk, that is, milk from which a large percentage of the butterfat has been removed. The process of manufacture consists of taking natural whole milk, extracting the butterfat content and then adding cottonseed or cocoanut oil and fish liver oil, which latter oil contains vitamins A and D. The process includes pasteurization of the milk, evaporation, homogenization of the mixture and sterilization. The compound is sold under various trade names in cans of the same size and shape as those used for evaporated milk. The contents of the can are practically indistinguishable by the buying public from evaporated whole milk, but the cans are truthfully labeled to show the trade names and the ingredients.

The indictment charged the petitioner corporation and the individual petitioners, its president and vice president, with violation of the statute by making interstate shipments of the compounds contrary to Section 2. The convictions and sentences are assailed as improper on three grounds: first, that the petitioner's compounds were not covered by the rationale of the Filled Milk Act; second, that the Act did not cover the compounds because they were not "in imitation or semblance" of a milk product; and third, that since the compounds were wholesome food products and sold without fraud, in any sense, Congress could not constitutionally prohibit their interstate shipment. * * *

Third. If the Filled Milk Act is applicable to the compounds whose shipment was the basis of the indictment in this case, as we have just concluded, petitioners assert that the act, as thus applied, violates the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment. Their argument runs in this manner. Since these enriched compounds are admittedly wholesome and sold under trade names with proper labels without the commission of any fraud by petitioners on the public, Congress cannot prohibit their interstate shipment without denying to petitioners a right protected by the due process clause, the right to trade in innocent articles. They rely upon Weaver v. Palmer Bros. Co., 270 U. S. 402, and continue their protest against the refusal of the trial court to receive the evidence as to the wholesomeness of their product.

We do not need to consider the refusal of the trial court to receive evidence of the purity and wholesomeness of petitioner's products. Such evidence could be material only if the sole basis for Congressional action was impurity and unwholesomeness. Under the first point of this opinion, we have determined that the avoidance of confusion furnished a reason for the enactment of the Filled Milk Act. The trial court took judicial notice, as did the District Court of the District of Columbia, United States v. Carolene Products Co., 51 F. Supp. 675, 678, 679, and as we do, of the reports of the committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate which show that other considerations than nutritional deficiencies influenced the prohibition of the shipment of filled milk in interstate commerce. The unchallenged reports as we indicated in part "First" above, furnish an adequate basis, other than unwholesomeness, for the action of Congress. The reports show that it was disputable as to whether wholesome filled milk should be excluded from commerce because of the danger of its confusion with the condensed or evaporated natural product or whether regulation would be sufficient. The power was in Congress to decide its own course. We need look no further.

Weaver v. Palmer Bros., supra, is not to the contrary. This Court thought that under the facts of that record there was no reasonable basis for the legislative determination that the use of shoddy in comfortables was dangerous to the public health or that it offered opportunity for deception, 270 U. S. at pages 412 and 414. Therefore the prohibition of its use violated the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Sterilization, inspection and labeling were deemed to be sufficient to negative the possibility of such evils. It was pointed out in the course of the opinion, 270 U. S. at page 413, that where the possibility of evil was not negated, legislation prohibiting the sale of a wholesome article would not be invalidated. Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678. In dealing with the evils of filled milk, Congress reached the conclusion that labeling was not an adequate remedy for deception. On the point of the constitutionality in relation to due process of the prohibition of trade in articles which are not in themselves dangerous but which make other evils more difficult to control, such as confusion in the filled milk legislation, the Powell case is authority for the validity of Congressional action in the Filled Milk Act. It involved a sale of an article assumed to be just as good as butter but which was prohibited because of its ingredients. * * *

In Hebe Co. v. Shaw, 248 U. S. 297, this Court in 1919 upheld the validity of an Ohio statute which prohibited the sale of condensed milk made otherwise than from whole milk against an attack under the Fourteenth Amendment. It was assumed that the compound was wholesome and it was properly labeled. The act was sustained, however, as a proper exercise of legislative power to protect the public against fraudulent substitution. * * *

In the action of Congress on filled milk there is no prohibition of the shipment of an article of commerce merely because it competes with another such article which it resembles. Such would be the prohibition of the shipment of cotton or silk textiles to protect rayon or nylon or of anthracite to aid the consumption of bituminous coal or of cottonseed oil to aid the soybean industry. Here a milk product, skimmed milk, from which a valuable element—butterfat—has been removed is artificially enriched with cheaper fats and vitamins so that it is indistinguishable in the eyes of the average purchaser from whole milk products. The result is that the compound is confused with and passed off as the whole milk product in spite of proper labeling.

When Congress exercises a delegated power such as that over interstate commerce, the methods which it employs to carry out its purposes are beyond attack without a clear and convincing showing that there is no rational basis for the legislation; that it is an arbitrary fiat. This is not shown here. The judgment is Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE BLACK and MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS concur in the result.

MILLER v. SCHOENE.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1928.
276 U. S. 272, 72 L. ed. 568, 48 Sup. Ct. 246.

MR. JUSTICE STONE delivered the opinion of the Court.

Acting under the Cedar Rust Act of Virginia, Va. Acts 1914, c. 36, as amended by Va. Acts 1920, c. 260, now embodied in Va. Code (1924) as §§ 885 to 893, defendant in error, the state entomologist, ordered the plaintiffs in error to cut down a large number of ornamental red cedar trees growing on their property, as a means of preventing the communication of a rust or plant disease with which they were infected to the apple orchards in the vicinity. The plaintiffs in error appealed from the order to the Circuit Court of Shenandoah county which, after a hearing and a consideration of evidence, affirmed the order and allowed to plaintiffs in error $100 to cover the expense of removal of the cedars. Neither the judgment of the court nor the statute as interpreted allows compensation for the value of the standing cedars or the decrease in the market value of the realty caused by their destruction whether considered as ornamental trees or otherwise. But they save to plaintiffs in error the privilege of using the trees when felled. On appeal the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia affirmed the judgment. Miller v. State Entomologist, 146 Va. 175. Both in the Circuit Court and the Supreme Court of Appeals plaintiffs in error challenged the constitutionality of the statute under the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment and the case is properly here on writ of error. Jud. Code § 237(a).

The Virginia statute presents a comprehensive scheme for the condemnation and destruction of red cedar trees infected by cedar rust. By § 1 it is declared to be unlawful for any person to "own, plant or keep alive and standing" on his premises any red cedar tree which is or may be the source or "host plant" of the communicable plant disease known as cedar rust, and any such tree growing within a certain radius of any apple orchard is declared to be a public nuisance, subject to destruction. Section 2 makes it the duty of the state entomologist, "upon the request in writing of ten or more reputable freeholders of any county or magisterial district, to make a preliminary investigation of the locality * * * to ascertain if any cedar tree or trees * * * are the source of, harbor or constitute the host plant for the said disease * * * and constitute a menace to the health of any apple orchard in said locality, and that said cedar tree or trees exist within a radius of two miles of any apple orchard in said locality." If affirmative findings are so made, he is required to direct the owner in writing to destroy the trees and, in his notice, to furnish a statement of the "fact found to exist whereby it is deemed necessary or proper to destroy" the trees and to call attention to the law under which it is proposed to destroy them. Section 5 authorizes the state entomologist to destroy the trees if the owner, after being notified, fails to do so. Section 7 furnishes a mode of appealing from the order of the entomologist to the circuit court of the county, which is authorized to "hear the objections" and "pass upon all questions involved," the procedure followed in the present case.

As shown by the evidence and as recognized in other cases involving the validity of this statute, Bowman v. Virginia State Entomologist, 128 Va. 351; Kelleher v. Schoene, 14 F. (2d) 341, cedar rust is an infectious plant disease in the form of a fungoid organism which is destructive of the fruit and foliage of the apple, but without effect on the value of the cedar. Its life cycle has two phases which are passed alternately as a growth on red cedar and on apple trees. It is communicated by spores from one to the other over a radius of at least two miles. It appears not to be communicable between trees of the same species, but only from one species to the other, and other plants seem not to be appreciably affected by it. The only practicable method of controlling the disease and protecting apple trees from its ravages is the destruction of all red cedar trees, subject to the infection, located within two miles of apple orchards.

The red cedar, aside from its ornamental use, has occasional use and value as lumber. It is indigenous to Virginia, is not cultivated or dealt in commercially on any substantial scale, and its value throughout the state is shown to be small as compared with that of the apple orchards of the state. Apple growing is one of the principal agricultural pursuits in Virginia. The apple is used there and exported in large quantities. Many millions of dollars are invested in the orchards, which furnish employment for a large portion of the population, and have induced the development of attendant railroad and cold storage facilities.

On the evidence we may accept the conclusion of the Supreme Court of Appeals that the state was under the necessity of making a choice between the preservation of one class of property and that of the other wherever both existed in dangerous proximity. It would have been none the less a choice if, instead of enacting the present statute, the state, by doing nothing, had permitted serious injury to the apple orchards within its borders to go on unchecked. When forced to such a choice the state does not exceed its constitutional powers by deciding upon the destruction of one class of property in order to save another which, in the judgment of the legislature, is of greater value to the public. It will not do to say that the case is merely one of a conflict of two private interests and that the misfortune of apple growers may not be shifted to cedar owners by ordering the destruction of their property; for it is obvious that there may be, and that here there is, a preponderant public concern in the preservation of the one interest over the other. * * * And where the public interest is involved preferment of that interest over the property interest of the individual, to the extent even of its destruction, is one of the distinguishing characteristics of every exercise of the police power which affects property. * * *

We need not weigh with nicety the question whether the infected cedars constitute a nuisance according to the common law; or whether they may be so declared by statute. * * * For where, as here, the choice is unavoidable, we cannot say that its exercise, controlled by considerations of social policy which are not unreasonable, involves any denial of due process. * * *

Affirmed.

LOUIS K. LIGGETT CO. v. BALDRIDGE.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1928.
278 U. S. 105, 73 L. ed. 204, 49 Sup. Ct. 57.

MR. JUSTICE SUTHERLAND delivered the opinion of the Court.

This appeal brings here for consideration a challenge to the constitutionality of an act of the Pennsylvania legislature approved May 13, 1927, Penna. Stats., Supp. 1928, §§ 9377a-1, 9377a-2. * * * The act provides that every pharmacy or drug store shall be owned only by a licensed pharmacist, and, in the case of corporations, associations and co-partnerships, requires that all the partners or members thereof shall be licensed pharmacists, with the exception that such corporations as are already organized and existing and duly authorized and empowered to do business in the state and own and conduct drug stores or pharmacies, and associations and partnerships, which, at the time of the passage of the act, still own and conduct drug stores or pharmacies, may continue to own and conduct the same.

The appellant is a Massachusetts corporation authorized to do business in Pennsylvania. At the time of the passage of the act, appellant was empowered to own and conduct and owned and thereafter continued to own and operate a number of pharmacies or drug stores at various places within the latter state. After the passage of the act, appellant purchased and took possession of two additional drug stores in that state and carried on and continues and intends to continue to carry on a retail drug business therein under the title of "drug store" or "pharmacy," including the compounding, dispensing, preparation and sale at retail of drugs, medicines, etc. The business was and is carried on through pharmacists employed by appellant and duly registered in accordance with the statutes of the state. All of the members [stockholders] of the appellant corporation are not registered pharmacists, and, in accordance with the provisions of the act, the Pennsylvania State Board of Pharmacy has refused to grant appellant a permit to carry on the business. It further appears that the state Attorney General and the District Attorney of the proper county have threatened and intend to and will prosecute appellant for its violation of the act, the penalties for which are severe and cumulative. Suit was brought to enjoin these officers from putting into effect their threats, upon the ground that the act in question contravenes the due process and equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment. It is clear from the pleadings and the record, and it is conceded, that if the act be unconstitutional as claimed, appellant is entitled to the relief prayed. Terrace v. Thompson, 263 U. S. 197, 215; Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123.

The court below, composed of three judges, heard the case upon the pleadings, affidavits and an agreed statement of facts, and rendered a decree denying a preliminary injunction and, upon the agreed submission of the case, a final decree dismissing the bill for want of equity.

22 F. (2d) 993. The statute was held constitutional upon the ground that there was a substantial relation to the public interest in the ownership of a drug store where prescriptions were compounded. * * *

The act is sought to be sustained specifically upon the ground that it is reasonably calculated to promote the public health; and the determination we are called upon to make is whether the act has a real and substantial relation to that end or is a clear and arbitrary invasion of appellant's property rights guaranteed by the Constitution. * * *

A state undoubtedly may regulate the prescription, compounding of prescriptions, purchase and sale of medicines, by appropriate legislation to the extent reasonably necessary to protect the public health. And this the Pennsylvania legislature sought to do by various statutory provisions in force long before the enactment of the statute under review. Briefly stated, these provisions are: No one but a licensed physician may practice medicine or prescribe remedies for sickness; no one but a registered pharmacist lawfully may have charge of a drug store; every drug store must itself be registered, and this can only be done where the management is in charge of a registered pharmacist; stringent provision is made to prevent the possession or sale of any impure drug or any below the standard, strength, quality and purity as determined by the recognized pharmacopoeia of the United States; none but a registered pharmacist is permitted to compound physician's prescriptions; and, finally, the supervision of the foregoing matters and the enforcement of the laws in respect thereof are in the hands of the state Board of Pharmacy, which is given broad powers for these purposes.

It, therefore, will be seen that without violating laws, the validity of which is conceded, the owner of a drug store, whether a registered pharmacist or not, cannot purchase or dispense impure or inferior medicine; he cannot, unless he be a licensed physician, prescribe for the sick; he cannot, unless he be a registered pharmacist, have charge of a drug store or compound a prescription. Thus, it would seem, every point at which the public health is likely to be injuriously affected by the act of the owner in buying, compounding, or selling drugs and medicines is amply safeguarded.

The act under review does not deal with any of the things covered by the prior statutes above enumerated. It deals in terms only with ownership. It plainly forbids the exercise of an ordinary property right and, on its face, denies what the Constitution guarantees. A state cannot, "under the guise of protecting the public, arbitrarily interfere with private business or prohibit lawful occupations or impose unreasonable and unnecessary restrictions upon them." Burns Baking Co. v. Bryan, 264 U. S. 504, 513. * * *

In the light of the various requirements of the Pennsylvania statutes, it is made clear, if it were otherwise doubtful, that mere stock ownership in a corporation, owning and operating a drug store, can have no real or substantial relation to the public health; and that the act in question creates an unreasonable and unnecessary restriction upon private business. No facts are presented by the record, and, so far as appears, none were presented to the legislature which enacted the statute, that properly could give rise to a different conclusion. It is a matter of public notoriety that chain drug stores in great numbers, owned and operated by corporations, are to be found throughout the United States. They have been in operation for many years. We take judicial notice of the fact that the stock in these corporations is bought and sold upon the various stock exchanges of the country and, in the nature of things, must be held and owned to a large extent by persons who are not registered pharmacists. If detriment to the public health thereby has resulted or is threatened, some evidence of it ought to be forthcoming. None has been produced, and, so far as we are informed, either by the record or outside of it, none exists. The claim, that mere ownership of a drug store by one not a pharmacist bears a reasonable relation to the public health, finally rests upon conjecture, unsupported by anything of substance. This is not enough; and it becomes our duty to declare the act assailed to be unconstitutional as in contravention of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Decree reversed.

MR. JUSTICE HOLMES, dissenting.

A standing criticism of the use of corporations in business is that it causes such business to be owned by people who do not know anything about it. Argument has not been supposed to be necessary in order to show that the divorce between the power of control and knowledge is an evil. * * * The Constitution does not make it a condition of preventive legislation that it should work a perfect cure. It is enough if the questioned act has a manifest tendency to cure or at least to make the evil less. * * *

But for decisions to which I bow I should not think any conciliatory phrase necessary to justify what seems to me one of the incidents of legislative power. I think however that the police power as that term has been defined and explained clearly extends to a law like this, whatever I may think of its wisdom, and that the decree should be affirmed.
* * *

MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS joins in this opinion.

NOTE

1. In Adams v. Tanner, 244 U. S. 590, 61 L. ed. 1336, 37 Sup. Ct. 662, L. R. A. 1917F, 1163, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 973 (1917) a Washington statute which prohibited employment agencies from collecting fees from persons supplied with employment was held unconstitutional on the ground that it was arbitrary and oppressive, and unduly restrictive of the liberty of employment agents to engage in a useful business. Justices Holmes, McKenna, Brandeis and Clarke dissented. In Burns Baking Co. v. Bryan, 264 U. S. 504, 68 L. ed. 813, 44 Sup. Ct. 412, 32 A. L. R. 661 (1924) a statute fixing the weight of loaves of bread to be sold to the public for the purpose of protecting purchasers against fraud by short weights was invalidated on a finding of no real or substantial relation between the legislative action and the end sought to be accomplished. Justices Holmes and Brandeis dissented. Smith v. Texas, 233 U. S. 630, 58 L. ed. 1129, 34 Sup. Ct. 681, L. R. A. 1915D, 677 (1914) held invalid a Texas statute which made it a misdemeanor for any person to act as a conductor on a railroad train without having for two years prior thereto worked as a brakeman or conductor on a freight train. Justice Holmes dissented.

CHICAGO, B. & Q. R. CO. v. CHICAGO.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1897.

166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. 581.

[The City of Chicago in opening a street across the right of way of the railroad company proceeded in a local court to have determined by a jury the just compensation required by the constitution of Illinois to be paid upon taking private property for a public use. The company excepted to the jury's award of one dollar and to instructions given the jury as to the rules to be applied in ascertaining just compensation, contending that thereby it was deprived of its property without due process of law, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. From affirmance by the Illinois Supreme Court of a judgment in execution of this award, this writ of error was taken.]

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

It is proper now to inquire whether the due process of law enjoined by the Fourteenth Amendment requires compensation to be made or adequately secured to the owner of private property taken for public use under the authority of a state.

In Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, it was said that a statute declaring in terms, without more, that the full and exclusive title to a described piece of land belonging to one person should be and is hereby vested in another person, would, if effectual, deprive the former of his property without due process of law, within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment. See also Missouri Pacific Railway v. Nebraska, 164 U. S. 403, 417. Such an enactment would not receive judicial sanction in any country having a written constitution distributing the powers of government among three coordinate departments, and committing to the judiciary, expressly or by implication, authority to enforce the provisions of such constitution. It would be treated not as an exertion of legislative power, but as a sentence—an act of spoliation. Due protection of the rights of property has been regarded as a vital principle of republican institutions. "Next in degree to the right of personal liberty," Mr. Broom in his work on Constitutional Law says, "is that of enjoying private property without undue interference or molestation." (p. 228.) The requirement that the property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation is but "an affirmation of a great doctrine established by the common law for the protection of private property. It is founded in natural equity, and is laid down by jurists as a principle of universal law. Indeed, in a free government almost all other rights would become worthless if the government possessed an uncontrollable power over the private fortune of every citizen." * * *

But if, as this court has adjudged, a legislative enactment, assuming arbitrarily to take the property of one individual and give it to another individual, would not be due process of law as enjoined by the Fourteenth Amendment, it must be that the requirement of due process of law in that amendment is applicable to the direct appropriation by the state to public use and without compensation of the private property of the citizen. The legislature may prescribe a form of procedure to be observed in the taking of private property for public use but it is not due process of law if provision be not made for compensation. Notice to the owner to appear in some judicial tribunal and show cause why his property shall not be taken for public use without compensation would be a mockery of justice. Due process of law as applied to judicial proceedings instituted for the taking of private property for public use means, therefore, such process as recognizes the right of the owner to be compensated if his property be wrested from him and transferred to the public. The mere form of the proceeding instituted against the owner, even if he be admitted to defend, cannot convert the process used into due process of law, if the necessary result be to deprive him of his property without compensation. * * *

In our opinion, a judgment of a state court, even if it be authorized by statute, whereby private property is taken for the state or under its direction for public use, without compensation made or secured to the owner, is, upon principle and authority, wanting in the due process of law required by the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and the affirmance of such judgment by the highest court of the state is a denial by that state of a right secured to the owner by that instrument.

It remains to inquire whether the necessary effect of the proceedings in the court below was to appropriate to the public use any property right of the railroad company without compensation being made or secured to the owner. * * *

[The Court further held that as to whether one dollar was a correct valuation of the easement acquired or taken by the city, that fact having been found by a jury, as required by the constitution of Illinois, no federal court could re-examine that question because of the prohibition of the Seventh Amendment of the Constitution of the United States that "no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law."

After saying: "We are permitted only to inquire whether the trial court prescribed any rule of law for the guidance of the jury that was in absolute disregard of the company's right to just compensation," the Court concluded that the instructions to the jury were correct.]

Judgment affirmed.

[MR. JUSTICE BREWER dissented but only as to the points included in the brackets above.]

NOTES

1. The due process clause has been construed in many cases to permit a state to require railroads to eliminate highway grade crossings and similar works at their own expense. See, for example, Erie R. Co. v. Public Utility Commission, 254 U. S. 394, 65 L. ed. 322, 41 Sup. Ct. 169 (1921); Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Board of Public Utility Commissioners, 278 U. S. 24, 73 L. ed. 161, 49 Sup. Ct. 69, 62 A. L. R. 805 (1928). The court has held, however, that a railroad could not validly be required to bear half the cost of building an underpass on a new interstate highway where the underpass was prescribed not upon safety considerations but as a part of a national system of federal aid highways for the furtherance of motor vehicle traffic, much of which consisted of motor carriers in direct competition with the railroad. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Walters, 294 U. S. 405, 79 L. ed. 949, 55 Sup. Ct. 486 (1935). Nor may a pipe line company be required, without compensation, to make changes in its transmission lines necessitated by the replanning and construction of highways across its right of way. Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co. v. State Highway Commission, 294 U. S. 613, 79 L. ed. 1090, 55 Sup. Ct. 563 (1935).

2. A public drainage district may, as part of its plan to drain swamp lands, require a railroad company to bear the cost of removing and rebuilding a bridge made necessary by the deepening of the channel of a stream. The court said that "injury may often come to private property as the result of legitimate governmental action, reasonably taken for the public good and for no other purpose, and yet there will be no taking of such property within the meaning of the constitutional guarantee against the deprivation of property without due process of law, or against the taking of private property for public use without compensation." Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Illinois ex rel. Grimwood, 200 U. S. 561, 50 L. ed. 596, 26 Sup. Ct. 341, 4 Ann. Cas. 1175 (1906). A city ordinance was held invalid, however, which required privately owned electric public utilities to remove and relocate their poles and other property in the streets, without compensation, to afford space for the installation of a street lighting system. Los Angeles v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corp., 251 U. S. 32, 64 L. ed. 121, 40 Sup. Ct. 76 (1919).

3. In Louisville Joint Stock Land Bank v. Radford, 295 U. S. 555, 79 L. ed. 1593, 55 Sup. Ct. 854, 97 A. L. R. 1106 (1935), the Frazier-Lemke Act of 1934, providing relief for insolvent farmers by a form of bankruptcy proceeding, was held to violate the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment. The act provided that farmer-mortgagors failing to obtain a composition or extension of existing indebtedness could retain possession of the mortgaged property for five years, upon payment of a reasonable rental fee fixed by the court, with an option to purchase at an appraised or reappraised value during that period. The court said that the legislation deprived a secured creditor without compensation of substantive rights of substantial value in the specific property securing his claim and transferred them to the debtor. A revised statute of 1935 affording creditors greater protection was upheld in Wright v. Vinton Mountain Trust Bank, 300 U. S. 440, 81 L. ed. 736, 57 Sup. Ct. 556, 112 A. L. R. 1455 (1937).

OMNIA COMMERCIAL CO. v. UNITED STATES.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1923.

261 U. S. 502, 67 L. ed. 773, 43 Sup. Ct. 437.

Appeal from a judgment of the Court of Claims dismissing a petition on demurrer.

MR. JUSTICE SUTHERLAND delivered the opinion of the Court.

The appellant, on May 19, 1917, by assignment, became the owner of a contract, by which it acquired the right to purchase a large quantity of steel plate from the Allegheny Steel Company, of Pittsburgh, at a price under the market. The contract was of great value, and if carried out would have produced large profits.

In October, 1917, before any deliveries had been made, the United States government requisitioned the steel company's entire production of steel plate for the year 1918, and directed that company not to comply with the terms of appellant's contract, declaring that if an attempt was made to do so the entire plant of the steel company would be taken over and operated for the public use.

Appellant brought an action in the Court of Claims alleging, in addition to the foregoing, that by the orders of the government the performance of the contract by the steel company had been rendered unlawful and impossible; that the effect was to take for the public use appellant's right of priority to the steel plate expected to be produced by the steel company and thereby appropriate for public use appellant's property in the contract. As a result it alleged that it had incurred losses in a large sum which it sought to recover, as just compensation, by virtue of Article V of [the Amendments to] the Constitution. To this petition the United States interposed a demurrer, which was sustained, and the petition dismissed. From this judgment the case comes here by appeal. * * *

The contract in question was property within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment, Long Island Water Supply Co. v. Brooklyn, 166 U. S. 685, 690; Cincinnati v. Louisville & Nashville Ry. Co., 223 U. S. 390, 400, and if taken for public use the government would be liable. But destruction of, or injury to, property is frequently accomplished without a "taking" in the constitutional sense. To prevent the spreading of a fire, property may be destroyed without compensation to the owner, Bowditch v. Boston, 101 U. S. 16, 18; a doctrine perhaps to some extent resting on tradition. Pennsylvania Coal Co., Inc. v. Mahon, 260 U. S. 393.

There are many laws and governmental operations which injuriously affect the value of or destroy property—for example, restrictions upon the height or character of buildings, destruction of diseased cattle, trees, etc., to prevent contagion—but for which no remedy is afforded. Contracts in this respect do not differ from other kinds of property. See Calhoun v. Massie, 253 U. S. 170, where an act of Congress invalidating contracts made with attorneys for compensation exceeding a certain percentage for the prosecution of claims against the government was sustained, although it had the effect of putting an end to an existing contract. * * *

In Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Mottley, 219 U. S. 467, it was held that an act of Congress, prohibiting the issuance of free transportation by interstate common carriers, which invalidated a contract for transportation previously entered into and valid when made, did not have the effect of taking private property without compensation. The court, speaking through Mr. JUSTICE HARLAN, said (p. 484):

"It is not determinative of the present question that the commerce act as now construed will render the contract of no value for the purposes for which it was made. In Knox v. Lee, 12 Wall. 457, above cited, the court, referring to the Fifth Amendment, which forbids the taking of private property for public use without just compensation or due process of law, said: 'That provision has always been understood as referring only to a direct appropriation, and not to consequential injuries resulting from the exercise of lawful power. It has never been supposed to have any bearing upon or to inhibit laws that indirectly work harm and loss to individuals. A new tariff, an embargo, a draft, or a war, may inevitably bring upon individuals great losses; may, indeed, render valuable property almost valueless. They may destroy the worth of contracts.'"

The conclusion to be drawn from these and other cases which might be cited is that for consequential loss or injury resulting from lawful governmental action the law affords no remedy. The character of the power exercised is not material. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. Co. v. Drainage Commissioners, 200 U. S. 561, 583-585, 592-593. If, under any power, a contract or other property is taken for public use, the government is liable; but, if injured or destroyed by lawful action, without a taking, the government is not liable. What was here requisitioned was the future product of the steel company, and, since this product in the absence of governmental interference would have been delivered in fulfillment of the contract, the contention seems to be that the contract was so far identified with it that the taking of the former, ipso facto, took the latter. This, however, is to confound the contract with its subject-matter. The essence of every executory contract is the obligation which the law imposes upon the parties to perform it. "It [the contract] may be defined to be a transaction between two or more persons, in which each party comes under an obligation to the other, and each reciprocally acquires a right to whatever is promised by the other." Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 629, 656. Plainly here there was no acquisition of the obligation or the right to enforce it. If the steel company had failed to comply with the requisition, what would have been the remedy? Not enforcement of the contract, but enforcement of the statute. If the government had failed to pay for what it got, what would have been the right of the steel company? Not to the price fixed by the contract, but to the just compensation guaranteed by the Constitution.

In exercising the power to requisition, the government dealt only with the steel company, which company thereupon became liable to deliver its product to the government, by virtue of the statute and in response to the order. As a result of this lawful governmental action the performance of the contract was rendered impossible. It was not appropriated, but ended. * * *

The judgment of the court below is

Affirmed.

JACKMAN v. ROSENBAUM CO.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1922.

260 U. S. 22, 67 L. ed. 107, 43 Sup. Ct. 9.

Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Pennsylvania.

MR. JUSTICE HOLMES delivered the opinion of the Court.

The plaintiff in error, the original plaintiff, owned a theatre building in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, a wall of which went to the edge of his line. Proceeding under a statute of Pennsylvania, the defendant, owner of the adjoining land, began to build a party wall, intending to incorporate the plaintiff's wall. The city authorities decided that the latter was not safe and ordered it to be removed, which was done by the contractor employed by the defendant. The plaintiff later brought this suit. The declaration did not set up that the entry upon the plaintiff's land was unlawful, but alleged wrongful delay in completing the wall and the use of improper methods. It claimed damages for the failure to restore the plaintiff's building to the equivalent of its former condition, and for the delay, which, it was alleged, caused the plaintiff to lose the rental for a theatrical season. At the trial the plaintiff asked for a ruling that the statute relating to party walls, if interpreted to exclude the recovery of damages without proof of negligence, was contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment. This was refused, the court ruling that the defendant was not liable for damages necessarily resulting from the exercise of the right given by the statute, to build a party wall upon the line, and, more specifically, was not liable for the removal of the plaintiff's old wall. There were further questions as to whether the work was done by an independent contractor and as to negligence, on which the jury brought in a verdict for the plaintiff for $25,000; but the Court of Common Pleas held that the party employed was an independent contractor and that the defendant was entitled to judgment non obstante veredicto. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, holding among other things that the statute imposed no liability for damages necessarily caused by building such a party wall as it permitted, and that, so construed, it did not encounter the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, 263 Pa. St. 158.

In the state court the judgment was justified by reference to the power of the state to impose burdens upon property or to cut down its value in various ways without compensation, as a branch of what is called the police power. The exercise of this has been held warranted in some cases by what we may call the average reciprocity of advantage, although the advantages may not be equal in the particular case. Wurts v. Hoagland, 114 U. S. 606; Fallbrook Irrigation District v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112; Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 111. The Supreme Court of the state adverted also to increased safety against fire and traced the origin to the great fire in London in 1666. It is unnecessary to decide upon the adequacy of these grounds. It is enough to refer to the fact, also brought out and relied upon in the opinion below, that the custom of party walls was introduced by the first settlers in Philadelphia under William Penn and has prevailed in the state ever since. It is illustrated by statutes concerning Philadelphia going back to 1721; 1 Dallas, Laws of Pennsylvania, 152; and by an Act of 1794 for Pittsburgh, 3 Dallas, Laws, 588, 591, referring to the Act incorporating the borough of Reading. 2 Dallas, Laws, 124, 129.

The Fourteenth Amendment, itself a historical product, did not destroy history for the states and substitute mechanical compartments of law all exactly alike. If a thing has been practiced for two hundred years by common consent, it will need a strong case for the Fourteenth Amendment to affect it, as is well illustrated by Ownbey v. Morgan, 256 U. S. 94, 104, 112. See Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Barber Asphalt Co., 197 U. S. 430, 434. Such words as "right" are a constant solicitation to fallacy. We say a man has a right to the land that he has bought and that to subject a strip six inches or a foot wide to liability to use for a party wall therefore takes his right to that extent. It might be so and we might be driven to the economic and social considerations that we have mentioned if the law were an innovation, now heard of for the first time. But if, from what we may call time immemorial, it has been the understanding that the burden exists, the landowner does not have the right to that part of his land except as so qualified and the statute that embodies that understanding does not need to invoke the police power.

Of course a case could be imagined where the modest mutualities of simple townspeople might become something very different when extended to buildings like those of modern New York. There was a suggestion of such a difference in this case. But, although the foundations spread wide, the wall above the surface of the ground was only thirteen inches thick, or six and a half on the plaintiff's land, and as the damage complained of was a necessary incident to any such building, the question how far the liability might be extended does not arise. It follows, as stated by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania that "when either lot-owner builds upon his own property up to the division line, he does so with the knowledge that, in case of the erection of a party wall, that part of his building which encroaches upon the portion of the land subject to the easement will have to come down, if not suitable for incorporation into the new wall." In a case involving local history as this does, we should be slow to overrule the decision of courts steeped in the local tradition, even if we saw reasons for doubting it, which in this case we do not. Judgment affirmed.

LAUREL HILL CEMETERY v. SAN FRANCISCO.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1910.
216 U. S. 358, 54 L. ed. 515, 30 Sup. Ct. 301.

MR. JUSTICE HOLMES delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is an action to restrain the City and County of San Francisco and its officers from enforcing an ordinance forbidding the burial of the dead within the City and County limits. The allegations of the complaint are lengthy, but the material facts set forth are as follows: The plaintiff was incorporated in 1867 as a rural cemetery under a general act. The land in question had been dedicated as a burying ground, being at that time outside the city limits and a mile or two away from dwellings and business. It was conveyed to the plaintiff, and later a grant of the same was obtained from the city in consideration of $24,139.79, which sum the city retains. The land has been used as a cemetery ever since; forty thousand lots have been sold and over two million dollars have been spent by the lot owners and other large sums by the plaintiff in preparing and embellishing the grounds. By the terms of the above-mentioned general statute the lots, after a burial in them, are inalienable and descend to the heirs of the owner, and the plaintiff is bound to apply the proceeds of sales to the improvement, embellishment and preservation of the grounds. There is land still unsold estimated to be worth $75,000. There now are many dwellings near the cemetery, but it is alleged to be in no way injurious to health or offensive, or otherwise an interference with the enjoyment of property or life. There also is an allegation that there are within the city large tracts, some of them vacant and some of them containing several hundred acres, in several of which interments could be made more than a mile distant from any inhabitants or highway. The ordinance in question begins with a recital that "the burial of the dead within the City and County of San Francisco is dangerous to life and detrimental to the public health," and goes on to forbid such burial under a penalty of fine, imprisonment, or both. The complaint sets up that it violates Article I, § 8, and the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. * * *

The only question that needs to be answered, if not the only one before us, is whether the plaintiff's property is taken contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment. * * *

To aid its contention and in support of the averment that its cemetery, although now bordered by many dwellings, is in no way harmful, the plaintiff refers to opinions of scientific men who have maintained that the popular belief is a superstition. Of these we are asked, by implication, to take judicial notice, to adopt them, and on the strength of our acceptance to declare the foundation of the ordinance a mistake and the ordinance void. It may be, in a matter of this kind, where the finding of fact is merely a premise to laying down a rule of law, that this Court has power to form its own judgment without the aid of a jury. Prentiss v. Atlantic Coast Line, 211 U. S. 210, 227. But whatever the tribunal, in questions of this kind, great caution must be used in overruling the decision of the local authorities, or in allowing it to be overruled. No doubt this Court has gone a certain distance in that direction. Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 222; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 58 et seq. * * * But the propriety of deferring a good deal to the tribunals on the spot is not the only ground for caution. If every member of this Bench clearly agreed that burying grounds were centers of safety and thought the Board of Supervisors and the Supreme Court of California wholly wrong, it would not dispose of the case. There are other things to be considered. Opinion still may be divided, and if, on the hypothesis that the danger is real, the ordinance would be valid, we should not overthrow it merely because of our adherence to the other belief. Similar arguments were pressed upon this court with regard to vaccination, but they did not prevail. On the contrary, evidence that vaccination was deleterious was held properly to have been excluded. Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11; s. c., 183 Massachusetts, 242. See Otis v. Parker, 187 U. S. 606, 608, 609. Again there may have been other grounds fortifying the ordinance besides those recited in the preamble. And yet again the extent to which legislation may modify and restrict the uses of property consistently with the Constitution is not a question for pure abstract theory alone. Tradition and the habits of the community count for more than logic. Since, as before the making of constitutions, regulation of burial and prohibition of it in certain spots, especially in crowded cities, have been familiar to the Western World. * * * The plaintiff must wait until there is a change of practice or at least an established consensus of civilized opinion before it can expect this court to overthrow the rules that the lawmakers and the court of his own state uphold.

Judgment affirmed.

NOTE

1. Compare Hadacheck v. Sebastian, 239 U. S. 394, 60 L. ed. 348, 36 Sup. Ct. 143, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 927 (1915), in which was sustained an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles prohibiting the manufacture of brick within a defined area of the city, as against an owner of land who alleged that his eight acres of brick clay therein were worth $800,000 for the manufacture of bricks but not more than $60,000 for residential or any other purposes; that the city embraced 107.62 square miles in area, 75% of it devoted to residences, and that the area defined in the ordinance was only sparsely settled.

PENNSYLVANIA COAL CO. v. MAHON.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1922.

260 U. S. 393, 67 L. ed. 322, 43 Sup. Ct. 158, 28 A. L. R. 1321.

MR. JUSTICE HOLMES delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is a bill in equity brought by the defendants in error to prevent the Pennsylvania Coal Company from mining under their property in such way as to remove the supports and cause a subsidence of the surface and of their house. The bill sets out a deed executed by the Coal Company in 1878, under which the plaintiffs claim. The deed conveys the surface but in express terms reserves the right to remove all the coal under the same and the grantee takes the premises with the risk and waives all claim for damages that may arise from mining out the coal. But the plaintiffs say that whatever may have been the Coal Company's rights, they were taken away by an Act of Pennsylvania, approved May 27, 1921, P. L. 1198, commonly known there as the Kohler Act. The Court of Common Pleas found that if not restrained the defendant would cause the damage to prevent which the bill was brought, but denied an injunction, holding that the statute if applied to this case would be unconstitutional. On appeal the Supreme Court of the State agreed that the defendant had contract and property rights protected by the Constitution of the United States, but held that the statute was a legitimate exercise of the police power and directed a decree for the plaintiffs. A writ of error was granted bringing the case to this court.

The statute forbids the mining of anthracite coal in such way as to cause the subsidence of, among other things, any structure used as a human habitation, with certain exceptions, including among them land where the surface is owned by the owner of the underlying coal and is distant more than one hundred and fifty feet from any improved property belonging to any other person. As applied to this case the statute is admitted to destroy previously existing rights of property and contract. The question is whether the police power can be stretched so far.

Government hardly could go on if to some extent values incident to property could not be diminished without paying for every such change in the general law. As long recognized, some values are enjoyed under an implied limitation and must yield to the police power. But obviously the implied limitation must have its limits, or the contract and due process clauses are gone. One fact for consideration in determining such limits is the extent of the diminution. When it reaches a certain magnitude, in most if not in all cases there must be an exercise of eminent domain and compensation to sustain the act. So the question depends upon the particular facts. The greatest weight is given to the judgment of the legislature but it always is open to interested parties to contend that the legislature has gone beyond its constitutional power.

This is the case of a single private house. No doubt there is a public interest even in this, as there is in every purchase and sale and in all that happens within the commonwealth. Some existing rights may be modified even in such a case. Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 368. But usually in ordinary private affairs the public interest does not warrant much of this kind of interference. A source of damage to such a house is not a public nuisance even if similar damage is inflicted on others in different places. The damage is not common or public. Wesson v. Washburn Iron Co., 13 Allen (Mass.) 95, 103. The extent of the public interest is shown by the statute to be limited, since the statute ordinarily does not apply to land when the surface is owned by the owner of the coal. Furthermore, it is not justified as a protection of personal safety. That could be provided for by notice. Indeed the very foundation of this bill is that the defendant gave timely notice of its intent to mine under the house. On the other hand the extent of the taking is great. It purports to abolish what is recognized in Pennsylvania as an estate in land—a very valuable estate—and what is declared by the court below to be a contract hitherto binding the plaintiffs. If we were called upon to deal with the plaintiffs' position alone we should think it clear that the statute does not disclose a public interest sufficient to warrant so extensive a destruction of the defendant's constitutionally protected rights.

But the case has been treated as one in which the general validity of the act should be discussed. The Attorney General of the State, the City of Scranton and the representatives of other extensive interests were allowed to take part in the argument below and have submitted their contentions here. It seems, therefore, to be our duty to go farther in the statement of our opinion, in order that it may be known at once, and that further suits should not be brought in vain.

It is our opinion that the act cannot be sustained as an exercise of the police power, so far as it affects the mining of coal under streets or cities in places where the right to mine such coal has been reserved. As said in a Pennsylvania case, "For practical purposes, the right to coal consists in the right to mine it." Commonwealth v. Clearview Coal Co., 256 Pa. 328, 331. What makes the right to mine coal valuable is that it can be exercised with profit. To make it commercially impracticable to mine certain coal has very nearly the same effect for constitutional purposes as appropriating or destroying it. This we think that we are warranted in assuming that the statute does.

It is true that in Plymouth Coal Co. v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 531, it was held competent for the legislature to require a pillar of coal to be left along the line of adjoining property, that, with the pillar on the other side of the line, would be a barrier sufficient for the safety of the employees of either mine in case the other should be abandoned and allowed to fill with water. But that was a requirement for the safety of employees invited into the mine, and secured an average reciprocity of advantage that has been recognized as a justification of various laws.

The rights of the public in a street purchased or laid out by eminent domain are those that it has paid for. If in any case its representatives have been so short sighted as to acquire only surface rights without the right of support, we see no more authority for supplying the latter without compensation than there was for taking the right of way in the first place and refusing to pay for it because the public wanted it very much. The protection of private property in the Fifth Amendment presupposes that it is wanted for public use, but provides that it shall not be taken for such use without compensation. A similar assumption is made in the decisions upon the Fourteenth Amendment. Hairston v. Danville & Western Ry. Co., 208 U. S. 598, 605. When this seemingly absolute protection is found to be qualified by the police power, the natural tendency of human nature is to extend the qualification more and more until at last private property disappears. But that cannot be accomplished in this way under the Constitution of the United States.

The general rule at least is that while property may be regulated to a certain extent, if regulation goes too far it will be recognized as a taking. It may be doubted how far exceptional cases, like the blowing up of a house to stop a conflagration, go—and if they go beyond the general rule, whether they do not stand as much upon tradition as upon principle. Bowditch v. Boston, 101 U. S. 16. In general it is not plain that a man's misfortunes or necessities will justify his shifting the damages to his neighbor's shoulders. Spade v. Lynn & Boston R. R. Co., 172 Mass. 488, 489. We are in danger of forgetting that a strong public desire to improve the public condition is not enough to warrant achieving the desire by a shorter cut than the constitutional way of paying for the change. As we already have said, this is a question of degree—and therefore cannot be disposed of by general propositions. But we regard this as going beyond any of the cases decided by this court. The late decisions upon laws dealing with the congestion of Washington and New York, caused by the war, dealt with laws intended to meet a temporary emergency and providing for compensation determined to be reasonable by an impartial board. They went to the verge of the law but fell far short of the present act. Block v. Hirsh, 256 U. S. 135; Marcus Brown Holding Co. v. Feldman, 256 U. S. 170; Levy Leasing Co. v. Siegel, 258 U. S. 242.

We assume, of course, that the statute was passed upon the conviction that an exigency existed that would warrant it, and we assume that an exigency exists that would warrant the exercise of eminent domain. But the question at bottom is upon whom the loss of the changes desired should fall. So far as private persons or communities have seen fit to take the risk of acquiring only surface rights, we cannot see that the fact that their risk has become a danger warrants the giving to them greater rights than they bought. Decree reversed.

MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS, dissenting. * * *

Every restriction upon the use of property imposed in the exercise of the police power deprives the owner of some right theretofore enjoyed, and is, in that sense, an abridgment by the state of rights in property without making compensation. But restriction imposed to protect the public health, safety or morals from dangers threatened is not a taking. The restriction here in question is merely the prohibition of a noxious use. The property so restricted remains in the possession of its owner. The state does not appropriate it or make any use of it. The state merely prevents the owner from making a use which interferes with paramount rights of the public. Whenever the use prohibited ceases to be noxious—as it may because of further change in local or social conditions—the restriction will have to be removed and the owner will again be free to enjoy his property as heretofore.

The restriction upon the use of this property cannot, of course, be lawfully imposed, unless its purpose is to protect the public. But the purpose of a restriction does not cease to be public, because incidentally some private persons may thereby receive gratuitously valuable special benefits. Thus, owners of low buildings may obtain, through statutory restrictions upon the height of neighboring structures, benefits equivalent to an easement of light and air. Welch v. Swasey, 214 U. S. 91. Compare Lindsley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co., 220 U. S. 61; Walls v. Midland Carbon Co., 254 U. S. 300. Furthermore, a restriction, though imposed for a public purpose, will not be lawful, unless the restriction is an appropriate means to the public end. But to keep coal in place is surely an appropriate means of preventing subsidence of the surface; and ordinarily it is the only available means. Restriction upon use does not become inappropriate as a means, merely because it deprives the owner of the only use to which the property can then be profitably put. The liquor and the oleomargarine cases settled that. Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 668, 669; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 682. See also Hadacheck v. Los Angeles, 239 U. S. 394; Pierce Oil Corporation v. City of Hope, 248 U. S. 498. Nor is a restriction imposed through exercise of the police power inappropriate as a means, merely because the same end might be effected through exercise of the power of eminent domain, or otherwise at public expense. Every restriction upon the height of buildings might be secured through acquiring by eminent domain the right of each owner to build above the limiting height; but it is settled that the state need not resort to that power. Compare Laurel Hill Cemetery v. San Francisco, 216 U. S. 358; Missouri Pacific Ry. Co. v. Omaha, 235 U. S. 121. * * *

The fact that this suit is brought by a private person is, of course, immaterial. To protect the community through invoking the aid, as litigant, of interested private citizens is not a novelty in our law. That it may be done in Pennsylvania was decided by its Supreme Court in this case. And it is for a state to say how its public policy shall be enforced. * * *

A prohibition of mining which causes subsidence of such structures and facilities is obviously enacted for a public purpose; and it seems, likewise, clear that mere notice of intention to mine would not in this connection secure the public safety. Yet it is said that these provisions of the act cannot be sustained as an exercise of the police power where the right to mine such coal has been reserved. The conclusion seems to rest upon the assumption that in order to justify such exercise of the police power there must be "an average reciprocity of advantage" as between the owner of the property restricted and the rest of the community; and that here such reciprocity is absent. Reciprocity of advantage is an important consideration, and may even be an essential, where the state's power is exercised for the purpose of conferring benefits upon the property of a neighborhood, as in drainage projects, Wurts v. Hoagland, 114 U. S. 606; Fallbrook Irrigation District v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112; or upon adjoining owners, as by party wall provisions, Jackman v. Rosenbaum Co., 260 U. S. 22. But where the police power is exercised, not to confer benefits upon property owners but to protect the public from detriment and danger, there is in my opinion, no room for considering reciprocity of advantage. There was no reciprocal advantage to the owner prohibited from using his oil tanks in 248 U. S. 498; his brickyard, in 239 U. S. 394; his livery stable, in 237 U. S. 171; his billiard hall, in 225 U. S. 623; his oleomargarine factory, in 127 U. S. 678; his brewery, in 123 U. S. 623; unless it be the advantage of living and doing business in a civilized community. That reciprocal advantage is given by the act to the coal operators.

NOTES

1. Due process of law in eminent domain requires that at some stage of the proceeding before the judgment and award become final, the owner of property to be taken must have an opportunity to be heard on the issue of whether the amount of compensation is just. Bragg v. Weaver, 251 U. S. 57, 64 L. ed. 135, 40 Sup. Ct. 62 (1919). However, in condemnation proceedings as in lawsuits generally, due process does not require that a trial shall be free from error. In Roberts v. New York, 295 U. S. 264, 277, 79 L. ed. 1429, 55 Sup. Ct. 689 (1935), Mr. Justice Cardozo, for the court, said: "Not every such mistake amounts to a denial of constitutional immunities, though the outcome is to give the owner less than he ought to have. * * * To bring about a taking without due process of law by force of such a judgment, the error must be gross and obvious, coming close to the boundary of arbitrary action."

2. A statute authorizing riparian owners of lands on non-navigable streams to erect mill-dams for manufacturing purposes upon payment of damages to the owners of lands flooded thereby, does not deprive such latter owners of their property without due process of law and is within the constitutional power of a legislature as a valid exercise of the police power. Head v. Amoskeag Manufacturing Co., 113 U. S. 9, 28 L. ed. 889, 5 Sup. Ct. 441 (1885).

3. The owner of standing timber within 400 feet of a watershed owned by a city or town for a water supply may be required, upon cutting the timber, to remove waste in order to prevent the spread of fire and resulting damage to the watershed. Perley v. North Carolina, 249 U. S. 510, 63 L. ed. 735, 39 Sup. Ct. 357 (1919).

4. Where the noise and glaring lights at night of government planes landing at or leaving an airport leased to the United States, flying at low altitudes but using the path or glide approved by the Civil Aeronautics Authority, interfere with the normal use as a commercial chicken farm of property situated near the airport, there is such a taking as to give the owner a right to compensation under the Fifth Amendment. Justices Black and Burton dissented. United States v. Causby, 328 U. S. 256, 90 L. ed. 1206, 66 Sup. Ct. 1062 (1946). See the annotation following the case in 90 L. ed. 1218 (1946).

5. Pursuant to an executive order of the President, the United States seized and operated for five months a coal mine to avert a national strike of miners. The owner's claim to recover under the Fifth Amendment for the total operating losses sustained during the period of government operation was allowed by the Court of Claims to the extent to which the losses were attributable to increased wage payments made by the government to comply with a decision of the War Labor Board. In affirming this judgment, all members of the Supreme Court agreed that the seizure constituted a taking of property which justified compensation. Five justices (Black, Frankfurter, Douglas, Jackson and Reed) held that the loss attributable to the increased wage payments was compensable. The four justices first named took the view that the government was liable for losses, irrespective of whether or not they would have been sustained by the owner even in the absence of government seizure, while Justice Reed, holding that liability should extend only to losses incurred by governmental acts, concurred on the ground that the loss in question was suffered as a result of such an act. The dissenting justices (Chief Justice Vinson and Justices Burton, Clark and Minton) thought that the owner had not, in fact, been financially harmed by the government's acts. United States v. Pewee Coal Co., 341 U. S. 114, 95 L. ed. 809, 71 Sup. Ct. 670 (1951).

6. In United States v. Caltex (Philippines), 344 U. S. 149, 97 L. ed. 157, 73 Sup. Ct. 200 (1952) the court held that no compensable taking by the United States was effected by the destruction, by its retreating army, of waterfront terminal facilities of oil companies in Manila to prevent them from falling into enemy hands. Justices Black and Douglas dissented.

NOBLE STATE BANK v. HASKELL.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1911.

219 U. S. 104, 55 L. ed. 112, 31 Sup. Ct. 186, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487.

MR. JUSTICE HOLMES delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is a proceeding against the Governor of the State of Oklahoma and other officials who constitute the state banking board, to prevent them from levying and collecting an assessment from the plaintiff under an act approved December 17, 1907. This act creates the board and directs it to levy upon every bank existing under the laws of the state an assessment of one per cent. of the bank's average daily deposits, with certain deductions, for the purpose of creating a depositors' guaranty fund. There are provisos for keeping up the fund, and by an act passed March 11, 1909, since the suit was begun, the assessment is to be 5 per cent. The purpose of the fund is shown by its name. It is to secure the full repayment of deposits. When a bank becomes insolvent and goes into the hands of the bank commissioner, if its cash immediately available is not enough to pay depositors in full, the banking board is to draw from the depositors' guaranty fund (and from additional assessments if required) the amount needed to make up the deficiency. A lien is reserved upon the assets of the failing bank to make good the sum thus taken from the fund. The plaintiff says that it is solvent and does not want the help of the guaranty fund, and that it cannot be called upon to contribute toward securing or paying the depositors in other banks consistently with article 1, § 10, and the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. The petition was dismissed on demurrer by the Supreme Court of the state. 22 Otd. 48.

The reference to article 1, § 10, does not strengthen the plaintiff's bill. The only contract that it relies upon is its charter. That is subject to alteration or repeal, as usual, so that the obligation hardly could be said to be impaired by the act of 1907 before us, unless that statute deprives the plaintiff of liberty or property without due process of law. See Sherman v. Smith, 1 Black. 587. Whether it does so or not is the only question in the case.

In answering that question we must be cautious about pressing the broad words of the Fourteenth Amendment to a drily logical extreme. Many laws which it would be vain to ask the court to overthrow could be shown, easily enough, to transgress a scholastic interpretation of one or another of the great guarantees in the Bill of Rights. They more or less limit the liberty of the individual or they diminish property to a certain extent. We have few scientifically certain criteria of legislation, and as it often is difficult to mark the line where what is called the police power of the states is limited by the Constitution of the United States, judges should be slow to read into the latter a nolumus mutare as against the law-making power.

The substance of the plaintiff's argument is that the assessment takes private property for private use without compensation. And while we should assume that the plaintiff would retain a reversionary interest in its contribution to the fund so as to be entitled to a return of what remained of it if the purpose were given up (see Receiver of Danby Bank v. State Treasurer, 39 Vt. 92, 98), still there is no denying that by this law a portion of its property might be taken without return to pay debts of a failing rival in business. Nevertheless, notwithstanding the logical form of the objection, there are more powerful considerations on the other side. In the first place it is established by a series of cases that an ulterior public advantage may justify a comparatively insignificant taking of private property for what, in its immediate purpose, is a private use. Clark v. Nash, 198 U. S. 361; Strickley v. Highland Boy Mining Co., 200 U. S. 527, 531; Offield v. New York, New Haven & Hartford R. R. Co., 203 U. S. 372; Bacon v. Walker, 204 U. S. 311, 315. And in the next, it would seem that there may be other cases beside the every day one of taxation, in which the share of each party in the benefit of a scheme of mutual protection is sufficient compensation for the correlative burden that it is compelled to assume. See Ohio Oil Co. v. Indiana, 177 U. S. 190. At least, if we have a case within the reasonable exercise of the police power as above explained, no more need be said.

It may be said in a general way that the police power extends to all the great public needs. Camfield v. United States, 167 U. S. 518. It may be put forth in aid of what is sanctioned by usage, or held by the prevailing morality or strong and preponderant opinion to be greatly and immediately necessary to the public welfare. Among matters of that sort probably few would doubt that both usage and preponderant opinion give their sanction to enforcing the primary conditions of successful commerce. One of those conditions at the present time is the possibility of payment by checks drawn against bank deposits, to such an extent do checks replace currency in daily business. If then the legislature of the state thinks that the public welfare requires the measure under consideration, analogy and principle are in favor of the power to enact it. Even the primary object of the required assessment is not a private benefit as it was in the cases above cited of a ditch for irrigation or a railway to a mine, but it is to make the currency of checks secure, and by the same stroke to make safe the almost compulsory resort of depositors to banks as the only available means for keeping money on hand. The priority of claim given to depositors is incidental to the same object and is justified in the same way. The power to restrict liberty by fixing a minimum of capital required of those who would engage in banking is not denied. The power to restrict investments to securities regarded as relatively safe seems equally plain. It has been held, we do not doubt rightly, that inspections may be required and the cost thrown on the bank. See Charlotte, Columbia & Augusta R. R. Co. v. Gibbes, 142 U. S. 386. The power to compel, beforehand, cooperation, and thus, it is believed, to make a failure unlikely and a general panic almost impossible, must be recognized, if government is to do its proper work, unless we can say that the means have no reasonable relation to the end. Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 183, 188. So far is that from being the case that the device is a familiar one. It was adopted by some states the better part of a century ago, and seems never to have been questioned until now. Receiver of Danby Bank v. State Treasurer, 39 Vt. 92; People v. Walker, 17 N. Y. 502. Recent cases going not less far are Lemieux v. Young, 211 U. S. 489, 496; Kidd, Dater & Price Co. v. Musselman Grocer Co., 217 U. S. 461.

It is asked whether the state could require all corporations or all grocers to help to guarantee each other's solvency, and where we are going to draw the line. But the last is a futile question, and we will answer the others when they arise. With regard to the police power, as elsewhere in the law, lines are pricked out by the gradual approach and contact of decisions on the opposing sides. Hudson County Water Co. v. McCarter, 209 U. S. 349, 355. It will serve as a datum on this side, that in our opinion the statute before us is well within the state's constitutional power, while the use of the public credit on a large scale to help individuals in business has been held to be beyond the line. Loan Association v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655; Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454.

The question that we have decided is not much helped by propounding the further one, whether the right to engage in banking is or can be made a franchise. But as the latter question has some bearing on the former and as it will have to be considered in the following cases, if not here, we will dispose of it now. It is not answered by citing authorities for the existence of the right at common law. There are many things that a man might do at common law that the states may forbid. He might embezzle until a statute cut down his liberty. We cannot say that the public interests to which we have adverted, and others, are not sufficient to warrant the state in taking the whole business of banking under its control. On the contrary we are of opinion that it may go on from regulation to prohibition except upon such conditions as it may prescribe. In short, when the Oklahoma legislature declares by implication that free banking is a public danger, and that incorporation, inspection and the above-described cooperation are necessary safeguards, this Court certainly cannot say that it is wrong. * * * Judgment affirmed.

NOTES

1. The statute in the reported case, enacted in the wake of the panic of 1907, is an example of legislative experimentation to meet a demonstrated need. Similar laws passed in Nebraska and Kansas were upheld in Shallenberger v. First State Bank, 219 U. S. 114, 55 L. ed. 117, 31 Sup. Ct. 189 (1911), and Assaria State Bank v. Dolley, 219 U. S. 121, 55 L. ed. 123, 31 Sup. Ct. 189 (1911). Experience proved the laws to be unworkable. But since no constitutional obstacle stood in the way of further experimentation, it was possible to profit by past errors and seek a more mature solution of the problem in the field of federal legislation. The result was the creation of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation by the Banking Act of 1933 (12 U. S. C. § 264; F. C. A. 12 § 264), which has proved successful in its operation.

2. Abie State Bank v. Bryan, 282 U. S. 765, 75 L. ed. 690, 51 Sup. Ct. 252 (1931) sustained a Nebraska statute authorizing the levy of certain special assessments against state banks under the bank guaranty law of that state against an attack grounded on the view that their collection constituted a taking of the plaintiff bank's property without due process of law.

3. California State Automobile Association Inter-Insurance Bureau v. Maloney, 341 U. S. 105, 95 L. ed. 788, 71 Sup. Ct. 601 (1951) upheld as consistent with due process the California Compulsory Assigned Risk Law, which made it mandatory on all automobile liability insurers to subscribe to a plan for the equitable apportionment among such insurers of applicants who are in good faith entitled to but are unable to procure such insurance through ordinary methods. The court said that the case in its broadest reach was one in which the state requires in the public interest each member of a business to assume a pro rata share of a burden which modern conditions have made incident to the business. It was therefore similar to the situation in Noble State Bank v. Haskell.

4. The Supreme Court has sustained the constitutionality of so-called "blue-sky laws," enacted in virtually all states to prevent the issuance, flotation, and sale of fraudulent issues of stocks and worthless securities. Laws of this type are prime examples of the police power objective of the prevention of fraud and deceit. Hall v. Geiger-Jones Co., 242 U. S. 539, 61 L. ed. 480, 37 Sup. Ct. 217, L. R. A. 1917F, 514, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 643 (1917). The regulatory power of Congress in this field, as evidenced by the enactment of the Federal Securities Act of 1933 and of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, should also be noted.

EUCLID v. AMBLER REALTY CO.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1926.

272 U. S. 365, 71 L. ed. 303, 47 Sup. Ct. 114, 54 A. L. R. 1016.

[Bill by the Ambler Realty Co. to enjoin enforcement by the Village of Euclid of a comprehensive zoning ordinance. From a decree for plaintiff in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Ohio defendants appeal.]

MR. JUSTICE SUTHERLAND delivered the opinion of the Court.

The village of Euclid is an Ohio municipal corporation. It adjoins and practically is a suburb of the city of Cleveland. Its estimated population is between 5,000 and 10,000, and its area from 12 to 14 square miles, the greater part of which is farm lands or unimproved acreage. It lies, roughly, in the form of a parallelogram measuring approximately  $3\frac{1}{2}$  miles each way. East and west it is traversed by three principal highways: Euclid avenue, through the southerly border, St. Clair avenue, through the central portion, and Lake Shore boulevard, through the northerly border, in close proximity to the shore of Lake Erie. The Nickel Plate Railroad lies from 1,500 to 1,800 feet north of Euclid avenue, and the Lake Shore Railroad 1,600 feet farther to the north. The three highways and the two railroads are substantially parallel.

Appellee is the owner of a tract of land containing 68 acres, situated in the westerly end of the village, abutting on Euclid avenue to the south and the Nickel Plate Railroad to the north. Adjoining this tract, both on the east and on the west, there have been laid out restricted residential plats upon which residences have been erected.

On November 13, 1922, an ordinance was adopted by the village council, establishing a comprehensive zoning plan for regulating and restricting the location of trades, industries, apartment houses, two-family houses, single family houses, etc., the lot area to be built upon, the size and height of buildings, etc. * * *

Before proceeding to a consideration of the case, it is necessary to determine the scope of the inquiry. The bill alleges that the tract of land in question is vacant and has been held for years for the purpose of selling and developing it for industrial uses, for which it is especially adapted, being immediately in the path of progressive industrial development; that for such uses it has a market value of about $10,000 per acre, but if the use be limited to residential purposes the market value is not in excess of $2,500 per acre; that the first 200 feet of the parcel back from Euclid avenue, if unrestricted in respect to use, has a value of $150 per front foot, but if limited to residential uses, and ordinary mercantile business be excluded therefrom, its value is not in excess of $50 per front foot. * * *

The record goes no farther than to show, as the lower court found, that the normal and reasonably to be expected use and development of that part of appellee's land adjoining Euclid avenue is for general trade and commercial purposes, particularly retail stores and like establishments, and that the normal and reasonably to be expected use and development of the residue of the land is for industrial and trade purposes. * * *

The motion [to dismiss the bill] was properly overruled, the effect of the allegations of the bill is that the ordinance of its own force operates greatly to reduce the value of appellee's lands and destroy their marketability for industrial, commercial and residential uses, and the attack is directed, not against any specific provision or provisions, but against the ordinance as an entirety. * * * Is the ordinance invalid, in that it violates the constitutional protection "to the right of property in the appellee by attempted regulations under the guise of the police power, which are unreasonable and confiscatory"?

Building zone laws are of modern origin. They began in this country about 25 years ago. Until recent years, urban life was comparatively simple; but, with the great increase and concentration of population, problems have developed, and constantly are developing, which require, and will continue to require, additional restrictions in respect of the use and occupation of private lands in urban communities. Regulations, the wisdom, necessity, and validity of which, as applied to existing conditions, are so apparent that they are now uniformly sustained, a century ago, or even half a century ago, probably would have been rejected as arbitrary and oppressive. Such regulations are sustained, under the complex conditions of our day, for reasons analogous to those which justify traffic regulations, which, before the advent of automobiles and rapid transit street railways, would have been condemned as fatally arbitrary and unreasonable. And in this there is no inconsistency, for, while the meaning of constitutional guaranties never varies, the scope of their application must expand or contract to meet the new and different conditions which are constantly coming within the field of their operation. In a changing world it is impossible that it should be otherwise. But although a degree of elasticity is thus imparted, not to the meaning, but to the application of constitutional principles, statutes and ordinances, which, after giving due weight to the new conditions, are found clearly not to conform to the Constitution, of course, must fall.

The ordinance now under review, and all similar laws and regulations, must find their justification in some aspect of the police power, asserted for the public welfare. The line which in this field separates the legitimate from the illegitimate assumption of power is not capable of precise delimitation. It varies with circumstances and conditions. A regulatory zoning ordinance, which would be clearly valid as applied to the great cities, might be clearly invalid as applied to rural communities. In solving doubts, the maxim "sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas," which lies at the foundation of so much of the common law of nuisances, ordinarily will furnish a fairly helpful clew. And the law of nuisances, likewise, may be consulted, not for the purpose of controlling, but for the helpful aid of its analogies in the process of ascertaining the scope of, the power. Thus the question whether the power to forbid the erection of a building of a particular kind or for a particular use, like the question whether a particular thing is a nuisance, is to be determined, not by an abstract consideration of the building or of the thing considered apart, but by considering it in connection with the circumstances and the locality. Sturgis v. Bridgeman, L. R. 11 Ch. 852, 865. A nuisance may be merely a right thing in the wrong place, like a pig in the parlor instead of the barnyard. If the validity of the legislative classification for zoning purposes be fairly debatable, the legislative judgment must be allowed to control. Radice v. New York, 264 U. S. 292, 294.

There is no serious difference of opinion in respect of the validity of laws and regulations fixing the height of buildings within reasonable limits, the character of materials and methods of construction, and the adjoining area which must be left open, in order to minimize the danger of fire or collapse, the evils of overcrowding and the like, and excluding from residential sections offensive trades, industries and structures likely to create nuisances. See Welch v. Swasey, 214 U. S. 91; Hada-check v. Los Angeles, 239 U. S. 394; Reinman v. Little Rock, 237 U. S. 171; Cusack Co. v. City of Chicago, 242 U. S. 526, 529, 530.

Here, however, the exclusion is in general terms of all industrial establishments, and it may thereby happen that not only offensive or dangerous industries will be excluded, but those which are neither offensive nor dangerous will share the same fate. But this is no more than happens in respect of many practice-forbidding laws which this court has upheld, although drawn in general terms so as to include individual cases that may turn out to be innocuous in themselves. Hebe Co. v. Shaw, 248 U. S. 297, 303; Pierce Oil Corp. v. City of Hope, 248 U. S. 498, 500. The inclusion of a reasonable margin, to insure effective enforcement, will not put upon a law, otherwise valid, the stamp of invalidity. Such laws may also find their justification in the fact that, in some fields, the bad fades into the good by such insensible degrees that the two are not capable of being readily distinguished and separated in terms of legislation. In the light of these considerations, we are not prepared to say that the end in view was not sufficient to justify the general rule of the ordinance, although some industries of an innocent character might fall within the proscribed class. It cannot be said that the ordinance in this respect "passes the bounds of reason and assumes the character of a merely arbitrary fiat." Purity Extract Co. v. Lynch, 226 U. S. 192, 204. Moreover, the restrictive provisions of the ordinance in this particular may be sustained upon the principles applicable to the broader exclusion from residential districts of all business and trade structures, presently to be discussed. * * *

We find no difficulty in sustaining restrictions of the kind thus far reviewed. The serious question in the case arises over the provisions of the ordinance excluding from residential districts apartment houses, business houses, retail stores and shops, and other like establishments. This question involves the validity of what is really the crux of the more recent zoning legislation, namely, the creation and maintenance of residential districts, from which business and trade of every sort, including hotels and apartment houses, are excluded. Upon that question this court has not thus far spoken. The decisions of the state courts are numerous and conflicting; but those which broadly sustain the power greatly outnumber those which deny it altogether or narrowly limit it, and it is very apparent that there is a constantly increasing tendency in the direction of the broader view. We shall not attempt to review these decisions at length, but content ourselves with citing a few as illustrative of all. * * *

The decisions enumerated in the first group cited above agree that the exclusion of buildings devoted to business, trade, etc., from residential districts, bears a rational relation to the health and safety of the community. Some of the grounds for this conclusion are promotion of the health and security from injury of children and others by separating dwelling houses from territory devoted to trade and industry; suppression and prevention of disorder; facilitating the extinguishment of fires, and the enforcement of street traffic regulations and other general welfare ordinances; aiding the health and safety of the community, by excluding from residential areas the confusion and danger of fire, contagion, and disorder, which in greater or less degree attach to the location of stores, shops, and factories. Another ground is that the construction and repair of streets may be rendered easier and less expensive, by confining the greater part of the heavy traffic to the streets where business is carried on. * * *

The matter of zoning has received much attention at the hands of commissions and experts, and the results of their investigations have been set forth in comprehensive reports. These reports, which bear every evidence of painstaking consideration, concur in the view that the segregation of residential, business and industrial buildings will make it easier to provide fire apparatus suitable for the character and intensity of the development in each section; that it will increase the safety and security of home life, greatly tend to prevent street accidents, especially to children, by reducing the traffic and resulting confusion in residential sections, decrease noise and other conditions which produce or intensify nervous disorders, preserve a more favorable environment in which to rear children, etc. With particular reference to apartment houses, it is pointed out that the development of detached house sections is greatly retarded by the coming of apartment houses, which has sometimes resulted in destroying the entire section for private house purposes; that in such sections very often the apartment house is a mere parasite, constructed in order to take advantage of the open spaces and attractive surroundings created by the residential character of the district. Moreover, the coming of one apartment house is followed by others, interfering by their height and bulk with the free circulation of air and monopolizing the rays of the sun which otherwise would fall upon the smaller homes, and bringing, as their necessary accompaniments, the disturbing noises incident to increased traffic and business, and the occupation, by means of moving and parked automobiles, of larger portions of the streets, thus detracting from their safety and depriving children of the privilege of quiet and open spaces for play, enjoyed by those in more favored localities—until, finally, the residential character of the neighborhood and its desirability as a place of detached residences are utterly destroyed. Under these circumstances, apartment houses, which in a different environment would be not only entirely unobjectionable but highly desirable, come very near to being nuisances.

If these reasons, thus summarized, do not demonstrate the wisdom or sound policy in all respects of those restrictions which we have indicated as pertinent to the inquiry, at least, the reasons are sufficiently cogent to preclude us from saying, as it must be said before the ordinance can be declared unconstitutional, that such provisions are clearly arbitrary and unreasonable, having no substantial relation to the public health, safety, morals, or general welfare. Cusack Co. v. City of Chi- cago, supra, pages 530-531; Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 30-31.

It is true that when, if ever, the provisions set forth in the ordinance in tedious and minute detail, come to be concretely applied to particular premises, including those of the appellee, or to particular conditions, or to be considered in connection with specific complaints, some of them, or even many of them, may be found to be clearly arbitrary and unreasonable. But where the equitable remedy of injunction is sought, as it is here, not upon the ground of a present infringement or denial of a specific right, or of a particular injury in process of actual execution, but upon the broad ground that the mere existence and threatened enforcement of the ordinance, by materially and adversely affecting values and curtailing the opportunities of the market, constitute a present and irreparable injury, the court will not scrutinize its provisions, sentence by sentence, to ascertain by a process of piecemeal dissection whether there may be, here and there, provisions of a minor character, or relating to matters of administration, or not shown to contribute to the injury complained of, which, if attacked separately, might not withstand the test of constitutionality. In respect of such provisions, of which specific complaint is not made, it cannot be said that the land-owner has suffered or is threatened with an injury which entitles him to challenge their constitutionality. * * * Under these circumstances, therefore, it is enough for us to determine, as we do, that the ordinance in its general scope and dominant features, so far as its provisions are here involved, is a valid exercise of authority, leaving other provisions to be dealt with as cases arise directly involving them.

And this is in accordance with the traditional policy of this Court. In the realm of constitutional law, especially, this court has perceived the embarrassment which is likely to result from an attempt to formulate rules or decide questions beyond the necessities of the immediate issue. It has preferred to follow the method of a gradual approach to the general by a systematically guarded application and extension of constitutional principles to particular cases as they arise, rather than by out of hand attempts to establish general rules to which future cases must be fitted. This process applies with peculiar force to the solution of questions arising under the due process clause of the Constitution as applied to the exercise of the flexible powers of police, with which we are here concerned.

Decree reversed.

MR. JUSTICE VAN DEVANTER, MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS and MR. JUSTICE BUTLER dissent.

NOTE

1. The principal case is annotated in 54 A. L. R. 1030 (1928). In Zahn v. Board of Public Works, 274 U. S. 325, 71 L. ed. 1074, 47 Sup. Ct. 594 (1927) a Los Angeles ordinance was sustained which established an exclusively residential zone of an area, including the complainant's land, though the latter would have had a greatly enhanced value if available for business purposes. A large part of this area though still vacant had already been restricted to residence use by private covenants before the ordinance was passed. "The ordinance," the court said, "is of the now familiar comprehensive type, but in the main regulates only the character of buildings which lawfully may be erected and does not prescribe height and area limitations." Regulations as to height and area have generally been sustained, however. See Gorieb v. Fox, 274 U. S. 603, 71 L. ed. 1228, 47 Sup. Ct. 675, 53 A. L. R. 1210 (1927), sustaining an ordinance which created a set-back or building line, with relation to the street, to which all buildings subsequently erected had to conform, the line to be at least as far from the street as that occupied by sixty per cent of the existing houses in the block.

Specific provisions of zoning ordinances were held invalid in Nectow v. Cambridge, 277 U. S. 183, 72 L. ed. 842, 48 Sup. Ct. 447 (1928), and Washington ex rel. Seattle Title Trust Co. v. Roberge, 278 U. S. 116, 73 L. ed. 210, 49 Sup. Ct. 50, 86 A. L. R. 654 (1928). It has been generally stated that every intendment will be indulged in favor of the validity of a zoning ordinance and a presumption has been applied that the determination of a local zoning board is correct. Regulations, however, must have a reasonable relation to the public welfare and there must be no unreasonable, oppressive, or unwarranted interference with property rights. To prevent litigation, zoning laws generally vest in administrative agencies power to make exceptions in certain cases where strict application of the law would result in undue hardship.

Regulation of billboards and other forms of outdoor advertising has been considered in many cases. A leading case in the field is Cusack Co. v. Chicago, 242 U. S. 526, 61 L. ed. 472, 37 Sup. Ct. 190, L. R. A. 1918A, 136, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 594 (1917), where an ordinance was upheld which required the consent of the adjacent owners to the erection of billboards in districts which were primarily residential, the court emphasizing the fire, health, safety and morals factors which supplied a basis for the regulation. The court held that billboards might be entirely prohibited in residential blocks and therefore the consent provision was a possible benefit to those wishing to erect billboards in such a block.

For discussions of zoning and related problems, see Noel, Unaesthetic Sights as Nuisances, 25 Corn. L. Q. 1 (1939), Retroactive Zoning and Nuisances, 41 Col. L. Rev. 457 (1941); Rodda, The Accomplishment of Aesthetic Purposes Under the Police Power, 27 So. Cal. L. Rev. 149 (1954). For an interesting behind-the-scenes account of how Mr. Justice Sutherland, who originally voted to hold the zoning ordinance in Euclid v. Ambler unconstitutional, was finally won over to the view which eventually prevailed, see McCormack, A Law Clerk's Recollections, 46 Col. L. Rev. 710, 712 (1946).

ALLGEYER v. LOUISIANA.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1897.
165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 17 Sup. Ct. 427.

[The State of Louisiana brought an action in a Louisiana court to recover from Allgeyer & Co., three statutory penalties of $1000 each for alleged violations of a Louisiana statute which purported so to penalize any person, firm or corporation, who "in any manner whatsoever does any act in this state to effect, for himself or for another, insurance on property then in this state in any marine insurance company which has not complied in all respects with the laws of this state." The agreed facts showed that Allgeyer & Co., cotton exporters doing business in New Orleans, made a contract of open marine insurance with the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company, a New York company, which had no agent in Louisiana and which had not complied with the requirements of Louisiana for the doing of business in that state. In accordance with the terms of this open policy Allgeyer & Co. upon later making a shipment of cotton gave notice to the insurance company by letter mailed in Louisiana, the notice being necessary to cause the open policy to attach to any particular shipment. By the terms of the policy, premiums and losses were payable in New York. Premiums were remitted by the defendants from New Orleans. The Supreme Court of Louisiana, reversing the trial court, gave judgment for one penalty of $1000 and this writ of error was taken.]

MR. JUSTICE PECKHAM delivered the opinion of the Court.

There is no doubt of the power of the state to prohibit foreign insurance companies from doing business within its limits. The state can impose such conditions as it pleases upon the doing of any business by those companies within its borders, and unless the conditions be complied with the prohibition may be absolute. The cases upon this subject are cited in the opinion of the court in Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648.

A conditional prohibition in regard to foreign insurance companies doing business within the State of Louisiana is to be found in article 236 of the constitution of that state, which reads as follows: "No foreign corporation shall do any business in this state without having one or more known places of business, and an authorized agent or agents in the state, upon whom process may be served."

It is not claimed in this suit that the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company has violated this provision of the Constitution by doing business within the state. * * *

In the course of the opinion delivered in this case by the Supreme Court of Louisiana that court said:

"The open policy in this case is conceded to be a New York contract; hence the special insurance effected on the cotton complained of here was a New York contract. * * * We are not dealing with the contract. If it be legal in New York, it is valid elsewhere. We are concerned only with the fact of its having been entered into by a citizen of Louisiana while within her limits affecting property within her territorial limits. It is the act of the party, and not the contract, which we are to consider. * * * The defendants while in the state undoubtedly insured their property located in the state in a foreign insurance company under an open policy. The instant the letter or communication was mailed or telegraphed the property was insured. The act of insurance was done within the state and the offence denounced by the statute was complete." * * *

We have, then, a contract which it is conceded was made outside and beyond the limits of the jurisdiction of the State of Louisiana, being made and to be performed within the State of New York, where the premiums were to be paid, and losses, if any, adjusted. The letter of notification did not constitute a contract made or entered into within the State of Louisiana. It was but the performance of an act rendered necessary by the provisions of the contract already made between the parties outside of the state. It was a mere notification that the contract already in existence would attach to that particular property. In any event, the contract was made in New York, outside of the jurisdiction of Louisiana, even though the policy was not to attach to the particular property until the notification was sent.

It is natural that the state court should have remarked that there is in this "statute an apparent interference with the liberty of defendants in restricting their rights to place insurance on property of their own whenever and in what company they desired." Such interference is not only apparent, but it is real, and we do not think that it is justified for the purpose of upholding what the state says is its policy with regard to foreign insurance companies which had not complied with the laws of the state for doing business within its limits. In this case the company did no business within the state, and the contracts were not therein made.

The Supreme Court of Louisiana says that the act of writing within that state the letter of notification was an act therein done to effect an insurance on property then in the state, in a marine insurance company which had not complied with its laws, and such act was therefore prohibited by the statute. As so construed, we think the statute is a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution, in that it deprives the defendants of their liberty without due process of law. The statute which forbids such act does not become due process of law, because it is inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution of the Union. The liberty mentioned in that amendment means, not only the right of the citizen to be free from the mere physical restraint of his person, as by incarceration, but the term is deemed to embrace the right of the citizen to be free in the enjoyment of all his faculties; to be free to use them in all lawful ways; to live and work where he will; to earn his livelihood by any lawful calling; to pursue any livelihood or avocation, and for that purpose to enter into all contracts which may be proper, necessary and essential to his carrying out to a successful conclusion the purposes above mentioned.

It was said by Mr. Justice Bradley, in Butchers' Union Company v. Crescent City Company, 111 U. S. 746, 762, in the course of his concurring opinion in that case, that "the right to follow any of the common occupations of life is an inalienable right. It was formulated as such under the phrase 'pursuit of happiness' in the Declaration of Independence, which commenced with the fundamental proposition that 'all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.' This right is a large ingredient in the civil liberty of the citizen." Again, on page 764 the learned justice said: "I hold that the liberty of pursuit—the right to follow any of the ordinary callings of life—is one of the privileges of a citizen of the United States." And again, on page 765: "But if it does not abridge the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States to prohibit him from pursuing his chosen calling, and giving to others the exclusive right of pursuing it, it certainly does deprive him (to a certain extent) of his liberty; for it takes from him the freedom of adopting and following the pursuit which he prefers, which, as already intimated, is a material part of the liberty of the citizen." It is true that these remarks were made in regard to questions of monopoly, but they well describe the rights which are covered by the word "liberty," as contained in the Fourteenth Amendment. * * *

The foregoing extracts have been made for the purpose of showing what general definitions have been given in regard to the meaning of the word "liberty" as used in the Amendment, but we do not intend to hold that in no such case can the state exercise its police power. When and how far such power may be legitimately exercised with regard to these subjects must be left for determination to each case as it arises.

Has not a citizen of a state, under the provisions of the federal Constitution above mentioned, a right to contract outside of the state for insurance on his property—a right of which state legislation cannot deprive him? We are not alluding to acts done within the state by an insurance company or its agents doing business therein, which are in violation of the state statutes. Such acts come within the principle of the Hooper Case (supra), and would be controlled by it. When we speak of the liberty to contract for insurance or to do an act to effectuate such a contract already existing, we refer to and have in mind the facts of this case, where the contract was made outside the state, and as such was a valid and proper contract. The act done within the limits of the state under the circumstances of this case and for the purpose therein mentioned, we hold a proper act, one which the defendants were at liberty to perform and which the state legislature had no right to prevent, at least with reference to the federal Constitution. To deprive the citizen of such a right as herein described without due process of law is illegal. Such a statute as this in question is not due process of law, because it prohibits an act which under the federal Constitution the defendants had a right to perform. This does not interfere in any way with the acknowledged right of the state to enact such legislation in the legitimate exercise of its police or other powers as to it may seem proper. In the exercise of such right, however, care must be taken not to infringe upon those other rights of the citizen which are protected by the federal Constitution.

In the privilege of pursuing an ordinary calling or trade, and of acquiring, holding, and selling property, must be embraced the right to make all proper contracts in relation thereto; and although it may be conceded that this right to contract in relation to persons or property or to do business within the jurisdiction of the state may be regulated, and sometimes prohibited, when the contracts or business conflict with the policy of the state as contained in its statutes, yet the power does not and cannot extend to prohibiting a citizen from making contracts of the nature involved in this case outside of the limits and jurisdiction of the state, and which are also to be performed outside of such jurisdiction; nor can the state legally prohibit its citizens from doing such an act as writing this letter of notification, even though the property which is the subject of the insurance may at the time when such insurance attaches be within the limits of the state. * * *

Judgment reversed.

NOTES

1. Allgeyer v. Louisiana is the first case in which the Supreme Court relied upon the "liberty of contract" concept as a ground for invalidating a statute. Note that the expressions of Mr. Justice Bradley in the cited case, which are quoted with approval by Mr. Justice Peckham, are repetitions of statements made by Bradley in his dissenting opinion in the celebrated Slaughter-House Cases, considered in Chapter IV. Thus the "fundamental rights" doctrine rejected in the Slaughter-House Cases, where the privileges and immunities clause of the Fourteenth Amendment was the principal bone of contention, found its way into Supreme Court decisions through its adoption in the Allgeyer case as a definition of due process of law. The influence and significance of the "liberty of contract" concept will be seen shortly in connection with cases involving the constitutionality of price-fixing laws and of legislative regulation of the employer-employee relationship. Mr. Justice Field had evidently foreseen the possibilities of the due process clause in this respect much earlier, since he in effect relied upon it in his dissent in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 136, 24 L. ed. 77 (1876). See, generally, Pound, Liberty of Contract, 18 Yale L. J. 454 (1909), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 208; Reeder, The Due Process Clauses and "The Substance of Individual Rights," 58 U. of Pa. L. Rev. 191 (1910); Warren, The New "Liberty" Under the Fourteenth Amendment, 39 Harv. L. Rev. 431 (1926), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 237.

2. Compare Osborn v. Ozlin, 310 U. S. 53, 84 L. ed. 1074, 60 Sup. Ct. 758 (1940), sustaining a Virginia statute which forbade contracts of insurance or surety by companies authorized to do business within the state except through regularly constituted and registered resident agents of such companies. Pointing out that the state could, if it chose, go into the insurance business, just as it can operate warehouses, flour mills, and other business ventures, the court said: "If the state, as to local risks, could thus preempt the field of insurance for itself, it may stay its intervention short of such a drastic step by insisting that its own residents shall have a share in devising and safeguarding protection against its local hazards."

MEYER v. NEBRASKA.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1923.

262 U. S. 390, 67 L. ed. 1042, 43 Sup. Ct. 625, 29 A. L. R. 1446.

MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS delivered the opinion of the Court.

Plaintiff in error was tried and convicted in the District Court for Hamilton County, Nebraska. * * * The information is based upon "An act relating to the teaching of foreign languages in the State of Nebraska," approved April 9, 1919. * * *

The Supreme Court of the state affirmed the judgment of conviction. 107 Neb. 657. It declared the offense charged and established was "the direct and intentional teaching of the German language as a distinct subject to a child who had not passed the eighth grade," in the parochial school maintained by the Zion Evangelical Lutheran Congregation, a collection of Biblical stories being used therefor. * * * The problem for our determination is whether the statute as construed and applied unreasonably infringes the liberty guaranteed to the plaintiff in error by the Fourteenth Amendment. * * * While this court has not attempted to define with exactness the liberty thus guaranteed, the term has received much consideration and some of the included things have been definitely stated. Without doubt, it denotes not merely freedom from bodily restraint but also the right of the individual to contract, to engage in any of the common occupations of life, to acquire useful knowledge, to marry, establish a home and bring up children, to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, and generally to enjoy those privileges long recognized at common law as essential to the orderly pursuit of happiness by free men. [Citations are omitted.] The established doctrine is that this liberty may not be interfered with, under the guise of protecting the public interest, by legislative action which is arbitrary or without reasonable relation to some purpose within the competency of the state to effect. Determination by the legislature of what constitutes proper exercise of police power is not final or conclusive but is subject to supervision by the courts. Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 137.

The American people have always regarded education and acquisition of knowledge as matters of supreme importance which should be diligently promoted. The Ordinance of 1787 declares, "Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged." Corresponding to the right of control, it is the natural duty of the parent to give his children education suitable to their station in life; and nearly all the states, including Nebraska, enforce this obligation by compulsory laws.

Practically, education of the young is only possible in schools conducted by especially qualified persons who devote themselves thereto. The calling always has been regarded as useful and honorable, essential, indeed, to the public welfare. Mere knowledge of the German language cannot reasonably be regarded as harmful. Heretofore it has been commonly looked upon as helpful and desirable. Plaintiff in error taught this language in school as part of his occupation. His right thus to teach and the right of parents to engage him so to instruct their children, we think, are within the liberty of the Amendment.

The challenged statute forbids the teaching in school of any subject except in English; also the teaching of any other language until the pupil has attained and successfully passed the eighth grade, which is not usually accomplished before the age of twelve. The Supreme Court of the state has held that "the so-called ancient or dead languages" are not "within the spirit or the purpose of the act." Nebraska District of Evangelical Lutheran Synod v. McKelvie, 187 N. W. 927. Latin, Greek, Hebrew are not proscribed; but German, French, Spanish, Italian and every other alien speech are within the ban. Evidently the legislature has attempted materially to interfere with the calling of modern language teachers, with the opportunities of pupils to acquire knowledge, and with the power of parents to control the education of their own.

It is said the purpose of the legislation was to promote civic development by inhibiting training and education of the immature in foreign tongues and ideals before they could learn English and acquire American ideals; and "that the English language should be and become the mother tongue of all children reared in this state." It is also affirmed that the foreign born population is very large, that certain communities commonly use foreign words, follow foreign leaders, move in a foreign atmosphere, and that the children are thereby hindered from becoming citizens of the most useful type and the public safety is imperiled.

That the state may do much, go very far, indeed, in order to improve the quality of its citizens, physically, mentally and morally, is clear; but the individual has certain fundamental rights which must be respected. The protection of the Constitution extends to all, to those who speak other languages as well as to those born with English on the tongue. Perhaps it would be highly advantageous if all had ready understanding of our ordinary speech, but this cannot be coerced by methods which conflict with the Constitution—a desirable end cannot be promoted by prohibited means. * * * The desire of the legislature to foster a homogeneous people with American ideals prepared readily to understand current discussions of civic matters is easy to appreciate. Unfortunate experiences during the late war and aversion toward every characteristic of truculent adversaries were certainly enough to quicken that aspiration. But the means adopted, we think, exceed the limitations upon the power of the state and conflict with rights assured to plaintiff in error. The interference is plain enough and no adequate reason therefor in time of peace and domestic tranquility has been shown.

The power of the state to compel attendance at some school and to make reasonable regulations for all schools, including a requirement that they shall give instructions in English, is not questioned. Nor has challenge been made of the state's power to prescribe a curriculum for institutions which it supports. Those matters are not within the present controversy. Our concern is with the prohibition approved by the Supreme Court. Adams v. Tanner, 244 U. S. 590, 594, pointed out that mere abuse incident to an occupation ordinarily useful is not enough to justify its abolition, although regulation may be entirely proper. No emergency has arisen which renders knowledge by a child of some language other than English so clearly harmful as to justify its inhibition with the consequent infringement of rights long freely enjoyed. We are constrained to conclude that the statute as applied is arbitrary and without reasonable relation to any end within the competency of the state.

As the statute undertakes to interfere only with teaching which involves a modern language, leaving complete freedom as to other matters, there seems no adequate foundation for the suggestion that the purpose was to protect the child's health by limiting his mental activities. It is well known that proficiency in a foreign language seldom comes to one not instructed at an early age, and experience shows that this is not injurious to the health, morals or understanding of the ordinary child.

The judgment of the court below must be reversed.

[MR. JUSTICE HOLMES and MR. JUSTICE SUTHERLAND dissented.]

NOTES

1. Statutes similar to the one declared invalid in the principal case were stricken down in the companion case of Bartels v. Iowa, 262 U. S. 404, 67 L. ed. 1047, 43 Sup. Ct. 628 (1923), decided on the same day. In this case Mr. Justice Holmes (with the concurrence of Mr. Justice Sutherland) dissented, saying in part: "It is with hesitation and unwillingness that I differ from my brethren with regard to a law like this but I cannot bring my mind to believe that in some circumstances, and circumstances existing it is said in Nebraska, the statute might not be regarded as a reasonable or even necessary method of reaching the desired result. The part of the act with which we are concerned deals with the teaching of young children. Youth is the time when familiarity with a language is established and if there are sections in the State where a child would hear only Polish or French or German spoken at home I am not prepared to say that it is unreasonable to provide that in his early years he shall hear and speak only English at school. But if it is reasonable it is not an undue restriction of the liberty either of teacher or scholar. No one would doubt that a teacher might be forbidden to teach many things, and the only criterion of his liberty under the Constitution that I can think of is 'whether, considering the end in view, the statute passes the bounds of reason and assumes the character of a merely arbitrary fiat.'"

2. In Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 49 L. ed. 643, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 3 Ann. Cas. 765 (1905), a case involving a state compulsory vaccination law, the court had before it a legislative restriction involving "liberty" in its original sense of restraint of the person. It was contended that the law was "hostile to the inherent right of every free man to care for his own body and health in such way as to him seems best." The court, however, in sustaining the statute, said that the "liberty" secured by the Constitution "does not import an absolute right in each person to be, at all times and in all circumstances, wholly freed from restraint." Moreover, in view of the methods commonly employed to stamp out smallpox, it could not be asserted "that the means prescribed by the State to that end has no real or substantial relation to the protection of the public health and the public safety."

3. In Buck v. Bell, 274 U. S. 200, 71 L. ed. 1000, 47 Sup. Ct. 584 (1927), in sustaining a Virginia statute of 1924 providing for the sterilization of mental defectives who were inmates of state institutions, Mr. Justice Holmes, speaking for the court said: "It is better for all the world, if instead of waiting to execute degenerate offspring for crime, or to let them starve for their imbecility, society can prevent those who are manifestly unfit from continuing their kind. The principle that sustains compulsory vaccination is broad enough to cover cutting the Fallopian tubes. * * * Three generations of imbeciles are enough."

4. In Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U. S. 510, 69 L. ed. 1070, 45 Sup. Ct. 571, 39 A. L. R. 468 (1925), an Oregon statute, adopted in 1922 to become effective in 1926, was held invalid which imposed criminal penalties upon any parent or guardian of a child between the ages of eight and sixteen (with certain exceptions) who failed to send such child to a public school, for the full school period each year. The court, through Mr. Justice McReynolds, said: "Under the doctrine of Meyer v. Nebraska, we think it entirely plain that the Act of 1922 unreasonably interferes with the liberty of parents and guardians to direct the upbringing and education of children under their control. * * * The fundamental theory of liberty upon which all governments of this Union repose excludes any general power of the State to standardize its children by forcing them to accept instruction from public teachers only. The child is not the mere creature of the State; those who nurture him and direct his destiny have the right, coupled with the high duty, to recognize and prepare him for additional obligations."

5. The due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment was held not to have been violated by a state law which authorized the suspension from practice, for six months, of a physician because he had been convicted in a federal court of failing to produce, before a congressional committee, papers belonging to an organization headed by him which had been subpoenaed by the committee. One of the points in issue was whether due process had been denied by the introduction of evidence in the administrative proceedings to suspend the physician's license that this organization was listed by the Attorney General as subversive. Separate dissenting opinions were written by Justices Black, Douglas and Frankfurter. Barsky v. Board of Regents of University of New York, 347 U. S. 442, 98 L. ed. 829, 74 Sup. Ct. 650 (1954).

Section 2.—The Regulation and Price Control of Business Affected With a Public Interest.

MUNN v. ILLINOIS.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1876.

94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77.

Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WAITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

The question to be determined in this case is whether the General Assembly of Illinois can, under the limitations upon the legislative power of the states imposed by the Constitution of the United States, fix by law the maximum of charges for the storage of grain in warehouses at Chicago and other places in the state having not less than one hundred thousand inhabitants, "in which grain is stored in bulk, and in which the grain of different owners is mixed together, or in which grain is stored in such a manner that the identity of different lots or parcels cannot be accurately preserved."

It is claimed that such a law is repugnant— * * *

3. To that part of Amendment XIV which ordains that no State shall "deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

We will consider the last of these objections first. * * *

The Constitution contains no definition of the word "deprive," as used in the Fourteenth Amendment. To determine its signification, therefore, it is necessary to ascertain the effect which usage has given it, when employed in the same or a like connection.

While this provision of the Amendment is new in the Constitution of the United States, as a limitation upon the powers of the states, it is old as a principle of civilized government. It is found in Magna Charta, and, in substance if not in form, in nearly or quite all the constitutions that have been from time to time adopted by the several states of the Union. By the Fifth Amendment, it was introduced into the Constitution of the United States as a limitation upon the powers of the national government, and by the Fourteenth, as a guarantee against any encroachment upon an acknowledged right of citizenship by the legislatures of the states. * * *

When one becomes a member of society, he necessarily parts with some rights or privileges which, as an individual not affected by his relations to others, he might retain. "A body politic," as aptly defined in the preamble of the Constitution of Massachusetts, "is a social compact by which the whole people covenants with each citizen, and each citizen with the whole people, that all shall be governed by certain laws for the common good." This does not confer power upon the whole people to control rights which are purely and exclusively private (Thorpe v. R. & V. Railroad Co., 27 Vt. 143); but it does authorize the establishment of laws requiring each citizen to so conduct himself, and so use his own property, as not unnecessarily to injure another. This is the very essence of government, and has found expression in the maxim Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. From this source come the police powers, which, as was said by Mr. Chief Justice Taney in the License Cases, 5 How. 583, "are nothing more or less than the powers of government inherent in every sovereignty, * * * that is to say, * * * the power to govern men and things." Under these powers the government regulates the conduct of its citizens one towards another, and the manner in which each shall use his own property, when such regulation becomes necessary for the public good. In their exercise it has been customary in England from time immemorial, and in this country from its first colonization, to regulate ferries, common carriers, hackmen, bakers, millers, wharfingers, innkeepers, &c., and in so doing to fix a maximum of charge to be made for services rendered, accommodations furnished, and articles sold. To this day, statutes are to be found in many of the states upon some or all these subjects; and we think it has never yet been successfully contended that such legislation came within any of the constitutional prohibitions against interference with private property. With the Fifth Amendment in force, Congress, in 1820, conferred power upon the city of Washington "to regulate * * * the rates of wharfage at private wharves, * * * the sweeping of chimneys, and to fix the rates of fees therefor, * * * and the weight and quality of bread," 3. Stat. 587, sect. 7; and, in 1848, "to make all necessary regulation respecting hackney carriages and the rates of fare of the same, and the rates of hauling by cartmen, wagoners, carmen, and draymen, and the rates of commission of auctioneers," 9 Id. 224, sect. 2.

From this it is apparent that, down to the time of the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, it was not supposed that statutes regulating the use, or even the price of the use, of private property necessarily deprived an owner of his property without due process of law. Under some circumstances they may, but not under all. The amendment does not change the law in this particular: it simply prevents the states from doing that which will operate as such a deprivation.

This brings us to inquire as to the principles upon which this power of regulation rests, in order that we may determine what is within and what without its operative effect. Looking, then, to the common law, from whence came the right which the Constitution protects, we find that when private property is "affected with a public interest, it ceases to be juris privati only." This was said by Lord Chief Justice Hale more than two hundred years ago, in his treatise De Portibus Maris, 1 Harg. Law Tracts, 78, and has been accepted without objection as an essential element in the law of property ever since. Property does become clothed with a public interest when used in a manner to make it of public consequence, and affect the community at large. When, therefore, one devotes his property to a use in which the public has an interest, he, in effect, grants to the public an interest in that use, and must submit to be controlled by the public for the common good, to the extent of the interest he has thus created. He may withdraw his grant by discontinuing the use; but, so long as he maintains the use, he must submit to the control. * * * [Here follow passages from Sir Matthew Hale's writings, as to ferries and wharves.]

This statement of the law by Lord Hale was cited with approbation and acted upon by Lord Kenyon at the beginning of the present century, in Bolt v. Stennett, 8 T. R. 606. * * *

From the same source comes the power to regulate the charges of common carriers, which was done in England as long ago as the third year of the reign of William and Mary, and continued until within a comparatively recent period. And in the first statute we find the following suggestive preamble, to wit:—

"And whereas divers wagoners and other carriers, by combination amongst themselves, have raised the prices of carriage of goods in many places to excessive rates, to the great injury of the trade: Be it, therefore, enacted," &c. 3 W. & M. c. 12, § 24; 3 Stat. at Large (Great Britain), 481.

Common carriers exercise a sort of public office, and have duties to perform in which the public is interested. New Jersey Nav. Co. v. Merchants' Bank, 6 How. 382. Their business is, therefore, "affected with a public interest," within the meaning of the doctrine which Lord Hale has so forcibly stated.

But we need not go further. Enough has already been said to show that, when private property is devoted to a public use, it is subject to public regulation. It remains only to ascertain whether the warehouses of these plaintiffs in error, and the business which is carried on there, come within the operation of this principle.

For this purpose we accept as true the statements of fact contained in the elaborate brief of one of the counsel of the plaintiffs in error. [The Court here summarized the vast amount of business done by the grain elevators in Chicago and the manner of conducting their business.]

In this connection it must also be borne in mind that, although in 1874 there were in Chicago fourteen warehouses adapted to this particular business, and owned by about thirty persons, nine business firms controlled them, and that the prices charged and received for storage were such "as have been from year to year agreed upon and established by the different elevators or warehouses in the city of Chicago, and which rates have been annually published in one or more newspapers printed in said city, in the month of January in each year, as the established rates for the year then next ensuing such publication." Thus it is apparent that all the elevating facilities through which these vast productions "of seven or eight great states of the West" must pass on the way "to four or five of the states on the sea-shore" may be a "virtual" monopoly.

Under such circumstances it is difficult to see why, if the common carrier, or the miller, or the ferryman, or the innkeeper, or the wharfinger, or the baker, or the cartman, or the hackney-coachman, pursues a public employment and exercises "a sort of public office," these plaintiffs in error do not. They stand, to use again the language of their counsel, in the very "gateway of commerce," and take toll from all who pass.

Their business most certainly "tends to a common charge, and is become a thing of public interest and use." Every bushel of grain for its passage "pays a toll, which is a common charge," and therefore, according to Lord Hale, every such warehouseman "ought to be under public regulation, viz., that he * * * take but reasonable toll." Certainly, if any business can be clothed "with a public interest and cease to be juris privati only," this has been. It may not be made so by the operation of the Constitution of Illinois or this statute, but it is by the facts.

* * *

Neither is it a matter of any moment that no precedent can be found for a statute precisely like this. It is conceded that the business is one of recent origin, that its growth has been rapid, and that it is already of great importance. And it must also be conceded that it is a business in which the whole public has a direct and positive interest. It presents, therefore, a case for the application of a long-known and well-established principle in social science, and this statute simply extends the law so as to meet this new development of commercial progress. There is no attempt to compel these owners to grant the public an interest in their property, but to declare their obligations, if they use it in this particular manner.

It matters not in this case that these plaintiffs in error had built their warehouses and established their business before the regulations complained of were adopted. What they did was from the beginning subject to the power of the body politic to require them to conform to such regulations as might be established by the proper authorities for the common good. They entered upon their business and provided themselves with the means to carry it on subject to this condition. If they did not wish to submit themselves to such interference, they should not have clothed the public with an interest in their concerns. The same principle applies to them that does to the proprietor of a hackney-carriage, and as to him it has never been supposed that he was exempt from regulating statutes or ordinances because he had purchased his horses and carriage and established his business before the statute or the ordinance was adopted.

It is insisted, however, that the owner of property is entitled to a reasonable compensation for its use, even though it be clothed with a public interest, and that what is reasonable is a judicial and not a legislative question.

As has already been shown, the practice has been otherwise. In countries where the common law prevails, it has been customary from time immemorial for the legislature to declare what shall be a reasonable compensation under such circumstances, or, perhaps more properly speaking, to fix a maximum beyond which any charge made would be unreasonable. Undoubtedly, in mere private contracts, relating to matters in which the public has no interest, what is reasonable must be ascertained judicially. But this is because the legislature has no control over such a contract. So, too, in matters which do affect the public interest, and as to which legislative control may be exercised, if there are no statutory regulations upon the subject, the courts must determine what is reasonable. The controlling fact is the power to regulate at all. If that exists, the right to establish the maximum of charge, as one of the means of regulation, is implied. In fact, the common-law rule, which requires the charge to be reasonable, is itself a regulation as to price. Without it the owner could make his rates at will, and compel the public to yield to his terms, or forego the use.

But a mere common-law regulation of trade or business may be changed by statute. A person has no property, no vested interest, in any rule of the common law. That is only one of the forms of municipal law, and is no more sacred than any other. Rights of property which have been created by the common law cannot be taken away without due process; but the law itself, as a rule of conduct, may be changed at the will, or even at the whim, of the legislature, unless prevented by constitutional limitations. Indeed, the great office of statutes is to remedy defects in the common law as they are developed, and to adapt it to the changes of time and circumstances. To limit the rate of charge for services rendered in a public employment, or for the use of property in which the public has an interest, is only changing a regulation which existed before. It establishes no new principle in the law, but only gives a new effect to an old one.

We know that this is a power which may be abused; but that is no argument against its existence. For protection against abuses by legislatures the people must resort to the polls, not to the courts. * * *

[The Court held that the statute was not in conflict with the commerce clause or with Art. I, § 9, prohibiting port preferences.]

We conclude, therefore, that the statute in question is not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, and that there is no error in the judgment. * * *

Judgment affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE FIELD and MR. JUSTICE STRONG dissented.

MR. JUSTICE FIELD. * * * The power of the state over the property of the citizens under the constitutional guaranty is well defined. The state may take his property for public uses, upon just compensation being made therefor. It may take a portion of his property by way of taxation for the support of the government. It may control the use and possession of his property, so far as may be necessary for the protection of the rights of others, and to secure to them the equal use and enjoyment of their property. The doctrine that each one must so use his own as not to injure his neighbor—sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas—is the rule by which every member of society must possess and enjoy his property; and all legislation essential to secure this common and equal enjoyment is a legitimate exercise of state authority. Except in cases where property may be destroyed to arrest a conflagration or the ravages of pestilence, or be taken under the pressure of an immediate and overwhelming necessity to prevent a public calamity, the power of the state over the property of the citizens does not extend beyond such limits.

It is true that the legislation which secures to all protection in their rights, and the equal use and enjoyment of their property, embraces an almost infinite variety of subjects. Whatever affects the peace, good order, morals, and health of the community, comes within its scope; and every one must use and enjoy his property subject to the restrictions which such legislation imposes. What is termed the police power of the state, which, from the language often used respecting it, one would suppose to be an undefined and irresponsible element in government, can only interfere with the conduct of individuals in their intercourse with each other, and in the use of their property, so far as may be required to secure these objects. The compensation which the owners of property, not having any special rights or privileges from the government in connection with it, may demand for its use, or for their own services in union with it, forms no element of consideration in prescribing regulations for that purpose. If one construct a building in a city, the state, or the municipality exercising a delegated power from the state, may require its walls to be of sufficient thickness for the uses intended; it may forbid the employment of inflammable materials in its construction, so as not to endanger the safety of his neighbors; if designed as a theatre, church, or public hall, it may prescribe ample means of egress so as to afford facility for escape in case of accident; it may forbid the storage in it of powder, nitroglycerine, or other explosive material; it may require its occupants daily to remove decayed vegetable and animal matter, which would otherwise accumulate and engender disease; it may exclude from it all occupations and business calculated to disturb the neighborhood or infect the air. Indeed, there is no end of regulations with respect to the use of property which may not be legitimately prescribed, having for their object the peace, good order, safety, and health of the community, thus securing to all the equal enjoyment of their property; but in establishing these regulations it is evident that compensation to the owner for the use of his property, or for his services in union with it, is not a matter of any importance: whether it be one sum or another does not affect the regulation, either in respect to its utility or mode of enforcement. One may go, in like manner, through the whole round of regulations authorized by legislation, state or municipal, under what is termed the police power, and in no instance will he find that the compensation of the owner for the use of his property has any influence in establishing them. It is only where some right or privilege is conferred by the government or municipality upon the owner, which he can use in connection with his property, or by means of which the use of his property is rendered more valuable to him, or he thereby enjoys an advantage over others, that the compensation to be received by him becomes a legitimate matter of regulation. Submission to the regulation of compensation in such cases is an implied condition of the grant, and the state, in exercising its power of prescribing the compensation, only determines the conditions upon which its concession shall be enjoyed. When the privilege ends, the power of regulation ceases. * * *

There is nothing in the character of the business of the defendants as warehousemen which called for the interference complained of in this case. Their buildings are not nuisances; their occupation of receiving and storing grain infringes upon no rights of others, disturbs no neighborhood, infects not the air, and in no respect prevents others from using and enjoying their property as to them may seem best. The legislation in question is nothing less than a bold assertion of absolute power by the state to control at its discretion the property and business of the citizen, and fix the compensation he shall receive. The will of the legislature is made the condition upon which the owner shall receive the fruits of his property and the just reward of his labor, industry, and enterprise. * * *

NOTE

1. Munn v. Illinois is the most important of a group of cases, decided at the same time, usually referred to as the "Granger Cases." The other cases involved the validity of legislative regulation of rates charged by railroad corporations. The Granger movement—the name derived from the activities of the National Grange, an order that flourished during the eighteen-seventies—was an organized effort upon the part of western farmers to secure relief through regulatory legislation from excessive transportation rates and other objectionable practices of railroads. This legislation was upheld against attacks based upon the due process, contract and commerce clauses.

The view expressed in the Granger cases that a provision in the charter of a railroad corporation authorizing it to fix its rates does not prevent the state granting the charter from thereafter prescribing maximum rates, since the charter authority was impliedly limited to the fixing of "reasonable" rates, was reaffirmed in the Railroad Commission Cases, 116 U. S. 307, 29 L. ed. 636, 6 Sup. Ct. 334 (1886). Here, however, Chief Justice Waite, again speaking for the court, issued a warning that was to prove prophetic: "From what has been said, it is not to be inferred that this power of regulation is itself without limit. This power to regulate is not a power to destroy, and limitation is not the equivalent of confiscation. Under pretense of regulating fares and freights, the state cannot require a railroad corporation to carry persons or property without reward; neither can it do that which in law amounts to a taking of private property for public use without just compensation, or without due process of law."

Four years later, in Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 33 L. ed. 970, 10 Sup. Ct. 462 (1890), the court, following up the dictum in the Railroad Commission Cases, held unconstitutional a Minnesota statute which required all railroads to charge only equal and reasonable rates and authorized a state commission, if it found any rates not to meet this standard, to prescribe proper rates which should then be binding upon the railroad, without appeal to the courts. Said Mr. Justice Blatchford: "It deprives the company of its right to a judicial investigation, by due process of law, under the forms and with the machinery provided by the wisdom of successive ages for the investigation judicially of the truth of a matter in controversy, and substitutes therefor, as an absolute finality, the action of a railroad commission which, in view of the powers conceded to it by the state court, cannot be regarded as clothed with judicial functions or possessing the machinery of a court of justice." The doctrine of this case was reaffirmed and extended in Reagan v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co., 154 U. S. 362, 38 L. ed. 1014, 14 Sup. Ct. 1047 (1894).

Another advance in the process of securing to the judiciary the final determination of reasonableness in governmental rate-fixing was made in the leading case of Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. 418 (1898), where, in holding invalid a railroad rate fixed by statute, the view was projected that no legislative body or commission can validly fix rates that are so low as not to allow the railroad or other public utility a fair return on the present value of the property used and useful in serving the public. The court said, through Mr. Justice Harlan: "A state enactment, or regulations made under the authority of a state enactment, establishing rates for the transportation of persons or property by railroad that will not admit of the carrier earning such compensation as under all the circumstances is just to it and to the public, would deprive such carrier of its property without due process of law and deny to it the equal protection of the laws, and would therefore be repugnant to the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. While rates for the transportation of persons and property within the limits of a state are primarily for its determination, the question whether they are so unreasonably low as to deprive the carrier of its property without such compensation as the Constitution secures, and therefore without due process of law, cannot be so conclusively determined by the legislature of the state or by regulations adopted under its authority, that the matter may not become the subject of judicial inquiry."

The proposition that a public utility is entitled to a "fair" return on the present "value" of its property and that a rate below this point is "confiscatory" and hence a violation of due process requires the courts to undertake the solution of many complex and difficult problems involved in the determination of what is a fair return, the rate, the rate base, and the elements to be considered as constituting the base. These matters are dealt with in courses in the law of public utilities and are omitted from consideration in this case-book.

WOLFF PACKING CO. v. COURT OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS OF KANSAS.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1923.

262 U. S. 522, 67 L. ed. 1103, 43 Sup. Ct. 630, 27 A. L. R. 1280.

This case involves the validity of the Court of Industrial Relations Act of Kansas. Chapter 29, Special Session, Laws of 1920. The act declares the following to be affected with a public interest: First, manufacture and preparation of food for human consumption; second, manufacture of clothing for human wear; third, production of any substance in common use for fuel; fourth, transportation of the foregoing; fifth, public utilities and common carriers. The act vests an industrial court of three judges with power upon its own initiative or on complaint to summon the parties and hear any dispute over wages or other terms of employment in any such industry, and if it shall find the peace and health of the public imperiled by such controversy, it is required to make findings and fix the wages and other terms for the future conduct of the industry. After 60 days, either party may ask for a readjustment, and then the order is to continue in effect for such reasonable time as the court shall fix, or until changed by agreement of the parties. The Supreme Court of the state may review such orders, and in case of disobedience to an order that court may be appealed to for enforcement.

The Charles Wolff Packing Company, the plaintiff in error, is a corporation of Kansas engaged in slaughtering hogs and cattle and preparing the meat for sale and shipment. It has $600,000 capital stock and total annual sales of $7,000,000. More than half its products are sold beyond the state. It has 300 employees. There are many other packing houses in Kansas, of greater capacity. This is considered a small one.

In January, 1921, the president and secretary of the Meat Cutters' Union filed a complaint with the industrial court against the packing company respecting the wages its employees were receiving. The company appeared and answered and a hearing was had. The court made findings, including one of an emergency, and an order as to wages, increasing them over the figures to which the company had recently reduced them. The company refused to comply with the order and the industrial court then instituted mandamus proceedings in the Supreme Court to compel compliance. That court appointed a commissioner to consider the record, to take additional evidence, and report his conclusions. He found that the company had lost $100,000 the previous year, and that there was no sufficient evidence of an emergency or danger to the public from the controversy to justify action by the industrial court. The Supreme Court overruled his report and held that the evidence showed a sufficient emergency.

The prescribed schedule of wages and the limitation of hours and the rate of pay required for overtime resulted in an increase in wages of more than $400 a week. * * *

The chief executive of the Wolff Company testified that there had been no difficulty in securing all the labor it desired at the reduced rates offered. The industrial court conceded that the Wolff Company could not operate on the schedule fixed without a loss, but relied on the statement by its president that he hoped for more prosperous times.

The packing company brings this case here on the ground that the validity of the Industrial Court Act was upheld although challenged as in conflict with the provision of the Fourteenth Amendment that no state shall deprive any person of liberty or property without due process of law.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE TAFT, after stating the case as above, delivered the opinion of the Court.

The necessary postulate of the Industrial Court Act is that the State, representing the people, is so much interested in their peace, health, and comfort that it may compel those engaged in the manufacture of food and clothing, and the production of fuel, whether owners or workers, to continue in their business and employment on terms fixed by an agency of the state, if they cannot agree. Under the construction adopted by the state Supreme Court the act gives the industrial court authority to permit the owner or employer to go out of the business, if he shows that he can only continue on the terms fixed at such heavy loss that collapse will follow; but this privilege under the circumstances is generally illusory. Block v. Hirsh, 256 U. S. 135, 157. A laborer dissatisfied with his wages is permitted to quit, but he may not agree with his fellows to quit or combine with others to induce them to quit.

These qualifications do not change the essence of the act. It curtails the right of the employer on the one hand, and of the employee on the other, to contract about his affairs. This is part of the liberty of the individual protected by the guaranty of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U. S. 390. While there is no such thing as absolute freedom of contract, and it is subject to a variety of restraints, they must not be arbitrary or unreasonable. Freedom is the general rule, and restraint the exception. The legislative authority to abridge can be justified only by exceptional circumstances. Adkins v. Children's Hospital, 261 U. S. 525.

It is argued for the state that such exceptional circumstances exist in the present case and that the act is neither arbitrary nor unreasonable. Counsel maintain:

First. The act declares that the preparation of human food is affected by a public interest and the power of the Legislature so to declare and then to regulate the business is established in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113; Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517; Brass v. Stoeser, 153 U. S. 391; Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104; German Alliance Insurance Co. v. Lewis, 233 U. S. 389; and Block v. Hirsh, 256 U. S. 135.

Second. The power to regulate a business affected with a public interest extends to fixing wages and terms of employment to secure continuity of operation. Wilson v. New, 243 U. S. 332, 352, 353.

Businesses said to be clothed with a public interest justifying some public regulation may be divided into three classes:

(1) Those which are carried on under the authority of a public grant of privileges which either expressly or impliedly imposes the affirmative duty of rendering a public service demanded by any member of the public. Such are the railroads, other common carriers and public utilities.

(2) Certain occupations, regarded as exceptional, the public interest attaching to which, recognized from earliest times, has survived the period of arbitrary laws by Parliament or colonial Legislatures for regulating all trades and callings. Such are those of the keepers of inns, cabs, and gristmills. State v. Edwards, 86 Me. 102; Terminal Taxicab Co. v. District of Columbia, 241 U. S. 252, 254.

(3) Businesses which, though not public at their inception, may be fairly said to have risen to be such and have become subject in consequence to some government regulation. They have come to hold such a peculiar relation to the public that this is superimposed upon them. In the language of the cases, the owner by devoting his business to the public use, in effect grants the public an interest in that use and subjects himself to public regulation to the extent of that interest although the property continues to belong to its private owner and to be entitled to protection accordingly. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113; Spring Valley Water Works v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347; Budd v. New York, 117 N. Y. 1, 27; S. C. 143 U. S. 517; Brass v. Stoeser, 153 U. S. 391; Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104; German Alliance Insurance Co. v. Lewis, 233 U. S. 389; Van Dyke v. Geary, 244 U. S. 39, 47; Block v. Hirsh, 256 U. S. 135.

It is manifest from an examination of the cases cited under the third head that the mere declaration by a legislature that a business is affected with a public interest is not conclusive of the question whether its attempted regulation on that ground is justified. The circumstances of its alleged change from the status of a private business and its freedom from regulation into one in which the public have come to have an interest are always a subject of judicial inquiry.

In a sense, the public is concerned about all lawful business because it contributes to the prosperity and well being of the people. The public may suffer from high prices or strikes in many trades, but the expression "clothed with a public interest," as applied to a business, means more than that the public welfare is affected by continuity or by the price at which a commodity is sold or a service rendered. The circumstances which clothe a particular kind of business with a public interest, in the sense of Munn v. Illinois and the other cases, must be such as to create a peculiarly close relation between the public and those engaged in it, and raise implications of an affirmative obligation on their part to be reasonable in dealing with the public. * * *

It has never been supposed, since the adoption of the Constitution, that the business of the butcher, or the baker, the tailor, the wood chopper, the mining operator, or the miner was clothed with such a public interest that the price of his product or his wages could be fixed by state regulation. It is true that in the days of the early common law an omnipotent parliament did regulate prices and wages as it chose, and occasionally a colonial legislature sought to exercise the same power; but nowadays one does not devote one's property or business to the public use or clothe it with a public interest merely because one makes commodities for, and sells to, the public in the common callings of which those above mentioned are instances. * * *

In nearly all the businesses included under the third head above, the thing which gave the public interest was the indispensable nature of the service and the exorbitant charges and arbitrary control to which the public might be subjected without regulation.

In the preparation of food, the changed conditions have greatly increased the capacity for treating the raw product and transferred the work from the shop with few employees to the great plant with many. Such regulation of it as there has been, has been directed toward the health of the workers in congested masses, or has consisted of inspection and supervision with a view to the health of the public. But never has regulation of food preparation been extended to fixing wages or the prices to the public, as in the cases cited above where fear of monopoly prompted, and was held to justify regulation of rates. There is no monopoly in the preparation of foods. The prices charged by plaintiff in error are, it is conceded, fixed by competition throughout the country at large. Food is now produced in greater volume and variety than ever before. Given uninterrupted interstate commerce, the sources of the food supply in Kansas are country-wide, a short supply is not likely, and the danger from local monopolistic control less than ever.

It is very difficult under the cases to lay down a working rule by which readily to determine when a business has become "clothed with a public interest." All business is subject to some kinds of public regulation, but when the public becomes so peculiarly dependent upon a particular business that one engaging therein subjects himself to a more intimate public regulation is only to be determined by the process of exclusion and inclusion and to gradual establishment of a line of distinction. We are relieved from considering and deciding definitely whether preparation of food should be put in the third class of quasi public businesses, noted above, because, even so, the valid regulation to which it might be subjected as such, could not include what this act attempts.

To say that a business is clothed with a public interest is not to determine what regulation may be permissible in view of the private rights of the owner. The extent to which an inn or a cab system may be regulated may differ widely from that allowable as to a railroad or other common carrier. It is not a matter of legislative discretion solely. It depends on the nature of the business, on the feature which touches the public, and on the abuses reasonably to be feared. To say that a business is clothed with a public interest is not to import that the public may take over its entire management and run it at the expense of the owner. The extent to which regulation may reasonably go varies with different kinds of business. The regulation of rates to avoid monopoly is one thing. The regulation of wages is another. A business may be of such character that only the first is permissible, while another may involve such a possible danger of monopoly on the one hand, and such disaster from stoppage on the other, that both come within the public concern and power of regulation.

If, as, in effect, contended by counsel for the state, the common callings are clothed with a public interest by a mere legislative declaration, which necessarily authorizes full and comprehensive regulation within legislative discretion, there must be a revolution in the relation of government to general business. This will be running the public interest argument into the ground, to use a phrase of Mr. Justice Bradley when characterizing a similarly extreme contention. Civil Rights Cases, 109

U. S. 3, 24. It will be impossible to reconcile such result with the freedom of contract and of labor secured by the Fourteenth Amendment.

This brings us to the nature and purpose of the regulation under the Industrial Court Act. The avowed object is continuity of food, clothing and fuel supply. By section 6 reasonable continuity and efficiency of the industries specified are declared to be necessary for the public peace, health and general welfare, and all are forbidden to hinder, limit or suspend them. Section 7 gives the industrial court power in case of controversy between employers and workers which may endanger the continuity or efficiency of service, to bring the employer and employees before it and after hearing and investigation to fix the terms and conditions between them. The employer is bound by this act to pay the wages fixed and while the worker is not required to work, at the wages fixed, he is forbidden, on penalty of fine or imprisonment, to strike against them and thus is compelled to give up that means of putting himself on an equality with his employer which action in concert with his fellows gives him.

There is no authority of this Court to sustain such exercise of power in respect to those kinds of businesses affected with a public interest by a change in pais, first fully recognized by this Court in Munn v. Illinois, supra, where it said:

"Property does become clothed with a public interest when used in a manner to make it of public consequence, and affect the community at large. When, therefore, one devotes his property to a use in which the public has an interest, he in effect grants to the public an interest in that use, and must submit to be controlled by the public for the common good, to the extent of the interest he has thus created. He may withdraw his grant by discontinuing the use; but, so long as he maintains the use, he must submit to the control."

These words refute the view that public regulation in such cases can secure continuity of a business against the owner. The theory is that of revocable grant only. Weems Steamboat Co. v. People's Steamboat Co., 214 U. S. 345. If that be so with the owner and employer, a fortiori must it be so with the employee. It involves a more drastic exercise of control to impose limitations of continuity growing out of the public character of the business upon the employee than upon the employer; and without saying that such limitations upon both may not be sometimes justified, it must be where the obligation to the public of continuous service is direct, clear, and mandatory, and arises as a contractual condition express or implied of entering the business either as owner or worker. It can only arise when investment by the owner and entering the employment by the worker create a conventional relation to the public somewhat equivalent to the appointment of officers and the enlistment of soldiers and sailors in military service.

We are considering the validity of the act as compelling the employer to pay the adjudged wages, and as forbidding the employees to combine against working and receiving them. The penalties of the act are directed against effort of either side to interfere with the settlement by arbitration. Without this joint compulsion, the whole theory and purpose of the act would fail. The state cannot be heard to say, therefore, that upon complaint of the employer the effect upon the employee should not be a factor in our judgment.

Justification for such regulation is said to be found in Wilson v. New, 243 U. S. 332. It was there held that in a nation-wide dispute over wages between railroad companies and their train operatives, with a general strike, commercial paralysis, and grave loss and suffering overhanging the country, Congress had power to prescribe wages not confiscatory, but obligatory on both for a reasonable time to enable them to agree. * * *

But the chief and conclusive distinction between Wilson v. New and the case before us is that already referred to. The power of a legislature to compel continuity in a business can only arise where the obligation of continued service by the owner and its employees is direct and is assumed when the business is entered upon. A common carrier, which accepts a railroad franchise, is not free to withdraw the use of that which it has granted to the public. It is true that if operation is impossible without continuous loss, Brooks-Scanlon Co. v. R. R. Commission, 251 U. S. 396; Bullock v. Railroad Commission, 254 U. S. 513, it may give up its franchise and enterprise, but, short of this, it must continue. Not so the owner, when by mere changed conditions his business becomes clothed with a public interest. He may stop at will, whether the business be losing or profitable. * * *

We think the Industrial Court Act, in so far as it permits the fixing of wages in plaintiff in error's packing house, is in conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment, and deprives it of its property and liberty of contract without due process of law.

The judgment of the court below must be

Reversed.

NOTES

1. In Dorchy v. Kansas, 264 U. S. 286, 68 L. ed. 686, 44 Sup. Ct. 323 (1924) the Kansas Court of Industrial Relations Act, held unconstitutional in the principal case as applied to packing companies, was declared invalid as applied to coal mines. And in Wolff Packing Co. v. Court of Industrial Relations of Kansas, 267 U. S. 552, 69 L. ed. 785, 45 Sup. Ct. 441 (1925) the same act was again declared unconstitutional as applied to the meat packing industry, in so far as it permitted the fixing of hours of labor as a feature of the system of compulsory arbitration which had been invalidated in the principal case.

2. In Block v. Hirsh, 256 U. S. 135, 65 L. ed. 865, 41 Sup. Ct. 458, 16 A. L. R. 165 (1921) an Act of Congress was sustained which provided that residential tenants in the District of Columbia might remain in possession of leased premises after the expiration of their leases, paying the same rent as fixed in the expired contracts. The act was emergency legislation and was to expire in two years. It was passed to alleviate the bad housing situation in Washington during World War I due to the sudden increase in population in the national capital. The court found that the legislation bore a reasonable relation to the public health and welfare, all the elements of a public interest justifying some degree of public control being present. Chief Justice White and Justices Van Devanter, McKenna and McReynolds dissented. At the same time a similar statute of New York was upheld, the court overruling the same objections that were raised against the District of Columbia statute as well as an additional argument that the law impaired the obligations of contract. Brown Holding Co. v. Feldman, 256 U. S. 170, 65 L. ed. 877, 41 Sup. Ct. 465 (1921).

3. A statute of Kansas required fire insurance companies to file schedules of rates with the state superintendent of insurance and authorized him to require rates to be lowered or raised, as he should determine, the rate in every case to be reasonable. In a suit brought by an insurance company to restrain the enforcement of the law, the complaint being grounded on the contention that fire insurance was a private business and hence there was no constitutional power in a state to fix rates and charges for services rendered, the court held that the business was so far affected with a public interest as to justify the legislative regulation involved. German Alliance Insurance Co. v. Lewis, 233 U. S. 389, 58 L. ed. 1011, 34 Sup. Ct. 612, L. R. A. 1915C, 1189 (1914). In O'Gorman & Young v. Hartford Fire Insurance Co., 282 U. S. 251, 75 L. ed. 324, 51 Sup. Ct. 130, 72 A. L. R. 1163 (1931) a New Jersey statute was held valid which required the commissions of fire insurance agents to be reasonable and forbade payment by a fire insurance company of a higher commission to any agent than it paid to any other agent, the court saying: "It does not appear upon the face of the statute, or from any facts of which the court must take judicial notice, that in New Jersey evils did not exist in the business of fire insurance for which this statutory provision was an appropriate remedy." Justices McReynolds, Sutherland and Butler dissented on the ground that the law impaired the "liberty of contract" guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment.

4. In Tyson & Bro.—United Theater Ticket Offices v. Banton, 273 U. S. 418, 71 L. ed. 718, 47 Sup. Ct. 426, 58 A. L. R. 1236 (1927) the court held that the due process clause prevented a state from fixing maximum fees for theater ticket agencies. The ground for decision was that the power to fix prices exists only where the business or property involved has become affected with a public interest and that theaters are not of that character. Justices Holmes, Brandeis, Sanford and Stone dissented.

5. In Fairmont Creamery Co. v. Minnesota, 274 U. S. 1, 71 L. ed. 893, 47 Sup. Ct. 506, 52 A. L. R. 163 (1927) a state statute was held invalid which prohibited any buyer of milk or cream for re-sale or manufacture to discriminate between different sections of the state by buying at a higher price in one locality than in another, allowance being permitted only for difference in cost of transportation to place of manufacture or re-sale. The statute did not make intent to create a monopoly or to destroy the business of a competitor an essential element of the offense defined by it. The argued purpose of the act was to prevent buying at low prices in localities where a buyer had little or no competition, and at high prices in localities where he had competition. The court said that "the real evil supposed to threaten the cream business was payment of excessive prices by powerful buyers for the purpose of destroying competition" and that the statute was "an obvious attempt to destroy plaintiff in error's liberty to enter into normal contracts long regarded not only as essential to the freedom of trade and commerce but also as beneficial to the public."

6. Ribnik v. McBride, 277 U. S. 350, 72 L. ed. 913, 48 Sup. Ct. 545, 56 A. L. R. 1327 (1928) held invalid a New Jersey statute that required private employment agencies to charge no higher fees than those deemed reasonable by the state commissioner of labor, who was also authorized to refuse to issue or to revoke any license to the operator of such an agency for good cause shown. Justices Holmes, Brandeis and Stone dissented.

7. Williams v. Standard Oil Co., 278 U. S. 235, 73 L. ed. 287, 49 Sup. Ct. 115, 60 A. L. R. 596 (1929) held invalid a Tennessee statute which required applicants for licenses to sell gasoline to file schedules of prices with the state superintendent of motors and motor fuels and empowered the latter to fix other prices if those submitted were not deemed reasonable by him, subject to appeal to the state commissioner of finance, and from the latter to the courts (the methods common in rate-making for public utilities). The court stated that the decision was controlled by Wolff Packing Co. v. Court of Industrial Relations, Tyson v. Banton, Fairmont Creamery Co. v. Minnesota, and Ribnik v. McBride. Justice Holmes dissented.

8. In New State Ice Co. v. Liebmann, 285 U. S. 262, 76 L. ed. 747, 52 Sup. Ct. 371 (1932), Oklahoma was prevented from controlling the business of manufacturing and selling ice by requiring a license to enter such business to be issued by the Corporation Commission of the state, which was to be granted only on proof of its necessity in the community or place desired. The court said that there was nothing about the ice business which distinguished it from ordinary manufacture and production. Since it was a business essentially private in nature, any regulation which had the effect of denying or unreasonably curtailing the common right to engage in it violated the Fourteenth Amendment. Mr. Justice Brandeis' dissenting opinion, in which Mr. Justice Stone joined, repudiated the "affectation with a public interest" test and expressed the view that "the true principle is that the state's power extends to every regulation of any business reasonably required and appropriate for the public protection." The dissent further warned that it was a grave responsibility for the court to assume when it stayed experimentation by the states in economic and social matters during a period of depression.

9. Stephenson v. Binford, 287 U. S. 251, 77 L. ed. 288, 53 Sup. Ct. 181, 87 A. L. R. 721 (1932) sustained a Texas statute regulating the use of the highways of the state by contract carriers of freight (as distinguished from common carriers) and giving to a state commission power to fix minimum rates to be charged by such carriers not less than the rates prescribed for common carriers for substantially the same service. The court said: "This provision, by precluding the contract carriers from rendering service at rates under those charged by the railroad carriers, has a definite tendency to relieve the highways by diverting traffic from them to the railroads. The authority is limited to the fixing of minimum rates. The contract carrier may not charge less than the rates so fixed, but is left free to charge as much more as he sees fit and can obtain. Undoubtedly, this interferes with the freedom of the parties to contract, but it is not such an interference as the Fourteenth Amendment forbids. While freedom of contract is the general rule, it is nevertheless not absolute but subject to a great variety of legitimate restraints, among which are such as are required for the safety and welfare of the state and its inhabitants." Mr. Justice Butler dissented.

NEBBIA v. NEW YORK.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1934.

291 U. S. 502, 78 L. ed. 940, 54 Sup. Ct. 505, 89 A. L. R. 1469.

MR. JUSTICE ROBERTS delivered the opinion of the Court.

The Legislature of New York established, by Chapter 158 of the Laws of 1933, a Milk Control Board with power, among other things, to "fix minimum and maximum * * * retail prices to be charged by * * * stores to consumers for consumption off the premises where sold." The Board fixed nine cents as the price to be charged by a store for a quart of milk. Nebbia, the proprietor of a grocery store in Rochester, sold two quarts and a five cent loaf of bread for eighteen cents; and was convicted for violating the Board's order. At his trial he asserted the statute and order contravene the equal protection clause and the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, and renewed the contention in successive appeals to the county court and the Court of Appeals. Both overruled his claim and affirmed the conviction.

The question for decision is whether the Federal Constitution prohibits a state from so fixing the selling price of milk. We first inquire as to the occasion for the legislation and its history.

During 1932 the prices received by farmers for milk were much below the cost of production. The decline in prices during 1931 and 1932 was much greater than that of prices generally. The situation of the families of dairy producers had become desperate and called for state aid similar to that afforded the unemployed, if conditions should not improve.

On March 10, 1932, the senate and assembly resolved "That a joint Legislative committee is hereby created * * * to investigate the causes of the decline of the price of milk to producers and the resultant effect of the low prices upon the dairy industry and the future supply of milk to the cities of the state; to investigate the cost of distribution of milk and its relation to prices paid to milk producers, to the end that the consumer may be assured of an adequate supply of milk at a reasonable price, both to producer and consumer." The committee organized May 6, 1932, and its activities lasted nearly a year. It held 13 public hearings at which 254 witnesses testified and 2,350 typewritten pages of testimony were taken. Numerous exhibits were submitted. Under its direction an extensive research program was prosecuted by experts and official bodies and employees of the state and municipalities, which resulted in the assembling of much pertinent information. Detailed reports were received from over 100 distributors of milk, and these were collated and the information obtained analyzed. As a result of the study of this material, a report covering 473 closely printed pages, embracing the conclusions and recommendations of the committee, was presented to the legislature April 10, 1933. This document included detailed findings, with copious references to the supporting evidence; appendices outlining the nature and results of prior investigations of the milk industry of the state, briefs upon the legal questions involved, and forms of bills recommended for passage. The conscientious effort and thoroughness exhibited by the report lend weight to the committee's conclusions. * * *

Various remedies were suggested, amongst them united action by producers, the fixing of minimum prices for milk and cream by state authority, and the imposition of certain graded taxes on milk dealers proportioned so as to equalize the cost of milk and cream to all dealers and so remove the cause of price-cutting.

The legislature adopted Chapter 158 as a method of correcting the evils, which the report of the committee showed could not be expected to right themselves through the ordinary play of the forces of supply and demand, owing to the peculiar and uncontrollable factors affecting the industry. * * *

Section 312(e), on which the prosecution in the present case is founded, provides: "After the board shall have fixed prices to be charged or paid for milk in any form * * * it shall be unlawful for a milk dealer to sell or buy or offer to sell or buy milk at any price less or more than such price * * *, and no method or device shall be lawful whereby milk is bought or sold * * * at a price less or more than such price * * * whether by any discount, or rebate, or free service, or advertising allowance, or a combined price for such milk together with another commodity or commodities, or service or services, which is less or more than the aggregate of the prices for the milk and the price or prices for such other commodity or commodities, or service or services, when sold or offered for sale separately or otherwise * * *"

Second. The more serious question is whether, in the light of the conditions disclosed, the enforcement of § 312(e) denied the appellant the due process secured to him by the Fourteenth Amendment. * * *

Under our form of government the use of property and the making of contracts are normally matters of private and not of public concern. The general rule is that both shall be free of governmental interference. But neither property rights nor contract rights are absolute; for government cannot exist if the citizen may at will use his property to the detriment of his fellows, or exercise his freedom of contract to work them harm. Equally fundamental with the private right is that of the public to regulate it in the common interest. As Chief Justice Marshall said, speaking specifically of inspection laws, such laws form "a portion of that immense mass of legislation, which embraces everything within the territory of a State * * * all which can be most advantageously exercised by the States themselves. Inspection laws, quarantine laws, health laws of every description, as well as laws for regulating the internal commerce of a State, * * * are component parts of this mass." * * *

The Fifth Amendment, in the field of federal activity, and the Fourteenth, as respects state action, do not prohibit governmental regulation for the public welfare. They merely condition the exertion of the admitted power, by securing that the end shall be accomplished by methods consistent with due process. And the guaranty of due process, as has often been held, demands only that the law shall not be unreasonable, arbitrary or capricious, and that the means selected shall have a real and substantial relation to the object sought to be attained. It results that a regulation valid for one sort of business, or in given circumstances, may be invalid for another sort, or for the same business under other circumstances, because the reasonableness of each regulation depends upon the relevant facts.

The reports of our decisions abound with cases in which the citizen, individual or corporate, has vainly invoked the Fourteenth Amendment in resistance to necessary and appropriate exertion of the police power.

* * *

Legislation concerning sales of goods, and incidentally affecting prices, has repeatedly been held valid. In this class fall laws forbidding unfair competition by the charging of lower prices in one locality than those exacted in another, by giving trade inducements to purchasers, and by other forms of price discrimination. The public policy with respect to free competition has engendered state and federal statutes prohibiting monopolies, which have been upheld. On the other hand, where the policy of the state dictated that a monopoly should be granted, statutes having that effect have been held inoffensive to the constitutional guarantees. Moreover, the state or a municipality may itself enter into business in competition with private proprietors, and thus effectively although indirectly control the prices charged by them.

The milk industry in New York has been the subject of longstanding and drastic regulation in the public interest. The legislative investigation of 1932 was persuasive of the fact that for this and other reasons unrestricted competition aggravated existing evils, and the normal law of supply and demand was insufficient to correct maladjustments detrimental to the community. The inquiry disclosed destructive and demoralizing competitive conditions and unfair trade practices which resulted in retail price-cutting and reduced the income of the farmer below the cost of production. We do not understand the appellant to deny that in these circumstances the legislature might reasonably consider further regulation and control desirable for protection of the industry and the consuming public. That body believed conditions could be improved by preventing destructive price-cutting by stores which, due to the flood of surplus milk, were able to buy at much lower prices than the larger distributors and to sell without incurring the delivery costs of the latter. In the order of which complaint is made the Milk Control Board fixed a price of ten cents per quart for sales by a distributor to a consumer, and nine cents by a store to a consumer, thus recognizing the lower costs of the store, and endeavoring to establish a differential which would be just to both. In the light of the facts the order appears not to be unreasonable or arbitrary, or without relation to the purpose to prevent ruthless competition from destroying the wholesale price structure on which the farmer depends for his livelihood, and the community for an assured supply of milk.

But we are told that because the law essays to control prices it denies due process. Notwithstanding the admitted power to correct existing economic ills by appropriate regulation of business, even though an indirect result may be a restriction of the freedom of contract or a modification of charges for services or the price of commodities, the appellant urges that direct fixation of prices is a type of regulation absolutely forbidden. His position is that the Fourteenth Amendment requires us to hold the challenged statute void for this reason alone. The argument runs that the public control of rates or prices is per se unreasonable and unconstitutional, save as applied to businesses affected with a public interest; that a business so affected is one in which property is devoted to an enterprise of a sort which the public itself might appropriately undertake, or one whose owner relies on a public grant or franchise for the right to conduct the business, or in which he is bound to serve all who apply; in short, such as is commonly called a public utility; or a business in its nature a monopoly. The milk industry, it is said, possesses none of these characteristics, and, therefore, not being affected with a public interest, its charges may not be controlled by the state. Upon the soundness of this contention the appellant's case against the statute depends.

We may as well say at once that the dairy industry is not, in the accepted sense of the phrase, a public utility. We think the appellant is also right in asserting that there is in this case no suggestion of any monopoly or monopolistic practice. It goes without saying that those engaged in the business are in no way dependent upon public grants or franchises for the privilege of conducting their activities. But if, as must be conceded, the industry is subject to regulation in the public interest, what constitutional principle bars the state from correcting existing maladjustments by legislation touching prices? We think there is no such principle. The due process clause makes no mention of sales or of prices any more than it speaks of business or contracts or buildings or other incidents of property. The thought seems nevertheless to have persisted that there is something peculiarly sacrosanct about the price one may charge for what he makes or sells, and that, however able to regulate other elements of manufacture or trade, with incidental effect upon price, the state is incapable of directly controlling the price itself. This view was negated many years ago. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113. The appellant's claim is, however, that this court, in there sustaining a statutory prescription of charges for storage by the proprietors of a grain elevator, limited permissible legislation of that type to businesses affected with a public interest, and he says no business is so affected except it have one or more of the characteristics he enumerates. But this is a misconception. Munn and Scott held no franchise from the state. They owned the property upon which their elevator was situated and conducted their business as private citizens. No doubt they felt at liberty to deal with whom they pleased and on such terms as they might deem just to themselves. Their enterprise could not fairly be called a monopoly, although it was referred to in the decision as a "virtual monopoly." This meant only that their elevator was strategically situated and that a large portion of the public found it highly inconvenient to deal with others. This Court concluded the circumstances justified the legislation as an exercise of the governmental right to control the business in the public interest; that is, as an exercise of the police power. It is true that the Court cited a statement from Lord Hale's De Portibus Maris, to the effect that when private property is "affected with a public interest, it ceases to be juris privati only"; but the court proceeded at once to define what it understood by the expression, saying: "Property does become clothed with a public interest when used in a manner to make it of public consequence, and affect the community at large" (p. 126). Thus understood, "affected with a public interest" is the equivalent of "subject to the exercise of the police power"; and it is plain that nothing more was intended by the expression. The Court had been at pains to define that power (pp. 124, 125) ending its discussion in these words:

"From this it is apparent that, down to the time of the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, it was not supposed that statutes regulating the use, or even the price of the use, of private property necessarily deprived an owner of his property without due process of law. Under some circumstances they may, but not under all. The amendment does not change the law in this particular: It simply prevents the states from doing that which will operate as such a deprivation."

In the further discussion of the principle it is said that when one devotes his property to a use, "in which the public has an interest," he in effect "grants to the public an interest in that use" and must submit to be controlled for the common good. The conclusion is that if Munn and Scott wished to avoid having their business regulated they should not have embarked their property in an industry which is subject to regulation in the public interest.

The true interpretation of the court's language is claimed to be that only property voluntarily devoted to a known public use is subject to regulation as to rates. But obviously Munn and Scott had not voluntarily dedicated their business to a public use. They intended only to conduct it as private citizens, and they insisted that they had done nothing which gave the public an interest in their transactions or conferred any right of regulation. The statement that one has dedicated his property to a public use is, therefore, merely another way of saying that if one embarks in a business which public interest demands shall be regulated, he must know regulation will ensue.

In the same volume the court sustained regulation of railroad rates. After referring to the fact that railroads are carriers for hire, are incorporated as such, and given extraordinary powers in order that they may better serve the public, it was said that they are engaged in employment "affecting the public interest," and therefore, under the doctrine of the Munn case, subject to legislative control as to rates. And in another of the group of railroad cases then heard it was said that the property of railroads is "clothed with a public interest" which permits legislative limitation of the charges for its use. Plainly the activities of railroads, their charges and practices, so nearly touch the vital economic interests of society that the police power may be invoked to regulate their charges, and no additional formula of affection or clothing with a public interest is needed to justify the regulation. And this is evidently true of all business units supplying transportation, light, heat, power and water to communities, irrespective of how they obtain their powers. * * *

It is clear that there is no closed class or category of businesses affected with a public interest, and the function of courts in the application of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments is to determine in each case whether circumstances vindicate the challenged regulation as a reasonable exertion of governmental authority or condemn it as arbitrary or discriminatory. Wolff Packing Co. v. Industrial Court, 262 U. S. 522, 535. The phrase "affected with a public interest" can, in the nature of things, mean no more than that an industry, for adequate reason, is subject to control for the public good. In several of the decisions of this Court wherein the expressions "affected with a public interest," and "clothed with a public use," have been brought forward as the criteria of the validity of price control, it has been admitted that they are not susceptible of definition and form an unsatisfactory test of the constitutionality of legislation directed at business practices or prices. These decisions must rest, finally, upon the basis that the requirements of due process were not met because the laws were found arbitrary in their operation and effect. But there can be no doubt that upon proper occasion and by appropriate measures the state may regulate a business in any of its aspects, including the prices to be charged for the products or commodities it sells.

So far as the requirement of due process is concerned, and in the absence of other constitutional restriction, a state is free to adopt whatever economic policy may reasonably be deemed to promote public welfare, and to enforce that policy by legislation adapted to its purpose. The courts are without authority either to declare such policy, or, when it is declared by the legislature, to override it. If the laws passed are seen to have a reasonable relation to a proper legislative purpose, and are neither arbitrary nor discriminatory, the requirements of due process are satisfied, and judicial determination to that effect renders a court functus officio. "Whether the free operation of the normal laws of competition is a wise and wholesome rule for trade and commerce is an economic question which this court need not consider or determine." Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197, 337-8. And it is equally clear that if the legislative policy be to curb unrestrained and harmful competition by measures which are not arbitrary or discriminatory it does not lie with the courts to determine that the rule is unwise.

With the wisdom of the policy adopted, with the adequacy or practicability of the law enacted to forward it, the courts are both incompetent and unauthorized to deal. The course of decision in this Court exhibits a firm adherence to these principles. Times without number we have said that the legislature is primarily the judge of the necessity of such an enactment, that every possible presumption is in favor of its validity, and that though the Court may hold views inconsistent with the wisdom of the law, it may not be annulled unless palpably in excess of legislative power.

The law-making bodies have in the past endeavored to promote free competition by laws aimed at trusts and monopolies. The consequent interference with private property and freedom of contract has not availed with the courts to set these enactments aside as denying due process. Where the public interest was deemed to require the fixing of minimum prices, that expedient has been sustained. If the law-making body within its sphere of government concludes that the conditions or practices in an industry make unrestricted competition an inadequate safeguard of the consumer's interests, produce waste harmful to the public, threaten ultimately to cut off the supply of a commodity needed by the public or portend the destruction of the industry itself, appropriate statutes passed in an honest effort to correct the threatened consequences may not be set aside because the regulation adopted fixes prices reasonably deemed by the legislature to be fair to those engaged in the industry and to the consuming public. And this is especially so where, as here, the economic maladjustment is one of price, which threatens harm to the producer at one end of the series and the consumer at the other. The Constitution does not secure to anyone liberty to conduct his business in such fashion as to inflict injury upon the public at large, or upon any substantial group of the people. Price control, like any other form of regulation, is unconstitutional only if arbitrary, discriminatory, or demonstrably irrelevant to the policy the legislature is free to adopt, and hence an unnecessary and unwarranted interference with individual liberty.

Tested by these considerations we find no basis in the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment for condemning the provisions of the Agriculture and Markets Law here drawn into question.

The judgment is

Affirmed.

[MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS delivered a dissenting opinion with which JUSTICES VAN DEVANTER, SUTHERLAND and BUTLER concurred.]

NOTE

1. The labor provisions of the Bituminous Coal Conservation Act of 1935 having been held unconstitutional in Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U. S. 238, 80 L. ed. 1160, 56 Sup. Ct. 855 (1936), Congress re-enacted the price-fixing provisions of the earlier law in the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937. These were held valid in Sunshine Anthracite Coal Co. v. Adkins, 310 U. S. 381, 84 L. ed. 1263,

60 Sup. Ct. 907 (1940), where Mr. Justice Douglas, for the court, said that price control is one of the means available to the states "for the protection and promotion of the welfare of the economy." Answering the contention that the legislation was not an appropriate exercise of congressional power, he continued: "It was the judgment of Congress that price-fixing and the elimination of unfair competitive practices were appropriate methods for prevention of the financial ruin, low wages, poor working conditions, strikes, and disruption of the channels of trade which followed in the wake of the demoralized price structures in this industry. If the strategic character of this industry in our economy and the chaotic conditions which have prevailed in it do not justify legislation, it is difficult to imagine what would. To invalidate this Act we would have to deny the existence of power on the part of Congress under the commerce clause to deal directly and specifically with those forces which in its judgment should not be permitted to dislocate an important segment of our economy and to disrupt and burden interstate channels of trade."

OLSEN v. NEBRASKA EX REL. WESTERN REFERENCE & BOND ASSN.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1941.

313 U. S. 236, 85 L. ed. 1305, 61 Sup. Ct. 862, 133 A. L. R. 1500.

[The challenged statute of Nebraska limited the charges of private employment agencies to a $2 registration fee and 10% of the first month's pay of an applicant for employment.]

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS delivered the opinion of the Court.

In reliance upon Ribnik v. McBride, 277 U. S. 350, the Supreme Court of Nebraska held, one judge dissenting, that a statute of that state fixing the maximum compensation which a private employment agency might collect from an applicant for employment was unconstitutional under the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. State ex rel. Western Reference & Bond Assn. v. Kinney, 138 Neb. 574, 293 N. W. 393. The case is here on a petition for certiorari which we granted because of the importance of the constitutional question which was raised.

The action is for a peremptory writ of mandamus ordering petitioner, Secretary of Labor of Nebraska, to issue a license to the relator to operate a private employment agency for the year commencing May 1, 1940. The license was withheld because of relator's refusal to limit its maximum compensation, as provided by the statute, to ten per cent of the first month's salary or wages of the person for whom employment was obtained. The petition in mandamus challenged the constitutionality of those provisions of the act. The answer sought to sustain them by alleging that the business of a private employment agency is "vitally affected with a public interest" and subject to such regulation under the police power of the state. The relator's motion for judgment on the pleadings was sustained and it was ordered that a peremptory writ of mandamus should issue.

We disagree with the Supreme Court of Nebraska. The statutory provisions in question do not violate the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The drift away from Ribnik v. McBride, supra, has been so great that it can no longer be deemed a controlling authority. It was decided in 1928. In the following year this Court held that Tennessee had no power to fix prices at which gasoline might be sold in the state. Williams v. Standard Oil Co., 278 U. S. 235. Save for that decision and Morehead v. People of State of New York ex rel. Tipaldo, 298 U. S. 587, holding unconstitutional a New York statute authorizing the fixing of women's wages, the subsequent cases in this Court have given increasingly wider scope to the price-fixing powers of the states and of Congress. Tagg Bros. & Moorhead v. United States, 280 U. S. 420, decided in 1930, upheld the power of the Secretary of Agriculture under the Packers and Stockyards Act to determine the just and reasonable charges of persons engaged in the business of buying and selling in interstate commerce livestock at a stockyard on a commission basis. In 1931 a New Jersey statute limiting commissions of agents of fire insurance companies was sustained by O'Gorman & Young, Inc. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 282 U. S. 251. A New York statute authorizing the fixing of minimum and maximum retail prices for milk was upheld in 1934. Nebbia v. New York, 291 U. S. 502. And see Hegeman Farms Corp. v. Baldwin, 293 U. S. 163; Borden's Farm Products Co., Inc. v. Ten Eyck, 297 U. S. 251. Cf. Baldwin v. G. A. F. Seelig, Inc., 294 U. S. 511; Mayflower Farms, Inc. v. Ten Eyck, 297 U. S. 266. In 1937 Adkins v. Children's Hospital, 261 U. S. 525, was overruled and a statute of Washington which authorized the fixing of minimum wages for women and minors was sustained. West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U. S. 379. In the same year Townsend v. Yeomans, 301 U. S. 441, upheld a Georgia statute fixing maximum warehouse charges for the handling and selling of leaf tobacco. Cf. Mulford v. Smith, 307 U. S. 38; Currin v. Wallace, 306 U. S. 1. The power of Congress under the commerce clause to authorize the fixing of minimum prices for milk was upheld in United States v. Rock Royal Co-Operative, Inc., 307 U. S. 533, decided in 1939. The next year the price-fixing provisions of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937, 15 U. S. C. §§ 828-851, were sustained. Sunshine Anthracite Coal Co. v. Adkins, 310 U. S. 381. And at this term we upheld the minimum wage and maximum hour provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, 29 U. S. C. § 201 et seq.; United States v. F. W. Darby Lumber Co., 312 U. S. 100. These cases represent more than scattered examples of constitutionally permissible price-fixing schemes. They represent in large measure a basic departure from the philosophy and approach of the majority in the Ribnik case. The standard there employed, following that used in Tyson & Bro. v. Banton, 273 U. S. 418, 430 et seq., was that the constitutional validity of price-fixing legislation, at least in absence of a so-called emergency, was dependent on whether or not the business in question was "affected with a public interest." Cf. Brazee v. Michigan, 241 U. S. 340. It was said to be so affected if it had been "devoted to the public use" and if "an interest in effect" had been granted "to the public in that use." Ribnik v. McBride, supra. That test, labelled by Mr. Justice Holmes in his dissent in the Tyson case, as "little more than a fiction," was discarded in Nebbia v. New York, supra. It was there stated that such criteria "are not susceptible of definition and form an unsatisfactory test of the constitutionality of legislation directed at business practices or prices," and that the phrase "affected with a public interest" can mean "no more than that an industry, for adequate reason, is subject to control for the public good." And see the dissenting opinion in Ribnik v. McBride. * * *

The Ribnik case, freed from the test which it employed, can no longer survive. But respondents maintain that the statute here in question is invalid for other reasons. They insist that special circumstances must be shown to support the validity of such drastic legislation as price-fixing, that the executive, technical and professional workers which respondents serve have not been shown to be in need of special protection from exploitation, that legislative limitation of maximum fees for employment agencies is certain to react unfavorably upon those members of the community for whom it is most difficult to obtain jobs, that the increasing competition of public employment agencies and of charitable, labor union and employer association employment agencies have curbed excessive fees by private agencies, and that there is nothing in this record to overcome the presumption as to the result of the operation of such competitive, economic forces. And in the latter connection respondents urge that since no circumstances are shown which curb competition between the private agencies and the other types of agencies, there are no conditions which the legislature might reasonably believe would redound to the public injury unless corrected by such legislation.

* * *

There is no necessity for the state to demonstrate before us that evils persist despite the competition which attends the bargaining in this field. In final analysis, the only constitutional prohibitions or restraints which respondents have suggested for the invalidation of this legislation are those notions of public policy embedded in earlier decisions of this Court but which, as Mr. Justice Holmes long admonished, should not be read into the Constitution. * * * Since they do not find expression in the Constitution, we cannot give them continuing vitality as standards by which the constitutionality of the economic and social programs of the states is to be determined.

The judgment is reversed and the cause is remanded to the Supreme Court of Nebraska for proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

NOTES

1. The Nebbia, Sunshine Anthracite Coal and Olsen cases have established that, so far as the federal Constitution is concerned, the concept of "affectation with a public interest" as a criterion for determining the constitutionality of legislation regulating social and economic affairs has been abandoned. The due process clauses of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments are guaranties only against unreasonable and arbitrary legislative or other governmental action and do not embody any particular economic philosophy. The validity of price-fixing laws, or of other laws curtailing liberty of contract, thus depends, as do other exertions of regulatory power, upon whether they are reasonable means of protecting the public interest against recognized evils. Moreover, the Supreme Court has in large measure renounced its power to review legislative findings of fact as to the existence of evils or the effectiveness of remedies when passing upon the constitutionality of laws regulating business and industrial practices deemed to be inimical to the public welfare. See Daniel v. Family Security Life Insurance Co., 336 U. S. 220, 93 L. ed. 632, 69 Sup. Ct. 550, 10 A. L. R. (2d) 945 (1949), where the court said: "We are not equipped to decide desirability; and a court cannot eliminate measures which do not happen to suit its tastes if it seeks to maintain a democratic system. The forum for the correction of ill-considered legislation is a responsive legislature."

State courts of last resort, however, may interpret the provisions of due process clauses in state constitutions as they see fit, without review by the Supreme Court of the United States. As a consequence, in some states statutes have been held invalid by state Supreme Courts on the basis of legal doctrines or reasoning previously embraced but now abandoned by the Supreme Court of the United States. For example, in Boomer v. Olsen, 143 Nebr. 579, 10 N. W. (2d) 507 (1943), the Nebraska Supreme Court, after the decision in the principal case, held unconstitutional the same statute under the state constitution. This development is discussed in Paulsen, The Persistence of Substantive Due Process in the States, 34 Minn. L. Rev. 91 (1950).

2. For informative discussions of the "affectation with a public interest" formula and its effect on the validity of price-fixing laws, see generally, McAllister, Lord Hale and Business Affected With a Public Interest, 43 Harv. L. Rev. 759 (1930), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 467; Hamilton, Affectation With Public Interest, 39 Yale L. J. 1089 (1930), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 494; Finkelstein, From Munn v. Illinois to Tyson v. Banton: A Study in the Judicial Process, 27 Col. L. Rev. 769 (1927), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 516; Goldsmith and Winks, Price Fixing: From Nebbia to Guffey, 31 Ill. L. Rev. 179 (1936), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 531.

Section 3.—The Regulation of Industrial Relations.

HOLDEN v. HARDY.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1898.
169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. 383.

[Holden was convicted before a justice of the peace in Utah on charges of having employed workmen more than eight hours a day, one in an underground mine and another in an ore reduction plant, in violation of a statute which made eight hours the maximum per day for such employment "except in cases of emergency where life or property is in imminent danger." No emergency was shown. From a denial by the State Supreme Court of a writ of habeas corpus this writ of error was taken.]

MR. JUSTICE BROWN delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

An examination * * * of cases under the Fourteenth Amendment will demonstrate that, in passing upon the validity of state legislation under that Amendment, this Court has not failed to recognize the fact that the law is, to a certain extent, a progressive science * * *. [Various law reforms are here mentioned.]

This case does not call for an expression of opinion as to the wisdom of these changes, or their validity under the Fourteenth Amendment, although the substitution of prosecution by information in lieu of indictment was recognized as valid in Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516. They are mentioned only for the purpose of calling attention to the probability that other changes of no less importance may be made in the future, and that, while the cardinal principles of justice are immutable, the methods by which justice is administered are subject to constant fluctuation, and that the Constitution of the United States, which is necessarily and to a large extent inflexible, and exceedingly difficult of amendment, should not be so construed as to deprive the states of the power to so amend their laws as to make them conform to the wishes of the citizens, as they may deem best for the public welfare, without bringing them into conflict with the supreme law of the land.

Of course, it is impossible to forecast the character or extent of these changes; but in view of the fact that, from the day Magna Charta was signed to the present moment, amendments to the structure of the law have been made with increasing frequency, it is impossible to suppose that they will not continue, and the law be forced to adapt itself to new conditions of society, and particularly to the new relations between employers and employés, as they arise. * * *

Recognizing the difficulty in defining with exactness the phrase "due process of law," it is certain that these words imply a conformity with natural and inherent principles of justice, and forbid that one man's property, or right to property, shall be taken for the benefit of another, or for the benefit of the state, without compensation, and that no one shall be condemned in his person or property without an opportunity of being heard in his own defense.

As the possession of property, of which a person cannot be deprived, doubtless implies that such property may be acquired, it is safe to say that a state law which undertakes to deprive any class of persons of the general power to acquire property would also be obnoxious to the same provision. Indeed, we may go a step further, and say that as property can only be legally acquired as between living persons by contract, a general prohibition against entering into contracts with respect to property, or having as their object the acquisition of property, would be equally invalid. * * *

This right of contract, however, is itself subject to certain limitations which the state may lawfully impose in the exercise of its police powers. While this power is inherent in all governments, it has doubtless been greatly expanded in its application during the past century, owing to an enormous increase in the number of occupations which are dangerous or so far detrimental to the health of employes as to demand special precautions for their well-being and protection, or the safety of adjacent property. While this Court has held, notably in the cases Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, and Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, that the police power cannot be put forward as an excuse for oppressive and unjust legislation, it may be lawfully resorted to for the purpose of preserving the public health, safety, or morals, or the abatement of public nuisances, and a large discretion "is necessarily vested in the legislature to determine not only what the interests of the public require, but what measures are necessary for the protection of such interests." Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 136. * * *

While the business of mining coal and manufacturing iron began in Pennsylvania as early as 1716, and in Virginia, North Carolina, and Massachusetts even earlier than this, both mining and manufacturing were carried on in such a limited way and by such primitive methods that no special laws were considered necessary, prior to the adoption of the Constitution, for the protection of the operatives; but, in the vast proportions which these industries have since assumed, it has been found that they can no longer be carried on with due regard to the safety and health of those engaged in them, without special protection against the dangers necessarily incident to these employments. In consequence of this, laws have been enacted in most of the states designed to meet these exigencies, and to secure the safety of persons peculiarly exposed to these dangers. Within this general category are ordinances providing for fire escapes for hotels, theaters, factories, and other large buildings; a municipal inspection of boilers; and appliances designed to secure passengers upon railways and steamboats against the dangers necessarily incident to these methods of transportation. In states where manufacturing is carried on to a large extent, provision is made for the protection of dangerous machinery against accidental contact; for the cleanliness and ventilation of working rooms; for the guarding of well holes, stairways, elevator shafts; and for the employment of sanitary appliances. In others, where mining is the principal industry, special provision is made for the shoring up of dangerous walls; for ventilation shafts, bore holes, escapement shafts, means of signaling the surface; for the supply of fresh air, and the elimination, as far as possible, of dangerous gases; for safe means of hoisting and lowering cages; for a limitation upon the number of persons permitted to enter a cage; that cages shall be covered; and that there shall be fences and gates around the top of shafts, besides other similar precautions. * * *

But, if it be within the power of a legislature to adopt such means for the protection of the lives of its citizens, it is difficult to see why precautions may not also be adopted for the protection of their health and morals. It is as much for the interest of the state that the public health should be preserved as that life should be made secure. With this end in view, quarantine laws have been enacted in most, if not all, of the states; insane asylums, public hospitals, and institutions for the care and education of the blind established; and special measures taken for the exclusion of infected cattle, rags, and decayed fruit. In other states laws have been enacted limiting the hours during which women and children shall be employed in factories; and while their constitutionality, at least as applied to women, has been doubted in some of the states, they have been generally upheld. * * *

Upon the principles above stated, we think the act in question may be sustained as a valid exercise of the police power of the state. The enactment does not profess to limit the hours of all workmen, but merely those who are employed in underground mines, or in the smelting, reduction, or refining of ores or metals. These employments, when too long pursued, the legislature has judged to be detrimental to the health of the employés; and, so long as there are reasonable grounds for believing that this is so, its decision upon this subject cannot be reviewed by the federal courts.

While the general experience of mankind may justify us in believing that men may engage in ordinary employments more than eight hours per day without injury to their health, it does not follow that labor for the same length of time is innocuous when carried on beneath the surface of the earth, where the operative is deprived of fresh air and sunlight, and is frequently subjected to foul atmosphere and a very high temperature, or to the influence of noxious gases generated by the processes of refining or smelting. * * *

The legislature has also recognized the fact, which the experience of legislators in many states has corroborated, that the proprietors of these establishments and their operatives do not stand upon an equality, and that their interests are, to a certain extent, conflicting. The former naturally desire to obtain as much labor as possible from their employés, while the latter are often induced by the fear of discharge to conform to regulations which their judgment, fairly exercised, would pronounce to be detrimental to their health or strength. In other words, the proprietors lay down the rules, and the laborers are practically constrained to obey them. In such cases self-interest is often an unsafe guide, and the legislature may properly interpose its authority.

It may not be improper to suggest in this connection that although the prosecution in this case was against the employer of labor, who apparently, under the statute, is the only one liable, his defense is not so much that his right to contract has been infringed upon, but that the act works a peculiar hardship to his employés, whose right to labor as long as they please is alleged to be thereby violated. The argument would certainly come with better grace and greater cogency from the latter class. But the fact that both parties are of full age and competent to contract does not necessarily deprive the state of the power to interfere, where the parties do not stand upon an equality, or where the public health demands that one party to the contract shall be protected against himself. "The state still retains an interest in his welfare, however reckless he may be. The whole is no greater than the sum of all the parts, and when the individual health, safety, and welfare are sacrificed or neglected, the state must suffer."

We have no disposition to criticise the many authorities which hold that state statutes restricting the hours of labor are unconstitutional. Indeed, we are not called upon to express an opinion upon this subject. It is sufficient to say of them that they have no application to cases where the legislature had adjudged that a limitation is necessary for the preservation of the health of employés, and there are reasonable grounds for believing that such determination is supported by the facts. * * *

Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE BREWER and MR. JUSTICE PECKHAM dissented.

LOCHNER v. NEW YORK.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1905.

198 U. S. 45, 49 L. ed. 937, 25 Sup. Ct. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133.

[On writ of error to review a judgment of the New York Court of Appeals which had affirmed a judgment of a lower court convicting Lochner for requiring and permitting employees in his bakery and confectionery to work in excess of a statutory limit. The statute applied only to bakeries and confectioneries and limited employment therein to not more than sixty hours per week or ten hours in one day.]

MR. JUSTICE PECKHAM delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

The statute necessarily interferes with the right of contract between the employer and employés, concerning the number of hours in which the latter may labor in the bakery of the employer. The general right to make a contract in relation to his business is part of the liberty of the individual protected by the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution. Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578. Under that provision no state can deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. The right to purchase or to sell labor is part of the liberty protected by this amendment, unless there are circumstances which exclude the right. There are, however, certain powers, existing in the sovereignty of each state in the Union, somewhat vaguely termed police powers, the exact description and limitation of which have not been attempted by the courts. Those powers, broadly stated, and without, at present, any attempt at a more specific limitation, relate to the safety, health, morals and general welfare of the public. Both property and liberty are held on such reasonable conditions as may be imposed by the governing power of the state in the exercise of those powers, and with such conditions the Fourteenth Amendment was not designed to interfere. Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623; In re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86; In re Converse, 137 U. S. 624.

The state, therefore, has power to prevent the individual from making certain kinds of contracts, and in regard to them the federal Constitution offers no protection. If the contract be one which the state, in the legitimate exercise of its police power, has the right to prohibit, it is not prevented from prohibiting it by the Fourteenth Amendment.

* * *

This Court has recognized the existence and upheld the exercise of the police powers of the states in many cases which might fairly be considered as border ones, and it has, in the course of its determination of questions regarding the asserted invalidity of such statutes, on the ground of their violation of the rights secured by the federal Constitution, been guided by rules of a very liberal nature, the application of which has resulted, in numerous instances, in upholding the validity of state statutes thus assailed. Among the later cases where the state law has been upheld by this Court is that of Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366.

* * *

It will be observed that, even with regard to that class of labor, the Utah statute [in that case] provided for cases of emergency wherein the provisions of the statute would not apply. The statute now before this Court has no emergency clause in it, and, if the statute is valid, there are no circumstances and no emergencies under which the slightest violation of the provisions of the act would be innocent. There is nothing in Holden v. Hardy which covers the case now before us.

* * *

It must, of course, be conceded that there is a limit to the valid exercise of the police power by the state. There is no dispute concerning this general proposition. Otherwise the Fourteenth Amendment would have no efficacy and the legislatures of the states would have unbounded power, and it would be enough to say that any piece of legislation was enacted to conserve the morals, the health, or the safety of the people; such legislation would be valid, no matter how absolutely without foundation the claim might be. The claim of the police power would be a mere pretext,—become another and delusive name for the supreme sovereignty of the state to be exercised free from constitutional restraint. This is not contended for. In every case that comes before this Court, therefore, where legislation of this character is concerned, and where the protection of the federal Constitution is sought, the question necessarily arises: Is this a fair, reasonable, and appropriate exercise of the police power of the state, or is it an unreasonable, unnecessary, and arbitrary interference with the right of the individual to his personal liberty, or to enter into those contracts in relation to labor which may seem to him appropriate or necessary for the support of himself and his family? Of course the liberty of contract relating to labor includes both parties to it. The one has as much right to purchase as the other to sell labor.

This is not a question of substituting the judgment of the court for that of the legislature. If the act be within the power of the state it is valid, although the judgment of the court might be totally opposed to the enactment of such a law. But the question would still remain: Is it within the police power of the state? and that question must be answered by the Court. * * *

Viewed in the light of a purely labor law, with no reference whatever to the question of health, we think that a law like the one before us involves neither the safety, the morals, nor the welfare, of the public, and that the interest of the public is not in the slightest degree affected by such an act. The law must be upheld, if at all, as a law pertaining to the health of the individual engaged in the occupation of a baker. It does not affect any other portion of the public than those who are engaged in that occupation. Clean and wholesome bread does not depend upon whether the baker works but ten hours per day or only sixty hours a week. The limitation of the hours of labor does not come within the police power on that ground.

It is a question of which of two powers or rights shall prevail,—the power of the state to legislate or the right of the individual to liberty of person and freedom of contract. The mere assertion that the subject relates, though but in a remote degree, to the public health, does not necessarily render the enactment valid. The act must have a more direct relation, as a means to an end, and the end itself must be appropriate and legitimate, before an act can be held to be valid which interferes with the general right of an individual to be free in his person and in his power to contract in relation to his own labor.

* * *

We think the limit of the police power has been reached and passed in this case. There is, in our judgment, no reasonable foundation for holding this to be necessary or appropriate as a health law to safeguard the public health, or the health of the individuals who are following the trade of a baker. If this statute be valid, and if, therefore, a proper case is made out in which to deny the right of an individual, sui juris, as employer or employé, to make contracts for the labor of the latter under the protection of the provisions of the federal Constitution, there would seem to be no length to which legislation of this nature might not go. * * *

We think that there can be no fair doubt that the trade of a baker, in and of itself, is not an unhealthy one to that degree which would authorize the legislature to interfere with the right to labor, and with the right of free contract on the part of the individual, either as employer or employé. In looking through statistics regarding all trades and occupations, it may be true that the trade of a baker does not appear to be as healthy as some other trades, and is also vastly more healthy than still others. To the common understanding the trade of a baker has never been regarded as an unhealthy one. Very likely physicians would not recommend the exercise of that or of any other trade as a remedy for ill health. Some occupations are more healthy than others, but we think there are none which might not come under the power of the legislature to supervise and control the hours of working therein, if the mere fact that the occupation is not absolutely and perfectly healthy is to confer that right upon the legislative department of the government. It might be safely affirmed that almost all occupations more or less affect the health. There must be more than the mere fact of the possible existence of some small amount of unhealthiness to warrant legislative interference with liberty. It is unfortunately true that labor, even in any department, may possibly carry with it the seeds of unhealthiness. But are we all, on that account, at the mercy of legislative majorities? A printer, a tinsmith, a locksmith, a carpenter, a cabinetmaker, a dry goods clerk, a bank's, a lawyer's, or a physician's clerk, or a clerk in almost any kind of business, would all come under the power of the legislature, on this assumption. No trade, no occupation, no mode of earning one's living, could escape this all-pervading power, and the acts of the legislature in limiting the hours of labor in all employments would be valid, although such limitation might seriously cripple the ability of the laborer to support himself and his family.

In our large cities there are many buildings into which the sun penetrates for but a short time in each day, and these buildings are occupied by people carrying on the business of bankers, brokers, lawyers, real-estate, and many other kinds of business, aided by many clerks, messengers, and other employés. Upon the assumption of the validity of this act under review, it is not possible to say that an act, prohibiting lawyers' or bank clerks, or others, from contracting to labor for their employers more than eight hours a day would be invalid. It might be said that it is unhealthy to work more than that number of hours in an apartment lighted by artificial light during the working hours of the day; that the occupation of the bank clerk, the lawyer's clerk, the real-estate clerk, or the broker's clerk, in such offices is therefore unhealthy, and the legislature, in its paternal wisdom, must, therefore, have the right to legislate on the subject of, and to limit, the hours for such labor; and, if it exercises that power, and its validity be questioned, it is sufficient to say, it has reference to the public health;

it has reference to the health of the employé condemned to labor day after day in buildings where the sun never shines; it is a health law, and therefore it is valid, and cannot be questioned by the courts.

It is also urged, pursuing the same line of argument, that it is to the interest of the state that its population should be strong and robust, and therefore any legislation which may be said to tend to make people healthy must be valid as health laws, enacted under the police power. If this be a valid argument and a justification for this kind of legislation, it follows that the protection of the federal Constitution from undue interference with liberty of person and freedom of contract is visionary, wherever the law is sought to be justified as a valid exercise of the police power. Scarcely any law but might find shelter under such assumptions, and conduct, properly so called, as well as contract, would come under the restrictive sway of the legislature. Not only the hours of employés, but the hours of employers, could be regulated, and doctors, lawyers, scientists, all professional men, as well as athletes and artisans, could be forbidden to fatigue their brains and bodies by prolonged hours of exercise, lest the fighting strength of the state be impaired. We mention these extreme cases because the contention is extreme.

We do not believe in the soundness of the views which uphold this law. On the contrary, we think that such a law as this, although passed in the assumed exercise of the police power, and as relating to the public health, or the health of the employés named, is not within that power, and is invalid. The act is not, within any fair meaning of the term, a health law, but is an illegal interference with the rights of individuals, both employers and employés, to make contracts regarding labor upon such terms as they may think best, or which they may agree upon with the other parties to such contracts. Statutes of the nature of that under review, limiting the hours in which grown and intelligent men may labor to earn their living, are mere meddlesome interferences with the rights of the individual, and they are not saved from condemnation by the claim that they are passed in the exercise of the police power and upon the subject of the health of the individual whose rights are interfered with, unless there be some fair ground, reasonable in and of itself, to say that there is material danger to the public health, or to the health of the employés, if the hours of labor are not curtailed.

* * *

This interference on the part of the legislatures of the several states with the ordinary trades and occupations of the people seems to be on the increase. * * * It is impossible for us to shut our eyes to the fact that many of the laws of this character, while passed under what is claimed to be the police power for the purpose of protecting the public health or welfare, are, in reality, passed from other motives. * * * It seems to us that the real object and purpose were simply to regulate the hours of labor between the master and his employés

(all being men, sui juris), in a private business, not dangerous in any degree to morals, or in any real and substantial degree to the health of the employés. Under such circumstances the freedom of master and employé to contract with each other in relation to their employment, and in defining the same, cannot be prohibited or interfered with, without violating the federal Constitution. * * * Reversed.

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, with whom MR. JUSTICE WHITE and MR. JUSTICE DAY concurred, dissenting: * * * I find it impossible, in view of common experience, to say that there is here no real or substantial relation between the means employed by the state and the end sought to be accomplished by its legislation. * * *

We judicially know that the question of the number of hours during which a workman should continuously labor has been, for a long period, and is yet, a subject of serious consideration among civilized peoples, and by those having special knowledge of the laws of health. Suppose the statute prohibited labor in bakery and confectionery establishments in excess of eighteen hours each day. No one, I take it, could dispute the power of the state to enact such a statute. But the statute before us does not embrace extreme or exceptional cases. It may be said to occupy a middle ground in respect of the hours of labor. What is the true ground for the state to take between legitimate protection, by legislation, of the public health and liberty of contract is not a question easily solved, nor one in respect of which there is or can be absolute certainty. There are very few, if any, questions in political economy about which entire certainty may be predicated. * * *

I do not stop to consider whether any particular view of this economic question presents the sounder theory. What the precise facts are it may be difficult to say. It is enough for the determination of this case, and it is enough for this court to know, that the question is one about which there is room for debate and for an honest difference of opinion. There are many reasons of a weighty, substantial character, based upon the experience of mankind, in support of the theory that, all things considered, more than ten hours' steady work each day, from week to week, in a bakery or confectionery establishment, may endanger the health and shorten the lives of the workmen, thereby diminishing their physical and mental capacity to serve the state and to provide for those dependent upon them.

If such reasons exist that ought to be the end of this case, for the state is not amenable to the judiciary, in respect of its legislative enactments, unless such enactments are plainly, palpably, beyond all question, inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States.
* * *

MR. JUSTICE HOLMES, dissenting. I regret sincerely that I am unable to agree with the judgment in this case, and that I think it my duty to express my dissent.

This case is decided upon an economic theory which a large part of the country does not entertain. If it were a question whether I agreed with that theory, I should desire to study it further and long before making up my mind. But I do not conceive that to be my duty, because I strongly believe that my agreement or disagreement has nothing to do with the right of a majority to embody their opinions in law. It is settled by various decisions of this court that state constitutions and state laws may regulate life in many ways which we as legislators might think as injudicious, or if you like as tyrannical, as this, and which, equally with this, interfere with the liberty to contract. Sunday laws and usury laws are ancient examples. A more modern one is the prohibition of lotteries. The liberty of the citizen to do as he likes so long as he does not interfere with the liberty of others to do the same, which has been a shibboleth for some well-known writers, is interfered with by school laws, by the postoffice, by every state or municipal institution which takes his money for purposes thought desirable, whether he likes it or not.

The Fourteenth Amendment does not enact Mr. Herbert Spencer's Social Statics. The other day we sustained the Massachusetts vaccination law. Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11. United States and state statutes and decisions cutting down the liberty to contract by way of combination are familiar to this Court. Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197. Two years ago we upheld the prohibition of sales of stock on margins, or for future delivery, in the Constitution of California. Otis v. Parker, 187 U. S. 606. The decision sustaining an eight-hour law for miners is still recent. Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366. Some of these laws embody convictions or prejudices which judges are likely to share. Some may not. But a constitution is not intended to embody a particular economic theory, whether of paternalism and the organic relation of the citizen to the state or of laissez faire. It is made for people of fundamentally differing views, and the accident of our finding certain opinions natural and familiar, or novel, and even shocking, ought not to conclude our judgment upon the question whether statutes embodying them conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

General propositions do not decide concrete cases. The decision will depend on a judgment or intuition more subtle than any articulate major premise. But I think that the proposition just stated, if it is accepted, will carry us far toward the end. Every opinion tends to become a law. I think that the word "liberty," in the Fourteenth Amendment, is perverted when it is held to prevent the natural outcome of a dominant opinion, unless it can be said that a rational and fair man necessarily would admit that the statute proposed would infringe fundamental principles as they have been understood by the traditions of our people and our law. It does not need research to show that no such sweeping condemnation can be passed upon the statute before us. A reasonable man might think it a proper measure on the score of health. Men whom I certainly could not pronounce unreasonable would uphold it as a first instalment of a general regulation of the hours of work. Whether in the latter aspect it would be open to the charge of inequality I think it unnecessary to discuss.

NOTE

1. The dissenting opinions of Mr. Justice Harlan and of Mr. Justice Holmes in this well-known case have been set out not only because they represent the judicial view which was ultimately to prevail as regards the proper limits of the police power in the matter of state regulation of hours of labor in industry, but because the Holmes dissent is perhaps the most celebrated exposition of his juridical philosophy in cases involving legislation challenged under the Fourteenth Amendment.

MULLER v. OREGON.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1908.

208 U. S. 412, 52 L. ed. 551, 28 Sup. Ct. 324, 13 Ann. Cas. 957.

[The case involved the validity of the following Oregon statute: "No female shall be employed in any mechanical establishment, or factory, or laundry in this state more than ten hours during any one day."]

MR. JUSTICE BREWER delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

The single question is the constitutionality of the statute under which the defendant was convicted, so far as it affects the work of a female in a laundry. * * *

It is the law of Oregon that women, whether married or single, have equal contractual and personal rights with men. * * * Their rights in these respects can no more be infringed than the equal rights of their brothers. We held in Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, that a law providing that no laborer shall be required or permitted to work in a bakery more than sixty hours in a week or ten hours in a day was not as to men a legitimate exercise of the police power of the state, but an unreasonable, unnecessary, and arbitrary interference with the right and liberty of the individual to contract in relation to his labor, and as such was in conflict with, and void under, the federal Constitution. That decision is invoked by plaintiff in error as decisive of the question before us. But this assumes that the difference between the sexes does not justify a different rule respecting a restriction of the hours of labor.

* * *

It may not be amiss, in the present case, before examining the constitutional question, to notice the course of legislation, as well as expressions of opinion from other than judicial sources. In the brief filed by Mr. Louis D. Brandeis for the defendant in error is a very copious collection of all these matters. * * *

The legislation and opinions referred to * * * may not be, technically speaking, authorities, and in them is little or no discussion of the constitutional question presented to us for determination, yet they are significant of a widespread belief that woman's physical structure, and the functions she performs in consequence thereof, justify special legislation restricting or qualifying the conditions under which she should be permitted to toil. Constitutional questions, it is true, are not settled by even a consensus of present public opinion, for it is the peculiar value of a written constitution that it places in unchanging form limitations upon legislative action, and thus gives a permanence and stability to popular government which otherwise would be lacking. At the same time, when a question of fact is debated and debatable, and the extent to which a special constitutional limitation goes is affected by the truth in respect to that fact, a widespread and long-continued belief concerning it is worthy of consideration. We take judicial cognizance of all matters of general knowledge. * * *

That woman's physical structure and the performance of maternal functions place her at a disadvantage in the struggle for subsistence is obvious. This is especially true when the burdens of motherhood are upon her. Even when they are not, by abundant testimony of the medical fraternity continuance for a long time on her feet at work, repeating this from day to day, tends to injurious effects upon the body, and, as healthy mothers are essential to vigorous offspring, the physical well-being of woman becomes an object of public interest and care in order to preserve the strength and vigor of the race.

Still again, history discloses the fact that woman has always been dependent upon man. He established his control at the outset by superior physical strength, and this control in various forms, with diminishing intensity, has continued to the present. As [sic] minors, though not to the same extent, she has been looked upon in the courts as needing especial care that her rights may be preserved. Education was long denied her, and while now the doors of the schoolroom are opened and her opportunities for acquiring knowledge are great, yet even with that and the consequent increase of capacity for business affairs it is still true that in the struggle for subsistence she is not an equal competitor with her brother. Though limitations upon personal and contractual rights may be removed by legislation, there is that in her disposition and habits of life which will operate against a full assertion of those rights. She will still be where some legislation to protect her seems necessary to secure a real equality of right. Doubtless there are individual exceptions, and there are many respects in which she has an advantage over him; but looking at it from the viewpoint of the effort to maintain an independent position in life, she is not upon an equality.

Differentiated by these matters from the other sex, she is properly placed in a class by herself, and legislation designed for her protection may be sustained, even when like legislation is not necessary for men, and could not be sustained. It is impossible to close one's eyes to the fact that she still looks to her brother and depends upon him. Even though all restrictions on political, personal and contractual rights were taken away, and she stood, so far as statutes are concerned, upon an absolutely equal plane with him, it would still be true that she is so constituted that she will rest upon and look to him for protection; that her physical structure and a proper discharge of her maternal functions—having in view not merely her own health, but the well-being of the race—justify legislation to protect her from the greed as well as the passion of man. The limitations which this statute places upon her contractual powers, upon her right to agree with her employer as to the time she shall labor, are not imposed solely for her benefit, but also largely for the benefit of all. Many words cannot make this plainer. The two sexes differ in structure of body, in the functions to be performed by each, in the amount of physical strength, in the capacity for long continued labor, particularly when done standing, the influence of vigorous health upon the future well-being of the race, the self-reliance which enables one to assert full rights, and in the capacity to maintain the struggle for subsistence. This difference justifies a difference in legislation and upholds that which is designed to compensate for some of the burdens which rest upon her. * * *

For these reasons, and without questioning in any respect the decision in Lochner v. New York, we are of the opinion that it cannot be adjudged that the act in question is in conflict with the federal Constitution, so far as it respects the work of a female in a laundry, and the judgment of the Supreme Court of Oregon is Affirmed.

NOTES

1. In accord with the principal case: Hawley v. Walker, 232 U. S. 718, 58 L. ed. 813, 34 Sup. Ct. 479 (1914) (ten hour day for women in millinery establishments); Riley v. Massachusetts, 232 U. S. 671, 58 L. ed. 788, 34 Sup. Ct. 469 (1914) (ten hour day for women in any manufacturing establishment and without deviation from schedule posted by proprietor); Miller v. Wilson, 236 U. S. 373, 59 L. ed. 628, 35 Sup. Ct. 342, L. R. A. 1915F, 829 (1915) (eight hour day for women employed in hotels); Bosley v. McLaughlin, 236 U. S. 385, 59 L. ed. 632, 35 Sup. Ct. 345 (1915) (eight hour day for women employed in hospitals and not more than forty-eight hours in any one week); Radice v. New York, 264 U. S. 292, 68 L. ed. 690, 44 Sup. Ct. 325 (1924) (forbidding employment of women as cooks and waitresses in restaurants between 10 P. M. and 6 A. M.).

2. In Sturges & Burn Manufacturing Co. v. Beauchamp, 231 U. S. 320, 58 L. ed. 245, 34 Sup. Ct. 60, L. R. A. 1915A, 1196 (1913) an Illinois statute was sustained which prohibited the employment of children under the age of sixteen in various hazardous occupations and made the employer liable in damages for injuries upon a mere finding of violation of the statute without permitting the defense that the employer acted in good faith in relying upon the representation of the minor as to his age.

3. In Bunting v. Oregon, 243 U. S. 426, 61 L. ed. 830, 37 Sup. Ct. 435, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 1043 (1917) an Oregon statute fixing a ten-hour day for employees in mills, factories and manufacturing establishments in the state, but permitting a limited amount of overtime employment per day provided the employee was paid at the rate of time and one-half of the regular wage for such overtime, was held to be constitutional. No reference was made to the Lochner decision. Chief Justice White and Justices Van Devanter and McReynolds dissented.

4. In New York Central R. Co. v. White, 243 U. S. 188, 61 L. ed. 667, 37 Sup. Ct. 247, L. R. A. 1917D 1, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 629 (1917), the New York Workmen's Compensation Act of 1914, which abolished the common-law remedy for personal injuries suffered by a workman in the course of his employment, substituted a schedule of awards for designated injuries, payable without regard to fault as a cause, and required employers either to carry liability insurance or post a bond to assure payment of awards, was held a valid exercise of the state's police power. The court said that "the subject-matter in respect of which freedom of contract is restricted is the matter of compensation for human life or limb lost or disability incurred in the course of hazardous employment, and the public has a direct interest in this as affecting the common welfare." The Washington Industrial Insurance Act of 1911, which differed from the New York statute in that compensation was to be paid to injured employees from a state fund maintained by compulsory contributions from employers, varying in amount from industry to industry, was sustained (with four dissents) in Mountain Timber Co. v. Washington, 243 U. S. 219, 61 L. ed. 685, 37 Sup. Ct. 260, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 642 (1917). An Arizona compulsory act which gave the injured employee the option of recovering compensation under the act or of suing for damages was upheld in the Arizona Employers' Liability Cases (Arizona Copper Co. v. Hammer), 250 U. S. 400, 63 L. ed. 1058, 39 Sup. Ct. 553, 6 A. L. R. 1537 (1919).

5. In Carmichael v. Southern Coal & Coke Co., 301 U. S. 495, 81 L. ed. 1245, 57 Sup. Ct. 868, 109 A. L. R. 1327 (1937) the tax upon employers of more than eight persons levied under the Unemployment Compensation Act of Alabama was sustained, the relief of unemployment being held a valid public purpose for which the tax could be exacted.

WEST COAST HOTEL CO. v. PARRISH.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1937.

300 U. S. 379, 81 L. ed. 703, 57 Sup. Ct. 578, 108 A. L. R. 1330.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE HUGHES delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case presents the question of the constitutional validity of the minimum wage law of the State of Washington.

The Act, entitled "Minimum Wages for Women," authorizes the fixing of minimum wages for women and minors. Laws of 1913 (Washington), chap. 174; Remington's Rev. Stat. (1932), secs. 7623 et seq. It provides:

"Section 1. The welfare of the State of Washington demands that women and minors be protected from conditions of labor which have a pernicious effect on their health and morals. The State of Washington, therefore, exercising herein its police and sovereign power declares that inadequate wages and unsanitary conditions of labor exert such pernicious effect.

"Sec. 2. It shall be unlawful to employ women or minors in any industry or occupation within the State of Washington under conditions of labor detrimental to their health or morals; and it shall be unlawful to employ women workers in any industry within the State of Washington at wages which are not adequate for their maintenance.

"Sec. 3. There is hereby created a commission to be known as the 'Industrial Welfare Commission' for the State of Washington, to establish such standards of wages and conditions of labor for women and minors employed within the State of Washington, as shall be held hereunder to be reasonable and not detrimental to health and morals, and which shall be sufficient for the decent maintenance of women".

* * *

The appellant conducts a hotel. The appellee Elsie Parrish was employed as a chambermaid and (with her husband) brought this suit to recover the difference between the wages paid her and the minimum wage fixed pursuant to the State law. The minimum wage was $14.50 per week of 48 hours. The appellant challenged the act as repugnant to the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. The Supreme Court of the State, reversing the trial court, sustained the statute and directed judgment for the plaintiffs. Parrish v. West Coast Hotel Co., 185 Wash. 581. The case is here on appeal.

The appellant relies upon the decision of this Court in Adkins v. Children's Hospital, 261 U. S. 525, which held invalid the District of Columbia Minimum Wage Act which was attacked under the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment. On the argument at bar, counsel for the appellees attempted to distinguish the Adkins case upon the ground that the appellee was employed in a hotel and that the business of an innkeeper was affected with a public interest. That effort at distinction is obviously futile, as it appears that in one of the cases ruled by the Adkins opinion the employee was a woman employed as an elevator operator in a hotel. Adkins v. Lyons, 261 U. S. 525, at p. 542.

The recent case of Morehead v. New York ex rel. Tipaldo, 298 U. S. 587, came here on certiorari to the New York court which had held the New York minimum wage act for women to be invalid. A minority of this Court thought that the New York statute was distinguishable in a material feature from that involved in the Adkins case and that for that and other reasons the New York statute should be sustained. But the Court of Appeals of New York had said that it found no material difference between the two statutes and this Court held that the "meaning of the statute" as fixed by the decision of the state court "must be accepted here as if the meaning had been specifically expressed in the enactment." Id., 298 U. S. p. 609. That view led to the affirmance by this Court of the judgment in the Morehead case, as the Court considered that the only question before it was whether the Adkins case was distinguishable and that reconsideration of that decision had not been sought. Upon that point the Court said: "The petition for the writ sought review upon the ground that this case [Morehead] is distinguishable from that one [Adkins]. No application has been made for reconsideration of the constitutional question there decided. The validity of the principles upon which that decision rests is not challenged. This court confines itself to the ground upon which the writ was asked or granted. * * * Here the review granted was no broader than that sought by the petitioner. * * * He is not entitled and does not ask to be heard upon the question whether the Adkins case should be overruled. He maintains that it may be distinguished on the ground that the statutes are vitally dissimilar." Id., 298 U. S. 587, pp. 604, 605.

We think that the question which was not deemed to be open in the Morehead case is open and is necessarily presented here. The Supreme Court of Washington has upheld the minimum wage statute of that State. It has decided that the statute is a reasonable exercise of the police power of the State. In reaching that conclusion the state court has invoked principles long established by this Court in the application of the Fourteenth Amendment. The state court has refused to regard the decision in the Adkins case as determinative and has pointed to our decisions both before and since that case as justifying its position. We are of the opinion that this ruling of the state court demands on our part a reexamination of the Adkins case. * * *

The history of the litigation of this question may be briefly stated. The minimum wage statute of Washington was enacted over twenty-three years ago. Prior to the decision in the instant case it had twice been held valid by the Supreme Court of the State. Larsen v. Rice, 100 Wash. 642; Spokane Hotel Co. v. Younger, 113 Wash. 359. The Washington statute is essentially the same as that enacted in Oregon in the same year. Laws of 1913 (Oregon), chap. 62. The validity of the latter act was sustained by the Supreme Court of Oregon in Stettler v. O'Hara, 69 Ore. 519, and Simpson v. O'Hara, 70 Ore. 261. These cases, after reargument, were affirmed here by an equally divided court, in 1917. 243 U. S. 629. The law of Oregon thus continued in effect. The District of Columbia Minimum Wage Law (40 Stat. 960) was enacted in 1918. The statute was sustained by the Supreme Court of the District in the Adkins case. Upon appeal the Court of Appeals of the District first affirmed that ruling but on rehearing reversed it and the case came before this Court in 1923. The judgment of the Court of Appeals holding the Act invalid was affirmed, but with CHIEF JUSTICE TAFT, MR. JUSTICE HOLMES and MR. JUSTICE SANFORD dissenting, and MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS taking no part. The dissenting opinions took the ground that the decision was at variance with the principles which this Court had frequently announced and applied. In 1925 and 1927, the similar minimum wage statutes of Arizona and Arkansas were held invalid upon the authority of the Adkins case. The Justices who had dissented in that case bowed to the ruling and MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS dissented. Murphy v. Sardell, 269 U. S. 530; Donham v. West-Nelson Co., 273 U. S. 657. The question did not come before us again until the last term in the Morehead case, as already noted. In that case, briefs supporting the New York statute were submitted by the States of Ohio, Connecticut, Illinois, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey and Rhode Island. 298 U. S., p. 604, note. Throughout this entire period the Washington statute now under consideration has been in force.

The principle which must control our decision is not in doubt. The constitutional provision invoked is the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment governing the States, as the due process clause invoked in the Adkins case governed Congress. In each case the violation alleged by those attacking minimum wage regulation for women is deprivation of freedom of contract. What is this freedom? The Constitution does not speak of freedom of contract. It speaks of liberty and prohibits the deprivation of liberty without due process of law. In prohibiting that deprivation the Constitution does not recognize an absolute and uncontrollable liberty. Liberty in each of its phases has its history and connotation. But the liberty safeguarded is liberty in a social organization which requires the protection of law against the evils which menace the health, safety, morals and welfare of the people. Liberty under the Constitution is thus necessarily subject to the restraints of due process, and regulation which is reasonable in relation to its subject and is adopted in the interests of the community is due process.

This essential limitation of liberty in general governs freedom of contract in particular. More than twenty-five years ago we set forth the applicable principle in these words, after referring to the cases where the liberty guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment has been broadly described:

"But it was recognized in the cases cited, as in many others, that freedom of contract is a qualified and not an absolute right. There is no absolute freedom to do as one wills or to contract as one chooses. The guaranty of liberty does not withdraw from legislative supervision that wide department of activity which consists of the making of contracts, or deny to government the power to provide restrictive safeguards. Liberty implies the absence of arbitrary restraint, not immunity from reasonable regulations and prohibitions imposed in the interests of the community." Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 549, 565.

This power under the Constitution to restrict freedom of contract has had many illustrations. That it may be exercised in the public interest with respect to contracts between employer and employee is undeniable. * * * [Citations omitted.]

The point that has been strongly stressed that adult employees should be deemed competent to make their own contracts was decisively met nearly forty years ago in Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, where we pointed out the inequality in the footing of the parties. * * *

It is manifest that this established principle is peculiarly applicable in relation to the employment of women in whose protection the State has a special interest. That phase of the subject received elaborate consideration in Muller v. Oregon (1908), 208 U. S. 412, where the constitutional authority of the State to limit the working hours of women was sustained. * * * Again in Quong Wing v. Kirkendall, 223 U. S. 59, 63, in referring to a differentiation with respect to the employment of women, we said that the Fourteenth Amendment did not interfere with state power by creating a "fictitious equality." We referred to recognized classifications on the basis of sex with regard to hours of work and in other matters, and we observed that the particular points at which that difference shall be enforced by legislation were largely in the power of the State. In later rulings this Court sustained the regulation of hours of work of women employees in Riley v. Massachusetts, 232 U. S. 671 (factories), Miller v. Wilson, 236 U. S. 373 (hotels), and Bosley v. McLaughlin, 236 U. S. 385 (hospitals).

This array of precedents and the principles they applied were thought by the dissenting Justices in the Adkins case to demand that the minimum wage statute be sustained. The validity of the distinction made by the Court between a minimum wage and a maximum of hours in limiting liberty of contract was especially challenged. 261 U. S., p. 564. That challenge persists and is without any satisfactory answer. [After quoting from the dissenting opinions of CHIEF JUSTICE TAFT and JUSTICE HOLMES in the Adkins case, the opinion continues:]

We think that the views thus expressed are sound and that the decision in the Adkins case was a departure from the true application of the principles governing the regulation by the State of the relation of employer and employed. Those principles have been reenforced by our subsequent decisions. Thus in Radice v. New York, 264 U. S. 292, we sustained the New York statute which restricted the employment of women in restaurants at night. In O'Gorman v. Hartford Fire Insurance Company, 282 U. S. 251, which upheld an act regulating the commissions of insurance agents, we pointed to the presumption of the constitutionality of a statute dealing with a subject within the scope of the police power and to the absence of any factual foundation of record for deciding that the limits of power had been transcended. * * *

With full recognition of the earnestness and vigor which characterize the prevailing opinion in the Adkins case, we find it impossible to reconcile that ruling with these well-considered declarations. What can be closer to the public interest than the health of women and their protection from unscrupulous and overreaching employers? And if the protection of women is a legitimate end of the exercise of state power, how can it be said that the requirement of the payment of a minimum wage fairly fixed in order to meet the very necessities of existence is not an admissible means to that end? The legislature of the State was clearly entitled to consider the situation of women in employment, the fact that they are in the class receiving the least pay, that their bargaining power is relatively weak, and that they are the ready victims of those who would take advantage of their necessitous circumstances. The legislature was entitled to adopt measures to reduce the evils of the "sweating system," the exploiting of workers at wages so low as to be insufficient to meet the bare cost of living thus making their very helplessness the occasion of a most injurious competition. The legislature had the right to consider that its minimum wage requirements would be an important aid in carrying out its policy of protection. The adoption of similar requirements by many States evidences a deepseated conviction both as to the presence of the evil and as to the means adapted to check it. Legislative response to that conviction cannot be regarded as arbitrary or capricious and that is all we have to decide. Even if the wisdom of the policy be regarded as debatable and its effects uncertain, still the legislature is entitled to its judgment.

There is an additional and compelling consideration which recent economic experience has brought into a strong light. The exploitation of a class of workers who are in an unequal position with respect to bargaining power and are thus relatively defenceless against the denial of a living wage is not only detrimental to their health and well being but casts a direct burden for their support upon the community. What these workers lose in wages the taxpayers are called upon to pay. The bare cost of living must be met. We may take judicial notice of the unparalleled demands for relief which arose during the recent period of depression and still continue to an alarming extent despite the degree of economic recovery which has been achieved. It is unnecessary to cite official statistics to establish what is of common knowledge through the length and breadth of the land. While in the instant case no factual brief has been presented, there is no reason to doubt that the State of Washington has encountered the same social problem that is present elsewhere. The community is not bound to provide what is in effect a subsidy for unconscionable employers. The community may direct its law-making power to correct the abuse which springs from their selfish disregard of the public interest. The argument that the legislation in question constitutes an arbitrary discrimination, because it does not extend to men, is unavailing. This Court has frequently held that the legislative authority, acting within its proper field, is not bound to extend its regulation to all cases which it might possibly reach. The legislature "is free to recognize degrees of harm and it may confine its restrictions to those classes of cases where the need is deemed to be clearest." If "the law presumably hits the evil where it is most felt, it is not to be overthrown because there are other instances to which it might have been applied." There is no "doctrinaire requirement" that the legislation should be couched in all embracing terms. * * * This familiar principle has repeatedly been applied to legislation which singles out women, and particular classes of women, in the exercise of the State's protective power. * * * Their relative need in the presence of the evil, no less than the existence of the evil itself, is a matter for the legislative judgment.

Our conclusion is that the case of Adkins v. Children's Hospital, supra, should be, and it is overruled. The judgment of the Supreme Court of the State of Washington is affirmed. Affirmed.

[JUSTICES VAN DEVANTER, McREYNOLDS, SUTHERLAND and BUTLER dissented.]

NOTE

1. Including the vote in the principal case, the Supreme Court voted six times on the constitutionality of laws establishing minimum wages for women. The first vote was in 1917 in Stettler v. O'Hara and Simpson v. O'Hara, 243 U. S. 629, 61 L. ed. 937, 37 Sup. Ct. 475 (1917), where the court, being evenly divided (due to the non-participation of Mr. Justice Brandeis, who had been of counsel in the cases below), affirmed the favorable judgments of the Oregon Supreme Court. Had Brandeis participated, the Oregon statute would undoubtedly have been held valid by a five-to-four vote, and a precedent would thus have been established for the validity of the legislation. The vote in Adkins v. Children's Hospital, 261 U. S. 525, 67 L. ed. 785, 43 Sup. Ct. 394, 24 A. L. R. 1238 (1923), when the District of Columbia statute was invalidated, was five to three, Brandeis again not participating. In 1925 and 1927 minimum wage laws of Arizona and Arkansas were held invalid on the authority of the Adkins case. Mr. Justice Holmes stated that he voted with the majority solely on the principle of stare decisis. Mr. Justice Brandeis voted for constitutionality. Neither Chief Justice Taft nor Mr. Justice Sanford, who were in the minority in the Adkins decision, explained his vote for unconstitutionality. Murphy v. Sardell, 269 U. S. 530, 70 L. ed. 396, 46 Sup. Ct. 22 (1925); Donham v. West-Nelson Mfg. Co., 273 U. S. 657, 71 L. ed. 825, 47 Sup. Ct. 343 (1927). In Morehead v. New York ex rel. Tipaldo, 298 U. S. 587, 80 L. ed. 1347, 56 Sup. Ct. 918, 103 A. L. R. 1445 (1936), holding unconstitutional the New York statute on the authority of the Adkins case, Mr. Justice Roberts voted with Justices Van Devanter, McReynolds, Sutherland and Butler to form a majority. Chief Justice Hughes dissented on the ground that the law was distinguishable from the District of Columbia statute and was not an arbitrary interference with freedom of contract. Justices Stone, Brandeis and Cardozo, dissenting, urged that the Adkins case should be overruled.

During this twenty year period seventeen Supreme Court justices voted on the question. Six voted for unconstitutionality and never changed their minds. Nine voted for constitutionality on their first opportunity to vote. Of these nine, three (Holmes, Taft and Sanford) afterwards voted on the other side. Stone first voted two times for unconstitutionality and twice later for constitutionality. Roberts voted first to follow the Adkins case and finally voted to overrule it. First or last, eleven voted for constitutionality and only six voted consistently the other way.

In United States v. F. W. Darby Lumber Co., 312 U. S. 100, 85 L. ed. 609, 61 Sup. Ct. 451, 132 A. L. R. 1430 (1941) the federal Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 prescribing minimum wages and maximum hours of labor for persons employed in interstate and foreign commerce and in the production of goods for interstate commerce, was held to be a valid exercise of congressional power. In answer to the contention that the statute deprived employers of liberty without due process of law in violation of the Fifth Amendment, all that Mr. Justice Stone, speaking for a unanimous court, said on this point was: "Since our decision in West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U. S. 379, it is no longer open to question that the fixing of a minimum wage is within the legislative power and that the bare fact of its exercise is not a denial of due process under the Fifth more than under the Fourteenth Amendment. Nor is it any longer open to question that it is within the legislative power to fix maximum hours. Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366; Muller v. Oregon, 208 U. S. 412; Bunting v. Oregon, 243 U. S. 426; Baltimore & Ohio R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 221 U. S. 612. Similarly the statute is not objectionable because applied alike to both men and women. Cf. Bunting v. Oregon, 243 U. S. 426."

See Powell, The Judiciality of Minimum Wage Legislation, 37 Harv. L. Rev. 545 (1924), 1 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 553 (first portion), 2 ibid., 716 (second portion).

LINCOLN FEDERAL LABOR UNION v. NORTHWESTERN IRON & METAL CO.
WHITAKER v. NORTH CAROLINA.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1949.

335 U. S. 525, 93 L. ed. 212, 69 Sup. Ct. 251, 6 A. L. R. (2d) 473.

MR. JUSTICE BLACK delivered the opinion of the Court.

Under employment practices in the United States, employers have sometimes limited work opportunities to members of unions, sometimes to non-union members, and at other times have employed and kept their workers without regard to whether they were or were not members of a union. Employers are commanded to follow this latter employment practice in the states of North Carolina and Nebraska. A North Carolina statute and a Nebraska constitutional amendment provide that no person in those states shall be denied an opportunity to obtain or retain employment because he is or is not a member of a labor organization. To enforce this policy North Carolina and Nebraska employers are also forbidden to enter into contracts or agreements obligating themselves to exclude persons from employment because they are or are not labor union members.

These state laws were given timely challenge in North Carolina and Nebraska courts on the ground that insofar as they attempt to protect non-union members from discrimination, the laws are in violation of rights guaranteed employers, unions, and their members by the United States Constitution. The state laws were challenged as violations of the right of freedom of speech, of assembly and of petition guaranteed unions and their members by "the First Amendment and protected against invasion by the state under the Fourteenth Amendment." It was further contended that the state laws impaired the obligations of existing contracts in violation of Art. I, § 10, of the United States Constitution and deprived the appellant unions and employers of equal protection and due process of law guaranteed against state invasion by the Fourteenth Amendment. All of these contentions were rejected by the State Supreme Courts and the cases are here on appeal under § 237 of the Judicial Code, 28 U. S. C. § 344, [now § 1257]. The substantial identity of the questions raised in the two cases prompted us to set them for argument together and for the same reason we now consider the cases in a single opinion.

First. It is contended that these state laws abridge the freedom of speech and the opportunities of unions and their members "peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances." Under the state policy adopted by these laws, employers must, other considerations being equal, give equal opportunities for remunerative work to union and non-union members without discrimination against either. In order to achieve this objective of equal opportunity for the two groups, employers are forbidden to make contracts which would obligate them to hire or keep none but union members. Nothing in the language of the laws indicates a purpose to prohibit speech, assembly, or petition. Precisely what these state laws do is to forbid employers acting alone or in concert with labor organizations deliberately to restrict employment to none but union members. * * *

We deem it unnecessary to elaborate the numerous reasons for our rejection of this contention of appellants. Nor need we appraise or analyze with particularity the rather startling ideas suggested to support some of the premises on which appellants' conclusions rest. There cannot be wrung from a constitutional right of workers to assemble to discuss improvement of their own working standards, a further constitutional right to drive from remunerative employment all other persons who will not, or cannot, participate in union assemblies. The constitutional right of workers to assemble, to discuss and formulate plans for furthering their own self interest in jobs cannot be construed as a constitutional guarantee that none shall get and hold jobs except those who will join in the assembly or will agree to abide by the assembly's plans. For where conduct affects the interests of other individuals and the general public, the legality of that conduct must be measured by whether the conduct conforms to valid law, even though the conduct is engaged in pursuant to plans of an assembly.

Second. There is a suggestion though not elaborated in briefs that these state laws conflict with Art. I, § 10, of the United States Constitution, insofar as they impair the obligation of contracts made prior to their enactment. That this contention is without merit is now too clearly established to require discussion. * * *

Third. It is contended that the North Carolina and Nebraska laws deny unions and their members equal protection of the laws and thus offend the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Because the outlawed contracts are a useful incentive to the growth of union membership, it is said that these laws weaken the bargaining power of unions and correspondingly strengthen the power of employers. This may be true. But there are other matters to be considered. The state laws also make it impossible for an employer to make contracts with company unions which obligate the employer to refuse jobs to union members. In this respect, these state laws protect the employment opportunities of members of independent unions. See Wallace Corporation v. National Labor Relations Board, 323 U. S. 248. This circumstance alone, without regard to others that need not be mentioned, is sufficient to support the state laws against a charge that they deny equal protection to unions as against employers and non-union workers.

It is also argued that the state laws do not provide protection for union members equal to that provided for non-union members. But in identical language these state laws forbid employers to discriminate against union and non-union members. Nebraska and North Carolina thus command equal employment opportunities for both groups of workers. It is precisely because these state laws command equal opportunities for both groups that appellants argue that the constitutionally protected rights of assembly and due process have been violated. For the constitutional protections surrounding these rights are relied on by appellants to support a contention that the Federal Constitution guarantees greater employment rights to union members than to non-union members. This claim of appellants is itself a refutation of the contention that the Nebraska and North Carolina laws fail to afford protection to union members equal to the protection afforded non-union workers.

Fourth. It is contended that these state laws deprive appellants of their liberty without due process of law in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. Appellants argue that the laws are specifically designed to deprive all persons within the two states of "liberty" (1) to refuse to hire or retain any person in employment because he is or is not a union member, and (2) to make a contract or agreement to engage in such employment discrimination against union or non-union members.

Much of appellants' argument here seeks to establish that due process of law is denied employees and union men by that part of these state laws that forbids them to make contracts with the employer obligating him to refuse to hire or retain non-union workers. But that part of these laws does no more than provide a method to aid enforcement of the heart of the laws, namely, their command that employers must not discriminate against either union or non-union members because they are such. If the states have constitutional power to ban such discrimination by law, they also have power to ban contracts which if performed would bring about the prohibited discrimination. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 549, 570, 571.

Many cases are cited by appellants in which this Court has said that in some instances the due process clause protects the liberty of persons to make contracts. But none of these cases, even those according the broadest constitutional protection to the making of contracts, ever went so far as to indicate that the due process clause bars a state from prohibiting contracts to engage in conduct banned by a valid state law. So here, if the provisions in the state laws against employer discrimination are valid, it follows that the contract prohibition also is valid. Bayside

Fish Flour Co. v. Gentry, 297 U. S. 422, 427. And see Sage v. Hampe, 235 U. S. 99, 104, 105. We therefore turn to the decisive question under the due process contention, which is: Does the due process clause forbid a state to pass laws clearly designed to safeguard the opportunity of non-union members to get and hold jobs, free from discrimination against them because they are non-union workers?

There was a period in which labor union members who wanted to get and hold jobs were the victims of widespread employer discrimination practices. Contracts between employers and their employees were used by employers to accomplish this anti-union employment discrimination. Before hiring workers, employers required them to sign agreements stating that the workers were not and would not become labor union members. Such anti-union practices were so obnoxious to workers that they gave these required agreements the name of "yellow dog contracts." This hostility of workers also prompted passage of state and federal laws to ban employer discrimination against union members and to outlaw yellow dog contracts.

In 1907 this Court in Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, considered the federal law which prohibited discrimination against union workers. Adair, an agent of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, had been indicted and convicted for having discharged Coppage, an employee of the railroad, because Coppage was a member of the Order of Locomotive Firemen. This Court there held, over the dissents of Justices McKenna and Holmes, that the railroad, because of the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment, had a constitutional right to discriminate against union members and could therefore do so through use of yellow dog contracts. The chief reliance for this holding was Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, which had invalidated a New York law prescribing maximum hours for work in bakeries. This Court had found support for its Lochner holding in what had been said in Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, a case on which appellants here strongly rely. There were strong dissents in the Adair and Lochner cases.

In 1914 this Court reaffirmed the principles of the Adair case in Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, again over strong dissents, and held that a Kansas statute outlawing yellow dog contracts denied employers and employees a liberty to fix terms of employment. For this reason the law was held invalid under the due process clause.

The Allgeyer-Lochner-Adair-Coppage constitutional doctrine was for some years followed by this Court. It was used to strike down laws fixing minimum wages and maximum hours in employment, laws fixing prices, and laws regulating business activities. See cases cited in Olsen v. Nebraska ex rel. Western Reference & Bond Ass'n, 313 U. S. 236, 244-246, and Osborn v. Ozlin, 310 U. S. 53, 66, 67. And the same constitutional philosophy was faithfully adhered to in Adams v. Tanner, 244 U. S. 590, a case strongly pressed upon us by appellants. In Adams

v. Tanner, supra, this Court with four justices dissenting struck down a state law absolutely prohibiting maintenance of private employment agencies. The majority found that such businesses were highly beneficial to the public and upon this conclusion held that the state was without power to proscribe them. Our holding and opinion in Olsen v. Nebraska ex rel. Western Reference & Bond Ass'n, supra, clearly undermined Adams v. Tanner:

Appellants also rely heavily on certain language used in this Court's opinion in Chas. Wolff Packing Co. v. Court of Industrial Relations of Kansas, 262 U. S. 522. In that case the Court invalidated a state law which in part provided a method for a state agency to fix wages and hours. See Chas. Wolff Packing Co. v. Court of Industrial Relations of Kansas, 267 U. S. 552, 565. In invalidating this part of the state act, this Court construed the due process clause as forbidding legislation to fix hours and wages, or to fix prices of products. The Court also relied on a distinction between businesses according to whether they were or were not "clothed with a public interest." [262 U. S. 522.] This latter distinction was rejected in Nebbia v. New York, 291 U. S. 502. That the due process clause does not ban legislative power to fix prices, wages and hours as was assumed in the Wolff case, was settled as to price fixing in the Nebbia and Olsen Cases. That wages and hours can be fixed by law is no longer doubted since West Coast Hotel Co. v. Parrish, 300 U. S. 379; United States v. Darby, 312 U. S. 100, 125; Phelps Dodge Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 313 U. S. 177, 187.

This Court beginning at least as early as 1934, when the Nebbia case was decided, has steadily rejected the due process philosophy enunciated in the Adair-Coppage line of cases. In doing so it has consciously returned closer and closer to the earlier constitutional principle that states have power to legislate against what are found to be injurious practices in their internal commercial and business affairs, so long as their laws do not run afoul of some specific federal constitutional prohibition, or of some valid federal law. * * * Under this constitutional doctrine the due process clause is no longer to be so broadly construed that the Congress and state legislatures are put in a strait jacket when they attempt to suppress business and industrial conditions which they regard as offensive to the public welfare.

Appellants now ask us to return, at least in part, to the due process philosophy that has been deliberately discarded. Claiming that the Federal Constitution itself affords protection for union members against discrimination, they nevertheless assert that the same Constitution forbids a state from providing the same protection for non-union members. Just as we have held that the due process clause erects no obstacle to block legislative protection of union members, we now hold that legislative protection can be afforded non-union workers. Affirmed.

[MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER and MR. JUSTICE RUTLEDGE wrote separate concurring opinions.]

NOTES

1. In American Federation of Labor v. American Sash & Door Co., 335 U. S. 538, 93 L. ed. 222, 69 Sup. Ct. 258, 6 A. L. R. (2d) 481 (1949), decided on the same day as the principal case, a similar provision in the Constitution of Arizona prohibiting discrimination against non-union workers but not expressly prohibiting discrimination against union workers, was upheld against attacks grounded on the due process and equal protection guaranties. In answer to the contention that the constitutional amendment violated the equal protection clause, the court pointed to the fact that Arizona had previously enacted "anti-yellow-dog contract" legislation making such agreements as a condition of getting or holding a job void and unenforceable. The court said: "We are satisfied that Arizona has attempted both in the anti-yellow-dog contract law and in the anti-discrimination constitutional amendment to strike at what were considered evils, to strike where those evils were most felt, and to strike in a manner that would effectively suppress the evils." Mr. Justice Murphy dissented.

2. The Railway Labor Act of 1926, designed to prevent the interruption of interstate commerce by labor disputes and strikes on the railroads, provided for the voluntary submission of these disputes to arbitration, and, in the event of failure of adjustment and threatened interruption of essential transportation service, for a Board of Mediation and a temporary suspension of the right of either party to the dispute to change the existing status. Representatives for the purposes of the act were to be designated by employers and employees "without interference, influence, or coercion exercised by either party over the self-organization or designation of representatives by the other." In sustaining an injunction to prevent the violation of this latter provision, the court said: "It has long been recognized that employees are entitled to organize for the purpose of securing the redress of grievances and to promote agreements with employers relating to rates of pay and conditions of work. * * * Congress was not required to ignore this right of the employees but could safeguard it and seek to make their appropriate collective action an instrument of peace rather than of strife. Such collective action would be a mockery if representation were made futile by interferences with freedom of choice. Thus the prohibition by Congress of interference with the selection of representatives for the purpose of negotiation and conference between employers and employees, instead of being an invasion of the constitutional rights of either, was based on the recognition of the rights of both." Texas & New Orleans R. Co. v. Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, 281 U. S. 548, 74 L. ed. 1034, 50 Sup. Ct. 427 (1930).

3. In National Labor Relations Board v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation, 301 U. S. 1, 81 L. ed. 893, 57 Sup. Ct. 615, 108 A. L. R. 1352 (1937) the Supreme Court sustained the National Labor Relations Act of 1935, which applied to employment in interstate and foreign commerce and to employment affecting such commerce. The act provided (§7) that "employees shall have the right to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in concerted activities, for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection." It also provided (§8) that it should be "an unfair labor practice" for an employer "to interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed," or "to dominate or interfere with the formation or administration of any labor organization," or "by discrimination in regard to hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment to encourage or discourage membership in any labor organization." The National Labor Relations

Board, the adjudicating agency for the administration of the act, found that the steel company had engaged in unfair labor practices and ordered it to reinstate certain discharged employees and pay them wages for the time lost. The court sustained this order as one authorized by the statute. In holding that the statute as thus construed and applied did not violate the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment, the court said that the cases of Adair v. United States and Coppage v. Kansas (discussed in the principal case above) "are inapplicable to cases of this character." Any doubt as to the meaning of this statement was cleared up in Phelps Dodge Corporation v. National Labor Relations Board, 313 U. S. 177, 85 L. ed. 1271, 61 Sup. Ct. 845, 133 A. L. R. 1217 (1941), where the court, in holding that the statute gave the National Labor Relations Board power to order the reemployment of certain striking employees after a strike had terminated, said: "We have already recognized the power of Congress to deny an employer the freedom to discriminate in discharging. National Labor Relations Board v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation, 301 U. S. 1. * * * The course of decisions in this court since Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, and Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, have completely sapped these cases of their authority."

From the time of the enactment of the National Labor Relations Act it was of course obvious that the so-called "yellow-dog contracts" involved in the Adair and Coppage cases were violative of that Act, in situations where the Act governed. The enforcement of such contracts in the federal courts was forbidden by the Norris-La Guardia Anti-Injunction Act of 1932 (29 U. S. C. §§ 101 et seq.). When the constitutionality of the National Labor Relations Act was upheld in the 1937 decision, it was perfectly clear that the philosophy underlying the Adair and Coppage cases no longer represented the view of the court. The statement in the Phelps Dodge opinion was a belated acknowledgment of that fact.

4. In Day-Brite Lighting, Inc. v. Missouri, 342 U. S. 421, 96 L. ed. 469, 72 Sup. Ct. 405 (1952) the court sustained the constitutionality of a Missouri statute providing that an employee may absent himself from employment for four hours on election day between the opening and closing of the polls without penalty or deduction of wages.

Section 4.—The Guaranties of Free Speech, Press and Assembly.

GITLOW v. NEW YORK.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1925.
268 U. S. 652, 69 L. ed. 1138, 45 Sup. Ct. 625.

MR. JUSTICE SANFORD delivered the opinion of the Court.

Benjamin Gitlow was indicted in the Supreme Court of New York, with three others, for the statutory crime of criminal anarchy. New York Penal Laws, §§ 160, 161. He was separately tried, convicted, and sentenced to imprisonment. The judgment was affirmed by the Appellate Division and by the Court of Appeals. 195 App. Div. 773; 234 N. Y. 132 and 539. The case is here on writ of error to the Supreme Court, to which the record was remitted. 260 U. S. 703.

The contention here is that the statute, by its terms and as applied in this case, is repugnant to the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Its material provisions are:

"§ 160. Criminal anarchy defined. Criminal anarchy is the doctrine that organized government should be overthrown by force or violence, or by assassination of the executive head or of any of the executive officials of government, or by any unlawful means. The advocacy of such doctrine either by word of mouth or writing is a felony.

"§ 161. Advocacy of criminal anarchy. Any person who:

"1. By word of mouth or writing advocates, advises or teaches the duty, necessity or propriety of overthrowing or overturning organized government by force or violence, or by assassination of the executive head or of any of the executive officials of government, or by any unlawful means; or,

"2. Prints, publishes, edits, issues or knowingly circulates, sells, distributes or publicly displays any book, paper, document, or written or printed matter in any form, containing or advocating, advising or teaching the doctrine that organized government should be overthrown by force, violence or any unlawful means * * *.

"Is guilty of a felony and punishable" by imprisonment or fine, or both.

The indictment was in two counts. The first charged that the defendant had advocated, advised and taught the duty, necessity and propriety of overthrowing and overturning organized government by force, violence and unlawful means, by certain writings therein set forth entitled "The Left Wing Manifesto"; the second that he had printed, published and knowingly circulated and distributed a certain paper called "The Revolutionary Age," containing the writings set forth in the first count advocating, advising and teaching the doctrine that organized government should be overthrown by force, violence and unlawful means.

The following facts were established on the trial by undisputed evidence and admissions: The defendant is a member of the Left Wing Section of the Socialist Party, a dissenting branch or faction of that party formed in opposition to its dominant policy of "moderate Socialism." Membership in both is open to aliens as well as citizens. The Left Wing Section was organized nationally at a conference in New York City in June, 1919, attended by ninety delegates from twenty different states. The conference elected a National Council, of which the defendant was a member, and left to it the adoption of a "Manifesto." This was published in The Revolutionary Age, the official organ of the Left Wing. The defendant was on the board of managers of the paper and was its business manager. He arranged for the printing of the paper and took to the printer the manuscript of the first issue which contained the Left Wing Manifesto, and also a Communist Program and a Program of the Left Wing that had been adopted by the conference. Sixteen thousand copies were printed, which were delivered at the premises in New York City used as the office of the Revolutionary Age and the headquarters of the Left Wing, and occupied by the defendant and other officials. These copies were paid for by the defendant, as business manager of the paper. Employees at this office wrapped and mailed out copies of the paper under the defendant's direction; and copies were sold from this office. It was admitted that the defendant signed a card subscribing to the Manifesto and Program of the Left Wing, which all applicants were required to sign before being admitted to membership; that he went to different parts of the State to speak to branches of the Socialist Party about the principles of the Left Wing and advocated their adoption; and that he was responsible for the Manifesto as it appeared, that "he knew of the publication, in a general way and he knew of its publication afterwards, and is responsible for the circulation."

There was no evidence of any effect resulting from the publication and circulation of the Manifesto. [The substance of the Manifesto may be summarized as follows:]

Coupled with a review of the rise of Socialism, it condemned the dominant "moderate Socialism" for its recognition of the necessity of the democratic parliamentary state; repudiated its policy of introducing Socialism by legislative measures; and advocated, in plain and unequivocal language, the necessity of accomplishing the "Communist Revolution" by a militant and "revolutionary Socialism," based on "the class struggle" and mobilizing the "power of the proletariat in action," through mass industrial revolts developing into mass political strikes and "revolutionary mass action," for the purpose of conquering and destroying the parliamentary state and establishing in its place, through a "revolutionary dictatorship of the proletariat," the system of Communist Socialism. The then recent strikes in Seattle and Winnipeg were cited as instances of a development already verging on revolutionary action and suggestive of proletarian dictatorship, in which the strike-workers were "trying to usurp the functions of municipal government"; and revolutionary Socialism, it was urged, must use these mass industrial revolts to broaden the strike, make it general and militant, and develop it into mass political strikes and revolutionary mass action for the annihilation of the parliamentary state. * * *

The defendant's counsel submitted two requests to charge which embodied in substance the statement that to constitute criminal anarchy within the meaning of the statute it was necessary that the language used or published should advocate, teach or advise the duty, necessity or propriety of doing "some definite or immediate act or acts" of force, violence or unlawfulness directed toward the overthrowing of organized government. These were denied further than had been charged. Two other requests to charge embodied in substance the statement that to constitute guilt the language used or published must be "reasonably and ordinarily calculated to incite certain persons" to acts of force, violence or unlawfulness, with the object of overthrowing organized government. These were also denied. * * *

The sole contention here is, essentially, that as there was no evidence of any concrete result flowing from the publication of the Manifesto or of circumstances showing the likelihood of such a result, that the statute as construed and applied by the trial court penalizes the mere utterance, as such, of "doctrine" having no quality of incitement, without regard either to the circumstances of its utterance or to the likelihood of unlawful sequences; and that, as the exercise of the right of free expression with relation to government is only punishable "in circumstances involving likelihood of substantive evil," the statute contravenes the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The argument in support of this contention rests primarily upon the following propositions: 1st, That the "liberty" protected by the Fourteenth Amendment includes the liberty of speech and of the press; and 2nd, That while liberty of expression "is not absolute," it may be restrained "only in circumstances where its exercise bears a causal relation with some substantive evil, consummated, attempted or likely," and as the statute "takes no account of circumstances," it unduly restrains this liberty and is therefore unconstitutional.

The precise question presented, and the only question which we can consider under this writ of error, then is, whether the statute, as construed and applied in this case by the state courts, deprived the defendant of his liberty of expression in violation of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The statute does not penalize the utterance or publication of abstract "doctrine" or academic discussion having no quality of incitement to any concrete action. It is not aimed against mere historical or philosophical essays. It does not restrain the advocacy of changes in the form of government by constitutional and lawful means. What it prohibits is language advocating, advising or teaching the overthrow of organized government by unlawful means. These words imply urging to action. * * *

The Manifesto, plainly, is neither the statement of abstract doctrine nor, as suggested by counsel, mere prediction that industrial disturbances and revolutionary mass strikes will result spontaneously in an inevitable process of evolution in the economic system. It advocates and urges in fervent language mass action which shall progressively foment industrial disturbances and through political mass strikes and revolutionary mass action overthrow and destroy organized parliamentary government. It concludes with a call to action in these words:

"The proletariat revolution and the Communist reconstruction of society—the struggle for these—is now indispensable. * * * The Communist International calls the proletariat of the world to the final struggle!" This is not the expression of philosophical abstraction, the mere prediction of future events; it is the language of direct incitement.

The means advocated for bringing about the destruction of organized parliamentary government, namely, mass industrial revolts usurping the functions of municipal government, political mass strikes directed against the parliamentary state, and revolutionary mass action for its final destruction, necessarily imply the use of force and violence, and in their essential nature are inherently unlawful in a constitutional government of law and order. That the jury were warranted in finding that the Manifesto advocated not merely the abstract doctrine of overthrowing organized government by force, violence and unlawful means, but action to that end, is clear.

For present purposes we may and do assume that freedom of speech and of the press—which are protected by the First Amendment from abridgment by Congress—are among the fundamental personal rights and “liberties” protected by the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment from impairment by the states. We do not regard the incidental statement in Prudential Ins. Co. v. Cheek, 259 U. S. 530, 543, that the Fourteenth Amendment imposes no restrictions on the states concerning freedom of speech, as determinative of this question.

It is a fundamental principle, long established, that the freedom of speech and of the press which is secured by the Constitution, does not confer an absolute right to speak or publish, without responsibility, whatever one may choose, or an unrestricted and unbridled license that gives immunity for every possible use of language and prevents the punishment of those who abuse this freedom. 2 Story on the Constitution, 5th ed., § 1580, p. 634; Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U. S. 275, 281; Patterson v. Colorado, 205 U. S. 454, 462; Fox v. Washington, 236 U. S. 273, 276; Schenck v. United States, 249 U. S. 47, 52; Frohwerk v. United States, 249 U. S. 204, 206; Debs v. United States, 249 U. S. 211, 213; Schaefer v. United States, 251 U. S. 466, 474; Gilbert v. Minnesota, 254 U. S. 325, 332; Warren v. United States, 183 Fed. 718, 721. Reasonably limited, it was said by Story in the passage cited, this freedom is an inestimable privilege in a free government; without such limitation, it might become the scourge of the republic.

That a state in the exercise of its police power may punish those who abuse this freedom by utterances inimical to the public welfare, tending to corrupt public morals, incite to crime, or disturb the public peace, is not open to question. * * *

By enacting the present statute the state has determined, through its legislative body, that utterances advocating the overthrow of organized government by force, violence and unlawful means, are so inimical to the general welfare and involve such danger of substantive evil that they may be penalized in the exercise of its police power. That determination must be given great weight. * * * That utterances inciting to the overthrow of organized government by unlawful means, present a sufficient danger of substantive evil to bring their punishment within the range of legislative discretion, is clear. Such utterances, by their very nature, involve danger to the public peace and to the security of the state. They threaten breaches of the peace and ultimate revolution. And the immediate danger is none the less real and substantial, because the effect of a given utterance cannot be accurately foreseen. The state cannot reasonably be required to measure the danger from every such utterance in the nice balance of a jeweler's scale. A single revolutionary spark may kindle a fire that, smouldering for a time, may burst into a sweeping and destructive conflagration. It cannot be said that the state is acting arbitrarily or unreasonably when in the exercise of its judgment as to the measures necessary to protect the public peace and safety, it seeks to extinguish the spark without waiting until it has enkindled the flame or blazed into the conflagration. It cannot reasonably be required to defer the adoption of measures for its own peace and safety until the revolutionary utterances lead to actual disturbances of the public peace or imminent and immediate danger of its own destruction; but it may, in the exercise of its judgment, suppress the threatened danger in its incipency. * * *

We cannot hold that the present statute is an arbitrary or unreasonable exercise of the police power of the state unwarrantably infringing the freedom of speech or press; and we must and do sustain its constitutionality.

This being so it may be applied to every utterance—not too trivial to be beneath the notice of the law—which is of such a character and used with such intent and purpose as to bring it within the prohibition of the statute. This principle is illustrated in Fox v. Washington, supra, p. 277; Abrams v. United States, 250 U. S. 616, 624; Schaefer v. United States, supra, pp. 479, 480; Pierce v. United States, 252 U. S. 239, 250, 251; and Gilbert v. Minnesota, supra, p. 333. In other words, when the legislative body has determined generally, in the constitutional exercise of its discretion, that utterances of a certain kind involve such danger of substantive evil that they may be punished, the question whether any specific utterance coming within the prohibited class is likely, in and of itself, to bring about the substantive evil, is not open to consideration. It is sufficient that the statute itself be constitutional and that the use of the language comes within its prohibition.

It is clear that the question in such cases is entirely different from that involved in those cases where the statute merely prohibits certain acts involving the danger of substantive evil, without any reference to language itself, and it is sought to apply its provisions to language used by the defendant for the purpose of bringing about the prohibited results. There, if it be contended that the statute cannot be applied to the language used by the defendant because of its protection by the freedom of speech or press, it must necessarily be found, as an original question, without any previous determination by the legislative body, whether the specific language used involved such likelihood of bringing about the substantive evil as to deprive it of the constitutional protection. In such case it has been held that the general provisions of the statute may be constitutionally applied to the specific utterance of the defendant if its natural tendency and probable effect was to bring about the substantive evil which the legislative body might prevent. Schenck v. United States, supra, p. 51; Debs v. United States, supra, pp. 215, 216. And the general statement in the Schenck Case, p. 52, that the "question in every case is whether the words used are used in such circumstances and are of such a nature as to create a clear and present danger that they will bring about the substantive evils,"—upon which great reliance is placed in the defendant's argument—was manifestly intended, as shown by the context, to apply only in cases of this class, and has no application to those like the present, where the legislative body itself has previously determined the danger of substantive evil arising from utterances of a specified character.

The defendant's brief does not separately discuss any of the rulings of the trial court. It is only necessary to say that, applying the general rules already stated, we find that none of them involved any invasion of the constitutional rights of the defendant. It was not necessary, within the meaning of the statute, that the defendant should have advocated "some definite or immediate act or acts" of force, violence or unlawfulness. It was sufficient if such acts were advocated in general terms; and it was not essential that their immediate execution should have been advocated. Nor was it necessary that the language should have been "reasonably and ordinarily calculated to incite certain persons" to acts of force, violence or unlawfulness. The advocacy need not be addressed to specific persons. Thus, the publication and circulation of a newspaper article may be an encouragement or endeavor to persuade to murder, although not addressed to any person in particular. Queen v. Most, L. R. 7 Q. B. D. 244. * * *

Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE HOLMES, dissenting.

MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS and I are of opinion that this judgment should be reversed. The general principle of free speech, it seems to me, must be taken to be included in the Fourteenth Amendment, in view of the scope that has been given to the word "liberty" as there used, although perhaps it may be accepted with a somewhat larger latitude of interpretation than is allowed to Congress by the sweeping language that governs or ought to govern the laws of the United States. If I am right, then I think that the criterion sanctioned by the full court in Schenck v. United States, 249 U. S. 47, 52, applies. "The question in every case is whether the words used are used in such circumstances and are of such a nature as to create a clear and present danger that they will bring about the substantive evils that [the state] has a right to prevent." It is true that in my opinion this criterion was departed from in Abrams v. United States, 250 U. S. 616, but the convictions that I expressed in that case are too deep for it to be possible for me as yet to believe that it and Schaefer v. United States, 251 U. S. 466, have settled the law. If what I think the correct test is applied, it is manifest that there was no present danger of an attempt to overthrow the government by force on the part of the admittedly small minority who shared the defendant's views. It is said that this manifesto was more than a theory, that it was an incitement. Every idea is an incitement. It offers itself for belief and if believed it is acted on unless some other belief outweighs it or some failure of energy stifles the movement at its birth. The only difference between the expression of an opinion and an incitement in the narrower sense is the speaker's enthusiasm for the result. Eloquence may set fire to reason. But whatever may be thought of the redundant discourse before us it had no chance of starting a present conflagration. If in the long run the beliefs expressed in proletarian dictatorship are destined to be accepted by the dominant forces of the community, the only meaning of free speech is that they should be given their chance and have their way.

If the publication of this document had been laid as an attempt to induce an uprising against government at once and not at some indefinite time in the future it would have presented a different question. The object would have been one with which the law might deal, subject to the doubt whether there was any danger that the publication could produce any result, or in other words, whether it was not futile and too remote from possible consequences. But the indictment alleges the publication and nothing more.

NOTES

1. In Patterson v. Colorado, 205 U. S. 454, 51 L. ed. 879, 27 Sup. Ct. 556, 10 Ann. Cas. 689 (1907) and in Gilbert v. Minnesota, 254 U. S. 325, 65 L. ed. 287, 41 Sup. Ct. 125 (1920) the Supreme Court expressly declined to decide whether the Constitution of the United States imposed any limitation on a state in restricting speech. In Prudential Insurance Co. v. Cheek, 259 U. S. 530, 66 L. ed. 1044, 42 Sup. Ct. 516, 27 A. L. R. 27 (1922), Mr. Justice Pitney, for the court, said: "Neither the Fourteenth Amendment nor any other provision of the Constitution of the United States imposes on the states any restriction about 'freedom of speech' * * *."

2. The Schenck, Frohwerk and Debs cases, cited in the opinion in the principal case, were unsuccessful appeals from convictions for violating the Espionage Act of 1917, which forbade (§ 3) the wilful making of false statements with intent to interfere with military operations, the wilful causing of or attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, or mutiny, in the military forces, or the wilful obstruction of the recruiting or enlistment service. The philosophical approach of Justices Holmes and Brandeis to problems involved in governmental restriction of freedom of speech are set forth eloquently in their respective dissenting opinions in Abrams v. United States, 250 U. S. 616, 63 L. ed. 1173, 40 Sup. Ct. 17 (1919), and Schaefer v. United States, 251 U. S. 466, 64 L. ed. 360, 40 Sup. Ct. 259 (1920).

3. The most valuable work on the issues raised in the free speech cases is Chafee, Free Speech in the United States (1941). For a careful analysis of many of these cases, see the several articles by Green, Liberty Under the Fourteenth Amendment, 27 Wash. Univ. L. Q. 497 (1942); 28 Wash. Univ. L. Q. 251 (1943); 43 Mich. L. Rev. 437 (1944).

WHITNEY v. CALIFORNIA.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1927.
274 U. S. 357, 71 L. ed. 1095, 47 Sup. Ct. 641.

MR. JUSTICE SANFORD delivered the opinion of the Court:

By a criminal information filed in the superior court of Alameda County, California, the plaintiff in error was charged, in five counts, with violations of the Criminal Syndicalism Act of that state. Statutes 1919, chap. 188, p. 281. She was tried, convicted on the first count, and sentenced to imprisonment. The judgment was affirmed by the district court of appeal. 57 Cal. App. 449, 207 Pac. 698. Her petition to have the case heard by the Supreme Court was denied. Id. 453. And the case was brought here on a writ of error which was allowed by the presiding justice of the court of appeal, the highest court of the state in which a decision could be had. Judicial Code, § 237. * * *

The pertinent provisions of the Criminal Syndicalism Act are:

"Section 1. The term 'criminal syndicalism' as used in this act is hereby defined as any doctrine or precept advocating, teaching or aiding and abetting the commission of crime, sabotage (which word is hereby defined as meaning wilful and malicious physical damage or injury to physical property), or unlawful acts of force and violence or unlawful methods of terrorism as a means of accomplishing a change in industrial ownership or control, or effecting any political change.

"Sec. 2. Any person who: * * * 4. Organizes or assists in organizing, or is or knowingly becomes a member of, any organization, society, group or assemblage of persons organized or assembled to advocate, teach or aid and abet criminal syndicalism; * * *

"Is guilty of a felony and punishable by imprisonment."

The first count of the information, on which the conviction was had, charged that on or about November 28, 1919, in Alameda County, the defendant, in violation of the Criminal Syndicalism Act, "did then and there unlawfully, wilfully, wrongfully, deliberately and feloniously organize and assist in organizing, and was, is, and knowingly became a member of an organization, society, group and assemblage of persons organized and assembled to advocate, teach, aid and abet criminal syndicalism." * * *

1. While it is not denied that the evidence warranted the jury in finding that the defendant became a member of and assisted in organizing the Communist Labor Party of California, and that this was organized to advocate, teach, aid or abet criminal syndicalism as defined by the act, it is urged that the act, as here construed and applied, deprived the defendant of her liberty without due process of law in that it has made her action in attending the Oakland convention unlawful by reason of "a subsequent event brought about against her will, by the agency of others," with no showing of a specific intent on her part to join in the forbidden purpose of the association, and merely because, by reason of a lack of "prophetic" understanding, she failed to foresee the quality that others would give to the convention. The argument is, in effect, that the character of the state organization could not be forecast when she attended the convention; that she had no purpose of helping to create an instrument of terrorism and violence; that she "took part in formulating and presenting to the convention a resolution which, if adopted, would have committed the new organization to a legitimate policy of political reform by the use of the ballot;" that it was not until after the majority of the convention turned out to be "contrary minded, and other less temperate policies prevailed" that the convention could have taken on the character of criminal syndicalism; and that, as this was done over her protest, her mere presence in the convention, however violent the opinions expressed therein, could not thereby become a crime. This contention, while advanced in the form of a constitutional objection to the act, is in effect nothing more than an effort to review the weight of the evidence for the purpose of showing that the defendant did not join and assist in organizing the Communist Labor Party of California with a knowledge of its unlawful character and purpose. This question, which is foreclosed by the verdict of the jury, —sustained by the court of appeal over the specific objection that it was not supported by the evidence,—is one of fact merely which is not open to review in this court, involving as it does no constitutional question whatever. * * *

4. Nor is the Syndicalism Act as applied in this case repugnant to the due process clause as a restraint of the rights of free speech, assembly, and association.

That the freedom of speech which is secured by the Constitution does not confer an absolute right to speak, without responsibility, whatever one may choose, or an unrestricted and unbridled license giving immunity for every possible use of language and preventing the punishment of those who abuse this freedom; and that a state in the exercise of its police power may punish those who abuse this freedom by utterances inimical to the public welfare, tending to incite to crime, disturb the public peace, or endanger the foundations of organized government and threaten its overthrow by unlawful means, is not open to question. Gitlow v. New York, 268 U. S. 652, 666-668, and cases cited.

By enacting the provisions of the Syndicalism Act the state has declared, through its legislative body, that to knowingly be or become a member of or assist in organizing an association to advocate, teach or aid and abet the commission of crimes or unlawful acts of force, violence or terrorism as a means of accomplishing industrial or political changes, involves such danger to the public peace and the security of the state, that these acts should be penalized in the exercise of its police power. That determination must be given great weight. Every presumption is to be indulged in favor of the validity of the statute, Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 661, and it may not be declared unconstitutional unless it is an arbitrary or unreasonable attempt to exercise the authority vested in the state in the public interest. Great Northern Railway v. Clara City, 246 U. S. 434, 439.

The essence of the offense denounced by the act is the combining with others in an association for the accomplishment of the desired ends through the advocacy and use of criminal and unlawful methods. It partakes of the nature of a criminal conspiracy. See People v. Steelik, 187 Cal. 361, 376. That such united and joint action involves even greater danger to the public peace and security than the isolated utterances and acts of individuals is clear. We cannot hold that, as here applied, the act is an unreasonable or arbitrary exercise of the police power of the State, unwarrantably infringing any right of free speech, assembly or association, or that those persons are protected from punishment by the due process clause who abuse such rights by joining and furthering an organization thus menacing the peace and welfare of the state.

We find no repugnancy in the Syndicalism Act as applied in this case to either the due process or equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment on any of the grounds upon which its validity has been here challenged.

The order dismissing the writ of error will be vacated and set aside, and the judgment of the Court of Appeal Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS (concurring.) Miss Whitney was convicted of the felony of assisting in organizing, in the year 1919, the Communist Labor Party of California, of being a member of it, and of assembling with it. These acts are held to constitute a crime, because the party was formed to teach criminal syndicalism. The statute which made these acts a crime restricted the right of free speech and of assembly theretofore existing. The claim is that the statute, as applied, denied to Miss Whitney the liberty guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment.

The felony which the statute created is a crime very unlike the old felony of conspiracy or the old misdemeanor of unlawful assembly. The mere act of assisting in forming a society for teaching syndicalism, of becoming a member of it, or assembling with others for that purpose is given the dynamic quality of crime. There is guilt although the society may not contemplate immediate promulgation of the doctrine. Thus the accused is to be punished, not for contempt, incitement or conspiracy, but for a step in preparation, which, if it threatens the public order at all, does so only remotely. The novelty in the prohibition introduced is that the statute aims, not at the practice of criminal syndicalism, nor even directly at the preaching of it, but at association with those who propose to preach it.

Despite arguments to the contrary which had seemed to me persuasive, it is settled that the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment applies to matters of substantive law as well as to matters of procedure. Thus all fundamental rights comprised within the term liberty are protected by the federal Constitution from invasion by the states. The right of free speech, the right to teach and the right of assembly are, of course, fundamental rights. See Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U. S. 390; Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U. S. 510; Gitlow v. New York, 268 U. S. 652, 666; Farrington v. Tokushige, 273 U. S. 284. These may not be denied or abridged. But, although the rights of free speech and assembly are fundamental, they are not in their nature absolute. Their exercise is subject to restriction, if the particular restriction proposed is required in order to protect the state from destruction or from serious injury, political, economic or moral. That the necessity which is essential to a valid restriction does not exist unless speech would produce, or is intended to produce, a clear and imminent danger of some substantive evil which the state constitutionally may seek to prevent has been settled. See Schenck v. United States, 249 U. S. 47, 52.

It is said to be the function of the legislature to determine whether at a particular time and under the particular circumstances the formation of, or assembly with, a society organized to advocate criminal syndicalism constitutes a clear and present danger of substantive evil; and that by enacting the law here in question the legislature of California determined that question in the affirmative. Compare Gitlow v. New York, 268 U. S. 652, 668, 671. The legislature must obviously decide, in the first instance, whether a danger exists which calls for a particular protective measure. But where a statute is valid only in case certain conditions exist, the enactment of the statute cannot alone establish the facts which are essential to its validity. Prohibitory legislation has repeatedly been held invalid, because unnecessary, where the denial of liberty involved was that of engaging in a particular business. The powers of the courts to strike down an offending law are no less when the interests involved are not property rights, but the fundamental personal rights of free speech and assembly.

This Court has not yet fixed the standard by which to determine when a danger shall be deemed clear; how remote the danger may be and yet be deemed present; and what degree of evil shall be deemed sufficiently substantial to justify resort to abridgment of free speech and assembly as the means of protection. To reach sound conclusions on these matters, we must bear in mind why a state is, ordinarily, denied the power to prohibit dissemination of social, economic and political doctrine which a vast majority of its citizens believes to be false and fraught with evil consequence.

Those who won our independence believed that the final end of the state was to make men free to develop their faculties, and that in its government the deliberative forces should prevail over the arbitrary. They valued liberty both as an end and as a means. They believed liberty to be the secret of happiness and courage to be the secret of liberty. They believed that freedom to think as you will and to speak as you think are means indispensable to the discovery and spread of political truth; that without free speech and assembly discussion would be futile; that with them, discussion affords ordinarily adequate protection against the dissemination of noxious doctrine; that the greatest menace to freedom is an inert people; that public discussion is a political duty; and that this should be a fundamental principle of the American government. They recognized the risks to which all human institutions are subject. But they knew that order cannot be secured merely through fear of punishment for its infraction; that it is hazardous to discourage thought, hope and imagination; that fear breeds repression; that repression breeds hate; that hate menaces stable government; that the path of safety lies in the opportunity to discuss freely supposed grievances and proposed remedies; and that the fitting remedy for evil counsels is good ones. Believing in the power of reason as applied through public discussion, they eschewed silence coerced by law—the argument of force in its worst form. Recognizing the occasional tyrannies of governing majorities, they amended the Constitution so that free speech and assembly should be guaranteed.

Fear of serious injury cannot alone justify suppression of free speech and assembly. Men feared witches and burnt women. It is the function of speech to free men from the bondage of irrational fears. To justify suppression of free speech there must be reasonable ground to fear that serious evil will result if free speech is practiced. There must be reasonable ground to believe that the danger apprehended is imminent. There must be reasonable ground to believe that the evil to be prevented is a serious one. Every denunciation of existing law tends in some measure to increase the probability that there will be a violation of it. Condonation of a breach enhances the probability. Expressions of approval add to the probability. Propagation of the criminal state of mind by teaching syndicalism increases it. Advocacy of law-breaking heightens it still further. But even advocacy of violation, however reprehensible morally, is not a justification for denying free speech where the advocacy falls short of incitement and there is nothing to indicate that the advocacy would be immediately acted on. The wide difference between advocacy and incitement, between preparation and attempt, between assembling and conspiracy, must be borne in mind. In order to support a finding of clear and present danger it must be shown either that immediate serious violence was to be expected or was advocated, or that the past conduct furnished reason to believe that such advocacy was then contemplated.

Those who won our independence by revolution were not cowards. They did not fear political change. They did not exalt order at the cost of liberty. To courageous, self-reliant men, with confidence in the power of free and fearless reasoning applied through the processes of popular government, no danger flowing from speech can be deemed clear and present, unless the incidence of the evil apprehended is so imminent that it may befall before there is opportunity for full discussion. If there be time to expose through discussion the falsehood and fallacies, to avert the evil by the processes of education, the remedy to be applied is more speech, not enforced silence. Only an emergency can justify repression. Such must be the rule if authority is to be reconciled with freedom. Such, in my opinion, is the command of the Constitution. It is therefore always open to Americans to challenge a law abridging free speech and assembly by showing that there was no emergency justifying it.

Moreover, even imminent danger cannot justify resort to prohibition of these functions essential to effective democracy, unless the evil apprehended is relatively serious. Prohibition of free speech and assembly is a measure so stringent that it would be inappropriate as the means for averting a relatively trivial harm to society. A police measure may be unconstitutional merely because the remedy, although effective as means of protection, is unduly harsh or oppressive. Thus, a state might, in the exercise of its police power, make any trespass upon the land of another a crime, regardless of the results or of the intent or purpose of the trespasser. It might, also, punish an attempt, a conspiracy, or an incitement to commit the trespass. But it is hardly conceivable that this Court would hold constitutional a statute which punished as a felony the mere voluntary assembly with a society formed to teach that pedestrians had the moral right to cross uninclosed, unposted, waste lands and to advocate their doing so, even if there was imminent danger that advocacy would lead to a trespass. The fact that speech is likely to result in some violence or in destruction of property is not enough to justify its suppression. There must be the probability of serious injury to the state. Among free men, the deterrents ordinarily to be applied to prevent crime are education and punishment for violations of the law, not abridgment of the rights of free speech and assembly. * * *

This legislative declaration [of emergency] satisfies the requirement of the Constitution of the state concerning emergency legislation. In re McDermott, 180 Cal. 783. But it does not preclude inquiry into the question whether, at the time and under the circumstances, the conditions existed which are essential to validity under the federal Constitution. As a statute, even if not void on its face, may be challenged because invalid as applied (Dahnke-Walker Milling Co. v. Bondurant, 257 U. S. 282), the result of such an inquiry may depend upon the specific facts of the particular case. Whenever the fundamental rights of free speech and assembly are alleged to have been invaded, it must remain open to a defendant to present the issue whether there actually did exist at the time a clear danger, whether the danger, if any, was imminent, and whether the evil apprehended was one so substantial as to justify the stringent restriction interposed by the legislature. The legislative declaration, like the fact that the statute was passed and was sustained by the highest court of the State, creates merely a rebuttable presumption that these conditions have been satisfied.

Whether in 1919, when Miss Whitney did the things complained of, there was in California such clear and present danger of serious evil, might have been made the important issue in the case. She might have required that the issue be determined either by the court or the jury. She claimed below that the statute as applied to her violated the federal Constitution; but she did not claim that it was void because there was no clear and present danger of serious evil, nor did she request that the existence of these conditions of a valid measure thus restricting the rights of free speech and assembly be passed upon by the court or a jury. On the other hand, there was evidence on which the court or jury might have found that such danger existed. I am unable to assent to the suggestion in the opinion of the Court that assembling with a political party, formed to advocate the desirability of a proletarian revolution by mass action at some date necessarily far in the future, is not a right within the protection of the Fourteenth Amendment. In the present case, however, there was other testimony which tended to establish the existence of a conspiracy, on the part of members of the International Workers of the World, to commit present serious crimes, and likewise to show that such a conspiracy would be furthered by the activity of the society of which Miss Whitney was a member. Under these circumstances the judgment of the State court cannot be disturbed.

Our power of review in this case is limited not only to the question whether a right guaranteed by the federal Constitution was denied, Murdock v. City of Memphis, 20 Wall. 590; Haire v. Rice, 204 U. S. 291, 301; but to the particular claims duly made below, and denied. Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. Duvall, 225 U. S. 477, 485-488. We lack here the power occasionally exercised on review of judgments of lower federal courts to correct in criminal cases vital errors, although the objection was not taken in the trial court. Wiborg v. United States, 163 U. S. 632, 658-660; Clyatt v. United States, 197 U. S. 207, 221-222. This is a writ of error to a state court. Because we may not inquire into the errors now alleged I concur in affirming the judgment of the state court.

MR. JUSTICE HOLMES joins in this opinion.

NOTES

1. The Whitney case is discussed in Chafee, Free Speech in the United States (1941), 343-354. The defendant was pardoned by the Governor of California, who was influenced by the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Brandeis.

2. In Fiske v. Kansas, 274 U. S. 380, 71 L. ed. 1108, 47 Sup. Ct. 655 (1927) it was held that the Kansas Criminal Syndicalism Act of 1920, as applied in that case to sustain the conviction of the defendant without any charge or evidence that the I. W. W., in which he secured members, advocated crime, violence or other unlawful acts or methods as a means of effecting political change or revolution, violated the defendant's liberty under the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

3. In Stromberg v. California, 283 U. S. 359, 75 L. ed. 1117, 51 Sup. Ct. 532, 73 A. L. R. 1484 (1931) the court held unconstitutional (Justices McReynolds and Butler dissenting) as a denial of the right of free speech and an impairment of liberty the first clause of a statute of California which made it a felony to display in any public place a red flag, banner or badge "as a sign, symbol or emblem of opposition to organized government or as an invitation or stimulus to anarchistic action or as an aid to propaganda that is of a seditious character." The court, through Chief Justice Hughes, said: "The maintenance of the opportunity for free political discussion to the end that government may be responsive to the will of the people and that changes may be obtained by lawful means, an opportunity essential to the security of the Republic, is a fundamental principle of our constitutional system. A statute which upon its face, and as authoritatively construed, is so vague and indefinite as to permit the punishment of the fair use of this opportunity is repugnant to the guaranty of liberty contained in the Fourteenth Amendment."

4. A Negro Communist organizer working among the Negro population in the South was convicted of violating a Georgia statute forbidding incitement or attempting incitement to insurrection by violence. There was no evidence that he had advocated by speech or written word, at meetings or elsewhere, any doctrine or action implying forcible subversion. There was, however, evidence tending to prove that he held meetings for the purpose of recruiting members of the Communist Party and solicited contributions for its support. Writings and printed matter found in a box carried by the defendant when arrested, it was contended, showed that the purposes of the Communist Party were to subvert by force and violence the lawful authority of the state. The Georgia Supreme Court sustained the conviction by construing the statute as not requiring a finding that defendant intended violence to take place instantly or at any given time, but that it was sufficient if he intended it to happen at any time, as a result of his influence. The Supreme Court of the United States reversed on two grounds: (1) there was no proof of incitement to insurrection, and for the statute, as applied, to make party membership and solicitation of members for the party a criminal offense, constituted an unwarranted invasion of the right of freedom of speech; and (2) the statute as construed and applied, did not furnish a sufficiently ascertainable standard of guilt. Justices Van Devanter, McReynolds, Sutherland and Butler dissented, holding that the statute did not unconstitutionally encroach upon freedom of speech, prescribed a sufficiently definite standard of guilt, and that the case fell within the scope of the "dangerous tendency" rule approved in the Gitlow case. Herndon v. Lowry, 301 U. S. 242, 81 L. ed. 1066, 57 Sup. Ct. 732 (1937).

NEAR v. MINNESOTA EX REL. OLSON.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1931.

283 U. S. 697, 75 L. ed. 1357, 51 Sup. Ct. 625.

[A Minnesota statute of 1925 declared any person "engaged in the business of regularly or customarily producing, publishing or circulating * * * (a) An obscene, lewd and lascivious newspaper, magazine or other periodical, or (b) A malicious, scandalous and defamatory newspaper, magazine or other periodical, is guilty of a nuisance and * * * may be enjoined" by procedure usual in civil actions for an injunction.

"In actions brought under (b) above, there shall be available the defense that the truth was published with good motives and for justifiable ends * * *"]

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE HUGHES delivered the opinion of the Court.
* * *

Under this statute, clause (b), the County Attorney of Hennepin County brought this action to enjoin the publication of what was described as a "malicious, scandalous and defamatory newspaper, magazine and periodical," known as "The Saturday Press," published by the defendants in the city of Minneapolis. * * *

Without attempting to summarize the contents of the voluminous exhibits attached to the complaint, we deem it sufficient to say that the articles charged in substance that a Jewish gangster was in control of gambling, bootlegging and racketeering in Minneapolis, and that law enforcing officers and agencies were not energetically performing their duties. Most of the charges were directed against the Chief of Police; he was charged with gross neglect of duty, illicit relations with gangsters, and with participation in graft. The County Attorney was charged with knowing the existing conditions and with failure to take adequate measures to remedy them. The Mayor was accused of inefficiency and dereliction. One member of the grand jury was stated to be in sympathy with the gangsters. A special grand jury and a special prosecutor were demanded to deal with the situation in general, and, in particular, to investigate an attempt to assassinate one Guilford, one of the original defendants, who, it appears from the articles, was shot by gangsters after the first issue of the periodical had been published. There is no question but that the articles made serious accusations against the public officers named and others in connection with the prevalence of crimes and the failure to expose and punish them.
* * *

[In the trial court the defendant pleaded that the statute was unconstitutional under the Constitution of the United States. On his appeal to the State Supreme Court from an adverse decision, the latter sustained the statute. A trial followed, in which defendant offered no evidence, and a permanent injunction was granted, and the decree was affirmed by the State Supreme Court, and this appeal was taken.]

This statute, for the suppression of a public nuisance of a newspaper or periodical, is unusual, if not unique, and raises questions of grave importance transcending the local interests involved in the particular action. It is no longer open to doubt that the liberty of the press, and of speech, is within the liberty safeguarded by the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment from invasion by state action. It was found impossible to conclude that this essential personal liberty of the citizen was left unprotected by the general guaranty of fundamental rights of person and property. Gitlow v. New York, 268 U. S. 652, 666; Whitney v. California, 274 U. S. 357, 362, 373; Fiske v. Kansas, 274 U. S. 380, 382; Stromberg v. California, 283 U. S. 359. In maintaining this guaranty, the authority of the State to enact laws to promote the health, safety, morals and general welfare of its people is necessarily admitted. * * * Liberty of speech, and of the press, is also not an absolute right, and the State may punish its abuse. Whitney v. California, supra; Stromberg v. California, supra. Liberty, in each of its phases, has its history and connotation and, in the present instance, the inquiry is as to the historic conception of the liberty of the press and whether the statute under review violates the essential attributes of that liberty. * * *

First. The statute is not aimed at the redress of individual or private wrongs. Remedies for libel remain available and unaffected. The statute, said the state court, "is not directed at threatened libel but at an existing business which, generally speaking, involves more than libel." It is aimed at the distribution of scandalous matter as "detrimental to public morals and to the general welfare," tending "to disturb the peace of the community" and "to provoke assaults and the commission of crime." In order to obtain an injunction to suppress the future publication of the newspaper or periodical, it is not necessary to prove the falsity of the charges that have been made in the publication condemned. In the present action there was no allegation that the matter published was not true. It is alleged, and the statute requires the allegation, that the publication was "malicious." But, as in prosecutions for libel, there is no requirement of proof by the State of malice in fact as distinguished from malice inferred from the mere publication of the defamatory matter. The judgment in this case proceeded upon the mere proof of publication. The statute permits the defense, not of the truth alone, but only that the truth was published with good motives and for justifiable ends. It is apparent that under the statute the publication is to be regarded as defamatory if it injures reputation, and that it is scandalous if it circulates charges of reprehensible conduct, whether criminal or otherwise, and the publication is thus deemed to invite public reprobation and to constitute a public scandal. The court sharply defined the purpose of the statute, bringing out the precise point, in these words: "There is no constitutional right to publish a fact merely because it is true. It is a matter of common knowledge that prosecutions under the criminal libel statutes do not result in efficient repression or suppression of the evils of scandal. Men who are the victims of such assaults seldom resort to the courts. This is especially true if their sins are exposed and the only question relates to whether it was done with good motives and for justifiable ends. This law is not for the protection of the person attacked nor to punish the wrongdoer. It is for the protection of the public welfare."

Second. The statute is directed not simply at the circulation of scandalous and defamatory statements with regard to private citizens, but at the continued publication by newspapers and periodicals of charges against public officers of corruption, malfeasance in office, or serious neglect of duty. Such charges by their very nature create a public scandal. They are scandalous and defamatory within the meaning of the statute, which has its normal operation in relation to publications dealing prominently and chiefly with the alleged derelictions of public officers.

Third. The object of the statute is not punishment, in the ordinary sense, but suppression of the offending newspaper or periodical. The reason for the enactment, as the state court has said, is that prosecutions to enforce penal statutes for libel do not result in "efficient repression or suppression of the evils of scandal." Describing the business of publication as a public nuisance, does not obscure the substance of the proceeding which the statute authorizes. It is the continued publication of scandalous and defamatory matter that constitutes the business and the declared nuisance. In the case of public officers, it is the reiteration of charges of official misconduct, and the fact that the newspaper or periodical is principally devoted to that purpose, that exposes it to suppression. In the present instance, the proof was that nine editions of the newspaper or periodical in question were published on successive dates, and that they were chiefly devoted to charges against public officers and in relation to the prevalence and protection of crime. In such a case, these officers are not left to their ordinary remedy in a suit for libel, or the authorities to a prosecution for criminal libel. Under this statute, a publisher of a newspaper or periodical, undertaking to conduct a campaign to expose and to censure official derelictions, and devoting his publication principally to that purpose, must face not simply the possibility of a verdict against him in a suit or prosecution for libel, but a determination that his newspaper or periodical is a public nuisance to be abated, and that this abatement and suppression will follow unless he is prepared with legal evidence to prove the truth of the charges and also to satisfy the court that, in addition to being true, the matter was published with good motives and for justifiable ends.

This suppression is accomplished by enjoining publication and that restraint is the object and effect of the statute.

Fourth. The statute not only operates to suppress the offending newspaper or periodical but to put the publisher under an effective censorship. When a newspaper or periodical is found to be "malicious, scandalous and defamatory," and is suppressed as such, resumption of publication is punishable as a contempt of court by fine or imprisonment. * * *

If we cut through mere details of procedure, the operation and effect of the statute in substance is that public authorities may bring the owner or publisher of a newspaper or periodical before a judge upon a charge of conducting a business of publishing scandalous and defamatory matter—in particular that the matter consists of charges against public officers of official dereliction—and unless the owner or publisher is able and disposed to bring competent evidence to satisfy the judge that the charges are true and are published with good motives and for justifiable ends, his newspaper or periodical is suppressed and further publication is made punishable as a contempt. This is of the essence of censorship.

The question is whether a statute authorizing such proceedings in restraint of publication is consistent with the conception of the liberty of the press as historically conceived and guaranteed. In determining the extent of the constitutional protection, it has been generally, if not universally, considered that it is the chief purpose of the guaranty to prevent previous restraints upon publication. The struggle in England, directed against the legislative power of the licenser, resulted in renunciation of the censorship of the press. The liberty deemed to be established was thus described by Blackstone: "The liberty of the press is indeed essential to the nature of a free state; but this consists in laying no previous restraints upon publications, and not in freedom from censure for criminal matter when published. Every freeman has an undoubted right to lay what sentiments he pleases before the public; to forbid this, is to destroy the freedom of the press; but if he publishes what is improper, mischievous or illegal, he must take the consequence of his own temerity." 4 Bl. Com. 151, 152; see Story on the Constitution, §§ 1884, 1889. * * *

The criticism upon Blackstone's statement has not been because immunity from previous restraint upon publication has not been regarded as deserving of special emphasis, but chiefly because that immunity cannot be deemed to exhaust the conception of the liberty guaranteed by state and federal constitutions. The point of criticism has been "that the mere exemption from previous restraints cannot be all that is secured by the constitutional provisions"; and that "the liberty of the press might be rendered a mockery and a delusion, and the phrase itself a by-word, if, while every man was at liberty to publish what he pleased, the public authorities might nevertheless punish him for harmless publications." 2 Cooley, Const. Lim., 8th ed., p. 885. But it is recognized that punishment for the abuse of the liberty accorded to the press is essential to the protection of the public, and that the common-law rules that subject the libeler to responsibility for the public offense, as well as for the private injury, are not abolished by the protection extended in our constitutions. Id. pp. 883, 884. The law of criminal libel rests upon that secure foundation. There is also the conceded authority of courts to punish for contempt when publications directly tend to prevent the proper discharge of judicial functions. Patterson v. Colorado, 205 U. S. 454; Toledo Newspaper Co. v. United States, 247 U. S. 402, 419. In the present case, we have no occasion to inquire as to the permissible scope of subsequent punishment. For whatever wrong the appellant has committed or may commit, by his publications, the State appropriately affords both public and private redress by its libel laws. As has been noted, the statute in question does not deal with punishments; it provides for no punishment, except in case of contempt for violation of the court's order, but for suppression and injunction, that is, for restraint upon publication.

The objection has also been made that the principle as to immunity from previous restraint is stated too broadly, if every such restraint is deemed to be prohibited. That is undoubtedly true; the protection even as to previous restraint is not absolutely unlimited. But the limitation has been recognized only in exceptional cases: "When a nation is at war many things that might be said in time of peace are such a hindrance to its effort that their utterance will not be endured so long as men fight and that no Court could regard them as protected by any constitutional right." Schenck v. United States, 249 U. S. 47, 52. No one would question but that a government might prevent actual obstruction to its recruiting service or the publication of the sailing dates of transports or the number and location of troops. On similar grounds, the primary requirements of decency may be enforced against obscene publications. The security of the community life may be protected against incitements to acts of violence and the overthrow by force of orderly government. The constitutional guaranty of free speech does not "protect a man from an injunction against uttering words that may have all the effect of force." Gompers v. Bucks Stove & Range Co., 221 U. S. 418, 439." Schenck v. United States, supra. These limitations are not applicable here. Nor are we now concerned with questions as to the extent of authority to prevent publications in order to protect private rights according to the principles governing the exercise of the jurisdiction of courts of equity.

The exceptional nature of its limitations places in a strong light the general conception that liberty of the press, historically considered and taken up by the Federal Constitution, has meant, principally although not exclusively, immunity from previous restraints or censorship. The conception of the liberty of the press in this country has broadened with the exigencies of the colonial period and with the efforts to secure freedom from oppressive administration. * * *

The statute in question cannot be justified by reason of the fact that the publisher is permitted to show, before injunction issues, that the matter published is true and is published with good motives and for justifiable ends. If such a statute, authorizing suppression and injunction on such a basis, is constitutionally valid, it would be equally permissible for the legislature to provide that at any time the publisher of any newspaper could be brought before a court, or even an administrative officer (as the constitutional protection may not be regarded as resting on mere procedural details) and required to produce proof of the truth of his publication, or of what he intended to publish, and of his motives, or stand enjoined. If this can be done, the legislature may provide machinery for determining in the complete exercise of its discretion what are justifiable ends and restrain publication accordingly. And it would be but a step to a complete system of censorship.

* * *

Equally unavailing is the insistence that the statute is designed to prevent the circulation of scandal which tends to disturb the public peace and to provoke assaults and the commission of crime. Charges of reprehensible conduct, and in particular of official malfeasance, unquestionably create a public scandal, but the theory of the constitutional guaranty is that even a more serious public evil would be caused by authority to prevent publication. * * * There is nothing new in the fact that charges of reprehensible conduct may create resentment and the disposition to resort to violent means of redress, but this well-understood tendency did not alter the determination to protect the press against censorship and restraint upon publication. * * *

For these reasons we hold the statute, so far as it authorized the proceedings in this action under clause (b) of section one, to be an infringement of the liberty of the press guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. * * *

Judgment reversed.

MR. JUSTICE BUTLER delivered a dissenting opinion in which JUSTICES VAN DEVANTER, McREYNOLDS and SUTHERLAND concurred.

NOTES

1. In Grosjean v. American Press Co., 297 U. S. 233, 80 L. ed. 660, 56 Sup. Ct. 444 (1936) a Louisiana tax of 2% of the gross receipts derived from the publication of advertisements by any "newspaper, magazine, periodical or publication whatever having a circulation of more than 20,000 copies per week" was held invalid, as applied to newspapers. The free press immunity was defined as including immunity from such a tax, which the court said was imposed "with the plain purpose of penalizing the publishers and curtailing the circulation of a selected group of newspapers."

2. In sustaining the application of the National Labor Relations Act to the Associated Press, which had been ordered by the National Labor Relations Board to desist from certain labor practices and to reinstate a discharged employee, the Supreme Court held that the statute did not abridge freedom of the press. Mr. Justice Roberts, for the court, said: "The regulation here in question has no relation whatever to the impartial distribution of news. The order of the Board in nowise circumscribes the full freedom and liberty of the petitioner to publish the news as it desires it published or to enforce policies of its own choosing with respect to the editing and rewriting of news for publication, and the petitioner is free at any time to discharge Watson or any editorial employee who fails to comply with the policies it may adopt." Justices Sutherland, Van Devanter, McReynolds and Butler dissented. Associated Press v. National Labor Relations Board, 301 U. S. 103, 81 L. ed. 953, 57 Sup. Ct. 650 (1937).

3. The publisher of a newspaper, which prior to the licensing of a nearby radio station enjoyed a substantial local monopoly of the mass dissemination of news and advertising, was enjoined from refusing to accept local advertising from customers who also advertised through the radio station, thereby endangering the continued existence of the station. In Lorain Journal Co. v. United States, 342 U. S. 143, 96 L. ed. 162, 72 Sup. Ct. 181 (1951) the Supreme Court held that the publisher's conduct was an attempt to monopolize interstate commerce, violated the Sherman Act, and that the injunction did not infringe the freedom of the press as a prior restraint upon what it might publish.

4. In holding that the Federal Communication Commission's responsibility to achieve the "public interest" in its licensing of radio stations justified it in exercising control over network practices found to be detrimental to the public interest, even though the Communications Act of 1934 did not expressly give the Commission power to regulate the contractual relations between the stations and the networks, the court said, through Mr. Justice Frankfurter: "The right of free speech does not include, however, the right to use the facilities of radio without a license. The licensing system established by Congress in the Communications Act of 1934 was a proper exercise of its power over commerce. The standard it provided for the licensing of stations was the 'public interest, convenience, or necessity.' Denial of a station license on that ground, if valid under the act, is not a denial of free speech." National Broadcasting Co. v. United States, 319 U. S. 190, 226-227, 87 L. ed. 1344, 63 Sup. Ct. 997 (1943).

5. The postal power of Congress is limited by the guaranty of freedom of the press. See United States ex rel. Milwaukee Social Democratic Pub. Co. v. Burleson, 255 U. S. 407, 65 L. ed. 704, 41 Sup. Ct. 352 (1921); Hannegan v. Esquire, 327 U. S. 146, 90 L. ed. 586, 66 Sup. Ct. 456 (1946).

BURSTYN, INC. v. WILSON.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1952.
343 U. S. 495, 96 L. ed. 1098, 72 Sup. Ct. 777.

MR. JUSTICE CLARK delivered the opinion of the Court.

The issue here is the constitutionality, under the First and Fourteenth Amendments, of a New York statute which permits the banning of motion picture films on the ground that they are "sacrilegious." That statute makes it unlawful "to exhibit, or to sell, lease or lend for exhibition at any place of amusement for pay or in connection with any business in the state of New York, any motion picture film or reel [with specified exceptions not relevant here], unless there is at the time in full force and effect a valid license or permit therefor of the education department * * *." The statute further provides:

"The director of the [motion picture] division [of the education department] or, when authorized by the regents, the officers of a local office or bureau shall cause to be promptly examined every motion picture film submitted to them as herein required, and unless such film or a part thereof is obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman, sacrilegious, or is of such a character that its exhibition would tend to corrupt morals or incite to crime, shall issue a license therefor. If such director or, when so authorized, such officer shall not license any film submitted, he shall furnish to the applicant therefor a written report of the reasons for his refusal and a description of each rejected part of a film not rejected in toto."

Appellant is a corporation engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures. It owns the exclusive rights to distribute throughout the United States a film produced in Italy entitled "The Miracle." On November 30, 1950, after having examined the picture, the motion picture division of the New York education department, acting under the statute quoted above, issued to appellant a license authorizing exhibition of "The Miracle," with English subtitles, as one part of a trilogy called "Ways of Love." Thereafter, for a period of approximately eight weeks, "Ways of Love" was exhibited publicly in a motion picture theater in New York City under an agreement between appellant and the owner of the theater whereby appellant received a stated percentage of the admission price.

During this period, the New York State Board of Regents, which by statute is made the head of the education department, received "hundreds of letters, telegrams, post cards, affidavits and other communications" both protesting against and defending the public exhibition of "The Miracle." The Chancellor of the Board of Regents requested three members of the Board to view the picture and to make a report to the entire Board. After viewing the film, this committee reported to the Board that in its opinion there was basis for the claim that the picture was "sacrilegious." Thereafter, on January 19, 1951, the Regents directed appellant to show cause, at a hearing to be held on January 30, why its license to show "The Miracle" should not be rescinded on that ground. Appellant appeared at this hearing, which was conducted by the same three-member committee of the Regents which had previously viewed the picture, and challenged the jurisdiction of the committee and of the Regents to proceed with the case. With the consent of the committee, various interested persons and organizations submitted to it briefs and exhibits bearing upon the merits of the picture and upon the constitutional and statutory questions involved. On February 16, 1951, the Regents, after viewing "The Miracle," determined that it was "sacrilegious" and for that reason ordered the Commissioner of Education to rescind appellant's license to exhibit the picture. The Commissioner did so.

Appellant brought the present action in the New York courts to review the determination of the Regents. Among the claims advanced by appellant were (1) that the statute violates the Fourteenth Amendment as a prior restraint upon freedom of speech and of the press; (2) that it is invalid under the same Amendment as a violation of the guaranty of separate church and state and as a prohibition of the free exercise of religion; and, (3) that the term "sacrilegious" is so vague and indefinite as to offend due process. The Appellant Division rejected all of appellant's contentions and upheld the Regents' determination. 278 App. Div. 253, 104 N. Y. S. 2d 740. On appeal the New York Court of Appeals, two judges dissenting, affirmed the order of the Appellate Division. 303 N. Y. 242, 101 N. E. 2d 665. The case is here on appeal. 28 U. S. C. § 1257(2) [F. C. A. 28 § 1257(2)].

As we view the case, we need consider only appellant's contention that the New York statute is an unconstitutional abridgment of free speech and a free press. In Mutual Film Corp. v. Industrial Comm. of Ohio, 236 U. S. 230, a distributor of motion pictures sought to enjoin the enforcement of an Ohio statute which required the prior approval of a board of censors before any motion picture could be publicly exhibited in the state, and which directed the board to approve only such films as it adjudged to be "of a moral, educational, or amusing and harmless character." The statute was assailed in part as an unconstitutional abridgment of the freedom of the press guaranteed by the First and Fourteenth Amendments. The District Court rejected this contention, stating that the first eight Amendments were not a restriction on state action. 215 F. 138, 141. On appeal to this Court, plaintiff in its brief abandoned this claim and contended merely that the statute in question violated the freedom of speech and publication guaranteed by the Constitution of Ohio. In affirming the decree of the District Court denying injunctive relief, this Court stated:

"It cannot be put out of view that the exhibition of moving pictures is a business, pure and simple, originated and conducted for profit, like other spectacles, not to be regarded, nor intended to be regarded by the Ohio Constitution, we think, as part of the press of the country, or as organs of public opinion."

In a series of decisions beginning with Gitlow v. New York, 268 U. S. 652, this Court held that the liberty of speech and of the press which the First Amendment guarantees against abridgment by the federal government is within the liberty safeguarded by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment from invasion by state action. That principle has been followed and reaffirmed to the present day. Since this series of decisions came after the Mutual decision, the present case is the first to present squarely to us the question whether motion pictures are within the ambit of protection which the First Amendment, through the Fourteenth, secures to any form of "speech" or "the press."

It cannot be doubted that motion pictures are a significant medium for the communication of ideas. They may affect public attitudes and behavior in a variety of ways, ranging from direct espousal of a political or social doctrine to the subtle shaping of thought which characterizes all artistic expression. The importance of motion pictures as an organ of public opinion is not lessened by the fact that they are designed to entertain as well as to inform. * * *

It is urged that motion pictures do not fall within the First Amendment's aegis because their production, distribution, and exhibition is a large-scale business conducted for private profit. We cannot agree. That books, newspapers, and magazines are published and sold for profit does not prevent them from being a form of expression whose liberty is safeguarded by the First Amendment. We fail to see why operation for profit should have any different effect in the case of motion pictures.

It is further urged that motion pictures possess a greater capacity for evil, particularly among the youth of a community, than other modes of expression. Even if one were to accept this hypothesis, it does not follow that motion pictures should be disqualified from First Amendment protection. If there be capacity for evil it may be relevant in determining the permissible scope of community control, but it does not authorize substantially unbridled censorship such as we have here.

For the foregoing reasons, we conclude that expression by means of motion pictures is included within the free speech and free press guaranty of the First and Fourteenth Amendments. To the extent that language in the opinion in Mutual Film Corp. v. Industrial Comm., supra, is out of harmony with the views here set forth, we no longer adhere to it.

To hold that liberty of expression by means of motion pictures is guaranteed by the First and Fourteenth Amendments, however, is not the end of our problem. It does not follow that the Constitution requires absolute freedom to exhibit every motion picture of every kind at all times and all places. That much is evident from the series of decisions of this Court with respect to other media of communication of ideas. Nor does it follow that motion pictures are necessarily subject to the precise rules governing any other particular method of expression. Each method tends to present its own peculiar problems. But the basic principles of freedom of speech and the press, like the First Amendment's command, do not vary. Those principles, as they have frequently been enunciated by this Court, make freedom of expression the rule. There is no justification in this case for making an exception to that rule.

The statute involved here does not seek to punish, as a past offense, speech or writing falling within the permissible scope of subsequent punishment. On the contrary, New York requires that permission to communicate ideas be obtained in advance from state officials who judge the content of the words and pictures sought to be communicated. This Court recognized many years ago that such a previous restraint is a form of infringement upon freedom of expression to be especially condemned. Near v. Minnesota ex rel. Olson, 283 U. S. 697. The Court there recounted the history which indicates that a major purpose of the First Amendment guaranty of a free press was to prevent prior restraints upon publication, although it was carefully pointed out that the liberty of the press is not limited to that protection. It was further stated that "the protection even as to previous restraint is not absolutely unlimited. But the limitation has been recognized only in exceptional cases." In the light of the First Amendment's history and of the Near decision, the state has a heavy burden to demonstrate that the limitation challenged here presents such an exceptional case.

New York's highest court says there is "nothing mysterious" about the statutory provision applied in this case: "It is simply this: that no religion, as that word is understood by the ordinary, reasonable person, shall be treated with contempt, mockery, scorn and ridicule * * *." This is far from the kind of narrow exception to freedom of expression which a state may carve out to satisfy the adverse demands of other interests of society. In seeking to apply the broad and all-inclusive definition of "sacrilegious" given by the New York courts, the censor is set adrift upon a boundless sea amid a myriad of conflicting currents of religious views, with no charts but those provided by the most vocal and powerful orthodoxies. New York cannot vest such unlimited restraining control over motion pictures in a censor. Cf. Kunz v. New York, 340 U. S. 290. Under such a standard the most careful and tolerant censor would find it virtually impossible to avoid favoring one religion over another, and he would be subject to an inevitable tendency to ban the expression of unpopular sentiments sacred to a religious minority. Application of the "sacrilegious" test, in these or other respects, might raise substantial questions under the First Amendment's guaranty of separate church and state with freedom of worship for all. However, from the standpoint of freedom of speech and the press, it is enough to point out that the state has no legitimate interest in protecting any or all religions from views distasteful to them which is sufficient to justify prior restraints upon the expression of those views. It is not the business of government in our nation to suppress real or imagined attacks upon a particular religious doctrine, whether they appear in publications, speeches, or motion pictures.

Since the term "sacrilegious" is the sole standard under attack here, it is not necessary for us to decide, for example, whether a state may censor motion pictures under a clearly-drawn statute designed and applied to prevent the showing of obscene films. That is a very different question from the one now before us. We hold only that under the First and Fourteenth Amendments a state may not ban a film on the basis of a censor's conclusion that it is "sacrilegious." Reversed.

MR. JUSTICE REED, concurring in the judgment of the Court.

Assuming that a state may establish a system for the licensing of motion pictures, an issue not foreclosed by the Court's opinion, our duty requires us to examine the facts of the refusal of a license in each case to determine whether the principles of the First Amendment have been honored. This film does not seem to me to be of a character that the First Amendment permits a state to exclude from public view.

[MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, with whom MR. JUSTICE JACKSON joined, wrote a concurring opinion which is too lengthy for inclusion here. In their view, the term "sacrilegious," as used in the statute was unconstitutionally vague. MR. JUSTICE BURTON concurred in both the opinion of the Court and in that of MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER.]

NOTES

1. "We have no doubt that moving pictures, like newspapers and radio, are included in the press whose freedom is guaranteed by the First Amendment." Mr. Justice Douglas, for the court, in United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 334 U. S. 131, 166, 92 L. ed. 1260, 68 Sup. Ct. 915 (1948).

2. In Gelling v. Texas, 343 U. S. 960, 96 L. ed. 1359, 72 Sup. Ct. 1002 (1952), in a per curiam opinion, the court reversed a judgment of a Texas court and held invalid a city ordinance which authorized a local board of censors to deny permission for the showing of a motion picture, which in the opinion of the board was "of such character as to be prejudicial to the best interests of the people of said city," and made the showing of the picture after refusal of permission a misdemeanor. The opinion cited the principal case and Winters v. New York, 333 U. S. 507, 92 L. ed. 840, 68 Sup. Ct. 665 (1948), which had invalidated a criminal statute for vagueness.

3. In Superior Films, Inc. v. Department of Education of Ohio, and Commercial Pictures Corporation v. Regents of University of New York, 346 U. S. 587, 98 L. ed. 329, 74 Sup. Ct. 286 (1954) the Supreme Court reversed, per curiam, and citing the principal case, decisions of the Supreme Court of Ohio and the New York Court of Appeals upholding censorship of motion pictures in those states. The Ohio case involved the picture "M" which had been banned on the ground that it would tend to promote crime. The New York case involved the film "La Ronde" which had been banned on the ground that it was "immoral" and tended to corrupt morals. Justice Douglas, with whom Justice Black agreed, wrote a concurring opinion which stated: "Motion pictures are of course a different medium of expression than the public speech, the radio, the stage, the novel, or the magazine. But the First Amendment draws no distinction between the various methods of communicating ideas. On occasion one may be more powerful or effective than another. The movie, like the public speech, radio, or television is transitory—here now and gone in an instant. The novel, the short story, the poem in printed form are permanently at hand to reenact the drama or to retell the story over and again. Which medium will give the most excitement and have the most enduring effect will vary with the theme and the actors. It is not for the censors to determine in any case. The First and the Fourteenth Amendments say that Congress and the States shall make 'no law' which abridges freedom of speech or of the press. In order to sanction a system of censorship I would have to say that 'no law' does not mean what it says, that 'no law' is qualified to mean 'some' laws. I cannot take that step."

SCHNEIDER v. NEW JERSEY, TOWN OF IRVINGTON.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1939.
308 U. S. 147, 84 L. ed. 155, 60 Sup. Ct. 146.

[The opinion published under this title gave the Court's reasons for holding invalid city ordinances of Irvington, New Jersey, Los Angeles, California, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and Worcester, Massachusetts. The Irvington ordinance required a distributor of circulars or other matter or a house-to-house canvasser or solicitor to first receive a permit from the chief of police, and set forth detailed requirements to be complied with before such permission would be granted. Here a minister of the Jehovah's Witnesses had been convicted of canvassing and distributing literature of that sect without having received a permit. The ordinances of Los Angeles, Milwaukee and Worcester were alike in forbidding distribution on the streets of pamphlets, hand-bills, circulars, posters or other printed matter. In the Los Angeles case a street distributor of a hand-bill announcing a meeting under the auspices of "Friends Lincoln Brigade" at which speakers were to discuss the civil war in Spain had been convicted. In Milwaukee a picket handing out hand-bills relating to a labor dispute had been convicted, and in Worcester the street distributor of a leaflet announcing a protest meeting with respect to the administration of state unemployment insurance met a like fate.]

MR. JUSTICE ROBERTS delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

Although a municipality may enact regulations in the interest of the public safety, health, welfare or convenience, these may not abridge the individual liberties secured by the Constitution to those who wish to speak, write, print or circulate information or opinion.

Municipal authorities, as trustees for the public, have the duty to keep their communities' streets open and available for movement of people and property, the primary purpose to which the streets are dedicated. So long as legislation to this end does not abridge the constitutional liberty of one rightfully upon the street to impart information through speech or the distribution of literature, it may lawfully regulate the conduct of those using the streets. For example, a person could not exercise this liberty by taking his stand in the middle of a crowded street, contrary to traffic regulations, and maintain his position to the stoppage of all traffic; a group of distributors could not insist upon a constitutional right to form a cordon across the street and to allow no pedestrian to pass who did not accept a tendered leaflet; nor does the guarantee of freedom of speech or of the press deprive a municipality of power to enact regulations against throwing literature broadcast in the streets. Prohibition of such conduct would not abridge the constitutional liberty since such activity bears no necessary relationship to the freedom to speak, write, print or distribute information or opinion.

This Court has characterized the freedom of speech and that of the press as fundamental personal rights and liberties. The phrase is not an empty one and was not lightly used. It reflects the belief of the framers of the Constitution that exercise of the rights lies at the foundation of free government by free men. It stresses, as do many opinions of this Court, the importance of preventing the restriction of enjoyment of these liberties.

In every case, therefore, where legislative abridgment of the rights is asserted, the courts should be astute to examine the effect of the challenged legislation. Mere legislative preferences or beliefs respecting matters of public convenience may well support regulation directed at other personal activities, but be insufficient to justify such as diminishes the exercise of rights so vital to the maintenance of democratic institutions. And so, as cases arise, the delicate and difficult task falls upon the courts to weigh the circumstances and to appraise the substantiality of the reasons advanced in support of the regulation of the free enjoyment of the rights.

In Lovell v. Griffin, 303 U. S. 444, this Court held void an ordinance which forbade the distribution by hand or otherwise of literature of any kind without written permission from the city manager. The opinion pointed out that the ordinance was not limited to obscene and immoral literature or that which advocated unlawful conduct, placed no limit on the privilege of distribution in the interest of public order, was not aimed to prevent molestation of inhabitants or misuse or littering of streets, and was without limitation as to time or place of distribution. The Court said that, whatever the motive, the ordinance was bad because it imposed penalties for the distribution of pamphlets, which had become historical weapons in the defense of liberty, by subjecting such distribution to license and censorship; and that the ordinance was void on its face, because it abridged the freedom of the press. Similarly in Hague v. C. I. O., 307 U. S. 496, an ordinance was held void on its face because it provided for previous administrative censorship of the exercise of the right of speech and assembly in appropriate public places.

The Los Angeles, the Milwaukee, and the Worcester ordinances under review do not purport to license distribution but all of them absolutely prohibit it in the streets and, one of them, in other public places as well.

The motive of the legislation under attack * * * is held by the courts below to be the prevention of littering of the streets and, although the alleged offenders were not charged with themselves scattering paper in the streets, their convictions were sustained upon the theory that distribution by them encouraged or resulted in such littering. We are of the opinion that the purpose to keep the streets clean and of good appearance is insufficient to justify an ordinance which prohibits a person rightfully on a public street from handing literature to one willing to receive it. Any burden imposed upon the city authorities in cleaning and caring for the streets as an indirect consequence of such distribution results from the constitutional protection of the freedom of speech and press. This constitutional protection does not deprive a city of all power to prevent street littering. There are obvious methods of preventing littering. Amongst these is the punishment of those who actually throw papers on the streets.

It is argued that the circumstance that in the actual enforcement of the Milwaukee ordinance the distributor is arrested only if those who receive the literature throw it in the streets, renders it valid. But, even as thus construed, the ordinance cannot be enforced without unconstitutionally abridging the liberty of free speech. As we have pointed out, the public convenience in respect of cleanliness of the streets does not justify an exertion of the police power which invades the free communication of information and opinion secured by the Constitution.

It is suggested that the Los Angeles and Worcester ordinances are valid because their operation is limited to streets and alleys and leaves persons free to distribute printed matter in other public places. But, as we have said, the streets are natural and proper places for the dissemination of information and opinion; and one is not to have the exercise of his liberty of expression in appropriate places abridged on the plea that it may be exercised in some other place.

While it affects others, the Irvington ordinance drawn in question * * * as construed below, affects all those, who, like the petitioner, desire to impart information and opinion to citizens at their homes. If it covers the petitioner's activities it equally applies to one who wishes to present his views on political, social or economic questions. The ordinance is not limited to those who canvass for private profit; nor is it merely the common type of ordinance requiring some form of registration or license of hawkers, or peddlers. It is not a general ordinance to prohibit trespassing. It bans unlicensed communication of any views or the advocacy of any cause from door to door, and permits canvassing only subject to the power of a police officer to determine, as a censor, what literature may be distributed from house to house and who may distribute it. The applicant must submit to that officer's judgment evidence as to his good character and as to the absence of fraud in the "project" he proposes to promote or the literature he intends to distribute, and must undergo a burdensome and inquisitorial examination, including photographing and fingerprinting. In the end, his liberty to communicate with the residents of the town at their homes depends upon the exercise of the officer's discretion.

As said in Lovell v. Griffin, supra, pamphlets have proved most effective instruments in the dissemination of opinion. And perhaps the most effective way of bringing them to the notice of individuals is their distribution at the homes of the people. On this method of communication the ordinance imposes censorship, abuse of which engendered the struggle in England which eventuated in the establishment of the doctrine of the freedom of the press embodied in our Constitution. To require a censorship through license which makes impossible the free and unhampered distribution of pamphlets strikes at the very heart of the constitutional guarantees.

Conceding that fraudulent appeals may be made in the name of charity and religion, we hold a municipality cannot, for this reason, require all who wish to disseminate ideas to present them first to police authorities for their consideration and approval, with a discretion in the police to say some ideas may, while others may not, be carried to the homes of citizens; some persons may, while others may not, disseminate information from house to house. Frauds may be denounced as offenses and punished by law. Trespasses may similarly be forbidden. If it is said that these means are less efficient and convenient than bestowal of power on police authorities to decide what information may be disseminated from house to house, and who may impart the information, the answer is that considerations of this sort do not empower a municipality to abridge freedom of speech and press.

We are not to be taken as holding that commercial soliciting and canvassing may not be subjected to such regulation as the ordinance requires. Nor do we hold that the town may not fix reasonable hours when canvassing may be done by persons having such objects as the petitioner. Doubtless there are other features of such activities which may be regulated in the public interest without prior licensing or other invasion of constitutional liberty. We do hold, however, that the ordinance in question, as applied to the petitioner's conduct, is void, and she cannot be punished for acting without a permit.

The judgment in each case is reversed and the causes are remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

[Mr. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS dissented.]

NOTES

1. The distribution of commercial advertising hand-bills on the public streets has no constitutional immunity. See Valentine v. Chrestensen, 316 U. S. 52, 86 L. ed. 1262, 62 Sup. Ct. 920 (1942), where it was also held that the addition to the commercial advertising matter of other material that of itself was privileged would not protect the distributor from punishment.

2. Cox v. New Hampshire, 312 U. S. 569, 85 L. ed. 1049, 61 Sup. Ct. 762, 133 A. L. R. 1396 (1941) upheld a conviction under a statute prohibiting organized parades on public streets without a permit, as applied to a parade of Jehovah's Witnesses, who had not sought such permission. The court held that the issuance of a permit was subject to reasonable discretion determined by public safety and convenience as to time, place and manner of such use of the streets, and that the statute was administered in a fair and non-discriminatory manner.

3. The view that the basic freedoms guaranteed by the First Amendment have a "preferred position" in constitutional law and that the normal presumption in favor of the constitutionality of regulatory legislation in the economic field does not obtain in cases where infringements of these guaranties are involved, is reflected in Mr. Justice Roberts' opinion in the principal case. This view is based upon the assumption that it was the intention of Justices Holmes and Brandeis to supplant the ordinary criterion of "reasonableness" by the "clear and present danger" test in defining the constitutional immunity of freedom of speech. Thus, speech related to matters of public interest and concern may not be curtailed unless and until the speech brings about a clear and present danger of some serious substantive evil. To justify legislative restriction the state must show that a serious public interest is endangered and that no lesser form of control will suffice to protect such interest.

The first general, if somewhat tentative, statement of this view appeared in the famous footnote 4 appended by Mr. Justice Stone to his opinion for the court in United States v. Carolene Products Co., 304 U. S. 144, 82 L. ed. 1234, 58 Sup. Ct. 778 (1938). Having noted in the main body of his opinion that "regulatory legislation affecting ordinary commercial transactions is not to be pronounced unconstitutional unless in the light of the facts made known or generally assumed it is of such a character as to preclude the assumption that it rests upon some rational basis within the knowledge and experience of the legislators," the footnote said, in part: "There may be narrower scope for operation of the presumption of constitutionality when legislation appears on its face to be within a specific prohibition of the Constitution, such as those of the first ten amendments, which are deemed equally specific when held to be embraced within the Fourteenth. * * * It is unnecessary to consider now whether legislation which restricts those political processes which can ordinarily be expected to bring about repeal of undesirable legislation, is to be subjected to more exacting judicial scrutiny under the general prohibitions of the Fourteenth Amendment than are most other types of legislation. * * * Nor need we inquire whether similar considerations enter into the review of statutes directed at particular religious * * * or national * * * or racial minorities, * * * whether prejudice against discrete and insular minorities may be a special condition, which tends seriously to curtail the operation of those political processes ordinarily to be relied upon to protect minorities, and which may call for a correspondingly more searching judicial inquiry."

Another expression of this view by the same jurist (then Chief Justice) appeared in the course of his dissent in Jones v. Opelika, 316 U. S. 584, 86 L. ed. 1691, 62 Sup. Ct. 1231, 141 A. L. R. 514 (1942), when he said: "The First Amendment is not confined to safeguarding freedom of speech and freedom of religion against discriminatory attempts to wipe them out. On the contrary the Constitution, by virtue of the First and the Fourteenth Amendments, has put those freedoms in a preferred position. Their commands are not restricted to cases where the protected privilege is sought out for attack. They extend at least to every form of taxation which, because it is a condition of the exercise of the privilege, is capable of being used to control or suppress it."

The student should consider, as he reads the opinions which follow in this and the succeeding section dealing with the religious liberty guaranty, what cases have been decided on the basis of the "preferred position" view and what cases have either ignored or repudiated it, what the attitude of the various justices has been with respect to it, and what support the view now (1955) has among the present members of the Supreme Court. Much valuable background and analysis of the cases involving the First Amendment guaranties is supplied in two recent volumes of Professor Pritchett, The Roosevelt Court (1948), and Civil Liberties and the Vinson Court (1954).

BRIDGES v. CALIFORNIA.
TIMES-MIRROR CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1941.
314 U. S. 252, 86 L. ed. 192, 62 Sup. Ct. 190, 159 A. L. R. 1346.

MR. JUSTICE BLACK delivered the opinion of the Court.

These two cases, while growing out of different circumstances and concerning different parties, both relate to the scope of our national constitutional policy safeguarding free speech and a free press. All of the petitioners were adjudged guilty and fined for contempt of court by the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. Their conviction rested upon comments pertaining to pending litigation which were published in newspapers. In the Superior Court, and later in the California Supreme Court, petitioners challenged the state's action as an abridgment, prohibited by the Federal Constitution, of freedom of speech and of the press; but the Superior Court overruled this contention, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The importance of the constitutional question prompted us to grant certiorari. 309 U. S. 649; 310 U. S. 623.

In brief, the state courts asserted and exercised a power to punish petitioners for publishing their views concerning cases not in all respects finally determined, upon the following chain of reasoning: California is invested with the power and duty to provide an adequate administration of justice; by virtue of this power and duty, it can take appropriate measures for providing fair judicial trials free from coercion or intimidation; included among such appropriate measures is the common-law procedure of punishing certain interferences and obstructions through contempt proceedings; this particular measure, devolving upon the courts of California by reason of their creation as courts, includes the power to punish for publications made outside the courtroom if they tend to interfere with the fair and orderly administration of justice in a pending case; the trial court having found that the publications had such a tendency, and there being substantial evidence to support the finding, the punishments here imposed were an appropriate exercise of the state's power; in so far as these punishments constitute a restriction on liberty of expression, the public interest in that liberty was properly subordinated to the public interest in judicial impartiality and decorum.

If the inference of conflict raised by the last clause be correct, the issue before us is of the very gravest moment. For free speech and fair trials are two of the most cherished policies of our civilization, and it would be a trying task to choose between them. But even if such a conflict is not actually raised by the question before us, we are still confronted with the delicate problems entailed in passing upon the deliberations of the highest court of a state. This is not, however, solely an issue between state and nation, as it would be if we were called upon to mediate in one of those troublous situations where each claims to be the repository of a particular sovereign power. To be sure, the exercise of power here in question was by a state judge. But in deciding whether or not the sweeping constitutional mandate against any law "abridging the freedom of speech or of the press" forbids it, we are necessarily measuring a power of all American courts, both state and federal, including this one.

It is to be noted at once that we have no direction by the legislature of California that publications outside the courtroom which comment upon a pending case in a specified manner should be punishable. As we said in Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U. S. 296, 307-308, such a "declaration of the State's policy would weigh heavily in any challenge of the law as infringing constitutional limitations." But as we also said there, the problem is different where "the judgment is based on a common law concept of the most general and undefined nature." Id. 308. Cf. Herndon v. Lowry, 301 U. S. 242, 261-264. For here the legislature of California has not appraised a particular kind of situation and found a specific danger sufficiently imminent to justify a restriction on a particular kind of utterance. The judgments below, therefore, do not come to us encased in the armor wrought by prior legislative deliberation. Under such circumstances, this Court has said that "it must necessarily be found, as an original question," that the specified publications involved created "such likelihood of bringing about the substantive evil as to deprive [them] of the constitutional protection." Gitlow v. New York, 268 U. S. 652, 671.

How much "likelihood" is another question, "a question of proximity and degree" that cannot be completely captured in a formula. In Schenck v. United States, however, this Court said that there must be a determination of whether or not "the words used are used in such circumstances and are of such a nature as to create a clear and present danger that they will bring about the substantive evils." We recognize that this statement, however helpful, does not comprehend the whole problem. As Mr. Justice Brandeis said in his concurring opinion in Whitney v. California, 274 U. S. 357, 374: "This Court has not yet fixed the standard by which to determine when a danger shall be deemed clear; how remote the danger may be and yet be deemed present."

Nevertheless, the "clear and present danger" language of the Schenck case has afforded practical guidance in a great variety of cases in which the scope of constitutional protections of freedom of expression was in issue. It has been utilized by either a majority or minority of this Court in passing upon the constitutionality of convictions under espionage acts, Schenck v. United States, supra; Abrams v. United States, 250 U. S. 616; under a criminal syndicalism act, Whitney v. California, supra; under an "anti-insurrection" act, Herndon v. Lowry, supra; and for breach of the peace at common law, Cantwell v. Connecticut, supra. And very recently we have also suggested that "clear and present danger" is an appropriate guide in determining the constitutionality of restrictions upon expression where the substantive evil sought to be prevented by the restriction is "destruction of life or property, or invasion of the right of privacy." Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U. S. 88, 105.

Moreover, the likelihood, however great, that a substantive evil will result cannot alone justify a restriction upon freedom of speech or the press. The evil itself must be "substantial," Brandeis, J., concurring in Whitney v. California, supra, 374; it must be "serious," id. 376. And even the expression of "legislative preferences or beliefs" cannot transform minor matters of public inconvenience or annoyance into substantive evils of sufficient weight to warrant the curtailment of liberty of expression. Schneider v. State, 308 U. S. 147, 161.

What finally emerges from the "clear and present danger" cases is a working principle that the substantive evil must be extremely serious and the degree of imminence extremely high before utterances can be punished. Those cases do not purport to mark the furthestmost constitutional boundaries of protected expression, nor do we here. They do no more than recognize a minimum compulsion of the Bill of Rights. For the First Amendment does not speak equivocally. It prohibits any law "abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press." It must be taken as a command of the broadest scope that explicit language, read in the context of a liberty-loving society, will allow.

Before analyzing the punished utterances and the circumstances surrounding their publication, we must consider an argument which, if valid, would destroy the relevance of the foregoing discussion to this case. In brief, this argument is that the publications here in question belong to a special category marked off by history,—a category to which the criteria of constitutional immunity from punishment used where other types of utterances are concerned are not applicable. For, the argument runs, the power of judges to punish by contempt out-of-court publications tending to obstruct the orderly and fair administration of justice in a pending case was deeply rooted in English common law at the time the Constitution was adopted. That this historical contention is dubious has been persuasively argued elsewhere. Fox, Contempt of Court, passim, e. g., 207. See also Stansbury, Trial of James H. Peck, 430. In any event it need not detain us, for to assume that English common law in this field became ours is to deny the generally accepted historical belief that "one of the objects of the Revolution was to get rid of the English common law on liberty of speech and of the press." Schofield, Freedom of the Press in the United States, 9 Publications Amer. Sociol. Soc., 67, 76.

More specifically, it is to forget the environment in which the First Amendment was ratified. In presenting the proposals which were later embodied in the Bill of Rights, James Madison, the leader in the preparation of the First Amendment, said: "Although I know whenever the great rights, the trial by jury, freedom of the press, or liberty of conscience, come in question in that body [Parliament], the invasion of them is resisted by able advocates, yet their Magna Charta does not contain any one provision for the security of those rights, respecting which the people of America are most alarmed. The freedom of the press and rights of conscience, those choicest privileges of the people, are unguarded in the British Constitution." 1 Annals of Congress 1789-1790, 434. And Madison elsewhere wrote that "the state of the press * * * under the common law, cannot * * * be the standard of its freedom in the United States." VI Writings of James Madison 1790-1802, 387.

There are no contrary implications in any part of the history of the period in which the First Amendment was framed and adopted. No purpose in ratifying the Bill of Rights was clearer than that of securing for the people of the United States much greater freedom of religion, expression, assembly, and petition than the people of Great Britain had ever enjoyed. It cannot be denied, for example, that the religious test oath or the restrictions upon assembly then prevalent in England would have been regarded as measures which the Constitution prohibited the American Congress from passing. And since the same unequivocal language is used with respect to freedom of the press, it signifies a similar enlargement of that concept as well. Ratified as it was while the memory of many oppressive English restrictions on the enumerated liberties was still fresh, the First Amendment cannot reasonably be taken as approving prevalent English practices. On the contrary, the only conclusion supported by history is that the unqualified prohibitions laid down by the framers were intended to give to liberty of the press, as to the other liberties, the broadest scope that could be countenanced in an orderly society.

The implications of subsequent American history confirm such a construction of the First Amendment. To be sure, it occurred no more to the people who lived in the decades following Ratification than it would to us now that the power of courts to protect themselves from disturbances and disorder in the courtroom by use of contempt proceedings could seriously be challenged as conflicting with constitutionally secured guarantees of liberty. In both state and federal courts, this power has been universally recognized. See Anderson v. Dunn, 6 Wheat. 204, 227. But attempts to expand it in the post-Ratification years evoked popular reactions that bespeak a feeling of jealous solicitude for freedom of the press. In Pennsylvania and New York, for example, heated controversies arose over alleged abuses in the exercise of the contempt power, which in both places culminated in legislation practically forbidding summary punishment for publications. See

Nelles and King, Contempt by Publication, 28 Col. L. Rev. 401, 409-422. * * *

We are aware that although some states have by statute or decision expressly repudiated the power of judges to punish publications as contempts on a finding of mere tendency to interfere with the orderly administration of justice in a pending case, other states have sanctioned the exercise of such a power. (See Nelles and King, loc. cit. supra, 536-562, for a collection and discussion of state cases.) But state power in this field was not tested in this Court for more than a century. Not until 1925, with the decision of Gitlow v. New York, supra, 268 U. S. 652, did this Court recognize in the Fourteenth Amendment the application to the states of the same standards of freedom of expression as, under the First Amendment, are applicable to the federal government. And this is the first time since 1925 that we have been called upon to determine the constitutionality of a state's exercise of the contempt power in this kind of situation. Now that such a case is before us, we cannot allow the mere existence of other untested state decisions to destroy the historic constitutional meaning of freedom of speech and of the press.

History affords no support for the contention that the criteria applicable under the Constitution to other types of utterances are not applicable, in contempt proceedings, to out-of-court publications pertaining to a pending case.

We may appropriately begin our discussion of the judgments below by considering how much, as a practical matter, they would affect liberty of expression. It must be recognized that public interest is much more likely to be kindled by a controversial event of the day than by a generalization, however penetrating, of the historian or scientist. Since they punish utterances made during the pendency of a case, the judgments below therefore produce their restrictive results at the precise time when public interest in the matters discussed would naturally be at its height. Moreover, the ban is likely to fall not only at a crucial time but upon the most important topics of discussion. Here, for example, labor controversies were the topics of some of the publications. Experience shows that the more acute labor controversies are, the more likely it is that in some aspect they will get into court. It is therefore the controversies that command most interest that the decisions below would remove from the arena of public discussion.

No suggestion can be found in the Constitution that the freedom there guaranteed for speech and the press bears an inverse ratio to the timeliness and importance of the ideas seeking expression. Yet, it would follow as a practical result of the decisions below that anyone who might wish to give public expression to his views on a pending case involving no matter what problem of public interest, just at the time his audience would be most receptive, would be as effectively discouraged as if a deliberate statutory scheme of censorship had been adopted. Indeed, perhaps more so, because under a legislative specification of the particular kinds of expressions prohibited and the circumstances under which the prohibitions are to operate, the speaker or publisher might at least have an authoritative guide to the permissible scope of comment, instead of being compelled to act at the peril that judges might find in the utterance a "reasonable tendency" to obstruct justice in a pending case.

This unfocused threat is, to be sure, limited in time, terminating as it does upon final disposition of the case. But this does not change its censorial quality. An endless series of moratoria on public discussion, even if each were very short, could hardly be dismissed as an insignificant abridgement of freedom of expression. And to assume that each would be short is to overlook the fact that the "pendency" of a case is frequently a matter of months or even years rather than days or weeks.

For these reasons we are convinced that the judgments below result in a curtailment of expression that cannot be dismissed as insignificant. If they can be justified at all, it must be in terms of some serious substantive evil which they are designed to avert. The substantive evil here sought to be averted has been variously described below. It appears to be double: disrespect for the judiciary; and disorderly and unfair administration of justice. The assumption that respect for the judiciary can be won by shielding judges from published criticism wrongly appraises the character of American public opinion. For it is a prized American privilege to speak one's mind, although not always with perfect good taste, on all public institutions. And an enforced silence, however limited, solely in the name of preserving the dignity of the bench, would probably engender resentment, suspicion, and contempt much more than it would enhance respect.

The other evil feared, disorderly and unfair administration of justice, is more plausibly associated with restricting publications which touch upon pending litigation. The very word "trial" connotes decisions on the evidence and arguments properly advanced in open court. Legal trials are not like elections, to be won through the use of the meeting-hall, the radio, and the newspaper. But we cannot start with the assumption that publications of the kind here involved actually do threaten to change the nature of legal trials, and that to preserve judicial impartiality, it is necessary for judges to have a contempt power by which they can close all channels of public expression to all matters which touch upon pending cases. We must therefore turn to the particular utterances here in question and the circumstances of their publication to determine to what extent the substantive evil of unfair administration of justice was a likely consequence, and whether the degree of likelihood was sufficient to justify summary punishment.

The Los Angeles Times Editorials. The Times-Mirror Company, publisher of the Los Angeles Times, and L. D. Hotchkiss, its managing editor, were cited for contempt for the publication of three editorials. Both found by the trial court to be responsible for one of the editorials, the company and Hotchkiss were each fined $100. The company alone was held responsible for the other two, and was fined $100 more on account of one, and $300 more on account of the other.

The $300 fine presumably marks the most serious offense. The editorial thus distinguished was entitled "Probation for Gorillas?" After vigorously denouncing two members of a labor union who had previously been found guilty of assaulting nonunion truck drivers, it closes with the observation: "Judge A. A. Scott will make a serious mistake if he grants probation to Matthew Shannon and Kennan Holmes. This community needs the example of their assignment to the jute mill." Judge Scott had previously set a day (about a month after the publication) for passing upon the application of Shannon and Holmes for probation and for pronouncing sentence.

The basis for punishing the publication as contempt was by the trial court said to be its "inherent tendency" and by the Supreme Court its "reasonable tendency" to interfere with the orderly administration of justice in an action then before a court for consideration. In accordance with what we have said on the "clear and present danger" cases, neither "inherent tendency" nor "reasonable tendency" is enough to justify a restriction of free expression. But even if they were appropriate measures, we should find exaggeration in the use of those phrases to describe the facts here.

From the indications in the record of the position taken by the Los Angeles Times on labor controversies in the past, there could have been little doubt of its attitude toward the probation of Shannon and Holmes. In view of the paper's long-continued militancy in this field, it is inconceivable that any judge in Los Angeles would expect anything but adverse criticism from it in the event probation were granted. Yet such criticism after final disposition of the proceedings would clearly have been privileged. Hence, this editorial, given the most intimidating construction it will bear, did no more than threaten future adverse criticism which was reasonably to be expected anyway in the event of a lenient disposition of the pending case. To regard it, therefore, as in itself a substantial influence upon the course of justice would be to impute to judges a lack of firmness, wisdom, or honor,—which we cannot accept as a major premise. * * *

The other two editorials, publication of which was fined below, are set out in the lower margin. [Omitted here.] With respect to these two editorials, there is no divergence of conclusions among the members of this Court. We are all of the opinion that, upon any fair construction, their possible influence on the course of justice can be dismissed as negligible, and that the Constitution compels us to set aside the convictions as unpermissible exercises of the state's power. In view of the foregoing discussion of "Probation for Gorillas?", analysis of these editorials and their setting is deemed unnecessary.

The Bridges Telegram. While a motion for a new trial was pending in a case involving a dispute between an A. F. of L. union and a C. I. O. union of which Bridges was an officer, he either caused to be published or acquiesced in the publication of a telegram which he had sent to the Secretary of Labor. The telegram referred to the judge's decision as "outrageous"; said that attempted enforcement of it would tie up the port of Los Angeles and involve the entire Pacific Coast; and concluded with the announcement that the C. I. O. union, representing some twelve thousand members, did "not intend to allow state courts to override the majority vote of members in choosing its officers and representatives and to override the National Labor Relations Board."

Apparently Bridges' conviction is not rested at all upon his use of the word "outrageous." The remainder of that telegram fairly construed appears to be a statement that if the court's decree should be enforced there would be a strike. It is not claimed that such a strike would have been in violation of the terms of the decree, nor that in any other way it would have run afoul of the law of California. On no construction, therefore, can the telegram be taken as a threat either by Bridges or the union to follow an illegal course of action.

Moreover, this statement of Bridges was made to the Secretary of Labor, who is charged with official duties in connection with the prevention of strikes. Whatever the cause might be if a strike was threatened or possible the Secretary was entitled to receive all available information. Indeed, the Supreme Court of California recognized that, publication in the newspapers aside, in sending the message to the Secretary, Bridges was exercising the right of petition to a duly accredited representative of the United States Government, a right protected by the First Amendment. * * *

In looking at the reason advanced in support of the judgment of contempt, we find that here, too, the possibility of causing unfair disposition of a pending case is the major justification asserted. And here again the gist of the offense, according to the court below, is intimidation.

Let us assume that the telegram could be construed as an announcement of Bridges' intention to call a strike, something which, it is admitted, neither the general law of California nor the court's decree prohibited. With an eye on the realities of the situation, we cannot assume that Judge Schmidt was unaware of the possibility of a strike as a consequence of his decision. If he was not intimidated by the facts themselves, we do not believe that the most explicit statement of them could have sidetracked the course of justice. Again, we find exaggeration in the conclusion that the utterance even "tended" to interfere with justice. If there was electricity in the atmosphere, it was generated by the facts; the charge added by the Bridges telegram can be dismissed as negligible. The words of Mr. Justice Holmes, spoken in reference to very different facts, seem entirely applicable here: "I confess that I cannot find in all this or in the evidence in the case anything that would have affected a mind of reasonable fortitude, and still less can I find there anything that obstructed the administration of justice in any sense that I possibly can give to those words." Toledo Newspaper Co. v. United States, 247 U. S. 402, 425.

Reversed.

[MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER delivered a dissenting opinion in which CHIEF JUSTICE STONE, MR. JUSTICE ROBERTS and MR. JUSTICE BYRNES concurred.]

NOTE

1. The principal case was followed in Pennekamp v. Florida, 328 U. S. 331, 90 L. ed. 1295, 66 Sup. Ct. 1029 (1946) and Craig v. Harney, 331 U. S. 367, 91 L. ed. 1546, 67 Sup. Ct. 1249 (1947), the Supreme Court reversing convictions of contempt in both cases. Chief Justice Vinson and Justices Frankfurter and Jackson dissented in the latter case. The scope of the power to punish for contempt when publications directly tend to prevent the proper discharge of judicial functions is discussed in Nelles and King, Contempt by Publication, 28 Col. L. Rev. 401 (1928). See also Note, 17 U. of Chi. L. Rev. 540 (1950).

DE JONGE v. OREGON.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1937.
299 U. S. 353, 81 L. ed. 278, 57 Sup. Ct. 255.

[Dirk De Jonge was convicted on an indictment charging violation of the Oregon Criminal Syndicalism Law. The evidence showed that he was a member of the Communist Party; that he presided over and otherwise participated in the public meeting held in Portland, Oregon, under the auspices of the Communist Party; that the meeting was held to protest against illegal raids on workers' halls and homes, and against the shooting of striking longshoremen by the Portland police; and that at the meeting there were no unlawful acts done, nor any advocacy of criminal syndicalism. The Supreme Court of Oregon affirmed the conviction on the ground that there was evidence to show, and the indictment had charged, that the Communist Party at other times and places, in Oregon, had taught and advocated criminal syndicalism. De Jonge appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States.]

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE HUGHES delivered the opinion of the Court.

* * *

While the States are entitled to protect themselves from the abuse of the privileges of our institutions through an attempted substitution of force and violence in the place of peaceful political action in order to effect revolutionary changes in government, none of our decisions go to the length of sustaining such a curtailment of the right of free speech and assembly as the Oregon statute demands in its present application. * * *

Freedom of speech and of the press are fundamental rights which are safeguarded by the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution. * * * The right of peaceable assembly is a right cognate to those of free speech and free press and is equally fundamental. As this Court said in United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 552: "The very idea of a government, republican in form, implies a right on the part of its citizens to meet peaceably for consultation in respect to public affairs and to petition for a redress of grievances." The First Amendment of the Federal Constitution expressly guarantees that right against abridgement by Congress. But explicit mention there does not argue exclusion elsewhere. For the right is one that cannot be denied without violating those fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at the base of all civil and political institutions—principles which the Fourteenth Amendment embodies in the general terms of its due process clause. Hebert v. Louisiana, 272 U. S. 312, 316; Powell v. Alabama, 287 U. S. 45, 67; Grosjean v. American Press Co., 297 U. S. 233.

These rights may be abused by using speech or press or assembly in order to incite to violence and crime. The people through their legislatures may protect themselves against that abuse. But the legislative intervention can find constitutional justification only by dealing with the abuse. The rights themselves must not be curtailed. The greater the importance of safeguarding the community from incitements to the overthrow of our institutions by force and violence, the more imperative is the need to preserve inviolate the constitutional rights of free speech, free press and free assembly in order to maintain the opportunity for free political discussion, to the end that government may be responsive to the will of the people and that changes, if desired, may be obtained by peaceful means. Therein lies the security of the Republic, the very foundation of constitutional government.

It follows from these considerations that, consistently with the Federal Constitution, peaceable assembly for lawful discussion cannot be made a crime. The holding of meetings for peaceable political action cannot be proscribed. Those who assist in the conduct of such meetings cannot be branded as criminals on that score. The question, if the rights of free speech and peaceable assembly are to be preserved, is not as to the auspices under which the meeting is held but as to its purpose; not as to the relations of the speakers, but whether their utterances transcend the bounds of the freedom of speech which the Constitution protects. If the persons assembling have committed crimes elsewhere, if they have formed or are engaged in a conspiracy against the public peace and order, they may be prosecuted for their conspiracy or other violation of valid laws. But it is a different matter when the State, instead of prosecuting them for such offenses, seizes upon mere participation in the peaceable assembly and a lawful public discussion as the basis for a criminal charge.

We are not called upon to review the findings of the state court as to the objectives of the Communist Party. Notwithstanding those objectives, the defendant still enjoyed his personal right of free speech and to take part in a peaceable assembly having a lawful purpose, although called by that Party. The defendant was none the less entitled to discuss the public issues of the day and thus in a lawful manner, without incitement to violence or crime, to seek redress of alleged grievances. That was of the essence of his guaranteed personal liberty.

We hold that the Oregon statute as applied to the particular charge as defined by the state court is repugnant to the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The judgment of conviction is reversed and the cause is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion. Reversed.

MR. JUSTICE STONE took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

NOTES

1. In Hague v. Committee for Industrial Organization, 307 U. S. 496, 83 L. ed. 1423, 59 Sup. Ct. 954 (1939) the constitutional protection afforded to the rights of assembly and speech on public streets and in public parks was in issue. An ordinance of Jersey City, New Jersey, which forbade parades on public streets or public assemblies in public parks and public buildings without prior permission of a public official, who was required to grant such permission unless he concluded that rioting or disturbance of the peace would ensue, was held void on its face because the standard prescribed did not sufficiently restrain the discretion to be exercised by the official. Justices McReynolds and Butler dissented.

2. In recent years the introduction into political, religious and advertising campaigns of sound devices on the public streets and in parks and other public places in an effort to capture the attention of frequently unwilling listeners has resulted in the enactment of municipal ordinances for the purpose of prohibiting or restricting their use. An ordinance forbidding the use of any radio device, mechanical device or loud speaker on public streets or public places without permission of the chief of police was held invalid on its face, as applied to a Jehovah's Witness lecture, in Saia v. New York, 334 U. S. 558, 92 L. ed. 1574, 68 Sup. Ct. 1148 (1948). The court found that the ordinance established a previous restraint on the right of free speech, that it prescribed no standards for the control of administrative discretion, and thus had all the vices of regulations previously held invalid in Lovell v. Griffin and Hague v. C. I. O. Justices Reed, Frankfurter, Jackson and Burton dissented. The majority stressed the importance of the loud speaker in political campaigning and characterized it as an "indispensable instrument of effective public speech." The dissenting opinions emphasized the intrusions of privacy resulting from loud noises and the importance of shielding the public from the abuses of sound equipment.

The following year, in Kovacs v. Cooper, 336 U. S. 77, 93 L. ed. 513, 69 Sup. Ct. 448, 10 A. L. R. (2d) 608 (1949), another five-to-four decision, the court upheld an ordinance forbidding altogether the use of sound amplifiers attached to vehicles which should emit loud or raucous noises, as a valid exercise of the police power in regulating the use of public streets. The dissenting justices (Black, Douglas, Murphy and Rutledge) viewed the decision as repudiating the Saia opinion and denying to speech amplifiers the constitutional shelter recognized in that decision. Mr. Justice Jackson, concurring, also agreed that the Saia doctrine had been repudiated. He added: "Comparison of this our 1949 decision with our 1948 decision, I think, will pretty hopelessly confuse municipal authorities as to what they may or may not do." For discussions of these cases, see Comment, 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 416 (1949); Note, 58 Yale L. J. 335 (1949); Note, 3 Rutgers L. Rev. 250 (1949).

3. In Public Utilities Commission v. Pollak, 343 U. S. 451, 96 L. ed. 1068, 72 Sup. Ct. 813 (1952) the principal question was whether in the District of Columbia a street railway company was precluded from receiving and amplifying radio programs through loud speakers in its passenger vehicles. The programs consisted mainly of music interspersed with commercials. The Public Utilities Commission of the District, after notice, investigation and public hearings, concluded that this practice did not interfere with public convenience, comfort and safety, but tended to improve the public service. The Supreme Court, weighing the objections raised on behalf of the "captive audience," could discover under the circumstances no invasion of any right of privacy allegedly guaranteed by the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment or any asserted "freedom of attention" protected by the First Amendment. Mr. Justice Black concurred specially. Mr. Justice Douglas dissented. Mr. Justice Frankfurter, himself a member of the "captive audience," felt that his feelings were "so strongly engaged as a victim of the practice in controversy" that he should not participate.

THOMAS v. COLLINS.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1945.

323 U. S. 516, 89 L. ed. 430, 65 Sup. Ct. 315.

[Section 5 of a Texas statute required every labor organizer to register with and procure an organizer's card from a designated state official before "soliciting" persons to join a labor union, and the statute authorized injunction proceedings to enforce it. As part of a campaign to organize the workers in a plant near Pelly, Texas, a mass meeting was arranged to be held in the city hall of that town. Thomas, a union official, went from Detroit to Pelly for the sole purpose of speaking at this meeting. Six hours before the meeting a restraining order was issued by a Texas court, enjoining Thomas from speaking without an organizer's card. He nevertheless spoke at the meeting without a card, and in the course of his speech urged his hearers generally to join a union and also asked an individual by name to become a member. A warrant issued for his arrest on a charge of contempt of the restraining order. By a habeas corpus proceeding his case eventually reached the Supreme Court of the United States. That

Court reversed a judgment of the Supreme Court of Texas which had affirmed a contempt sentence of three days in jail and a fine of $100. The Texas court had sustained the statute on the theory that it "affects only the right of one to engage in the business as a paid organizer, and not the mere right of an individual to express his views on the merits of the union."]

MR. JUSTICE RUTLEDGE delivered the opinion of the Court.

* * * Finally, as the case is presented here, Texas apparently would rest the validity of the judgment exclusively upon the specific individual solicitation of O'Sullivan, and would throw out of account the general invitation, made at the same time, to all nonunion workers in the audience. However, the case cannot be disposed of on such a basis. The Texas Supreme Court made no distinction between the general and the specific invitations. Nor did the District Court. The record shows that the restraining order was issued in explicit anticipation of the speech and to restrain Thomas from uttering in its course any language which could be taken as solicitation. The motion for the fiat in contempt was filed and the fiat itself was issued on account of both invitations. The order adjudging Thomas in contempt was in general terms, finding that he had violated the restraining order, without distinction between the solicitations set forth in the petition and proved as violations. The sentence was a single penalty. In this state of the record it must be taken that the order followed the prayer of the motion and the fiat's recital, and that the penalty was imposed on account of both invitations. The judgment therefore must be affirmed as to both or as to neither. * * *

That the State has power to regulate labor unions with a view to protecting the public interest is, as the Texas court said, hardly to be doubted. They cannot claim special immunity from regulation. Such regulation however, whether aimed at fraud or other abuses, must not trespass upon the domains set apart for free speech and free assembly.
* * *

In applying these principles to the facts of this case we put aside the broader contentions both parties have made and confine our decisions to the narrow question whether the application made of § 5 in this case contravenes the First Amendment.

The present application does not involve the solicitation of funds or property. Neither § 5 nor the restraining order purports to prohibit or regulate solicitation of funds, receipt of money, its management, distribution, or any other financial matter. Other sections of the Act deal with such things. And on the record Thomas neither asked nor accepted funds or property for the union at the time of his address or while he was in Texas. Neither did he "take applications" for membership, though he offered to do so "if it was necessary"; or ask anyone to join a union at any other time than the occasion of the Pelly mass meeting and in the course of his address.

Thomas went to Texas for one purpose and one only—to make the speech in question. Its whole object was publicly to proclaim the advantages of workers' organization and to persuade workmen to join Local No. 1002 as part of a campaign for members. These also were the sole objects of the meeting. The campaign, and the meeting, were incidents of an impending election for collective bargaining agent, previously ordered by national authority pursuant to the guaranties of national law. * * * The occasion was clearly protected. The speech was an essential part of the occasion, unless all meaning and purpose were to be taken from it. And the invitations, both general and particular, were parts of the speech, inseparable incidents of the occasion and of all that was said or done.

That there was restriction upon Thomas' right to speak and the rights of the workers to hear what he had to say, there can be no doubt. The threat of the restraining order, backed by the power of contempt, and of arrest for crime, hung over every word. A speaker in such circumstances could avoid the words "solicit," "invite," "join." It would be impossible to avoid the idea. The statute requires no specific formula. It is not contended that only the use of the word "solicit" would violate the prohibition. Without such a limitation, the statute forbids any language which conveys, or reasonably could be found to convey, the meaning of invitation. That Thomas chose to meet the issue squarely, not to hide in ambiguous phrasing, does not counteract this fact. General words create different and often particular impressions on different minds. No speaker, however careful, can convey exactly his meaning, or the same meaning, to the different members of an audience. How one might "laud unionism," as the State and the State Supreme Court concede Thomas was free to do, yet in these circumstances not imply an invitation, is hard to conceive. This is the nub of the case, which the State fails to meet because it cannot do so. Workmen do not lack capacity for making rational connections. They would understand, or some would, that the president of U. A. W. and vice president of C. I. O., addressing an organization meeting, was not urging merely a philosophic attachment to abstract principles of unionism, disconnected from the business immediately at hand. The feat would be incredible for a national leader, addressing such a meeting, lauding unions and their principles, urging adherence to union philosophy, not also and thereby to suggest attachment to the union by becoming a member. * * *

The assembly was entirely peaceable, and had no other than a wholly lawful purpose. The statements forbidden were not in themselves unlawful, had no tendency to incite to unlawful action, involved no element of clear and present, grave and immediate danger to the public welfare. Moreover, the State has shown no justification for placing restrictions on the use of the word "solicit." We have here nothing comparable to the case where use of the word "fire" in a crowded theater creates a clear and present danger which the State may undertake to avoid or against which it may protect. Schenck v. United States, 249 U. S. 47. We cannot say that "solicit" in this setting is such a dangerous word. So far as free speech alone is concerned, there can be no ban or restriction or burden placed on the use of such a word except on showing of exceptional circumstances where the public safety, morality or health is involved or some other substantial interest of the community is at stake.

If therefore use of the word or language equivalent in meaning was illegal here, it was so only because the statute and the order forbade the particular speaker to utter it. When legislation or its application can confine labor leaders on such occasions to innocuous and abstract discussion of the virtues of trade unions and so becloud even this with doubt, uncertainty and the risk of penalty, freedom of speech for them will be at an end. A restriction so destructive of the right of public discussion, without greater or more imminent danger to the public interest than existed in this case, is incompatible with the freedoms secured by the First Amendment. * * *

Apart from its "business practice" theory, the State contends that § 5 is not inconsistent with freedom of speech and assembly, since this is merely a previous identification requirement which, according to the state court's decision, gives the Secretary of State only "ministerial, not discretionary" authority.

How far the State can require previous identification by one who undertakes to exercise the rights secured by the First Amendment has been largely undetermined. * * *

Lawful public assemblies, involving no element of grave and immediate danger to an interest the State is entitled to protect, are not instruments of harm which require previous identification of the speakers. And the right either of workmen or of unions under these conditions to assemble and discuss their own affairs is as fully protected by the Constitution as the right of businessmen, farmers, educators, political party members or others to assemble and discuss their affairs and to enlist the support of others. * * *

If the exercise of the rights of free speech and free assembly cannot be made a crime, we do not think this can be accomplished by the device of requiring previous registration as a condition for exercising them and making such a condition the foundation for restraining in advance their exercise and for imposing a penalty for violating such a restraining order. So long as no more is involved than exercise of the rights of free speech and free assembly, it is immune to such a restriction. If one who solicits support for the cause of labor may be required to register as a condition to the exercise of his right to make a public speech, so may he who seeks to rally support for any social, business, religious or political cause. We think a requirement that one must register before he undertakes to make a public speech to enlist support for a lawful movement is quite incompatible with the requirements of the First Amendment. * * *

The judgment is

Reversed.

[In a separate opinion Mr. JUSTICE JACKSON said: "I concur in the opinion of Mr. JUSTICE RUTLEDGE that this case falls in a category of a public speech, rather than that of practicing a vocation as solicitor." Taking the opposite view, four justices dissented. CHIEF JUSTICE STONE, and JUSTICES REED and FRANKFURTER joined in the dissenting opinion written by JUSTICE ROBERTS. They thought that there was insufficient reason for rejecting the view of the Texas court that the statute applied only to paid union organizers, and imposed no more than a reasonable requirement of registration for the purpose of identification, pointing out that under the statute, "No fee is charged. The card may be obtained by mail. To comply with the law the appellant need only have furnished his name and affiliation, and his credentials. The statute nowise regulates, curtails or bans his activities. * * * If one disseminating news for his own profit may rightfully be required to identify himself, so may one who, for profit, solicits persons to join an organization."]

NOTES

1. In Hill v. Florida ex rel. Watson, 325 U. S. 538, 89 L. ed. 1782, 65 Sup. Ct. 1373 (1945) a Florida statute providing for the compulsory licensing of labor union business agents and requiring annual reports from unions was held to be inconsistent with the purposes of the National Labor Relations Act.

2. United States v. Congress of Industrial Organizations, 335 U. S. 106, 92 L. ed. 1849, 68 Sup. Ct. 1349 (1948) grew out of the provision in the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947 prohibiting expenditures by labor organizations in connection with federal elections. An indictment charging that defendant and its president violated this provision by publishing in its weekly periodical a statement by its president urging members to vote for a certain candidate for Congress was dismissed by a federal district court on the ground that it unconstitutionally abridged the freedoms of the First Amendment. On appeal by the government, the Supreme Court held by a five-judge majority that the publication did not violate the statute and thus avoided passing upon the constitutional issue. The concurring justices (Black, Douglas, Murphy and Rutledge), while agreeing that the indictment should be dismissed, said that the construction placed on the statute by the majority was unwarranted, that the constitutional issue should therefore be decided, and that by its "indiscriminate blanketing of every expenditure made in connection with an election" the statute operated as a prior restraint upon expression which infringed the First Amendment.

BEAUHARNAIS v. ILLINOIS.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1952.
343 U. S. 250, 96 L. ed. 919, 72 Sup. Ct. 725.

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER delivered the opinion of the Court.

The petitioner was convicted upon information in the Municipal Court of Chicago of violating § 224a of Division 1 of the Illinois Penal Code, Ill. Rev. Stat. 1949, c. 38, § 471. He was fined $200. The section provides:

"It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to manufacture, sell, or offer for sale, advertise or publish, present or exhibit in any public place in this state any lithograph, moving picture, play, drama or sketch, which publication or exhibition portrays depravity, criminality, unchastity, or lack of virtue of a class of citizens, of any race, color, creed or religion which said publication or exhibition exposes the citizens of any race, color, creed or religion to contempt, derision, or obloquy or which is productive of breach of the peace or riots. * * *

Beauharnais challenged the statute as violating the liberty of speech and of the press guaranteed as against the States by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, and as too vague, under the restrictions implicit in the same Clause, to support conviction for crime. The Illinois courts rejected these contentions and sustained defendant's conviction. 408 Ill. 512, 97 N. E. 2d 343. We granted certiorari in view of the serious questions raised concerning the limitations imposed by the Fourteenth Amendment on the power of a State to punish utterances promoting friction among racial and religious groups. 342 U. S. 809.

The information, cast generally in the terms of the statute, charged that Beauharnais "did unlawfully * * * exhibit in public places lithographs, which publications portray depravity, criminality, unchastity or lack of virtue of citizens of Negro race and color and which exposes [sic] citizens of Illinois of the Negro race and color to contempt, derision, or obloquy * * *." The lithograph complained of was a leaflet setting forth a petition calling on the Mayor and City Council of Chicago "to halt the further encroachment, harassment and invasion of white people, their property, neighborhoods and persons, by the Negro * * *." Below was a call for "One million self respecting white people in Chicago to unite * * *" with the statement added that "If persuasion and the need to prevent the white race from becoming mongrelized by the negro will not unite us, then the aggressions * * * rapes, robberies, knives, guns and marijuana of the negro, surely will." This, with more language, similar if not so violent, concluded with an attached application for membership in the White Circle League of America, Inc.

The testimony at the trial was substantially undisputed. From it the jury could find that Beauharnais was president of the White Circle League; that, at a meeting on January 6, 1950, he passed out bundles of the lithographs in question, together with other literature, to volunteers for distribution on downtown Chicago street corners the following day; that he carefully organized that distribution, giving detailed instructions for it; and that the leaflets were in fact distributed on January 7 in accordance with his plan and instructions. The court, together with other charges on burden of proof and the like, told the jury "if you find * * * that the defendant, Joseph Beauharnais, did * * * manufacture, sell, or offer for sale, advertise or publish, present or exhibit in any public place the lithograph * * * then you are to find the defendant guilty * * *." He refused to charge the jury, as requested by the defendant, that in order to convict they must find "that the article complained of was likely to produce a clear and present danger of a serious substantive evil that rises far above public inconvenience, annoyance or unrest." Upon this evidence and these instructions, the jury brought in the conviction here for review.

The statute before us is not a catchall enactment left at large by the State court which applied it. Cf. Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U. S. 88; Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U. S. 296, 307. It is a law specifically directed at a defined evil, its language drawing from history and practices in Illinois and in more than a score of other jurisdictions a meaning confirmed by the Supreme Court of that State in upholding this conviction. We do not, therefore, parse the statute as grammarians or treat it as an abstract exercise in lexicography. * * *

The Illinois Supreme Court tells us that § 224a "is a form of criminal libel law." 408 Ill. 512, 517, 97 N. E. 2d 343, 346. The defendant, the trial court and the Supreme Court consistently treated it as such. The defendant offered evidence tending to prove the truth of parts of the utterance, and the courts below considered and disposed of this offer in terms of ordinary criminal libel precedents. Section 224a does not deal with the defense of truth, but by the Illinois Constitution, Art. II, § 4, S. H. A., "in all trials for libel, both civil and criminal, the truth, when published with good motives and for justifiable ends, shall be a sufficient defense." See also Ill. Rev. Stat. 1949, c. 38, § 404. Similarly, the action of the trial court in deciding as a matter of law the libelous character of the utterance, leaving to the jury only the question of publication, follows the settled rule in prosecutions for libel in Illinois and other States. Moreover, the Supreme Court's characterization of the words prohibited by the statute as those "liable to cause violence and disorder" paraphrases the traditional justification for punishing libels criminally, namely their "tendency to cause breach of the peace."

Libel of an individual was a common-law crime, and thus criminal in the colonies. Indeed, at common law, truth or good motives was no defense. In the first decades after the adoption of the Constitution, this was changed by judicial decision, statute or constitution in most States, but nowhere was there any suggestion that the crime of libel be abolished. Today, every American jurisdiction—the forty-eight States, the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii and Puerto Rico—punish libels directed at individuals. "There are certain well-defined and narrowly limited classes of speech, the prevention and punishment of which has never been thought to raise any Constitutional problem. These include the lewd and obscene, the profane, the libelous, and the insulting or 'fighting' words—those which by their very utterance inflict injury or tend to incite an immediate breach of the peace. It has been well observed that such utterances are no essential part of any exposition of ideas, and are of such slight social value as a step to truth that any benefit that may be derived from them is clearly outweighed by the social interest in order and morality. 'Resort to epithets or personal abuse is not in any proper sense communication of information or opinion safeguarded by the Constitution, and its punishment as a criminal act would raise no question under that instrument.' Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U. S. 296, 309, 310." Such were the views of a unanimous Court in Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U. S. 568, at pages 571-572.

No one will gainsay that it is libelous falsely to charge another with being a rapist, robber, carrier of knives and guns, user of marijuana. The precise question before us, then, is whether the protection of "liberty" in the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment prevents a State from punishing such libels—as criminal libel has been defined, limited and constitutionally recognized time out of mind—directed at designated collectivities and flagrantly disseminated. There is even authority, however dubious, that such utterances were also crimes at common law. It is certainly clear that some American jurisdictions have sanctioned their punishment under ordinary criminal libel statutes. We cannot say, however, that the question is concluded by history and practice. But if an utterance directed at an individual may be the object of criminal sanctions, we cannot deny to a State power to punish the same utterance directed at a defined group, unless we can say that this a wilful and purposeless restriction unrelated to the peace and well-being of the State.

Illinois did not have to look beyond her own borders or await the tragic experience of the last three decades to conclude that wilful purveyors of falsehood concerning racial and religious groups promote strife and tend powerfully to obstruct the manifold adjustments required for free, ordered life in a metropolitan, polyglot community. From the murder of the abolitionist Lovejoy in 1837 to the Cicero riots of 1951, Illinois has been the scene of exacerbated tension between races, often flaring into violence and destruction. In many of these outbreaks, utterances of the character here in question, so the Illinois legislature could conclude, played a significant part. The law was passed on June 29, 1917, at a time when the State was struggling to assimilate vast numbers of new inhabitants, as yet concentrated in discrete racial or national or religious groups—foreign-born brought to it by the crest of the great wave of immigration, and Negroes attracted by jobs in war plants and the allurements of northern claims. Nine years earlier, in the very city where the legislature sat, what is said to be the first northern race riot had cost the lives of six people, left hundreds of Negroes homeless and shocked citizens into action far beyond the borders of the State. Less than a month before the bill was enacted, East St. Louis had seen a day's rioting, prelude to an outbreak, only four days after the bill became law, so bloody that it led to Congressional investigation. A series of bombings had begun which was to culminate two years later in the awful race riot which held Chicago in its grip for seven days in the summer of 1919. Nor has tension and violence between the groups defined in the statute been limited in Illinois to clashes between whites and Negroes.

In the face of this history and its frequent obligato of extreme racial and religious propaganda, we would deny experience to say that the Illinois legislature was without reason in seeking ways to curb false or malicious defamation of racial and religious groups, made in public places and by means calculated to have a powerful emotional impact on those to whom it was presented. * * *

It may be argued, and weightily, that this legislation will not help matters; that tension and on occasion violence between racial and religious groups must be traced to causes more deeply embedded in our society than the rantings of modern Know-nothings. Only those lacking responsible humility will have a confident solution for problems as intractable as the frictions attributable to differences of race, color or religion. This being so, it would be out of bounds for the judiciary to deny the legislature a choice of policy, provided it is not unrelated to the problem and not forbidden by some explicit limitation on the State's power. That the legislative remedy might not in practice mitigate the evil, or might itself raise new problems, would only manifest once more the paradox of reform. It is the price to be paid for the trial-and-error inherent in legislative efforts to deal with obstinate social issues. * * *

Long ago this Court recognized that the economic rights of an individual may depend for the effectiveness of their enforcement on rights in the group, even though not formally corporate, to which he belongs. American Steel Foundries v. Tri-City Central Trades Council, 257 U. S. 184, 189. Such group-protection on behalf of the individual may, for all we know, be a need not confined to the part that a trade union plays in effectuating rights abstractly recognized as belonging to its members. It is not within our competence to confirm or deny claims of social scientists as to the dependence of the individual on the position of his racial or religious group in the community. It would, however, be arrant dogmatism, quite outside the scope of our authority in passing on the powers of a State, for us to deny that the Illinois Legislature may warrantably believe that a man's job and his educational opportunities and the dignity accorded him may depend as much on the reputation of the racial and religious group to which he willy-nilly belongs, as it does on his own merits. This being so, we are precluded from saying that speech concededly punishable when immediately directed at individuals cannot be outlawed if directed at groups with whose position and esteem in society the affiliated individual may be inextricably involved.

We are warned that the choice we permit the Illinois legislature here may be abused, that the law may be discriminatorily enforced; prohibiting libel of a creed or of a racial group, we are told, is but a step from prohibiting libel of a political party.

Every power may be abused, but the possibility of abuse is a poor reason for denying Illinois the power to adopt measures against criminal libels sanctioned by centuries of Anglo-American law. "While this Court sits" it retains and exercises authority to nullify action which encroaches on freedom of utterance under the guise of punishing libel. Of course discussion cannot be denied and the right, as well as the duty, of criticism must not be stifled.

The scope of the statute before us, as construed by the Illinois court, disposes of the contention that the conduct prohibited by the law is so ill-defined that judges and juries in applying the statute and men in acting cannot draw from it adequate standards to guide them. The clarifying construction and fixed usage which govern the meaning of the enactment before us were not present, so the Court found, in the New York law held invalid in Winters v. New York, 333 U. S. 507. Nor, thus construed and limited, is the act so broad that the general verdict of guilty on an indictment drawn in the statutory language might have been predicated on constitutionally protected conduct. On this score, the conviction here reviewed differs from those upset in Stromberg v. California, 283 U. S. 359; Thornhill v. Alabama, supra, and Terminiello v. Chicago, 337 U. S. 1. Even the latter case did not hold that the unconstitutionality of a statute is established because the speech prohibited by it raises a ruckus. * * *

As to the defense of truth, Illinois in common with many States requires a showing not only that the utterance state the facts, but also that the publication be made "with good motives and for justifiable ends." Ill. Const. Art. II, § 4. Both elements are necessary if the defense is to prevail. What has been called "the common sense of American criminal law," as formulated, with regard to necessary safeguards in criminal libel prosecutions, in the New York constitution of 1821, Art. VII, § 8, has been adopted in terms by Illinois. The teaching of a century and a half of criminal libel prosecutions in this country would go by the board if we were to hold that Illinois was not within her rights in making this combined requirement. Assuming that defendant's offer of proof directed to a part of the defense was adequate, it did not satisfy the entire requirement which Illinois could exact.

Libellous utterances, not being within the area of constitutionally protected speech, it is unnecessary, either for us or for the State courts, to consider the issues behind the phrase "clear and present danger." Certainly no one would contend that obscene speech, for example, may be punished only upon a showing of such circumstances. Libel, as we have seen, is in the same class.

We find no warrant in the Constitution for denying to Illinois the power to pass the law here under attack. But it bears repeating—although it should not—that our finding that the law is not constitutionally objectionable carries no implication of approval of the wisdom of the legislation or of its efficacy. These questions may raise doubts in our minds as well as in others. It is not for us, however, to make the legislative judgment. We are not at liberty to erect those doubts into fundamental law.

Affirmed.

[The question as to whether the guaranty of free speech, protected by the First Amendment against abridgment by Congress, is included in the Fourteenth Amendment and hence equally protected against state action, was not dealt with in the opinion of the Court, which did not specifically rely on the First Amendment. MR. JUSTICE JACKSON, dissenting, answered this question in the negative, saying: "The history of criminal libel in America convinces me that the Fourteenth Amendment did not 'incorporate' the First, that the powers of Congress and of the States over this subject are not of the same dimensions, and that because Congress probably could not enact this law it does not follow that the States may not." On the other hand, MR. JUSTICE BLACK, MR. JUSTICE REED and MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS adhered to the view expressed in previous cases that the Fourteenth Amendment embodies the First Amendment guaranties. MR. JUSTICE JACKSON, while agreeing with the majority that a state has power to bring classes "of any race, color, creed, or religion" within the protection of its libel laws, dissented on the ground that the Illinois statute, as applied in the instant case, dispensed with accepted safeguards for the accused, in that rulings of the trial court precluded the defenses of truth, fair comment, and privilege, and that no probability of a "clear and present danger" was shown. MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, in a separate dissenting opinion, expressed the view that free speech has a preferred position as contrasted to some other civil rights. He said: "My view is that if in any case other public interests are to override the plain command of the First Amendment, the peril of speech must be clear and present, leaving no room for argument, raising no doubts as to the necessity of curbing speech in order to prevent disaster." MR. JUSTICE REED, with whom MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS also concurred, dissented on the ground that, assuming the power of a state to pass group libel laws, the conviction could not stand since the statute contained words of such ambiguous meaning and uncertain connotation as "virtue," "derision," or "obloquy." MR. JUSTICE BLACK, also with the concurrence of MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, held that the statute violated the right of free speech. Excerpts from this dissenting opinion follow.]

This case is here because Illinois inflicted criminal punishment on Beauharnais for causing the distribution of leaflets in the city of Chicago. The conviction rests on the leaflet's contents, not on the time, manner or place of distribution. Beauharnais is head of an organization that opposes amalgamation and favors segregation of white and colored people. After discussion, an assembly of his group decided to petition the mayor and council of Chicago to pass laws for segregation. Volunteer members of the group agreed to stand on street corners, solicit signers to petitions addressed to the city authorities, and distribute leaflets giving information about the group, its beliefs and its plans. In carrying out this program a solicitor handed out a leaflet which was the basis of this prosecution. * * *

The Court's holding here and the constitutional doctrine behind it leave the rights of assembly, petition, speech and press almost completely at the mercy of state legislative, executive, and judicial agencies. I say "almost" because state curtailment of these freedoms may still be invalidated if a majority of this Court conclude that a particular infringement is "without reason," or is "a wilful and purposeless restriction unrelated to the peace and well being of the State." But lest this encouragement should give too much hope as to how and when this Court might protect these basic freedoms from state invasion, we are cautioned that state legislatures must be left free to "experiment" and to make "legislative" judgments. We are told that mistakes may be made during the legislative process of curbing public opinion. In such event the Court fortunately does not leave those mistakenly curbed, or any of us for that matter, unadvised. Consolation can be sought and must be found in the philosophical reflection that state legislative error in stifling speech and press "is the price to be paid for the trial-and-error inherent in legislative efforts to deal with obstinate social issues." My own belief is that no legislature is charged with the duty or vested with the power to decide what public issues Americans can discuss. In a free country that is the individual's choice, not the state's. State experimentation in curbing freedom of expression is startling and frightening doctrine in a country dedicated to self-government by its people. I reject the holding that either state or nation can punish people for having their say in matters of public concern. * * *

The Court condones this expansive state censorship by painstakingly analogizing it to the law of criminal libel. As a result of this refined analysis, the Illinois statute emerges labeled a "group libel law." This label may make the Court's holding more palatable for those who sustain it, but the sugar-coating does not make the censorship less deadly. However tagged, the Illinois law is not that criminal libel which has been "defined, limited and constitutionally recognized time out of mind". For as "constitutionally recognized" that crime has provided for punishment of false, malicious, scurrilous charges against individuals, not against huge groups. This limited scope of the law of criminal libel is of no small importance. It has confined state punishment of speech and expression to the narrowest of areas involving nothing more than purely private feuds. Every expansion of the law of criminal libel so as to punish discussions of matters of public concern means a corresponding invasion of the area dedicated to free expression by the First Amendment. * * * Unless I misread history the majority is giving libel a more expansive scope and more respectable status than it was ever accorded even in the Star Chamber. For here it is held to be punishable to give publicity to any picture, moving picture, play, drama or sketch, or any printed matter which a judge may find unduly offensive to any race, color, creed or religion. In other words, in arguing for or against the enactment of laws that may differently affect huge groups, it is now very dangerous indeed to say something critical of one of the groups. And any "person, firm or corporation" can be tried for this crime. "Person, firm or corporation" certainly includes a book publisher, newspaper, radio or television station, candidate or even a preacher. * * *

This Act sets up a system of state censorship which is at war with the kind of free government envisioned by those who forced adoption of our Bill of Rights. The motives behind the state law may have been to do good. But the same can be said about most laws making opinions punishable as crimes. History indicates that urges to do good have led to the burning of books and even to the burning of "witches."

No rationalization on a purely legal level can conceal the fact that state laws like this one present a constant overhanging threat to freedom of speech, press and religion. Today Beauharnais is punished for publicly expressing strong views in favor of segregation. Ironically enough, Beauharnais, convicted of crime in Chicago, would probably be given a hero's reception in many other localities, if not in some parts of Chicago itself. Moreover, the same kind of state law that makes Beauharnais a criminal for advocating segregation in Illinois can be utilized to send people to jail in other states for advocating equality and nonsegregation. What Beauharnais said in his leaflet is mild compared with usual arguments on both sides of racial controversies.

We are told that freedom of petition and discussion are in no danger "while this Court sits." This case raises considerable doubt. Since those who peacefully petition for changes in the law are not to be protected "while this Court sits," who is? I do not agree that the Constitution leaves freedom of petition, assembly, speech, press or worship at the mercy of a case-by-case, day-by-day majority of this Court. I had supposed that our people could rely for their freedom on the Constitution's commands, rather than on the grace of this Court on an individual case basis. To say that a legislative body can, with this Court's approval, make it a crime to petition for and publicly discuss proposed legislation seems as farfetched to me as it would be to say that a valid law could be enacted to punish a candidate for President for telling the people his views. I think the First Amendment, with the Fourteenth, "absolutely" forbids such laws without any "ifs" or "buts" or "whercases." Whatever the danger, if any, in such public discussions, it is a danger the Founders deemed outweighed by the danger incident to the stifling of thought and speech. The Court does not act on this view of the Founders. It calculates what it deems to be the danger of public discussion, holds the scales are tipped on the side of state suppression, and upholds state censorship. This method of decision offers little protection to First Amendment liberties "while this Court sits."

If there be minority groups who hail this holding as their victory, they might consider the possible relevancy of this ancient remark:

"Another such victory and I am undone."

NOTES

1. In Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, 315 U. S. 568, 86 L. ed. 1031, 62 Sup. Ct. 766 (1942) the court upheld the power of a state to punish, by a statute "narrowly drawn," one who addresses "fighting words" to another, i. e., offensive or derisive words plainly tending to provoke the addressee to acts of violence.

2. A speaker at a meeting which was itself the occasion of a public disturbance requiring police intervention, incited resentment against a crowd gathered outside to protest the meeting by attacking various political and racial groups, was convicted of violating an ordinance which provided that "all persons who shall make, aid, countenance or assist in making any improper noise, riot, disturbance, breach of the peace or diversion tending to a breach of the peace" should be deemed guilty of disorderly conduct. In charging the jury the trial court said that "breach of the peace" included a speech which stirred people to anger, invited public dispute or brought about a condition of unrest, or created a disturbance. This construction, to which no objection was taken either in the trial court or in the state appellate court, was held by a five-to-four majority of the Supreme Court to render the ordinance an infringement of the guaranty of free speech; and the fact that a conviction for violating possibly valid provisions of the ordinance may have been warranted by the evidence was held immaterial, since the verdict was a general one and might have rested on the invalid clauses. Chief Justice Vinson and Justices Frankfurter, Jackson and Burton dissented. Terminiello v. Chicago, 337 U. S. 1, 93 L. ed. 1131, 69 Sup. Ct. 894 (1949). See discussions of the case in 16 U. of Chi. L. Rev. 328 (1948), 49 Col. L. Rev. 1118 (1949), and 23 So. Cal. L. Rev. 356 (1950).

3. In Feiner v. New York, 340 U. S. 315, 95 L. ed. 295, 71 Sup. Ct. 303 (1951) a college student was convicted of disorderly conduct for making a speech on a street corner in Syracuse to publicize a meeting of the Young Progressives of America, his voice being carried over a loud-speaker system. His remarks—"in a loud, high pitched voice"—were derogatory of various public officials and the American Legion, and included an appeal to Negroes "to rise up in arms and fight for their rights." Some members of the audience expressed resentment and at least one threatened violence if the police did not act. The speaker was arrested after twice ignoring requests of the police to stop talking. A six-judge majority of the Supreme Court upheld this conviction on the ground that a clear danger of disorder was threatened and hence the action taken to preserve peace and order on the streets was no violation of defendant's right of free speech. Justice Black, dissenting, expressed the view that the defendant had been convicted for espousal of unpopular opinions. Justices Douglas and Minton, dissenting, denied that the record showed any likelihood of riot. "It shows an unsympathetic audience and the threat of one man to haul the speaker from the stage. It is against that kind of threat that speakers need police protection. If they do not receive it and instead the police throw their weight on the side of those who would break up the meetings, the police become the new censors of speech."

THORNHILL v. ALABAMA.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1940.

310 U. S. 88, 84 L. ed. 1093, 60 Sup. Ct. 736.

MR. JUSTICE MURPHY delivered the opinion of the Court.

Petitioner, Byron Thornhill, was convicted in the Circuit Court of Tuscaloosa County, Alabama, of the violation of § 3448 of the State Code of 1923. The Code section reads as follows:

"Section 3448. Loitering or picketing forbidden.—Any person or persons, who, without a just cause or legal excuse therefor, go near to or loiter about the premises or place of business of any other person, firm, corporation, or association of people, engaged in a lawful business, for the purpose, or with the intent of influencing, or inducing other persons not to trade with, buy from, sell to, have business dealings with, or be employed by such persons, firm, corporation, or association, or who picket the works or place of business of such other persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons, for the purpose of hindering, delaying, or interfering with or injuring any lawful business or enterprise of another, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; but nothing herein shall prevent any person from soliciting trade or business for a competitive business."

The complaint against petitioner is phrased substantially in the very words of the statute. The first and second counts charge that petitioner, without just cause or legal excuse, did "go near to or loiter about the premises" of the Brown Wood Preserving Company with the intent or purpose of influencing others to adopt one of enumerated courses of conduct. In the third count, the charge is that petitioner "did picket" the works of the Company "for the purpose of hindering, delaying or interfering with or injuring [its] lawful business." [Thornhill's conviction was affirmed by the Alabama Court of Appeals over his contention that § 3448 deprived him of the "right of peaceful assemblage," the "right of freedom of speech," and the "right to petition for redress."]

The proofs consist of the testimony of two witnesses for the prosecution. It appears that petitioner on the morning of his arrest was seen "in company with six or eight other men" "on the picket line" at the plant of the Brown Wood Preserving Company. Some weeks previously a strike order had been issued by a Union, apparently affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, which had as members all but four of the approximately one hundred employees of the plant. Since that time a picket line with two picket posts of six to eight men each had been maintained around the plant twenty-four hours a day. The picket posts appear to have been on Company property, "on a private entrance for employees, and not on any public road." One witness explained that practically all of the employees live on Company property and get their mail from a post office on Company property and that the Union holds its meetings on Company property. No demand was ever made upon the men not to come on the property. There is no testimony indicating the nature of the dispute between the Union and the Preserving Company, or the course of events which led to the issuance of the strike order, or the nature of the efforts for conciliation.

The Company scheduled a day for the plant to resume operations. One of the witnesses, Clarence Simpson, who was not a member of the Union, on reporting to the plant on the day indicated, was approached by petitioner who told him that "they were on strike and did not want anybody to go up there to work." None of the other employees said anything to Simpson, who testified: "Neither Mr. Thornhill nor any other employee threatened me on the occasion testified to. Mr. Thornhill approached me in a peaceful manner, and did not put me in fear; he did not appear to be mad." "I then turned and went back to the house, and did not go to work." The other witness, J. M. Walden, testified: "At the time Mr. Thornhill and Clarence Simpson were talking to each other, there was no one else present, and I heard no harsh words and saw nothing threatening in the manner of either man." For engaging in some or all of these activities, petitioner was arrested, charged, and convicted as described.

First. The freedom of speech and of the press, which are secured by the First Amendment against abridgment by the United States, are among the fundamental personal rights and liberties which are secured to all persons by the Fourteenth Amendment against abridgment by a State.

The safeguarding of these rights to the ends that men may speak as they think on matters vital to them and that falsehoods may be exposed through the processes of education and discussion is essential to free government. * * *

Third. Section 3448 has been applied by the state courts so as to prohibit a single individual from walking slowly and peacefully back and forth on the public sidewalk in front of the premises of an employer, without speaking to anyone, carrying a sign or placard on a staff above his head stating only the fact that the employer did not employ union men affiliated with the American Federation of Labor; the purpose of the described activity was concededly to advise customers and prospective customers of the relationship existing between the employer and its employees and thereby to induce such customers not to patronize the employer. O'Rourke v. Birmingham, 27 Ala. App. 133; 168 So. 206, cert. denied, 232 Ala. 355; 168 So. 209. The statute as thus authoritatively construed and applied leaves room for no exceptions based upon either the number of persons engaged in the proscribed activity, the peaceful character of their demeanor, the nature of their dispute with an employer, or the restrained character and the accurateness of the terminology used in notifying the public of the facts of the dispute.

The numerous forms of conduct proscribed by § 3448 are subsumed under two offenses: the first embraces the activities of all who "without just cause or legal excuse" "go near to or loiter about the premises" of any person engaged in a lawful business for the purpose of influencing or inducing others to adopt any of certain enumerated courses of action; the second, all who "picket" the place of business of any such person "for the purpose of hindering, delaying or interfering with or injuring any lawful business or enterprise of another." It is apparent that one or the other of the offenses comprehends every practicable method whereby the facts of a labor dispute may be publicized in the vicinity of the place of business of an employer. The phrase "without just cause or legal excuse" does not in any effective manner restrict the breadth of the regulation; the words themselves have no ascertainable meaning either inherent or historical. * * *

Fourth. We think that § 3448 is invalid on its face.

The freedom of speech and of the press guaranteed by the Constitution embraces at the least the liberty to discuss publicly and truthfully all matters of public concern without previous restraint or fear of subsequent punishment. * * * Freedom of discussion, if it would fulfill its historic function in this nation, must embrace all issues about which information is needed or appropriate to enable the members of society to cope with the exigencies of their period.

In the circumstances of our times the dissemination of information concerning the facts of a labor dispute must be regarded as within that area of free discussion that is guaranteed by the Constitution. Hague v. C. I. O., 307 U. S. 496; Schneider v. State, 308 U. S. 147, 155, 162-63. See Senn v. Tile Layers Union, 301 U. S. 468, 478. It is recognized now that satisfactory hours and wages and working conditions in industry and a bargaining position which makes these possible have an importance which is not less than the interests of those in the business or industry directly concerned. The health of the present generation and of those as yet unborn may depend on these matters, and the practices in a single factory may have economic repercussions upon a whole region and affect widespread systems of marketing. The merest glance at state and federal legislation on the subject demonstrates the force of the argument that labor relations are not matters of mere local or private concern. Free discussion concerning the conditions in industry and the causes of labor disputes appears to us indispensable to the effective and intelligent use of the processes of popular government to shape the destiny of modern industrial society. The issues raised by regulations, such as are challenged here, infringing upon the right of employees effectively to inform the public of the facts of a labor dispute are part of this larger problem. We concur in the observation of Mr. Justice Brandeis, speaking for the Court in Senn's case (301 U. S. at 478): "Members of a union might, without special statutory authorization by a State, make known the facts of a labor dispute, for freedom of speech is guaranteed by the Federal Constitution." * * *

The range of activities proscribed by § 3448, whether characterized as picketing or loitering or otherwise, embraces nearly every practicable, effective means whereby those interested—including the employees directly affected—may enlighten the public on the nature and causes of a labor dispute. The safeguarding of these means is essential to the securing of an informed and educated public opinion with respect to a matter which is of public concern. It may be that effective exercise of the means of advancing public knowledge may persuade some of those reached to refrain from entering into advantageous relations with the business establishment which is the scene of the dispute. Every expression of opinion on matters that are important has the potentiality of inducing action in the interests of one rather than another group in society. But the group in power at any moment may not impose penal sanctions on peaceful and truthful discussion of matters of public interest merely on a showing that others may thereby be persuaded to take action inconsistent with its interests. Abridgment of the liberty of such discussion can be justified only where the clear danger of substantive evils arises under circumstances affording no opportunity to test the merits of ideas by competition for acceptance in the market of public opinion. We hold that the danger of injury to an industrial concern is neither so serious nor so imminent as to justify the sweeping proscription of freedom of discussion embodied in § 3448.

The State urges that the purpose of the challenged statute is the protection of the community from the violence and breaches of the peace, which, it asserts, are the concomitants of picketing. The power and the duty of the State to take adequate steps to preserve the peace and to protect the privacy, the lives, and the property of its residents cannot be doubted. But no clear and present danger of destruction of life or property, or invasion of the right of privacy, or breach of the peace can be thought to be inherent in the activities of every person who approaches the premises of an employer and publicizes the facts of a labor dispute involving the latter. We are not now concerned with picketing en masse or otherwise conducted which might occasion such imminent and aggravated danger to these interests as to justify a statute narrowly drawn to cover the precise situation giving rise to the danger. Compare American Foundries v. Tri-City Council, 257 U. S. 184, 205. Section 3448 in question here does not aim specifically at serious encroachments on these interests and does not evidence any such care in balancing these interests against the interest of the community and that of the individual in freedom of discussion on matters of public concern.

It is not enough to say that § 3448 is limited or restricted in its application to such activity as takes place at the scene of the labor dispute. "[The] streets are natural and proper places for the dissemination of information and opinion; and one is not to have the exercise of his liberty of expression in appropriate places abridged on the plea that it may be exercised in some other place." Schneider v. State, 308 U. S. 147, 161, 163; Hague v. C. I. O., 307 U. S. 496, 515-16. The danger of breach of the peace or serious invasion of rights of property or privacy at the scene of a labor dispute is not sufficiently imminent in all cases to warrant the legislature in determining that such place is not appropriate for the range of activities outlawed by § 3448.

Reversed.

MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS is of the opinion that the judgment below should be affirmed.

NOTES

1. It is to be noted that the opinion in the Thornhill case concedes that picketing might on occasion take the form of mass intimidation and violence and hence is subject to reasonable regulation in the public interest. In Milk Wagon Drivers Union v. Meadowmoor Dairies, 312 U. S. 287, 85 L. ed. 836, 61 Sup. Ct. 552, 132 A. L. R. 1200 (1941), the Supreme Court upheld an Illinois injunction banning all picketing on the ground that the facts disclosed that the picketing was "set in a background of violence," and that the acts of violence were "neither episodic nor isolated." Justices Black, Reed and Douglas dissented.

2. That picketing—even peaceful picketing—is more than merely the dissemination of information concerning the facts of a labor dispute but is a species of coercion, since it involves patrol of the establishment picketed and may cut down its patronage, has been pointed out by many commentators. For discussions from various viewpoints of the problems involved, see Gregory, Peaceful Picketing and Freedom of Speech, 26 Am. Bar Assn. J. 709 (1940); Gregory, Labor and the Law (1941), 341 et seq.; Teller, Picketing and Free Speech, 56 Harv. L. Rev. 180 (1942); Dodd, Picketing and Free Speech: A Dissent, 56 Harv. L. Rev. 513 (1943); Teller, Picketing and Free Speech: A Reply, 56 Harv. L. Rev. 532 (1943); Armstrong, Where Are We Going with Picketing? 36 Cal. L. Rev. 1, 30-34 (1948).

3. In Carlson v. California, 310 U. S. 106, 84 L. ed. 1104, 60 Sup. Ct. 746 (1940), the doctrine of the principal case was applied to invalidate a statute forbidding the display of banners in the vicinity of any factory or place of business or employment for the purpose of influencing any person to refrain from entering therein, or to refrain from purchasing goods manufactured or sold therein, or to refrain from performing labor therein.

4. In American Federation of Labor v. Swing, 312 U. S. 321, 85 L. ed. 855, 61 Sup. Ct. 568 (1941) the court invalidated a state labor injunction which had been granted in furtherance of the state's common-law policy forbidding resort to peaceful picketing where there was no immediate employer-employee relationship. The purpose of the picketing was to compel an employer, none of whose employees was a union member, to establish a union shop. In reaffirming the Thornhill doctrine, the court said that the right of free communication could not "be mutilated by denying it to workers, in a dispute with an employer, even though they are not in his employ." The same result was reached in Cafeteria Employees Union v. Angelos, 320 U. S. 293, 88 L. ed. 58, 64 Sup. Ct. 126 (1943), holding that a state could not prohibit peaceful picketing merely because no "labor dispute" was involved, the picketed shop here being operated by its proprietors without employees.

5. In Carpenters & Joiners Union v. Ritter's Cafe, 315 U. S. 722, 86 L. ed. 1143, 62 Sup. Ct. 807 (1942), where a union had been enjoined from picketing a restaurant in order to induce its owner to cease employing an open shop contractor in the construction of a building a mile and a half away, the court held (Justices Black, Reed, Douglas and Murphy dissenting) that it was permissible for a state to forbid the "conscription of neutrals" by confining "the sphere of communication to that directly related to the dispute." The constitutional immunity was held to extend, however, to the picketing of a manufacturing baker to induce him to cease selling to non-union peddlers who resold and delivered to small retailers, keeping the difference between cost and selling price. Bakery & Pastry Drivers Local v. Wohl, 315 U. S. 769, 86 L. ed. 1178, 62 Sup. Ct. 816 (1942).

6. In several recent cases the Supreme Court has retreated from the doctrine of the Thornhill case by upholding decrees of state courts enjoining picketing in labor disputes, even though peaceful, where the objective sought by the pickets was not deemed to be legitimate: Giboney v. Empire Storage & Ice Co., 336 U. S. 490, 93 L. ed. 834, 69 Sup. Ct. 684 (1949) (upholding an injunction of a Missouri court against picketing designed to force an employer to violate the state's statute against restraint of trade); Hughes v. Superior Court, 339 U. S. 460, 94 L. ed. 985, 70 Sup. Ct. 718 (1950) (affirming an injunction of a California court against picketing of a grocery store in order to secure compliance with a demand that the owner follow the policy of selective hiring of Negro clerks, the hiring to be based on the proportion of white and Negro customers of the store, a purpose considered by the state court as being contrary to state policy against racial discrimination in private employment); Building Service Employees International Union v. Gazzam, 339 U. S. 532, 94 L. ed. 1045, 70 Sup. Ct. 784 (1950) (holding that a state may enjoin picketing for the purpose of coercing an employer to bring pressure upon his employees to join a union, where a state statute declares a public policy against employer coercion of employees' choice of their bargaining representative, even though no sanctions are provided to enforce such policy); International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. Hanke, 339 U. S. 470, 94 L. ed. 995, 70 Sup. Ct. 773, 13 A. L. R. (2d) 631 (1950) (upholding, over dissents of Justices Black, Reed and Minton, an injunction granted by a Washington court against picketing designed to force the operator of an automobile repair shop and service station, who hired no employees and belonged to no union, to comply with union rules as to closing hours and observance of holidays); Local Union No. 10, United Association of Journeyman Plumbers and Steamfitters v. Graham, 345 U. S. 192, 97 L. ed. 946, 73 Sup. Ct. 585 (1953) (upholding, on the authority of previous decisions, a decree of a Virginia court restraining labor unions from peaceful picketing carried on for the purpose of coercing an employer to discharge non-union employees, contrary to a state "Right to Work" statute prohibiting an agreement between an employer and a labor union whereby non-union workers would be deprived the right to work for the employer, or union membership was made a condition of employment; Justices Black and Douglas dissenting).

7. For discussions of Supreme Court decisions limiting the Thornhill doctrine, see Cox, Strikes, Picketing and the Constitution, 4 Vand. L. Rev. 574

(1951); Gregory, Constitutional Limitations on the Regulation of Union and Employer Conduct, 49 Mich. L. Rev. 191 (1950); Howard, The Unlawful Purpose Doctrine in Peaceful Picketing and Its Application in the California Cases, 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 145 (1951); Note, Picketing and Free Speech—The Gazzam, Hanke and Hughes Cases, 26 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 183 (1951); Note, Thornhill Re-examined, 49 Mich. L. Rev. 1048 (1951); Jones, The Right to Picket—Twilight Zone of the Constitution, 102 U. of Pa. L. Rev. 995 (1954).

WIEMAN v. UPDEGRAFF.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1952.
344 U. S. 183, 97 L. ed. 216, 73 Sup. Ct. 215.

MR. JUSTICE CLARK delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is an appeal from a decision of the Supreme Court of Oklahoma, Board of Regents v. Updegraff, 205 Okl. 301, 237 P. 2d 131, upholding the validity of a loyalty oath prescribed by Oklahoma statute for all state officers and employees. Okl. Stat. 1950, Tit. 51, §§ 37.1-37.8. Appellants, employed by the state as members of the faculty and staff of Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College, failed, within the thirty days permitted, to take the oath required by the Act. Appellee Updegraff, as a citizen and taxpayer, thereupon brought this suit in the District Court of Oklahoma County to enjoin the necessary state officials from paying further compensation to employees who had not subscribed to the oath. The appellants, who were permitted to intervene, attacked the validity of the Act on the grounds, among others, that it was a bill of attainder; an ex post facto law; impaired the obligation of their contracts with the State and violated the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. They also sought a mandatory injunction directing the state officers to pay their salaries regardless of their failure to take the oath. Their objections centered largely on the following clauses of the oath:

"* * * That I am not affiliated directly or indirectly * * * with any foreign political agency, party, organization or Government, or with any agency, party, organization, association, or group whatever which has been officially determined by the United States Attorney General or other authorized agency of the United States to be a communist front or subversive organization; * * * that I will take up arms in the defense of the United States in time of War, or National Emergency, if necessary; that within the five (5) years immediately preceding the taking of this oath (or affirmation) I have not been a member of * * * any agency, party, organization, association, or group whatever which has been officially determined by the United States Attorney General or other authorized public agency of the United States to be a communist front or subversive organization * * *."

The court upheld the Act and enjoined the state officers from making further salary payments to appellants. The Supreme Court of Oklahoma affirmed, sub nom. Board of Regents v. Updegraff, 205 Okl. 301, 237 P. 2d 131. We noted probable jurisdiction because of the public importance of this type of legislation and the recurring serious constitutional questions which it presents.

The District Court of Oklahoma County in holding the Act valid concluded that the appellants were compelled to take the oath as written; that the appellants "and each of them, did not take and subscribe to the oath as provided in Section 2 of the Act and wilfully refused to take that oath and by reason thereof the Board of Regents is enjoined from paying them, and their employment is terminated." In affirming, the Supreme Court of Oklahoma held that the phrase of the oath "any foreign political agency, party, organization or Government, or with any agency, party, organization, association, or group whatever which has been officially determined by the United States Attorney General or other authorized agency of the United States to be a communist front or subversive organization" actually "refers to a list or lists of such organizations in existence at the time of the passage of the act which had been prepared by the Attorney General [of the United States] under Governmental directive. Such list or lists are in effect made a part of the oath by reference." On this point the opinion continues: "There is no requirement in the act that an oath be taken of non-membership in organizations not on the list of the Attorney General of the United States at the time of the passage of this act."

We read this part of the highest state court's decision as limiting the organizations proscribed by the Act to those designated on the list or lists of the Attorney General which had been issued prior to the effective date of the Act. Although this interpretation discarded clear language of the oath as surplusage, the court denied the appellants' petition for rehearing which included a plea that refusal of the court to permit appellants to take the oath as so interpreted was violative of due process.

The purpose of the Act, we are told, "was to make loyalty a qualification to hold public office or be employed by the State." 205 Okl. at page 305. During periods of international stress, the extent of legislation with such objectives accentuates our traditional concern about the relation of government to the individual in a free society. The perennial problem of defining that relationship becomes acute when disloyalty is screened by ideological patterns and techniques of disguise that make it difficult to identify. Democratic government is not powerless to meet this threat, but it must do so without infringing the freedoms that are the ultimate values of all democratic living. In the adoption of such means as it believes effective, the legislature is therefore confronted with the problem of balancing its interest in national security with the often conflicting constitutional rights of the individual.

In a series of cases coming here in recent years, we have had occasion to consider legislation aimed at safeguarding the public service from disloyalty. Garner v. Board of Public Works, 341 U. S. 716; Adler v. Board of Education, 342 U. S. 485; Gerende v. Board of Supervisors, 341 U. S. 56. It is in the context of these decisions that we determine the validity of the oath before us.

Garner involved a Los Angeles ordinance requiring all city employees to swear that they did not advocate the overthrow of the government by unlawful means or belong to organizations with such objectives. The ordinance implemented an earlier charter amendment which disqualified from municipal employment all persons unable to take such an oath truthfully. One of the attacks made on the oath in that case was that it violated due process because its negation was not limited to organizations known by the employee to be within the proscribed class. This argument was rejected because we felt justified in assuming that scienter was implicit in each clause of the oath.

Adler also indicated the importance of determining whether a rule of exclusion based on association applies to innocent as well as knowing activity. New York had sought to bar from employment in the public schools persons who advocate, or belong to organizations which advocate, the overthrow of the government by unlawful means. The Feinberg Law directed the New York Board of Regents to make a listing, after notice and hearing, of organizations of the type described. Under § 3022 of the statute, Education Law, McK. Consol. Laws, c. 16, the Regents provided by regulation that membership in a listed organization should be prima facie evidence of disqualification for office in the New York public schools. In upholding this legislation, we expressly noted that the New York courts had construed the statute to require knowledge of organizational purpose before the regulation could apply. 342 U. S. at page 494. Cf. American Communications Ass'n v. Douds, 339 U. S. 382, 413.

The oath in Gerende was required of candidates for public office who sought places on a Maryland ballot. On oral argument in that case, the Maryland Attorney General assured us that he would advise the proper state authorities to accept, as complying with the statute, an affidavit stating that the affiant was not engaged in an attempt to overthrow the government by force or violence or knowingly a member of an organization engaged in such an attempt. Because we read an earlier Maryland Court of Appeals' decision as interpreting the statute so that such an affidavit would satisfy its requirements, we affirmed on the basis of this assurance.

We assumed in Garner, that if our interpretation of the oath as containing an implicit scienter requirement was correct, Los Angeles would give the petitioners who had refused to sign the oath an opportunity to take it as interpreted and resume their employment. But here, with our decision in Garner before it, the Oklahoma Supreme Court refused to extend to appellants an opportunity to take the oath. In addition, a petition for rehearing which urged that failure to permit appellants to take the oath as interpreted deprived them of due process was denied. This must be viewed as a holding that knowledge is not a factor under the Oklahoma statute. We are thus brought to the question touched on in Garner, Adler, and Gerende: whether the due process clause permits a state in attempting to bar disloyal individuals from its employ to exclude persons solely on the basis of organizational membership, regardless of their knowledge concerning the organizations to which they had belonged. For, under the statute before us, the fact of membership alone disqualifies. If the rule be expressed as a presumption of disloyalty, it is a conclusive one.

But membership may be innocent. A state servant may have joined a proscribed organization unaware of its activities and purposes. In recent years, many completely loyal persons have severed organizational ties after learning for the first time of the character of groups to which they had belonged. * * * At the time of affiliation, a group itself may be innocent, only later coming under the influence of those who would turn it toward illegitimate ends. Conversely, an organization formerly subversive and therefore designated as such may have subsequently freed itself from the influences which originally led to its listing.

There can be no dispute about the consequences visited upon a person excluded from public employment on disloyalty grounds. In the view of the community, the stain is a deep one; indeed, it has become a badge of infamy. Especially is this so in time of cold war and hot emotions when "each man begins to eye his neighbor as a possible enemy." Yet under the Oklahoma Act, the fact of association alone determines disloyalty and disqualification; it matters not whether association existed innocently or knowingly. To thus inhibit individual freedom of movement is to stifle the flow of democratic expression and controversy at one of its chief sources. We hold that the distinction observed between the case at bar and Garner, Adler and Gerende is decisive. Indiscriminate classification of innocent with knowing activity must fall as an assertion of arbitrary power. The oath offends due process.

But appellee insists that Adler and United Public Workers v. Mitchell, 330 U. S. 75, are contra. We are referred to our statement in Adler that persons seeking employment in the New York public schools have "no right to work for the State in the school system on their own terms. United Public Workers v. Mitchell * * *. They may work for the school system upon the reasonable terms laid down by the proper authorities of New York." 342 U. S. at page 492. To draw from this language the facile generalization that there is no constitutionally protected right to public employment is to obscure the issue. For, in United Public Workers, though we held that the Federal Government through the Hatch Act, 18 U. S. C. §§ 118j, 118l [F. C. A. 18 §§ 118j, 118l], could properly bar its employees from certain types of political activity thought inimical to the interests of the Civil Service, we cast this holding into perspective by emphasizing that Congress could not "enact a regulation providing that no Republican, Jew or Negro shall be appointed to federal office, or that no federal employee shall attend Mass or take any active part in missionary work." 330 U. S. at page 100. See also In re Summers, 325 U. S. 561, 571. We need not pause to consider whether an abstract right to public employment exists. It is sufficient to say that constitutional protection does extend to the public servant whose exclusion pursuant to a statute is patently arbitrary or discriminatory.

Because of this disposition, we do not pass on the serious questions raised as to whether the Act, in proscribing those "communist front or subversive organizations" designated as such on lists of the Attorney General of the United States, gave fair notice to those affected, in view of the fact that those listings have never included a designation of "communist fronts," and have in some cases designated organizations without classifying them. Nor need we consider the significance of the differing standards employed in the preparation of those lists and their limited evidentiary use under the Federal Loyalty Program.

Reversed.

MR. JUSTICE JACKSON, not having heard the argument, took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

MR. JUSTICE BURTON concurs in the result.

MR. JUSTICE BLACK, concurring. * * *

History indicates that individual liberty is intermittently subjected to extraordinary perils. Even countries dedicated to government by the people are not free from such cyclical dangers. The first years of our Republic marked such a period. Enforcement of the Alien and Sedition Laws by zealous patriots who feared ideas made it highly dangerous for people to think, speak, or write critically about government, its agents, or its policies, either foreign or domestic. Our constitutional liberties survived the ordeal of this regrettable period because there were influential men and powerful organized groups bold enough to champion the undiluted right of individuals to publish and argue for their beliefs however unorthodox or loathsome. Today however, few individuals and organizations of power and influence argue that unpopular advocacy has this same wholly unqualified immunity from governmental interference. For this and other reasons the present period of fear seems more ominously dangerous to speech and press than was that of the Alien and Sedition Laws. Suppressive laws and practices are the fashion. The Oklahoma oath statute is but one manifestation of a national network of laws aimed at coercing and controlling the minds of men. Test oaths are notorious tools of tyranny. When used to shackle the mind they are, or at least they should be, unspeakably odious to a free people. Test oaths are made still more dangerous when combined with bills of attainder which like this Oklahoma statute impose pains and penalties for past lawful associations and utterances.

Governments need and have ample power to punish treasonable acts. But it does not follow that they must have a further power to punish thought and speech as distinguished from acts. Our own free society should never forget that laws which stigmatize and penalize thought and speech of the unorthodox have a way of reaching, ensnaring and silencing many more people than at first intended. We must have freedom of speech for all or we will in the long run have it for none but the cringing and the craven. And I cannot too often repeat my belief that the right to speak on matters of public concern must be wholly free or eventually be wholly lost. * * * MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS concurs in this opinion.

[The concurring opinion of MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, in which MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS joined, is omitted.]

NOTES

1. United Public Workers v. Mitchell, 330 U. S. 75, 91 L. ed. 754, 67 Sup. Ct. 556 (1947), cited in the above opinion, rejected by a four-to-three vote a claim of unconstitutionality brought against a provision of the Hatch Act which made it unlawful (with exceptions) for employees in the executive branch of the federal government to take "any active part in political management or in political campaigns." The legislation was upheld as a reasonable regulation of the supposed evils of political activity of federal personnel, designed to promote efficiency in the public service. In answer to the contention that the statute infringed First Amendment freedoms, the court said: "It leaves untouched full participation by employees in political decisions at the ballot box and forbids only the partisan activity of federal personnel deemed offensive to efficiency. With that limitation only, employees may make their contributions to public affairs or protect their own interests, as before the passage of the Act." Justices Jackson and Murphy did not participate and Justices Black, Douglas and Rutledge dissented.

2. Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 277, 18 L. ed. 356 (1867), and Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. 333, 18 L. ed. 366 (1867), struck down test oaths adopted by Missouri and by Congress at the close of the Civil War. In both cases these test oaths were deemed to be bills of attainder and ex post facto laws within the meaning of the Constitution (Art. I, § 9, cl. 3). Justices Douglas and Black, dissenting in Garner v. Board of Public Works, 341 U. S. 716, 95 L. ed. 1317, 71 Sup. Ct. 909 (1951), discussed in the opinion above, thought that the Cummings and Garland cases should have been relied upon to invalidate the Los Angeles loyalty oath. They viewed the Garner decision as creating doubt as to the continued vitality of these cases, and also the decision in United States v. Lovett, 328 U. S. 303, 90 L. ed. 1252, 66 Sup. Ct. 1073 (1946), where an act of Congress which provided that after a certain date no salary should be paid to certain designated federal employees was held invalid as a bill of attainder. The cases are discussed in Norville, Bill of Attainder—A Rediscovered Weapon Against Discriminatory Legislation, 26 Ore. L. Rev. 78 (1947); Wormuth, Legislative Disqualifications as Bills of Attainder, 4 Vand. L. Rev. 603 (1951).

3. Section 9 (h) of the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947, known as the Taft-Hartley Act, requires, as a condition of a union's utilizing the opportunities afforded by the act, each of its officers to file an affidavit with the National Labor Relations Board (1) that he is not a member of the Communist Party or affiliated with such party, and (2) that he does not believe in, and is not a member of or supports any organization that believes in or teaches the overthrow of the United States government by force or by any illegal or unconstitutional methods. The statute also makes it a criminal offense to make willfully or knowingly any false statement in such an affidavit. Six justices participated in the Supreme Court's decision affirming a lower federal court's dismissal of a labor union's action for an injunction restraining the enforcement of this provision. Insofar as the statute requires disclosure of membership in the Communist Party, five justices, in an opinion by Chief Justice Vinson, upheld its validity against objections, inter alia, that it infringed the rights of free speech, assembly and petition, that it was vague, and that it constituted a bill of attainder. The validity of that portion requiring disavowal of belief or membership in organizations teaching the forceful overthrow of the government was upheld by an equally divided court. Chief Justice Vinson and Justices Reed and Burton construed it as requiring a disavowal of belief in the objective of overthrow by force or other illegal means of the government as it now exists, not merely a prophecy, and said that Congress might well have found that persons having such objective would carry it into their conduct of union affairs. Justice Frankfurter dissented solely on the ground that this portion of the statute was invalid for uncertainty. Justice Jackson, also dissenting as to this portion, thought that it violated the right of free speech. Justice Black dissented on the ground that the entire statute infringed the First Amendment freedoms and penalized beliefs by the imposition of civil disabilities. Justices Douglas, Clark and Minton did not participate. American Communications Association, C. I. O. v. Douds, 339 U. S. 382, 94 L. ed. 925, 70 Sup. Ct. 674 (1950).

4. In Osman v. Douds, 339 U. S. 846, 94 L. ed. 1328, 70 Sup. Ct. 901 (1950), where the same issue was presented, the court's per curiam opinion stated: "With regard to that part of the section which is concerned with membership in, or affiliation with, the Communist Party, the court holds the requirement to be constitutional. Mr. Justice Black dissents for reasons stated in his dissent in American Communications Association v. Douds, supra. With regard to the constitutionality of other relevant parts of the section, the court is equally divided. Mr. Justice Minton joins in the views expressed by the Chief Justice, who was joined by Mr. Justice Reed and Mr. Justice Burton in the cases above cited. Mr. Justice Black, Mr. Justice Frankfurter and Mr. Justice Jackson adhere to their opinions in those cases. Mr. Justice Douglas joins the dissenting opinions of Mr. Justice Black, Mr. Justice Frankfurter and Mr. Justice Jackson insofar as they hold unconstitutional the portion of the oath dealing with beliefs, and being of the view that provisions of the oath are not separable votes to reverse. He therefore does not find it necessary to reach the question of the constitutionality of the other part of the oath. The judgment of the District Court is therefore affirmed. Mr. Justice Clark took no part in the consideration or decision of this case."

5. A civil servant in the employ of the federal government has no constitutional right to his position and hence can be dismissed without a hearing, pursuant to the Employee Loyalty Program of 1947 upon an ex parte finding that reasonable grounds exist for belief that he is disloyal. Bailey v. Richardson, 86 App. D. C. 248, 182 F. (2d) 46 (1950). This judgment was affirmed by an equally divided Supreme Court, Mr. Justice Clark not participating, 341 U. S. 918, 95 L. ed. 1352, 71 Sup. Ct. 669 (1951). In the decision of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia it was held (Edgerton, J., dissenting) that a government employee (1) derives no protection from the guaranty of the Sixth Amendment of the right of confrontation by witnesses who have informed against him; (2) need not be afforded any notice and hearing of the quasi-judicial type before being dismissed, since the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment does not apply to the holding of a government position; (3) derives no protection from the First Amendment, since its guaranties have never been held to prevent the dismissal of government employees because of their political beliefs, activities or affiliations. The court said (citing United Public Workers v. Mitchell, supra) that Congress and the President, in the interest of efficiency, may impinge upon otherwise inviolate rights of government employees to free participation in political speech and assembly. "It is our clear opinion that the President, absent congressional restriction, may remove from government service any person of whose loyalty he is not completely convinced. He may do so without assigning any reason and without giving the employee any explanatory notice." For discussions and evaluations of the federal government's employee loyalty program, see O'Brien, Loyalty Tests and Guilt by Association, 61 Harv. L. Rev. 592 (1948); Emerson and Helfeld, Loyalty Among Government Employees, 58 Yale L. J. 1 (1948), and a reply by J. Edgar Hoover, 58 Yale L. J. 401 (1949); Durr, The Loyalty Order's Challenge to the Constitution, 16 U. of Chi. L. Rev. 298 (1949); Kaplan, Loyalty Review of Federal Employees, 23 N. Y. U. L. Q. Rev. 437 (1948); Richardson, The Federal Employee Loyalty Program, 51 Col. L. Rev. 546 (1951). See also, Horowitz, Report on the Los Angeles City and County Loyalty Programs, 5 Stanf. L. Rev. 233 (1953).

6. On the same day that Bailey v. Richardson was decided, the court held that the determination by the Attorney General of the United States, made without a hearing and under the alleged authority of a presidential executive order, that certain organizations were to be included on a list of groups designated by him as "communist," which listing was to be used in the investigation of the loyalty of government employees, constituted a legal injury to such organizations, which were entitled to a hearing on the issue as to whether the designation was correct. Five justices upheld the complaining organizations, but for such a diversity of reasons that there was no "opinion of the court." Justice Clark did not participate. A dissent was written by Justice Reed, with Chief Justice Vinson and Justice Minton joining. Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee v. McGrath, 341 U. S. 123, 95 L. ed. 817, 71 Sup. Ct. 624 (1951). The decision is discussed in McCarran, The Supreme Court and the Loyalty Program: The Effect of Refugee Committee v. McGrath, 37 Am. Bar Assn. J. 434 (1951).

DENNIS v. UNITED STATES.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1951.
341 U. S. 494, 95 L. ed. 1137, 71 Sup. Ct. 857.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE VINSON announced the judgment of the Court and an opinion in which MR. JUSTICE REED, MR. JUSTICE BURTON and MR. JUSTICE MINTON join.

Petitioners were indicted in July, 1948, for violation of the conspiracy provisions of the Smith Act, 54 Stat. 671, 18 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) § 11, during the period of April, 1945, to July, 1948. The pretrial motion to quash the indictment on the grounds, inter alia, that the statute was unconstitutional was denied, United States v. Foster, 80 F. Supp. 479, and the case was set for trial on January 17, 1949. A verdict of guilty as to all the petitioners was returned by the jury on October 14, 1949. The Court of Appeals affirmed the convictions. 183 F. 2d 201. We granted certiorari, 340 U. S. 863, limited to the following two questions: (1) Whether either § 2 or § 3 of the Smith Act, inherently or as construed and applied in the instant case, violates the First Amendment and other provisions of the Bill of Rights; (2) whether either § 2 or § 3 of the Act, inherently or as construed and applied in the instant case, violates the First and Fifth Amendments because of indefiniteness.

Sections 2 and 3 of the Smith Act, 54 Stat. 671, 18 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) §§ 10, 11 (see present 18 U. S. C. § 2385 [F. C. A. 18 § 2385]), provide as follows:

"Sec. 2.

"(a) It shall be unlawful for any person—

"(1) to knowingly or wilfully advocate, abet, advise, or teach the duty, necessity, desirability, or propriety of overthrowing or destroying any government in the United States by force or violence, or by the assassination of any officer of any such government;

"(2) with the intent to cause the overthrow or destruction of any government in the United States, to print, publish, edit, issue, circulate, sell, distribute, or publicly display any written or printed matter advocating, advising, or teaching the duty, necessity, desirability, or propriety of overthrowing or destroying any government in the United States by force or violence;

"(3) to organize or help to organize any society, group, or assembly of persons who teach, advocate, or encourage the overthrow or destruction of any government in the United States by force or violence; or to be or become a member of, or affiliate with, any such society, group, or assembly of persons, knowing the purposes thereof.

"(b) For the purposes of this section, the term 'government in the United States' means the Government of the United States, the government of any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, the government of the District of Columbia, or the government of any political subdivision of any of them.

"Sec. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person to attempt to commit, or to conspire to commit, any of the acts prohibited by the provisions of * * * this title."

The indictment charged the petitioners with wilfully and knowingly conspiring (1) to organize as the Communist Party of the United States of America a society, group and assembly of persons who teach and advocate the overthrow and destruction of the Government of the United States by force and violence, and (2) knowingly and wilfully to advocate and teach the duty and necessity of overthrowing and destroying the Government of the United States by force and violence. The indictment further alleged that § 2 of the Smith Act proscribes these acts and that any conspiracy to take such action is a violation of § 3 of the Act.

The trial of the case extended over nine months, six of which were devoted to the taking of evidence, resulting in a record of 16,000 pages.

Our limited grant of the writ of certiorari has removed from our consideration any question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the jury's determination that petitioners are guilty of the offense charged. Whether on this record petitioners did in fact advocate the overthrow of the Government by force and violence is not before us, and we must base any discussion of this point upon the conclusions stated in the opinion of the Court of Appeals, which treated the issue in great detail. * * *

It will be helpful in clarifying the issues to treat next the contention that the trial judge improperly interpreted the statute by charging that the statute required an unlawful intent before the jury could convict. More specifically, he charged that the jury could not find the petitioners guilty under the indictment unless they found that petitioners had the intent "to overthrow the government by force and violence as speedily as circumstances permit."

Section 2(a)(1) make it unlawful "to knowingly or wilfully advocate, * * * or teach the duty, necessity, desirability, or propriety of overthrowing or destroying any government in the United States by force or violence * * *." Section 2(a)(3) "to organize or help to organize any society, group, or assembly of persons who teach, advocate or encourage the overthrow * * *." Because of the fact that § 2(a)(2) expressly requires a specific intent to overthrow the Government, and because of the absence of precise language in the foregoing subsections, it is claimed that Congress deliberately omitted any such requirement. We do not agree. It would require a far greater indication of congressional desire that intent not be made an element of the crime than the use of the disjunctive "knowingly or wilfully" in § 2(a)(1), or the omission of exact language in § 2(a)(3). The structure and purpose of the statute demand the inclusion of intent as an element of the crime. Congress was concerned with those who advocate and organize for the overthrow of the Government. Certainly those who recruit and combine for the purpose of advocating overthrow intend to bring about that overthrow. We hold that the statute requires as an essential element of the crime proof of the intent of those who are charged with its violation to overthrow the Government by force and violence. * * *

The obvious purpose of the statute is to protect existing Government, not from change by peaceable, lawful and constitutional means, but from change by violence, revolution and terrorism. That it is within the power of the Congress to protect the Government of the United States from armed rebellion is a proposition which requires little discussion. Whatever theoretical merit there may be to the argument that there is a "right" to rebellion against dictatorial governments is without force where the existing structure of the government provides for peaceful and orderly change. We reject any principle of governmental helplessness in the face of preparation for revolution, which principle, carried to its logical conclusion, must lead to anarchy. No one could conceive that it is not within the power of Congress to prohibit acts intended to overthrow the Government by force and violence. The question with which we are concerned here is not whether Congress has such power, but whether the means which it has employed conflict with the First and Fifth Amendments to the Constitution.

One of the bases for the contention that the means which Congress has employed are invalid takes the form of an attack on the face of the statute on the grounds that by its terms it prohibits academic discussion of the merits of Marxism-Leninism, that it stifles ideas and is contrary to all concepts of a free speech and a free press. Although we do not agree that the language itself has that significance, we must bear in mind that it is the duty of the federal courts to interpret federal legislation in a manner not inconsistent with the demands of the Constitution. American Communications Ass'n v. Douds, 339 U. S. 382, 407. We are not here confronted with cases similar to Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U. S. 88; Herndon v. Lowry, 301 U. S. 242; and De Jonge v. Oregon, 299 U. S. 353, where a state court had given a meaning to a state statute which was inconsistent with the Federal Constitution. This is a federal statute which we must interpret as well as judge. Herein lies the fallacy of reliance upon the manner in which this Court has treated judgments of state courts. Where the statute as construed by the state court transgressed the First Amendment, we could not but invalidate the judgments of conviction.

The very language of the Smith Act negates the interpretation which petitioners would have us impose on that Act. It is directed at advocacy, not discussion. Thus, the trial judge properly charged the jury that they could not convict if they found that petitioners did "no more than pursue peaceful studies and discussions or teaching and advocacy in the realm of ideas." He further charged that it was not unlawful "to conduct in an American college and university a course explaining the philosophical theories set forth in the books which have been placed in evidence." Such a charge is in strict accord with the statutory language, and illustrates the meaning to be placed on those words. Congress did not intend to eradicate the free discussion of political theories, to destroy the traditional rights of Americans to discuss and evaluate ideas without fear of governmental sanction. Rather Congress was concerned with the very kind of activity in which the evidence showed these petitioners engaged.

But although the statute is not directed at the hypothetical cases which petitioners have conjured, its application in this case has resulted in convictions for the teaching and advocacy of the overthrow of the Government by force and violence, which, even though coupled with the intent to accomplish that overthrow, contains an element of speech. For this reason, we must pay special heed to the demands of the First Amendment marking out the boundaries of speech.

We pointed out in Douglas, supra, that the basis of the First Amendment is the hypothesis that speech can rebut speech, propaganda will answer propaganda, free debate of ideas will result in the wisest governmental policies. It is for this reason that this Court has recognized the inherent value of free discourse. An analysis of the leading cases in this Court which have involved direct limitations on speech, however, will demonstrate that both the majority of the Court and the dissenters in particular cases have recognized that this is not an unlimited, unqualified right, but that the societal value of speech must, on occasion, be subordinated to other values and considerations.

No important case involving free speech was decided by this Court prior to Schenck v. United States, 249 U. S. 47. Indeed, the summary treatment accorded an argument based upon an individual's claim that the First Amendment protected certain utterances indicates that the Court at earlier dates placed no unique emphasis upon that right. It was not until the classic dictum of Justice Holmes in the Schenck case that speech per se received that emphasis in a majority opinion. That case involved a conviction under the Criminal Espionage Act, 40 Stat. 217. The question the Court faced was whether the evidence was sufficient to sustain the conviction. Writing for a unanimous Court, Justice Holmes stated that the "question in every case is whether the words used are used in such circumstances and are of such a nature as to create a clear and present danger that they will bring about the substantive evils that Congress has a right to prevent." 249 U. S. at page 52. But the force of even this expression is considerably weakened by the reference at the end of the opinion to Goldman v. United States, 245 U. S. 474, a prosecution under the same statute. Said Justice Holmes, "Indeed [Goldman] might be said to dispose of the present contention if the precedent covers all media concludendi. But as the right to free speech was not referred to specially, we have thought fit to add a few words." 249 U. S. at page 52. The fact is inescapable, too, that the phrase bore no connotation that the danger was to be any threat to the safety of the Republic. The charge was causing and attempting to cause insubordination in the military forces and obstruct recruiting. The objectionable document denounced conscription and its most inciting sentence was, "You must do your share to maintain, support and uphold the rights of the people of this country." 249 U. S. at page 51. Fifteen thousand copies were printed and some circulated. This insubstantial gesture toward insubordination in 1917 during war was held to be a clear and present danger of bringing about the evil of military insubordination.

In several later cases involving convictions under the Criminal Espionage Act, the nub of the evidence the Court held sufficient to meet the "clear and present danger" test enunciated in Schenck was as follows: Frohwerk v. United States, 249 U. S. 204—publication of twelve newspaper articles attacking the war; Debs v. United States, 249 U. S.

211—one speech attacking United States' participation in the war; Abrams v. United States, 250 U. S. 616—circulation of copies of two different socialist circulars attacking the war; Schaefer v. United States, 251 U. S. 466—publication of a German-language newspaper with allegedly false articles, critical of capitalism and the war; Pierce v. United States, 252 U. S. 239—circulation of copies of a four-page pamphlet written by a clergyman, attacking the purposes of the war and United States' participation therein. Justice Holmes wrote the opinions for a unanimous Court in Schenck, Frohwerk and Debs. He and Justice Brandeis dissented in Abrams, Schaefer and Pierce. The basis of these dissents was that, because of the protection which the First Amendment gives to speech, the evidence in each case was insufficient to show that the defendants had created the requisite danger under Schenck. But these dissents did not mark a change of principle. The dissenters doubted only the probable effectiveness of the puny efforts toward subversion. * * *

The rule we deduce from these cases is that where an offense is specified by a statute in nonspeech or nonpress terms, a conviction relying upon speech or press as evidence of violation may be sustained only when the speech or publication created a "clear and present danger" of attempting or accomplishing the prohibited crime, e. g., interference with enlistment. The dissents, we repeat, in emphasizing the value of speech, were addressed to the argument of the sufficiency of the evidence.

The next important case before the Court in which free speech was the crux of the conflict was Gitlow v. New York, 268 U. S. 652.
* * *

Although no case subsequent to Whitney and Gitlow has expressly overruled the majority opinions in those cases, there is little doubt that subsequent opinions have inclined toward the Holmes-Brandeis rationale.
* * *

In this case we are squarely presented with the application of the "clear and present danger" test, and must decide what that phrase imports. We first note that many of the cases in which this Court has reversed convictions by use of this or similar tests have been based on the fact that the interest which the State was attempting to protect was itself too insubstantial to warrant restriction of speech. In this category we may put such cases as Schneider v. State, 308 U. S. 147; Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U. S. 296; Martin v. Struthers, 319 U. S. 141; West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U. S. 624; Thomas v. Collins, 323 U. S. 516; Marsh v. Alabama, 326 U. S. 501; but cf. Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U. S. 158; Cox v. New Hampshire, 312 U. S. 569. Overthrow of the Government by force and violence is certainly a substantial enough interest for the Government to limit speech. Indeed, this is the ultimate value of any society, for if a society cannot protect its very structure from armed internal attack, it must follow that no subordinate value can be protected. If, then, this interest may be protected, the literal problem which is presented is what has been meant by the use of the phrase "clear and present danger" of the utterances bringing about the evil within the power of Congress to punish.

Obviously, the words cannot mean that before the Government may act, it must wait until the putsch is about to be executed, the plans have been laid and the signal is awaited. If Government is aware that a group aiming at its overthrow is attempting to indoctrinate its members and to commit them to a course whereby they will strike when the leaders feel the circumstances permit, action by the Government is required. The argument that there is no need for Government to concern itself, for Government is strong, it possesses ample powers to put down a rebellion, it may defeat the revolution with ease needs no answer. For that is not the question. Certainly an attempt to overthrow the Government by force, even though doomed from the outset because of inadequate numbers or power of the revolutionists, is a sufficient evil for Congress to prevent. The damage which such attempts create both physically and politically to a nation makes it impossible to measure the validity in terms of the probability of success, or the immediacy of a successful attempt. In the instant case the trial judge charged the jury that they could not convict unless they found that petitioners intended to overthrow the Government "as speedily as circumstances would permit." This does not mean, and could not properly mean, that they would not strike until there was certainty of success. What was meant was that the revolutionists would strike when they thought the time was ripe. We must therefore reject the contention that success or probability of success is the criterion.

The situation with which Justices Holmes and Brandeis were concerned in Gitlow was a comparatively isolated event bearing little relation in their minds to any substantial threat to the safety of the community. Such also is true of cases like Fiske v. Kansas, 274 U. S. 380, and De Jonge v. Oregon, 299 U. S. 353; but cf. Lazar v. Pennsylvania, 286 U. S. 532. They were not confronted with any situation comparable to the instant one—the development of an apparatus designed and dedicated to the overthrow of the Government, in the context of world crisis after crisis.

Chief Judge Learned Hand, writing for the majority below, interpreted the phrase as follows: "In each case [courts] must ask whether the gravity of the 'evil,' discounted by its improbability, justifies such invasion of free speech as is necessary to avoid the danger." 183 F. 2d at 212. We adopt this statement of the rule. As articulated by Chief Judge Hand, it is as succinct and inclusive as any other we might devise at this time. It takes into consideration those factors which we deem relevant, and relates their significances. More we cannot expect from words.

Likewise, we are in accord with the court below, which affirmed the trial court's finding that the requisite danger existed. The mere fact that from the period 1945 to 1948 petitioners' activities did not result in an attempt to overthrow the Government by force and violence is of course no answer to the fact that there was a group that was ready to make the attempt. The formation by petitioners of such a highly organized conspiracy, with rigidly disciplined members subject to call when the leaders, these petitioners, felt that the time had come for action, coupled with the inflammable nature of world conditions, similar uprisings in other countries, and the touch-and-go nature of our relations with countries with whom petitioners were in the very least ideologically attuned, convince us that their convictions were justified on this score. And this analysis disposes of the contention that a conspiracy to advocate, as distinguished from the advocacy itself, cannot be constitutionally restrained, because it comprises only the preparation. It is the existence of the conspiracy which creates the danger. Cf. Pinkerton v. United States, 328 U. S. 640; Goldman v. United States, 245 U. S. 474; United States v. Rabinowich, 238 U. S. 78. If the ingredients of the reaction are present, we cannot bind the Government to wait until the catalyst is added.

Although we have concluded that the finding that there was a sufficient danger to warrant the application of the statute was justified on the merits, there remains the problem of whether the trial judge's treatment of the issue was correct. He charged the jury, in relevant part, as follows:

"In further construction and interpretation of the statute I charge you that it is not the abstract doctrine of overthrowing or destroying organized government by unlawful means which is denounced by this law, but the teaching and advocacy of action for the accomplishment of that purpose, by language reasonably and ordinarily calculated to incite persons to such action. Accordingly, you cannot find the defendants or any of them guilty of the crime charged unless you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that they conspired to organize a society, group and assembly of persons who teach and advocate the overthrow or destruction of the Government of the United States by force and violence and to advocate and teach the duty and necessity of overthrowing or destroying the Government of the United States by force and violence, with the intent that such teaching and advocacy be of a rule or principle of action and by language reasonably and ordinarily calculated to incite persons to such action, all with the intent to cause the overthrow or destruction of the Government of the United States by force and violence as speedily as circumstances would permit.

* * *

"If you are satisfied that the evidence establishes beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants, or any of them, are guilty of a violation of the statute, as I have interpreted it to you, I find as a matter of law that there is sufficient danger of a substantive evil that the Congress has a right to prevent to justify the application of the statute under the First Amendment of the Constitution.

"This is matter of law about which you have no concern. It is a finding on a matter of law which I deem essential to support my ruling that the case should be submitted to you to pass upon the guilt or innocence of the defendants. * * *

It is thus clear that he reserved the question of the existence of the danger for his own determination, and the question becomes whether the issue is of such a nature that it should have been submitted to the jury.

The first paragraph of the quoted instructions calls for the jury to find the facts essential to establish the substantive crime, violation of §§ 2(a)(1) and 2(a)(3) of the Smith Act, involved in the conspiracy charge. There can be no doubt that if the jury found those facts against the petitioners violation of the Act would be established. The argument that the action of the trial court is erroneous, in declaring as a matter of law that such violation shows sufficient danger to justify the punishment despite the First Amendment, rests on the theory that a jury must decide a question of the application of the First Amendment. We do not agree.

When facts are found that establish the violation of a statute the protection against conviction afforded by the First Amendment is a matter of law. The doctrine that there must be a clear and present danger of a substantive evil that Congress has a right to prevent is a judicial rule to be applied as a matter of law by the courts. The guilt is established by proof of facts. Whether the First Amendment protects the activity which constitutes the violation of the statute must depend upon a judicial determination of the scope of the First Amendment applied to the circumstances of the case. * * *

The question in this case is whether the statute which the legislature has enacted may be constitutionally applied. In other words, the Court must examine judicially the application of the statute to the particular situation, to ascertain if the Constitution prohibits the conviction. We hold that the statute may be applied where there is a "clear and present danger" of the substantive evil which the legislature had the right to prevent. Bearing as it does, the marks of a "question of law," the issue is properly one for the judge to decide.

There remains to be discussed the question of vagueness—whether the statute as we have interpreted it is too vague, not sufficiently advising those who would speak of the limitations upon their activity. It is urged that such vagueness contravenes the First and Fifth Amendments. * * *

We agree that the standard as defined is not a neat, mathematical formulary. Like all verbalizations it is subject to criticism on the score of indefiniteness. But petitioners themselves contend that the verbaliza-tion, "clear and present danger" is the proper standard. We see no difference from the standpoint of vagueness, whether the standard of "clear and present danger" is one contained in haec verba within the statute, or whether it is the judicial measure of constitutional applicability. We have shown the indeterminate standard the phrase necessarily connotes. We do not think we have rendered that standard any more indefinite by our attempt to sum up the factors which are included within its scope. We think it well serves to indicate to those who would advocate constitutionally prohibited conduct that there is a line beyond which they may not go—a line, which they, in full knowledge of what they intend and the circumstances in which their activity takes place, will well appreciate and understand. * * *

We hold that §§ 2(a)(1), 2(a)(3) and 3 of the Smith Act, do not inherently, or as construed or applied in the instant case, violate the First Amendment and other provisions of the Bill of Rights, or the First and Fifth Amendments because of indefiniteness. Petitioners intended to overthrow the Government of the United States as speedily as the circumstances would permit. Their conspiracy to organize the Communist Party and to teach and advocate the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence created a "clear and present danger" of an attempt to overthrow the Government by force and violence. They were properly and constitutionally convicted for violation of the Smith Act. The judgments of conviction are affirmed. Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE CLARK took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

[MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER and MR. JUSTICE JACKSON, concurring in the affirmance of the judgment, wrote separate opinions which are too lengthy for inclusion here.]

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, dissenting.

If this were a case where those who claimed protection under the First Amendment were teaching the techniques of sabotage, the assassination of the President, the filching of documents from public files, the planting of bombs, the art of street warfare, and the like, I would have no doubts. The freedom to speak is not absolute; the teaching of methods of terror and other seditious conduct should be beyond the pale along with obscenity and immorality. This case was argued as if those were the facts. The argument imported much seditious conduct into the record. That is easy and it has popular appeal, for the activities of Communists in plotting and scheming against the free world are common knowledge. But the fact is that no such evidence was introduced at the trial. There is a statute which makes a seditious conspiracy unlawful. Petitioners, however, were not charged with a "conspiracy to overthrow" the Government. They were charged with a conspiracy to form a party and groups and assemblies of people who teach and advocate the overthrow of our Government by force or violence and with a conspiracy to advocate and teach its overthrow by force and violence. It may well be that indoctrination in the techniques of terror to destroy the Government would be indictable under either statute. But the teaching which is condemned here is of a different character.

So far as the present record is concerned, what petitioners did was to organize people to teach and themselves teach the Marxist-Leninist doctrine contained chiefly in four books: Foundations of Leninism by Stalin (1924), The Communist Manifesto by Marx and Engels (1848), State and Revolution by Lenin (1917), History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (1939).

Those books are to Soviet Communism what Mein Kampf was to Nazism. If they are understood, the ugliness of Communism is revealed, its deceit and cunning are exposed, the nature of its activities becomes apparent, and the chances of its success less likely. That is not, of course, the reason why petitioners chose these books for their classrooms. They are fervent Communists to whom these volumes are gospel. They preached the creed with the hope that some day it would be acted upon.

The opinion of the Court does not outlaw these texts nor condemn them to the fire, as the Communists do literature offensive to their creed. But if the books themselves are not outlawed, if they can lawfully remain on library shelves, by what reasoning does their use in a classroom become a crime? It would not be a crime under the Act to introduce these books to a class, though that would be teaching what the creed of violent overthrow of the government is. The Act, as construed, requires the element of intent—that those who teach the creed believe in it. The crime then depends not on what is taught but on who the teacher is. That is to make freedom of speech turn not on what is said, but on the intent with which it is said. Once we start down that road we enter territory dangerous to the liberties of every citizen.

There was a time in England when the concept of constructive treason flourished. Men were punished not for raising a hand against the king but for thinking murderous thoughts about him. The Framers of the Constitution were alive to that abuse and took steps to see that the practice would not flourish here. Treason was defined to require overt acts—the evolution of a plot against the country into an actual project. The present case is not one of treason. But the analogy is close when the illegality is made to turn on intent, not on the nature of the act. We then start probing men's minds for motive and purpose; they become entangled in the law not for what they did but for what they thought; they get convicted not for what they said but for the purpose with which they said it.

Intent, of course, often makes the difference in the law. An act otherwise excusable or carrying minor penalties may grow to an abhorrent thing if the evil intent is present. We deal here, however, not with ordinary acts but with speech, to which the Constitution has given a special sanction. * * *

Full and free discussion has indeed been the first article of our faith. We have founded our political system on it. It has been the safeguard of every religious, political, philosophical, economic, and racial group amongst us. We have counted on it to keep us from embracing what is cheap and false; we have trusted the common sense of our people to choose the doctrine true to our genius and to reject the rest. This has been the one single outstanding tenet that has made our institutions the symbol of freedom and equality. We have deemed it more costly to liberty to suppress a despised minority than to let them vent their spleen. We have above all else feared the political censor. We have wanted a land where our people can be exposed to all the diverse creeds and cultures of the world.

There comes a time when even speech loses its constitutional immunity. Speech innocuous one year may at another time fan such destructive flames that it must be halted in the interests of the safety of the Republic. That is the meaning of the clear and present danger test. When conditions are so critical that there will be no time to avoid the evil that the speech threatens, it is time to call a halt. Otherwise, free speech which is the strength of the Nation will be the cause of its destruction.

Yet free speech is the rule, not the exception. The restraint to be constitutional must be based on more than fear, on more than passionate opposition against the speech, on more than a revolted dislike for its contents. There must be some immediate injury to society that is likely if speech is allowed. The classic statement of these conditions was made by Mr. Justice Brandeis in his concurring opinion in Whitney v. California, 274 U. S. 357, 376-377. * * *

I had assumed that the question of the clear and present danger, being so critical an issue in the case, would be a matter for submission to the jury. * * *

Yet, whether the question is one for the Court or the jury, there should be evidence of record on the issue. This record, however, contains no evidence whatsoever showing that the acts charged, viz., the teaching of the Soviet theory of revolution with the hope that it will be realized, have created any clear and present danger to the Nation. The Court, however, rules to the contrary. * * *

That ruling is in my view not responsive to the issue in the case. We might as well say that the speech of petitioners is outlawed because Soviet Russia and her Red Army are a threat to world peace.

The nature of Communism as a force on the world scene would, of course, be relevant to the issue of clear and present danger of petitioners' advocacy within the United States. But the primary consideration is the strength and tactical position of petitioners and their converts in this country. On that there is no evidence in the record.

If we are to take judicial notice of the threat of Communists within the nation, it should not be difficult to conclude that as a political party they are of little consequence. Communists in this country have never made a respectable or serious showing in any election. I would doubt that there is a village, let alone a city or county or state which the Communists could carry. Communism in the world scene is no bogey-man; but Communists as a political faction or party in this country plainly is. Communism has been so thoroughly exposed in this country that it has been crippled as a political force. Free speech has destroyed it as an effective political party. It is inconceivable that those who went up and down this country preaching the doctrine of revolution which petitioners espouse would have any success. In days of trouble and confusion when bread lines were long, when the unemployed walked the streets, when people were starving, the advocates of a short-cut revolution might have a chance to gain adherents. But today there are no such conditions. The country is not in despair; the people know Soviet Communism; the doctrine of Soviet revolution is exposed in all of its ugliness and the American people want none of it.

How it can be said that there is a clear and present danger that this advocacy will succeed is, therefore, a mystery. Some nations less resilient than the United States, where illiteracy is high and where democratic traditions are only budding, might have to take drastic steps and jail these men for merely speaking their creed. But in America they are miserable merchants of unwanted ideas; their wares remain unsold. The fact that their ideas are abhorrent does not make them powerful.

The political impotence of the Communists in this country does not, of course, dispose of the problem. Their numbers; their positions in industry and government; the extent to which they have in fact infiltrated the police, the armed services, transportation, stevedoring, power plants, munitions works, and other critical places—these facts all bear on the likelihood that their advocacy of the Soviet theory of revolution will endanger the Republic. But the record is silent on these facts. If we are to proceed on the basis of judicial notice, it is impossible for me to say that the Communists in this country are so potent or so strategically deployed that they must be suppressed for their speech. I could not so hold unless I were willing to conclude that the activities in recent years of committees of Congress, of the Attorney General, of labor unions, of state legislatures, and of Loyalty Boards were so futile as to leave the country on the edge of grave peril. To believe that petitioners and their following are placed in such critical positions as to endanger the Nation is to believe the incredible. It is safe to say that the followers of the creed of Soviet Communism are known to the F. B. I.; that in case of war with Russia they will be picked up overnight as were all prospective saboteurs at the commencement of World War II; that the invisible army of petitioners is the best known, the most beset, and the least thriving of any fifth column in history. Only those held by fear and panic could think otherwise.

This is my view if we are to act on the basis of judicial notice. But the mere statement of the opposing views indicates how important it is that we know the facts before we act. Neither prejudice nor hate nor senseless fear should be the basis of this solemn act. Free speech—the glory of our system of government—should not be sacrificed on anything less than plain and objective proof of danger that the evil advocated is imminent. On this record no one can say that petitioners and their converts are in such a strategic position as to have even the slightest chance of achieving their aims. * * *

Vishinsky wrote in 1948 in The Law of the Soviet State, "In our state, naturally there can be no place for freedom of speech, press, and so on for the foes of socialism."

Our concern should be that we accept no such standard for the United States. Our faith should be that our people will never give support to these advocates of revolution, so long as we remain loyal to the purposes for which our Nation was founded.

[An appendix by MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS citing First Amendment cases raising the issue of clear and present danger since that test was first formulated is omitted here.]

MR. JUSTICE BLACK, dissenting.

Here again, as in Breard v. Alexandria, 341 U. S. 622, my basic disagreement with the Court is not as to how we should explain or reconcile what was said in prior decisions but springs from a fundamental difference in constitutional approach. Consequently, it would serve no useful purpose to state my position at length.

At the outset I want to emphasize what the crime involved in this case is, and what it is not. These petitioners were not charged with an attempt to overthrow the Government. They were not charged with overt acts of any kind designed to overthrow the Government. They were not even charged with saying anything or writing anything designed to overthrow the Government. The charge was that they agreed to assemble and to talk and publish certain ideas at a later date: The indictment is that they conspired to organize the Communist Party and to use speech or newspapers and other publications in the future to teach and advocate the forcible overthrow of the Government. No matter how it is worded, this is a virulent form of prior censorship of speech and press, which I believe the First Amendment forbids. I would hold § 3 of the Smith Act authorizing this prior restraint unconstitutional on its face and as applied.

But let us assume, contrary to all constitutional ideas of fair criminal procedure, that petitioners although not indicted for the crime of actual advocacy, may be punished for it. Even on this radical assumption, the other opinions in this case show that the only way to affirm these convictions is to repudiate directly or indirectly the established "clear and present danger" rule. This the Court does in a way which greatly restricts the protections afforded by the First Amendment. The opinions for affirmance indicate that the chief reason for jettisoning the rule is the expressed fear that advocacy of Communist doctrine endangers the safety of the Republic. Undoubtedly, a governmental policy of unfettered communication of ideas does entail dangers. To the Founders of this Nation, however, the benefits derived from free expression were worth the risk. They embodied this philosophy in the First Amendment's command that Congress "shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press * * *." I have always believed that the First Amendment is the keystone of our Government, that the freedoms it guarantees provide the best insurance against destruction of all freedom. At least as to speech in the realm of public matters, I believe that the "clear and present danger" test does not "mark the furthestmost constitutional boundaries of protected expression" but does "no more than recognize a minimum compulsion of the Bill of Rights." Bridges v. California, 314 U. S. 252, 263.

So long as this Court exercises the power of judicial review of legislation, I cannot agree that the First Amendment permits us to sustain laws suppressing freedom of speech and press on the basis of Congress' or our own notions of mere "reasonableness." Such a doctrine waters down the First Amendment so that it amounts to little more than an admonition to Congress. The Amendment as so construed is not likely to protect any but those "safe" or orthodox views which rarely need its protection. * * *

Public opinion being what it now is, few will protest the conviction of these Communist petitioners. There is hope, however, that in calmer times, when present pressures, passions and fears subside, this or some later Court will restore the First Amendment liberties to the high preferred place where they belong in a free society.

NOTE

1. Supreme Court decisions dealing with the rights of free speech and press are collected in the annotations in 93 L. ed. 1151 (1950); 94 L. ed. 973 (1950); 95 L. ed. 1196 (1951); 96 L. ed. 1126 (1952), and 97 L. ed. 955 (1953).

For recent discussions, from various viewpoints, of some of the problems raised by the cases in this section, including the present status of the "clear and present danger" test, see Cohen and Fuchs, Communism's Challenge and the Constitution, 34 Corn. L. Q. 182, 352 (1948, 1949); Nathanson, The Communist Trial and the Clear and Present Danger Test, 63 Harv. L. Rev. 1167 (1950); Richardson, Freedom of Expression and the Function of Courts, 65 Harv. L. Rev. 1 (1951); Freund, The Supreme Court and Civil Liberties, 4 Vand. L. Rev. 533 (1951); Paulsen, State Constitutions, State Courts and First Amendment Freedoms, 4 Vand. L. Rev. 620 (1951); Antieau, The Rule of Clear and Present Danger: Scope of its Applicability, 48 Mich. L. Rev. 811 (1950); "Clear and Present Danger"—Its Meaning and Significance, 25 Notre Dame Lawyer 603 (1950); Gorfinkel and Mack, Dennis v. United States and the Clear and Present Danger Rule, 39 Cal. L. Rev. 475 (1951); Corwin, Bowing Out "Clear and Present Danger," 27 Notre Dame Lawyer 325 (1952); Boudin, "Seditious Doctrines" and the "Clear and Present Danger" Rule, 38 Va. L. Rev. 143, 315 (1952); Antieau, Dennis v. United States, 5 Vand. L. Rev. 141 (1952); Swisher, The Supreme Court in a Changing Role, 20 U. of Kansas City L. Rev. 1 (1952); Curtis, A Modern Supreme Court in a Modern World, 4 Vand. L. Rev. 427 (1951). For a discussion of the Dennis case in the Court of Appeals, see Note, Clear and Present Danger Re-examined, 51 Col. L. Rev. 98 (1951). The viewpoint of Mr. Justice Jackson is set forth briefly in his article, Wartime Security and Liberty Under Law, 1 Buffalo L. Rev. 103 (1951). The view that the Supreme Court has played an ineffective part in recent years in the maintenance of democratic processes and the preservation of civil liberties is carefully documented in Frank, Court and Constitution: The Passive Period, 4 Vand. L. Rev. 400 (1951).

Section 5.—The Guaranty of Religious Liberty.

CANTWELL v. CONNECTICUT.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1940.

310 U. S. 296, 84 L. ed. 1213, 60 Sup. Ct. 900, 128 A. L. R. 1352.

MR. JUSTICE ROBERTS delivered the opinion of the Court.

Newton Cantwell and his two sons, Jesse and Russell, members of a group known as Jehovah's Witnesses, and claiming to be ordained ministers, were arrested in New Haven, Connecticut, and each was charged by information in five counts, with statutory and common law offenses. After trial in the Court of Common Pleas of New Haven County each of them was convicted on the third count, which charged a violation of § 6294 of the General Statutes of Connecticut, and on the fifth count, which charged commission of the common law offense of inciting a breach of the peace. On appeal to the Supreme Court the conviction of all three on the third count was affirmed. The conviction of Jesse Cantwell, on the fifth count, was also affirmed, but the conviction of Newton and Russell on that count was reversed and a new trial ordered as to them.

By demurrers to the information, by requests for rulings of law at the trial, and by their assignments of error in the state Supreme Court, the appellants pressed the contention that the statute under which the third count was drawn was offensive to the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment because, on its face and as construed and applied, it denied them freedom of speech and prohibited their free exercise of religion. In like manner they made the point that they could not be found guilty on the fifth count, without violation of the Amendment. * * *

The facts adduced to sustain the conviction on the third count follow. On the day of their arrest the appellants were engaged in going singly from house to house on Cassius Street in New Haven. They were individually equipped with a bag containing books and pamphlets on religious subjects, a portable phonograph and a set of records, each of which, when played, introduced, and was a description of, one of the books. Each appellant asked the person who responded to his call for permission to play one of the records. If permission was granted he asked the person to buy the book described and, upon refusal, he solicited such contribution towards the publication or the pamphlets as the listener was willing to make. If a contribution was received a pamphlet was delivered upon condition that it would be read.

Cassius Street is in a thickly populated neighborhood, where about ninety per cent of the residents are Roman Catholics. A phonograph record, describing a book entitled "Enemies," included an attack on the Catholic religion. None of the persons interviewed were members of Jehovah's Witnesses.

The statute under which the appellants were charged provides:

"No person shall solicit money, services, subscriptions or any valuable thing for any alleged religious, charitable or philanthropic cause, from other than a member of the organization for whose benefit such person is soliciting or within the county in which such person or organization is located unless such cause shall have been approved by the secretary of the public welfare council. Upon application of any person in behalf of such cause, the secretary shall determine whether such cause is a religious one or is a bona fide object of charity or philanthropy and conforms to reasonable standards of efficiency and integrity, and, if he shall so find, shall approve the same and issue to the authority in charge a certificate to that effect. Such certificate may be revoked at any time. Any person violating any provision of this section shall be fined not more than one hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than thirty days or both."

The appellants claimed that their activities were not within the statute but consisted only of distribution of books, pamphlets, and periodicals. The State Supreme Court construed the finding of the trial court to be that "in addition to the sale of the books and the distribution of the pamphlets the defendants were also soliciting contributions or donations of money for an alleged religious cause, and thereby came within the purview of the statute." It overruled the contention that the Act, as applied to the appellants, offends the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, because it abridges or denies religious freedom and liberty of speech and press. The court stated that it was the solicitation that brought the appellants within the sweep of the Act and not their other activities in the dissemination of literature. It declared the legislation constitutional as an effort by the State to protect the public against fraud and imposition in the solicitation of funds for what purported to be religious, charitable, or philanthropic causes.

The facts which were held to support the conviction of Jesse Cantwell on the fifth count were that he stopped two men in the street, asked, and received, permission to play a phonograph record, and played the record "Enemies," which attacked the religion and church of the two men, who were Catholics. Both were incensed by the contents of the record and were tempted to strike Cantwell unless he went away. On being told to be on his way he left their presence. There was no evidence that he was personally offensive or entered into any argument with those he interviewed.

The court held that the charge was not assault or breach of the peace or threats on Cantwell's part, but invoking or inciting others to breach of the peace, and that the facts supported the conviction of that offense.

First. We hold that the statute, as construed and applied to the appellants, deprives them of their liberty without due process of law in contravention of the Fourteenth Amendment. The fundamental concept of liberty embodied in that Amendment embraces the liberties guaranteed by the First Amendment. The First Amendment declares that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. The Fourteenth Amendment has rendered the legislatures of the states as incompetent as Congress to enact such laws. The constitutional inhibition of legislation on the subject of religion has a double aspect. On the one hand, it forestalls compulsion by law of the acceptance of any creed or the practice of any form of worship. Freedom of conscience and freedom to adhere to such religious organization or form of worship as the individual may choose cannot be restricted by law. On the other hand, it safeguards the free exercise of the chosen form of religion. Thus the Amendment embraces two concepts,—freedom to believe and freedom to act. The first is absolute but, in the nature of things, the second cannot be. Conduct remains subject to regulation for the protection of society. The freedom to act must have appropriate definition to preserve the enforcement of that protection. In every case the power to regulate must be so exercised as not, in attaining a permissible end, unduly to infringe the protected freedom. No one would contest the proposition that a State may not, by statute, wholly deny the right to preach or to disseminate religious views. Plainly such a previous and absolute restraint would violate the terms of the guarantee. It is equally clear that a State may by general and non-discriminatory legislation regulate the times, the places, and the manner of soliciting upon its streets, and of holding meetings thereon; and may in other respects safeguard the peace, good order and comfort of the community, without unconstitutionally invading the liberties protected by the Fourteenth Amendment. The appellants are right in their insistence that the Act in question is not such a regulation. If a certificate is procured, solicitation is permitted without restraint but, in the absence of a certificate, solicitation is altogether prohibited.

The appellants urge that to require them to obtain a certificate as a condition of soliciting support for their views amounts to a prior restraint on the exercise of their religion within the meaning of the Constitution. The State insists that the Act, as construed by the Supreme Court of Connecticut, imposes no previous restraint upon the dissemination of religious views or teaching but merely safeguards against the perpetration of frauds under the cloak of religion. Conceding that this is so, the question remains whether the method adopted by Connecticut to that end transgresses the liberty safeguarded by the Constitution.

The general regulation, in the public interest, of solicitation, which does not involve any religious test and does not unreasonably obstruct or delay the collection of funds, is not open to any constitutional objection, even though the collection be for a religious purpose. Such regulation would not constitute a prohibited previous restraint on the free exercise of religion or interpose an inadmissible obstacle to its exercise.

It will be noted, however, that the Act requires an application to the secretary of the public welfare council of the State; that he is empowered to determine whether the cause is a religious one, and that the issue of a certificate depends upon his affirmative action. If he finds that the cause is not that of religion, to solicit for it becomes a crime. He is not to issue a certificate as a matter of course. His decision to issue or refuse it involves appraisal of facts, the exercise of judgment, and the formation of an opinion. He is authorized to withhold his approval if he determines that the cause is not a religious one. Such a censorship of religion as the means of determining its right to survive is a denial of liberty protected by the First Amendment and included in the liberty which is within the protection of the Fourteenth.

The State asserts that if the licensing officer acts arbitrarily, capriciously, or corruptly, his action is subject to judicial correction. Counsel refer to the rule prevailing in Connecticut that the decision of a commission or an administrative official will be reviewed upon a claim that "it works material damage to individual or corporate rights, or invades or threatens such rights, or is so unreasonable as to justify judicial intervention, or is not consonant with justice, or that a legal duty has not been performed." It is suggested that the statute is to be read as requiring the officer to issue a certificate unless the cause in question is clearly not a religious one; and that if he violates his duty his action will be corrected by a court.

To this suggestion there are several sufficient answers. The line between a discretionary and a ministerial act is not always easy to mark and the statute has not been construed by the state court to impose a mere ministerial duty on the secretary of the welfare council. Upon his decision as to the nature of the cause, the right to solicit depends. Moreover, the availability of a judicial remedy for abuses in the system of licensing still leaves that system one of previous restraint which, in the field of free speech and press, we have held inadmissible. A statute authorizing previous restraint upon the exercise of the guaranteed freedom by judicial decision after trial is as obnoxious to the Constitution as one providing for like restraint by administrative action.

Nothing we have said is intended even remotely to imply that, under the cloak of religion, persons may, with impunity, commit frauds upon the public. Certainly penal laws are available to punish such conduct. Even the exercise of religion may be at some slight inconvenience in order that the State may protect its citizens from injury. Without doubt a State may protect its citizens from fraudulent solicitation by requiring a stranger in the community, before permitting him publicly to solicit funds for any purpose, to establish his identity and his authority to act for the cause which he purports to represent. The State is likewise free to regulate the time and manner of solicitation generally, in the interest of public safety, peace, comfort or convenience. But to condition the solicitation of aid for the perpetuation of religious views or systems upon a license, the grant of which rests in the exercise of a determination by state authority as to what is a religious cause, is to lay a forbidden burden upon the exercise of liberty protected by the Constitution.

Second. We hold that, in the circumstances disclosed, the conviction of Jesse Cantwell on the fifth count must be set aside. Decision as to the lawfulness of the conviction demands the weighing of two conflicting interests. The fundamental law declares the interest of the United States that the free exercise of religion be not prohibited and that freedom to communicate information and opinion be not abridged. The State of Connecticut has an obvious interest in the preservation and protection of peace and good order within her borders. We must determine whether the alleged protection of the State's interest, means to which end would, in the absence of limitation by the Federal Constitution, lie wholly within the State's discretion, has been pressed, in this instance, to a point where it has come into fatal collision with the overriding interest protected by the federal compact.

Conviction on the fifth count was not pursuant to a statute evincing a legislative judgment that street discussion of religious affairs, because of its tendency to provoke disorder, should be regulated, or a judgment that the playing of a phonograph on the streets should in the interest of comfort or privacy be limited or prevented. Violation of an Act exhibiting such a legislative judgment and narrowly drawn to prevent the supposed evil, would pose a question differing from that we must here answer. Such a declaration of the State's policy would weigh heavily in any challenge of the law as infringing constitutional limitations. Here, however, the judgment is based on a common law concept of the most general and undefined nature. The court below has held that the petitioner's conduct constituted the commission of an offense under the state law, and we accept its decision as binding upon us to that extent.

The offense known as breach of the peace embraces a great variety of conduct destroying or menacing public order and tranquility. It includes not only violent acts but acts and words likely to produce violence in others. No one would have the hardihood to suggest that the principal of freedom of speech sanctions incitement to riot or that religious liberty connotes the privilege to exhort others to physical attack upon those belonging to another sect. When clear and present danger of riot, disorder, interference with traffic upon the public streets, or other immediate threat to public safety, peace, or order, appears, the power of the State to prevent or punish is obvious. Equally obvious is it that a State may not unduly suppress free communication of views, religious or other, under the guise of conserving desirable conditions. Here we have a situation analogous to a conviction under a statute sweeping in a great variety of conduct under a general and indefinite characterization, and leaving to the executive and judicial branches too wide a discretion in its application.

Having these considerations in mind, we note that Jesse Cantwell, on April 26, 1938, was upon a public street, where he had a right to be, and where he had a right peacefully to impart his views to others. There is no showing that his deportment was noisy, truculent, overbearing or offensive. He requested of two pedestrians permission to play to them a phonograph record. The permission was granted. It is not claimed that he intended to insult or affront the hearers by playing the record. It is plain that he wished only to interest them in his propaganda. The sound of the phonograph is not shown to have disturbed residents of the street, to have drawn a crowd, or to have impeded traffic. Thus far he had invaded no right or interest of the public or of the men accosted.

The record played by Cantwell embodies a general attack on all organized religious systems as instruments of Satan and injurious to man; it then singles out the Roman Catholic Church for strictures couched in terms which naturally would offend not only persons of that persuasion, but all others who respect the honestly held religious faith of their fellows. The hearers were in fact highly offended. One of them said he felt like hitting Cantwell and the other that he was tempted to throw Cantwell off the street. The one who testified he felt like hitting Cantwell said, in answer to the question "Did you do anything else or have any other reaction?" "No, sir, because he said he would take the victrola and he went." The other witness testified that he told Cantwell he had better get off the street before something happened to him and that was the end of the matter as Cantwell picked up his books and walked up the street.

Cantwell's conduct, in the view of the court below, considered apart from the effect of his communication upon his hearers, did not amount to a breach of the peace. One may, however, be guilty of the offense if he commits acts or makes statements likely to provoke violence and disturbance of good order, even though no such eventuality be intended. Decisions to this effect are many, but examination discloses that, in practically all, the provocative language which was held to amount to a breach of the peace consisted of profane, indecent, or abusive remarks directed to the person of the hearer. Resort to epithets or personal abuse is not in any proper sense communication of information or opinion safeguarded by the Constitution, and its punishment as a criminal act would raise no question under that instrument.

We find in the instant case no assault or threatening of bodily harm, no truculent bearing, no intentional discourtesy, no personal abuse. On the contrary, we find only an effort to persuade a willing listener to buy a book or to contribute money in the interest of what Cantwell, however misguided others may think him, conceived to be true religion.

In the realm of religious faith, and in that of political belief, sharp differences arise. In both fields the tenets of one man may seem the rankest error to his neighbor. To persuade others to his own point of view, the pleader, as we know, at times, resorts to exaggeration, to vilification of men who have been, or are, prominent in church or state, and even to false statement. But the people of this nation have ordained in the light of history, that, in spite of the probability of excesses and abuses, these liberties are, in the long view, essential to enlightened opinion and right conduct on the part of the citizens of a democracy.

The essential characteristic of these liberties is, that under their shield many types of life, character, opinion and belief can develop unmolested and unobstructed. Nowhere is this shield more necessary than in our own country for a people composed of many races and of many creeds. There are limits to the exercise of these liberties. The danger in these times from the coercive activities of those who in the delusion of racial or religious conceit would incite violence and breaches of the peace in order to deprive others of their equal right to the exercise of their liberties, is emphasized by events familiar to all. These and other transgressions of those limits the State appropriately may punish.

Although the contents of the record not unnaturally aroused animosity, we think that, in the absence of a statute narrowly drawn to define and punish specific conduct as constituting a clear and present danger to a substantial interest of the State, the petitioner's communication, considered in the light of the constitutional guarantees, raised no such clear and present menace to public peace and order as to render him liable to conviction of the common law offense in question.

The judgment affirming the convictions on the third and fifth counts is reversed and the cause is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Reversed.

NOTES

1. In Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. ed. 244 (1878) the defendant, who had been convicted in a district court for the Territory of Utah of the crime of bigamy in violation of a federal statute defining and affixing a punishment for this offense, contended that his bigamous marriage was contracted as a matter of religious belief or duty; that he was a member of the Mormon Church and a believer in its doctrines, one of which was that it was the duty of male members of the Church to practice polygamy. In affirming his conviction the court, through Chief Justice Waite, said that under the First Amendment "Congress was deprived of all legislative power over mere opinion, but was left free to reach actions which were in violation of social duties or subversive of good order." In further justification of its conclusion that the statute was within the legislative power of Congress, the opinion said: "Laws are made for the government of actions, and while they cannot interfere with mere religious beliefs and opinions, they may with practices. * * * Can a man excuse his practices to the contrary because of his religious belief? To permit this would be to make the professed doctrines of religious belief superior to the law of the land, and in effect to permit every citizen to become a law unto himself. Government could exist only in name under such circumstances."

2. Hamilton v. Regents of the University of California, 293 U. S. 245, 79 L. ed. 343, 55 Sup. Ct. 197 (1934) sustained a regulation made by the Regents of the University of California which required "all able-bodied students" in the University under the age of twenty-four, being citizens of the United States and below the academic rank of junior, to complete a course in military training, over appellants' conscientious objection that military training was repugnant to the tenets and discipline of their religion. This case is generally cited as bringing the religious liberty guaranty of the First Amendment on a level with freedom of speech and press as one of the fundamental civil liberties which the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment forbids the states to abridge, although the court's opinion is not conclusive on the point. Mr. Justice Butler, speaking for the court, said: "There need be no attempt to enumerate or comprehensively to define what is included in the 'liberty' protected by the due process clause. Undoubtedly it does include the right to entertain the beliefs, to adhere to the principles and to teach the doctrines on which these students base their objections to the order prescribing military training." Cases cited in support of this statement were Meyer v. Nebraska, Pierce v. Society of Sisters, Stromberg v. California and Near v. Minnesota. Mr. Justice Cardozo, concurring separately and joined by Justices Brandeis and Stone, was more specific: "I assume for present purposes that the religious liberty protected by the First Amendment against invasion by the nation is protected by the Fourteenth Amendment against invasion by the states." It was not until 1940, however, when Cantwell v. Connecticut was decided, that there was a direct and unequivocal holding on the point. For several years thereafter, mainly as a result of the widespread activities of Jehovah's Witnesses, who fought every community attempt to restrict their freedom of action with zeal and determination, many important cases involving religious liberty issues were decided by the Supreme Court.

3. The widespread attempt of municipalities to collect from Jehovah's Witnesses the usual license taxes or fees imposed on peddlers, sellers and canvassers presented a constitutional issue which the Supreme Court found difficult to resolve. Could such taxes, even though nondiscriminatory, be validly collected on the sale of religious literature by canvassers for the Witnesses? The cumulative burden on the sect was considerable, since their ministers and salesmen traveled from town to town. In Jones v. Opelika, 316 U. S. 584, 86 L. ed. 1691, 62 Sup. Ct. 1231, 141 A. L. R. 514 (1942), the Court held, by a five-to-four vote, that since the municipal ordinance of an Alabama city exacting a license fee from religious adherents engaged in the sale of religious books and pamphlets was reasonable and nondiscriminatory, no infringement of the guaranty of freedom of religion resulted. A year later, however, in Murdock v. Pennsylvania, 319 U. S. 105, 87 L. ed. 1292, 63 Sup. Ct. 870, 146 A. L. R. 81 (1943), in another five-to-four decision, the court vacated this judgment and held invalid a similar exaction by a Pennsylvania city on the ground that it was a condition imposed on the exercise of a constitutional freedom. The new majority declared that the efforts of the Witnesses to vend their literature constituted a religious rather than a commercial venture. "Those who can tax the privilege of engaging in this form of missionary evangelism can close its doors to all those who do not have a full purse. Spreading religious beliefs in this ancient and honorable manner would thus be denied the needy. Those who can deprive religious groups of their colporteurs can take from them a part of the vital power of the press which has survived from the Reformation." In Follett v. McCormick, 321 U. S. 573, 88 L. ed. 938, 64 Sup. Ct. 717, 152 A. L. R. 317 (1944) a similar ordinance of a South Carolina town was held invalid as applied to a member of the Jehovah's Witnesses who was a resident of the town, going from house to house distributing books and obtaining his living from the money received.

In Jamison v. Texas, 318 U. S. 413, 87 L. ed. 869, 63 Sup. Ct. 669 (1943) a Dallas city ordinance was invalidated which forbade the distribution of handbills in the streets, as applied in convicting a Jehovah's Witness for distributing copies of a handbill which invited people to attend a meeting of this sect in a park and which also solicited the purchase of religious books. Largent v. Texas, 318 U. S. 418, 87 L. ed. 873, 63 Sup. Ct. 667 (1943) likewise found constitutionally objectionable a city ordinance forbidding any person to solicit orders or to sell books within the residence portion of a city without first obtaining a permit, which was to be issued only if after investigation the mayor deemed it proper or advisable, as applied to the distribution of religious literature by a Jehovah's Witness, who offered books for sale without applying for a permit.

4. In Martin v. Struthers, 319 U. S. 141, 87 L. ed. 1313, 63 Sup. Ct. 862 (1943) an ordinance which without qualification made it unlawful for any person distributing handbills, circulars or other advertisements to ring the doorbell or otherwise summon the inmates of any residence to the door for the purpose of receiving such literature, was held invalid as applied to a Jehovah's Witness, in a five-to-four decision. The holding was qualified by the assumption that a statute would be valid "which would make it an offense for any person to ring the bell of a householder who has appropriately indicated that he is unwilling to be disturbed."

5. Marsh v. Alabama, 326 U. S. 501, 90 L. ed. 265, 66 Sup. Ct. 276 (1946) held that the constitutional guaranties of freedom of the press and of religion prevented a state from imposing criminal punishment on a member of Jehovah's Witnesses for distributing religious literature on the premises of a company-owned town, contrary to the wishes of the town's management. The court said: "When we balance the constitutional rights of owners of property against those of the people to enjoy freedom of press and religion, as we must here, we remain mindful of the fact that the latter occupy a preferred position." Justice Reed, in a dissent concurred in by Chief Justice Stone and Justice Burton, said: "The rights of the owner, which the Constitution protects as well as the right of free speech, are not outweighed by the interests of the trespasser, even though he trespasses in behalf of religion or free speech." The same result was reached in Tucker v. Texas, 326 U. S. 517, 90 L. ed. 274, 66 Sup. Ct. 274 (1946), where the village was owned by the United States under a congressional program which was designed to provide housing for persons engaged in national defense activities.

6. Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U. S. 158, 88 L. ed. 645, 64 Sup. Ct. 438 (1944) upheld the conviction of an adult Jehovah's Witness for violating a statute prohibiting children under specified ages from selling or exercising any trade in any street or public place by permitting her nine year old niece, over whom she had custody, to accompany her while soliciting sales of religious books and periodicals. The court said: "We think that with reference to the public proclaiming of religion, upon the streets and in other similar public places, the power of the state to control the conduct of children reaches beyond the scope of its authority over adults, as is true in the case of other freedoms, and the rightful boundary of its power has not been crossed in this case." Justice Murphy dissented. Justice Jackson, joined by Justices Roberts and Frankfurter, concurred in the result but dissented from the grounds of affirmance.

7. Defendant, a member of Jehovah's Witnesses, conducted religious services in a public park without the license required by a city ordinance, after his application for such license had been denied by the city council. His conviction of violating the ordinance was affirmed by the Supreme Court of New Hampshire, which held that the defendant's remedy for any arbitrary conduct of the city council was in appropriate judicial proceedings, and that a wrongful refusal of a license was not a bar to the prosecution for violation of the ordinance. In affirming this conviction the Supreme Court of the United States relied on the fact that the state court, by its construction of the ordinance, left to the licensing officials no discretion as to granting permits, no power to discriminate, no control over speech. Consequently the council's refusal of the license was wrongful. Viewing the license requirement as a reasonable and nondiscriminatory regulation for the preservation of peace and good order, the court said that it could not say that a state's requirement that redress must be sought through appropriate judicial procedure violates due process. "It must be admitted that judicial correction of arbitrary refusal by administrators to perform official duties is exasperating and costly. * * * Delay is unfortunate, but the expense and annoyance of litigation is a price citizens must pay for life in an orderly society where the rights of the First Amendment have a real and abiding meaning." Justices Black and Douglas dissented. Poulos v. New Hampshire, 345 U. S. 395, 97 L. ed. 1105, 73 Sup. Ct. 760, 30 A. L. R. (2d) 987 (1953).

8. In Kunz v. New York, 340 U. S. 290, 95 L. ed. 280, 71 Sup. Ct. 312 (1951) the refusal of a permit to a Baptist minister to conduct a religious meeting on New York City streets because the minister in the past had ridiculed and denounced other religious beliefs, thereby stirring strife and threatening violence, was held to be a denial of freedom of speech because of the lack of appropriate standards in the ordinance to guide the police commissioner in issuing permits. In Niemotko v. Maryland, 340 U. S. 268, 95 L. ed. 267, 71 Sup. Ct. 325 (1951) a conviction of members of a Jehovah's Witnesses group for conducting a religious meeting in a public park without a permit was reversed where the power of the municipal authorities to issue such permits was derived, not from a statute or an ordinance, but from local practice not defining any standards or limitations. Justice Frankfurter's concurring opinion contains a helpful review and analysis of previous decisions involving restrictions on the exercise of the right of free speech in public places.

9. For discussions of the cases, see Waite, The Debt of Constitutional Law to Jehovah's Witnesses, 28 Minn. L. Rev. 209 (1944); Howerton, Jehovah's Witnesses and the Federal Constitution, 17 Miss. L. J. 347 (1946); Barber, Religious Liberty v. Police Power: Jehovah's Witnesses, 41 Am. Pol. Sci. Rev. 226 (1947).

WEST VIRGINIA STATE BOARD OF EDUCATION v. BARNETTE.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1943.

319 U. S. 624, 87 L. ed. 1628, 63 Sup. Ct. 1178, 147 A. L. R. 674.

MR. JUSTICE JACKSON delivered the opinion of the Court.

Following the decision by this Court on June 3, 1940, in Minersville School District v. Gobitis, 310 U. S. 586, the West Virginia legislature amended its statutes to require all schools therein to conduct courses of instruction in history, civics, and in the Constitutions of the United States and of the State "for the purpose of teaching, fostering, and perpetuating the ideals, principles and spirit of Americanism, and increasing the knowledge of the organization and machinery of the government." Appellant Board of Education was directed, with advice of the State Superintendent of Schools, to "prescribe the courses of study covering these subjects" for public schools. The Act made it the duty of private, parochial and denominational schools to prescribe courses of study "similar to those required for the public schools."

The Board of Education on January 9, 1942, adopted a resolution containing recitals taken largely from the Court's Gobitis opinion and ordering that the salute to the flag become a "regular part of the program of activities in the public schools," that all teachers and pupils "shall be required to participate in the salute honoring the Nation represented by the Flag; provided, however, that refusal to salute the Flag be regarded as an Act of insubordination, and shall be dealt with accordingly."

The resolution originally required the "commonly accepted salute to the Flag" which it defined. Objections to the salute as "being too much like Hitler's" were raised by the Parent and Teachers Association, the Boy and Girl Scouts, the Red Cross, and the Federation of Women's Clubs. Some modification appears to have been made in deference to these objections, but no concession was made to Jehovah's Witnesses. What is now required is the "stiff-arm" salute, the saluter to keep the right hand raised with palm turned up while the following is repeated: "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands; one Nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

Failure to conform is "insubordination" dealt with by expulsion. Readmission is denied by statute until compliance. Meanwhile the expelled child is "unlawfully absent" and may be proceeded against as a delinquent. His parents or guardians are liable to prosecution, and if convicted are subject to fine not exceeding $50 and jail term not exceeding thirty days.

Appellees, citizens of the United States and of West Virginia, brought suit in the United States District Court for themselves and others similarly situated asking its injunction to restrain enforcement of these laws and regulations against Jehovah's Witnesses. The Witnesses are an unincorporated body teaching that the obligation imposed by law of God is superior to that of laws enacted by temporal government. Their religious beliefs include a literal version of Exodus, Chapter 20, Verses 4 and 5, which says: "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth; thou shalt not bow down thyself to them nor serve them." They consider that the flag is an "image" within this command. For this reason they refuse to salute it.

Children of this faith have been expelled from school and are threatened with exclusion for no other cause. Officials threaten to send them to reformatories maintained for criminally inclined juveniles. Parents of such children have been prosecuted and are threatened with prosecutions for causing delinquency.

The Board of Education moved to dismiss the complaint setting forth these facts and alleging that the law and regulations are an unconstitutional denial of religious freedom, and of freedom of speech, and are invalid under the "due process" and "equal protection" clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution. The cause was submitted on the pleadings to a District Court of three judges. It restrained enforcement as to the plaintiffs and those of that class. The Board of Education brought the case here by direct appeal.

This case calls upon us to reconsider a precedent decision, as the Court throughout its history often has been required to do. Before turning to the Gobitis case, however, it is desirable to notice certain characteristics by which this controversy is distinguished.

The freedom asserted by these appellees does not bring them into collision with rights asserted by any other individual. It is such conflicts which most frequently require intervention of the State to determine where the rights of one end and those of another begin. But the refusal of these persons to participate in the ceremony does not interfere with or deny rights of others to do so. Nor is there any question in this case that their behavior is peaceable and orderly. The sole conflict is between authority and rights of the individual. The State asserts power to condition access to public education on making a prescribed sign and profession and at the same time to coerce attendance by punishing both parent and child. The latter stand on a right of self-determination in matters that touch individual opinion and personal attitude.

As the present Chief Justice said in dissent in the Gobitis case, the State may "require teaching by instruction and study of all in our history and in the structure and organization of our government, including the guaranties of civil liberty which tend to inspire patriotism and love of country." 310 U. S. at page 604. Here, however, we are dealing with a compulsion of students to declare a belief. They are not merely made acquainted with the flag salute so that they may be informed as to what it is or even what it means. The issue here is whether this slow and easily neglected route to aroused loyalties constitutionally may be short-cut by substituting a compulsory salute and slogan. This issue is not prejudiced by the Court's previous holding that where a State, without compelling attendance, extends college facilities to pupils who voluntarily enroll, it may prescribe military training as part of the course without offense to the Constitution. It was held that those who take advantage of its opportunities may not on ground of conscience refuse compliance with such conditions. Hamilton v. Regents of the University of California, 293 U. S. 245. In the present case attendance is not optional. That case is also to be distinguished from the present one because, independently of college privileges or requirements, the State has power to raise militia and impose the duties of service therein upon its citizens.

There is no doubt that, in connection with the pledges, the flag salute is a form of utterance. Symbolism is a primitive but effective way of communicating ideas. The use of an emblem or flag to symbolize some system, idea, institution, or personality, is a short cut from mind to mind. Causes and nations, political parties, lodges and ecclesiastical groups seek to knit the loyalty of their followings to a flag or banner, a color or design. The State announces rank, function, and authority through crowns and maces, uniforms and black robes; the church speaks through the Cross, the Crucifix, the altar and shrine, and clerical raiment. Symbols of state often convey political ideas just as religious symbols come to convey theological ones. Associated with many of these symbols are appropriate gestures of acceptance or respect: a salute, a bowed or bared head, a bended knee. A person gets from a symbol the meaning he puts into it, and what is one man's comfort and inspiration is another's jest and scorn. * * *

Whether the First Amendment to the Constitution will permit officials to order observance of ritual of this nature does not depend upon whether as a voluntary exercise we would think it to be good, bad or merely innocuous. Any credo of nationalism is likely to include what some disapprove or to omit what others think essential, and to give off different overtones as it takes on different accents or interpretations. If official power exists to coerce acceptance of any patriotic creed, what it shall contain cannot be decided by courts, but must be largely discretionary with the ordaining authority, whose power to prescribe would no doubt include power to amend. Hence validity of the asserted power to force an American citizen publicly to profess any statement of belief or to engage in any ceremony of assent to one presents questions of power that must be considered independently of any idea we may have as to the utility of the ceremony in question.

Nor does the issue as we see it turn on one's possession of particular religious views or the sincerity with which they are held. While religion supplies appellees' motive for enduring the discomforts of making the issue in this case, many citizens who do not share these religious views hold such a compulsory rite to infringe constitutional liberty of the individual. It is not necessary to inquire whether non-conformist beliefs will exempt from the duty to salute unless we first find power to make the salute a legal duty.

The Gobitis decision, however, assumed, as did the argument in that case and in this, that power exists in the State to impose the flag salute discipline upon school children in general. The Court only examined and rejected a claim based on religious beliefs of immunity from an unquestioned general rule. The question which underlies the flag salute controversy is whether such a ceremony so touching matters of opinion and political attitude may be imposed upon the individual by official authority under powers committed to any political organization under our Constitution. We examine rather than assume existence of this power and, against this broader definition of issues in this case, re-examine specific grounds assigned for the Gobitis decision.

1. It was said that the flag-salute controversy confronted the Court with "the problem which Lincoln cast in memorable dilemma: 'Must a government of necessity be too strong for the liberties of its people, or too weak to maintain its own existence?'" and that the answer must be in favor of strength. Minersville School District v. Gobitis, supra, 310 U. S. at page 596.

We think these issues may be examined free of pressure or restraint growing out of such considerations.

It may be doubted whether Mr. Lincoln would have thought that the strength of government to maintain itself would be impressively vindicated by our confirming power of the state to expel a handful of children from school. Such oversimplification, so handy in political debate, often lacks the precision necessary to postulates of judicial reasoning. If validly applied to this problem, the utterance cited would resolve every issue of power in favor of those in authority and would require us to override every liberty thought to weaken or delay execution of their policies.

Government of limited power need not be anemic government. Assurance that rights are secure tends to diminish fear and jealousy of strong government, and by making us feel safe to live under it makes for its better support. Without promise of a limiting Bill of Rights it is doubtful if our Constitution could have mustered enough strength to enable its ratification. To enforce those rights today is not to choose weak government over strong government. It is only to adhere as a means of strength to individual freedom of mind in preference to officially disciplined uniformity for which history indicates a disappointing and disastrous end.

The subject now before us exemplifies this principle. Free public education, if faithful to the ideal of secular instruction and political neutrality, will not be partisan or enemy of any class, creed, party, or faction. If it is to impose any ideological discipline, however, each party or denomination must seek to control, or failing that, to weaken the influence of the educational system. Observance of the limitations of the Constitution will not weaken government in the field appropriate for its exercise.

2. It was also considered in the Gobitis case that functions of educational officers in states, counties and school districts were such that to interfere with their authority "would in effect make us the school board for the country." Id., at 598.

The Fourteenth Amendment, as now applied to the States, protects the citizen against the State itself and all of its creatures—Boards of Education not excepted. These have, of course, important, delicate, and highly discretionary functions, but none that they may not perform within the limits of the Bill of Rights. That they are educating the young for citizenship is reason for scrupulous protection of Constitutional freedoms of the individual, if we are not to strangle the free mind at its source and teach youth to discount important principles of our government as mere platitudes.

Such Boards are numerous and their territorial jurisdiction often small. But small and local authority may feel less sense of responsibility to the Constitution, and agencies of publicity may be less vigilant in calling it to account. The action of Congress in making flag observance voluntary and respecting the conscience of the objector in a matter so vital as raising the Army contrasts sharply with these local regulations in matters relatively trivial to the welfare of the nation. There are village tyrants as well as village Hampdens, but none who acts under color of law is beyond reach of the Constitution.

3. The Gobitis opinion reasoned that this is a field "where courts possess no marked and certainly no controlling competence," that it is committed to the legislatures as well as the courts to guard cherished liberties and that it is constitutionally appropriate to "fight out the wise use of legislative authority in the forum of public opinion and before legislative assemblies rather than to transfer such a contest to the judicial arena," since all the "effective means of inducing political changes are left free." * * *

The very purpose of a Bill of Rights was to withdraw certain subjects from the vicissitudes of political controversy, to place them beyond the reach of majorities and officials and to establish them as legal principles to be applied by the courts. One's right to life, liberty, and property, to free speech, a free press, freedom of worship and assembly, and other fundamental rights may not be submitted to vote; they depend on the outcome of no elections.

In weighing arguments of the parties it is important to distinguish between the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment as an instrument for transmitting the principles of the First Amendment and those cases in which it is applied for its own sake. The test of legislation which collides with the Fourteenth Amendment, because it also collides with the principles of the First, is much more definite than the test when only the Fourteenth is involved. Much of the vagueness of the due process clause disappears when the specific prohibitions of the First become its standard. The right of a State to regulate, for example, a public utility may well include, so far as the due process test is concerned, power to impose all of the restrictions which a legislature may have a "rational basis" for adopting. But freedoms of speech and of press, of assembly, and of worship may not be infringed on such slender grounds. They are susceptible of restriction only to prevent grave and immediate danger to interests which the state may lawfully protect. It is important to note that while it is the Fourteenth Amendment which bears directly upon the state it is the more specific limiting principles of the First Amendment that finally govern this case.

Nor does our duty to apply the Bill of Rights to assertions of official authority depend upon our possession of marked competence in the field where the invasion of rights occurs. True, the task of translating the majestic generalities of the Bill of Rights, conceived as part of the pattern of liberal government in the eighteenth century, into concrete restraints on officials dealing with the problems of the twentieth century, is one to disturb self-confidence. These principles grew in soil which also produced a philosophy that the individual was the center of society, that his liberty was attainable through mere absence of governmental restraints, and that government should be entrusted with few controls and only the mildest supervision over men's affairs. We must transplant these rights to a soil in which the laissez-faire concept or principle of non-interference has withered at least as to economic affairs, and social advancements are increasingly sought through closer integration of society and through expanded and strengthened governmental controls. These changed conditions often deprive precedents of reliability and cast us more than we would choose upon our own judgment. But we act in these matters not by authority of our competence but by force of our commissions. We cannot, because of modest estimates of our competence, in such specialties as public education, withhold the judgment that history authenticates as the function of this Court when liberty is infringed.

4. Lastly, and this is the very heart of the Gobitis opinion, it reasons that "National unity is the basis of national security," that the authorities have "the right to select appropriate means for its attainment," and hence reaches the conclusion that such compulsory measures toward "national unity" are constitutional. Id., 310 U. S. at 595. Upon the verity of this assumption depends our answer in this case.

National unity as an end which officials may foster by persuasion and example is not in question. The problem is whether under our Constitution compulsion as here employed is a permissible means for its achievement.

Struggles to coerce uniformity of sentiment in support of some end thought essential to their time and country have been waged by many good as well as by evil men. Nationalism is a relatively recent phenomenon but at other times and places the ends have been racial or territorial security, support of a dynasty or regime, and particular plans for saving souls. As first and moderate methods to attain unity have failed those bent on its accomplishment must resort to an ever-increasing severity. As governmental pressure toward unity becomes greater, so strife becomes more bitter as to whose unity it shall be. Probably no deeper division of our people could proceed from any provocation than from finding it necessary to choose what doctrine and whose program public educational officials shall compel youth to unite in embracing. Ultimate futility of such attempts to compel coherence is the lesson of every such effort from the Roman drive to stamp out Christianity as a disturber of its pagan unity, the Inquisition, as a means to religious and dynastic unity, the Siberian exiles as a means to Russian unity, down to the fast failing efforts of our present totalitarian enemies. Those who begin coercive elimination of dissent soon find themselves exterminating dissenters. Compulsory unification of opinion achieves only the unanimity of the graveyard.

It seems trite but necessary to say that the First Amendment to our Constitution was designed to avoid these ends by avoiding these beginnings. There is no mysticism in the American concept of the state or of the nature or origin of its authority. We set up government by consent of the governed, and the Bill of Rights denies those in power any legal opportunity to coerce that consent. Authority here is to be controlled by public opinion, not public opinion by authority.

The case is made difficult not because the principles of its decision are obscure but because the flag involved is our own. Nevertheless, we apply the limitations of the Constitution with no fear that freedom to be intellectually and spiritually diverse or even contrary will disintegrate the social organization. To believe that patriotism will not flourish if patriotic ceremonies are voluntary and spontaneous instead of a compulsory routine is to make an unflattering estimate of the appeal of our institutions to free minds. We can have intellectual individualism and the rich cultural diversities that we owe to exceptional minds only at the price of occasional eccentricity and abnormal attitudes. When they are so harmless to others or to the State as those we deal with here, the price is not too great. But freedom to differ is not limited to things that do not matter much. That would be a mere shadow of freedom. The test of its substance is the right to differ as to things that touch the heart of the existing order.

If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by word or act their faith therein. If there are any circumstances which permit an exception, they do not now occur to us.

We think the action of the local authorities in compelling the flag salute and pledge transcends constitutional limitations on their power and invades the sphere of intellect and spirit which it is the purpose of the First Amendment to our Constitution to reserve from all official control.

The decision of this Court in Minersville School District v. Gobitis and the holdings of those few per curiam decisions which preceded and foreshadowed it are overruled, and the judgment enjoining enforcement of the West Virginia Regulation is affirmed.

Affirmed.

[MR. JUSTICE ROBERTS and MR. JUSTICE REED noted their dissent, expressing adherence to the views set forth in the Gobitis case. MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, who spoke for the Court in the Gobitis case, wrote a dissenting opinion which is an eloquent exposition of his constitutional philosophy but which is too lengthy for inclusion here and is not susceptible of fair condensation. Brief concurring opinions were also written by MR. JUSTICE BLACK and MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS, and by MR. JUSTICE MURPHY.]

NOTES

1. Mr. Justice Stone, who was the sole dissenter in Minersville School District v. Gobitis, vigorously attacked the decision on the ground that it authorized the state to coerce belief or the expression of it where that expression violates the religious convictions of the individual. "History teaches us," he said, "that there have been but few infringements of personal liberty by the state which have not been justified, as they are here, in the name of righteousness and the public good, and few which have not been directed, as they are now, at politically helpless minorities." The Gobitis case provoked much critical comment which caused some of the members of the court who participated in it to question its soundness. In the previously noted decision in Jones v. Opelika, 316 U. S. 584, 86 L. ed. 1691, 62 Sup. Ct. 1231, 141 A. L. R. 514 (1942), Justices Black, Douglas and Murphy, who dissented therein, appended a statement which said, in part: "Since we joined in the opinion in the Gobitis case, we think this is an appropriate occasion to state that we now believe that it was also wrongly decided." With Mr. Justice Stone this made four members of the court who no longer supported the rationale of that case. When Mr. Justice Rutledge replaced Mr. Justice Byrnes on the court in the winter of 1943, the stage was set for a reversal of the earlier precedent. Mr. Justice Jackson, who had not been on the bench when the first case was decided, joined the new majority. Another interesting sidelight on the second flag-salute case is the fact that a three-judge federal district court, refusing to follow the Gobitis decision, restrained enforcement against complainants of the West Virginia statute and regulation of the Board of Education. See the opinion of Parker, J., in the same case below, 47 F. Supp. 251 (1942).

2. In Taylor v. Mississippi, 319 U. S. 583, 87 L. ed. 1600, 63 Sup. Ct. 1200 (1943) a state statute making it a criminal offense to indoctrinate any creed, theory or set of principles which tended to create an attitude of refusal to salute the flag of the United States or of the state, was held unconstitutional as a denial of liberty guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment.

EVERSON v. BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1947.

330 U. S. 1, 91 L. ed. 711, 67 Sup. Ct. 504, 168 A. L. R. 1392.

MR. JUSTICE BLACK delivered the opinion of the Court.

A New Jersey statute authorizes its local school districts to make rules and contracts for the transportation of children to and from schools. The appellee, a township board of education, acting pursuant to this statute authorized reimbursement to parents of money expended by them for the bus transportation of their children on regular busses operated by the public transportation system. Part of this money was for the payment of transportation of some children in the community to Catholic parochial schools. These church schools give their students, in addition to secular education, regular religious instruction conforming to the religious tenets and modes of worship in the Catholic faith. The superintendent of these schools is a Catholic priest.

The appellant, in his capacity as a district taxpayer, filed suit in a State court challenging the right of the Board to reimburse parents of parochial school students. He contended that the statute and the resolution passed pursuant to it violated both the State and the Federal Constitutions. That court held that the legislature was without power to authorize such payment under the State constitution. 132 N. J. L. 98, 39 A. 2d 75. The New Jersey Court of Errors and Appeals reversed, holding that neither the statute nor the resolution passed pursuant to it was in conflict with the State constitution or the provisions of the Federal Constitution in issue. 133 N. J. L. 350, 44 A. 2d 333. The case is here on appeal under 28 U. S. C. § 344(a) [F. C. A. 28 § 344(a)].

Since there has been no attack on the statute on the ground that a part of its language excludes children attending private schools operated for profit from enjoying state payment for their transportation, we need not consider this exclusionary language; it has no relevancy to any constitutional question here presented. Furthermore, if the exclusion clause had been properly challenged, we do not know whether New Jersey's highest court would construe its statutes as precluding payment of the school transportation of any group of pupils, even those of a private school run for profit. Consequently, we put to one side the question as to the validity of the statute against the claim that it does not authorize payment for the transportation generally of school children in New Jersey.

The only contention here is that the State statute and the resolution, insofar as they authorized reimbursement to parents of children attending parochial schools, violate the Federal Constitution in these two respects, which to some extent, overlap. First. They authorize the State to take by taxation the private property of some and bestow it upon others, to be used for their own private purposes. This, it is alleged violates the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Second. The statute and the resolution forced inhabitants to pay taxes to help support and maintain schools which are dedicated to, and which regularly teach, the Catholic Faith. This is alleged to be a use of State power to support church schools contrary to the prohibition of the First Amendment which the Fourteenth Amendment made applicable to the states.

First. The due process argument that the State law taxes some people to help others carry out their private purposes is framed in two phases. The first phase is that a state cannot tax A to reimburse B for the cost of transporting his children to church schools. This is said to violate the due process clause because the children are sent to these church schools to satisfy the personal desires of their parents, rather than the public's interest in the general education of all children. This argument, if valid, would apply equally to prohibit state payment for the transportation of children to any non-public school, whether operated by a church, or any other non-government individual or group. But, the New Jersey legislature has decided that a public purpose will be served by using tax-raised funds to pay the bus fares of all school children, including those who attend parochial schools. The New Jersey Court of Errors and Appeals has reached the same conclusion. The fact that a state law, passed to satisfy a public need, coincides with the personal desires of the individuals most directly affected is certainly an inadequate reason for us to say that a legislature has erroneously appraised the public need.

It is true that this Court has, in rare instances, struck down state statutes on the ground that the purpose for which tax-raised funds were to be expended was not a public one. Loan Association v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655; Parkersburg v. Brown, 106 U. S. 487; Thompson v. Consolidated Gas Utilities Corp., 300 U. S. 55. But the Court has also pointed out that this far-reaching authority must be exercised with the most extreme caution. Green v. Frazier, 253 U. S. 233, 240. Otherwise, a state's power to legislate for the public welfare might be seriously curtailed, a power which is a primary reason for the existence of states. * * *

It is much too late to argue that legislation intended to facilitate the opportunity of children to get a secular education serves no public purpose. Cochran v. Louisiana State Board of Education, 281 U. S. 370; Interstate Consolidated Street Ry. Co. v. Massachusetts, 207 U. S. 79, 87. * * * The same thing is no less true of legislation to reimburse needy parents, or all parents, for payment of the fares of their children so that they can ride in public busses to and from schools rather than run the risk of traffic and other hazards incident to walking or "hitch-hiking." * * * Nor does it follow that a law has a private rather than public purpose because it provides that tax-raised funds will be paid to reimburse individuals on account of money spent by them in a way which furthers a public program. See Carmichael v. Southern Coal & Coke Co., 301 U. S. 495, 518. Subsidies and loans to individuals such as farmers and home owners, and to privately owned transportation systems, as well as many other kinds of businesses, have been commonplace practices in our state and national history. * * *

Second. The New Jersey statute is challenged as a "law respecting an establishment of religion." The First Amendment, as made applicable to the states by the Fourteenth, Murdock v. Pennsylvania, 319 U. S. 105, commands that a state "shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." These words of the First Amendment reflected in the minds of early Americans a vivid mental picture of conditions and practices which they fervently wished to stamp out in order to preserve liberty for themselves and for their posterity. Doubtless their goal has not been entirely reached; but so far has the Nation moved toward it that the expression "law respecting an establishment of religion," probably does not so vividly remind present-day Americans of the evils, fears, and political problems that caused that expression to be written into our Bill of Rights. Whether this New Jersey law is one respecting the "establishment of religion" requires an understanding of the meaning of that language, particularly with respect to the imposition of taxes. Once again, therefore, it is not inappropriate briefly to review the background and environment of the period in which that constitutional language was fashioned and adopted.

A large proportion of the early settlers of this country came here from Europe to escape the bondage of laws which compelled them to support and attend government favored churches. The centuries immediately before and contemporaneous with the colonization of America had been filled with turmoil, civil strife, and persecutions, generated in large part by established sects determined to maintain their absolute political and religious supremacy. With the power of government supporting them, at various times and places, Catholics had persecuted Protestants, Protestants had persecuted Catholics, Protestant sects had persecuted other Protestant sects, Catholics of one shade of belief had persecuted Catholics of another shade of belief, and all of these had from time to time persecuted Jews. In efforts to force loyalty to whatever religious group happened to be on top and in league with the government of a particular time and place, men and women had been fined, cast in jail, cruelly tortured, and killed. Among the offenses for which these punishments had been inflicted were such things as speaking disrespectfully of the views of ministers of government-established churches, non-attendance at those churches, and failure to pay taxes and tithes to support them.

These practices of the old world were transplanted to and began to thrive in the soil of the new America. The very charters granted by the English Crown to the individuals and companies designated to make the laws which would control the destinies of the colonials authorized these individuals and companies to erect religious establishments which all, whether believers or non-believers, would be required to support and attend. An exercise of this authority was accompanied by a repetition of many of the old world practices and persecutions. Catholics found themselves hounded and proscribed because of their faith; Quakers who followed their conscience went to jail; Baptists were peculiarly obnoxious to certain dominant Protestant sects; men and women of varied faiths who happened to be in a minority in a particular locality were persecuted because they steadfastly persisted in worshipping God only as their own consciences dictated. And all of these dissenters were compelled to pay tithes and taxes to support government-sponsored churches whose ministers preached inflammatory sermons designed to strengthen and consolidate the established faith by generating a burning hatred against dissenters.

These practices became so commonplace as to shock the freedom-loving colonials into a feeling of abhorrence. The imposition of taxes to pay ministers' salaries and to build and maintain churches and church property aroused their indignation. It was these feelings which found expression in the First Amendment. No one locality and no one group throughout the Colonies can rightly be given entire credit for having aroused the sentiment that culminated in adoption of the Bill of Rights' provisions embracing religious liberty. But Virginia, where the established church had achieved a dominant influence in political affairs and where many excesses attracted wide public attention, provided a great stimulus and able leadership for the movement. The people there, as elsewhere, reached the conviction that individual religious liberty could be achieved best under a government which was stripped of all power to tax, to support, or otherwise to assist any or all religions, or to interfere with the beliefs of any religious individual or group.

The movement toward this end reached its dramatic climax in Virginia in 1785-86 when the Virginia legislative body was about to renew Virginia's tax levy for the support of the established church. Thomas Jefferson and James Madison led the fight against this tax. Madison wrote his great Memorial and Remonstrance against the law. In it, he eloquently argued that a true religion did not need the support of law; that no person, either believer or non-believer, should be taxed to support a religious institution of any kind; that the best interest of a society required that the minds of men always be wholly free; and that cruel persecutions were the inevitable result of government-established religions. Madison's Remonstrance received strong support throughout Virginia. And the Assembly postponed consideration of the proposed tax measure until its next session. When the proposal came up for consideration at that session, it not only died in committee, but the Assembly enacted the famous "Virginia Bill for Religious Liberty" originally written by Thomas Jefferson. * * *

This Court has previously recognized that the provisions of the First Amendment, in the drafting and adoption of which Madison and Jefferson played such leading roles, had the same objective and were intended to provide the same protection against governmental intrusion on religious liberty as the Virginia statute. * * * Prior to the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, the First Amendment did not apply as a restraint against the states. Most of them did soon provide similar constitutional protections for religious liberty. But some states persisted for about half a century in imposing restraints upon the free exercise of religion and in discriminating against particular religious groups. In recent years, so far as the provision against the establishment of a religion is concerned, the question has most frequently arisen in connection with proposed state aid to church schools and efforts to carry on religious teachings in the public schools in accordance with the tenets of a particular sect. Some churches have either sought or accepted state financial support for their schools. Here again the efforts to obtain state aid or acceptance of it have not been limited to any one particular faith. The state courts, in the main, have remained faithful to the language of their own constitutional provisions designed to protect religious freedom and to separate religions and governments. Their decisions, however, show the difficulty in drawing the line between tax legislation which provides funds for the welfare of the general public and that which is designed to support institutions which teach religion.

The meaning and scope of the First Amendment, preventing establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, in the light of its history and the evils it was designed forever to suppress, have been several times elaborated by the decisions of this Court prior to the application of the First Amendment to the states by the Fourteenth. The broad meaning given the Amendment by these earlier cases has been accepted by this Court in its decisions concerning an individual's religious freedom rendered since the Fourteenth Amendment was interpreted to make the prohibitions of the First applicable to state action abridging religious freedom. There is every reason to give the same application and broad interpretation to the "establishment of religion" clause. * * *

The "establishment of religion" clause of the First Amendment means at least this: Neither a state nor the Federal Government can set up a church. Neither can pass laws which aid one religion, aid all religions, or prefer one religion over another. Neither can force nor influence a person to go to or to remain away from church against his will or force him to profess a belief or disbelief in any religion. No person can be punished for entertaining or professing religious beliefs or disbeliefs, for church attendance or non-attendance. No tax in any amount, large or small, can be levied to support any religious activities or institutions, whatever they may be called, or whatever form they may adopt to teach or practice religion. Neither a state nor the Federal Government can, openly or secretly, participate in the affairs of any religious organizations or groups and vice versa. In the words of Jefferson, the clause against establishment of religion by law was intended to erect "a wall of separation between Church and State." * * *

We must consider the New Jersey statute in accordance with the foregoing limitations imposed by the First Amendment. But we must not strike that state statute down if it is within the state's constitutional power even though it approaches the verge of that power. * * * New Jersey cannot consistently with the "establishment of religion" clause of the First Amendment contribute tax-raised funds to the support of an institution which teaches the tenets and faith of any church. On the other hand, other language of the amendment commands that New Jersey cannot hamper its citizens in the free exercise of their own religion. Consequently, it cannot exclude individual Catholics, Lutherans, Mohammedans, Baptists, Jews, Methodists, Non-believers, Presbyterians, or the members of any other faith because of their faith, or lack of it, from receiving the benefits of public welfare legislation. While we do not mean to intimate that a state could not provide transportation only to children attending public schools, we must be careful, in protecting the citizens of New Jersey against state-established churches, to be sure that we do not inadvertently prohibit New Jersey from extending its general State law benefits to its citizens without regard to their religious belief.

Measured by these standards we cannot say that the First Amendment prohibits New Jersey from spending tax-raised funds to pay the bus fares of parochial school pupils as a part of a general program under which it pays the fares of pupils attending public and other schools. It is undoubtedly true that children are helped to get to church schools. There is even a possibility that some of the children might not be sent to the church schools if the parents were compelled to pay their children's bus fares out of their own pockets when transportation to a public school would have been paid for by the State. The same possibility exists where the state requires a local transit company to provide reduced fares to school children including those attending parochial schools, or where a municipally owned transportation system undertakes to carry all school children free of charge. Moreover, state-paid policemen, detailed to protect children going to and from church schools from the very real hazards of traffic, would serve much the same purpose and accomplish much the same result as state provisions intended to guarantee free transportation of a kind which the state deems to be best for the school children's welfare. And parents might refuse to risk their children to the serious danger of traffic accidents going to and from parochial schools, the approaches to which were not protected by policemen. Similarly, parents might be reluctant to permit their children to attend schools which the state had cut off from such general government services as ordinary police and fire protection, connections for sewage disposal, public highways and sidewalks. Of course cutting off church schools from these services, so separate and so indisputably marked off from the religious function, would make it far more difficult for the schools to operate. But such is obviously not the purpose of the First Amendment. That Amendment requires the state to be a neutral in its relations with groups of religious believers and non-believers; it does not require the state to be their adversary. State power is no more to be used so as to handicap religions, than it is to favor them.

This Court has said that parents may, in the discharge of their duty under state compulsory education laws, send their children to a religious rather than a public school if the school meets the secular educational requirements which the state has power to impose. See Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U. S. 510. It appears that these parochial schools meet New Jersey's requirements. The State contributes no money to the schools. It does not support them. Its legislation, as applied, does no more than provide a general program to help parents get their children, regardless of their religion, safely and expeditiously to and from accredited schools.

The First Amendment has erected a wall between church and state. That wall must be kept high and impregnable. We could not approve the slightest breach. New Jersey has not breached it here.

Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE JACKSON, dissenting.

I find myself, contrary to first impressions, unable to join in this decision. I have a sympathy, though it is not ideological, with Catholic citizens who are compelled by law to pay taxes for public schools, and also feel constrained by conscience and discipline to support other schools for their own children. Such relief to them as this case involves is not in itself a serious burden to taxpayers and I had assumed it to be as little serious in principle. Study of this case convinces me otherwise. The Court's opinion marshals every argument in favor of state aid and puts the case in its most favorable light, but much of its reasoning confirms my conclusions that there are no good grounds upon which to support the present legislation. In fact, the undertones of the opinion, advocating complete and uncompromising separation of Church from State, seem utterly discordant with its conclusion yielding support to their commingling in educational matters. The case which irresistibly comes to mind as the most fitting precedent is that of Julia, who, according to Byron's reports, "whispering 'I will Ne'er consent,'—consented." * * *

It seems to me that the basic fallacy in the Court's reasoning, which accounts for its failure to apply the principles it avows, is in ignoring the essentially religious test by which beneficiaries of this expenditure are selected. A policeman protects a Catholic, of course—but not because he is a Catholic; it is because he is a man and a member of our society. The fireman protects the Church school—but not because it is a Church school; it is because it is property, part of the assets of our society. Neither the fireman nor the policeman has to ask before he renders aid "Is this man or building identified with the Catholic Church?" But before these school authorities draw a check to reimburse for a student's fare they must ask just that question, and if the school is a Catholic one they may render aid because it is such, while if it is of any other faith or is run for profit, the help must be withheld. To consider the converse of the Court's reasoning will best disclose its fallacy. That there is no parallel between police and fire protection and this plan of reimbursement is apparent from the incongruity of the limitation of this act if applied to police and fire service. Could we sustain an act that said police shall protect pupils on the way to or from public schools and Catholic schools but not while going to and coming from other schools, and firemen shall extinguish a blaze in public or Catholic school buildings but shall not put out a blaze in Protestant Church schools or private schools operated for profit? That is the true analogy to the case we have before us and I should think it pretty plain that such a scheme would not be valid. * * *

There is no answer to the proposition more fully expounded by MR. JUSTICE RUTLEDGE that the effect of the religious freedom Amendment to our Constitution was to take every form of propagation of religion out of the realm of things which could directly or indirectly be made public business and thereby be supported in whole or in part at taxpayers' expense. That is a difference which the Constitution sets up between religion and almost every other subject matter of legislation, a difference which goes to the very root of religious freedom and which the Court is overlooking today. This freedom was first in the Bill of Rights because it was first in the forefathers' minds; it was set forth in absolute terms, and its strength is its rigidity. It was intended not only to keep the states' hands out of religion, but to keep religion's hands off the state, and above all, to keep bitter religious controversy out of public life by denying to every denomination any advantage from getting control of public policy or the public purse. Those great ends I cannot but think are immeasurably compromised by today's decision. * * *

I cannot read the history of the struggle to separate political from ecclesiastical affairs, well summarized in the opinion of MR. JUSTICE

RUTLEDGE in which I generally concur, without a conviction that the Court today is unconsciously giving the clock's hands a backward turn.

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER joins in this opinion.

MR. JUSTICE RUTLEDGE, with whom MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, MR. JUSTICE JACKSON and MR. JUSTICE BURTON agree, dissenting.

* * * [Only excerpts from this lengthy dissent are included here.]

This case forces us to determine squarely for the first time what was "an establishment of religion" in the First Amendment's conception; and by that measure to decide whether New Jersey's action violates its command. * * *

Not simply an established church, but any law respecting an establishment of religion is forbidden. The Amendment was broadly but not loosely phrased. It is the compact and exact summation of its author's views formed during his long struggle for religious freedom. In Madison's own words characterizing Jefferson's Bill for Establishing Religious Freedom, the guaranty he put in our national charter, like the bill he piloted through the Virginia Assembly, was "a Model of technical precision, and perspicuous brevity." Madison could not have confused "church" and "religion" or "an establishment of religion."

The Amendment's purpose was not to strike merely at the official establishment of a single sect, creed or religion, outlawing only a formal relation such as had prevailed in England and some of the colonies. Necessarily it was to uproot all such relationships. But the object was broader than separating church and state in this narrow sense. It was to create a complete and permanent separation of the spheres of religious activity and civil authority by comprehensively forbidding every form of public aid or support for religion. In proof the Amendment's wording and history unite with this Court's consistent utterances whenever attention has been fixed directly upon the question. * * *

No provision of the Constitution is more closely tied to or given content by its generating history than the religious clause of the First Amendment. It is at once the refined product and the terse summation of that history. The history includes not only Madison's authorship and the proceedings before the First Congress, but also the long and intensive struggle for religious freedom in America, more especially in Virginia, of which the Amendment was the direct culmination. In the documents of the times, particularly of Madison, who was leader in the Virginia struggle before he became the Amendment's sponsor, but also in the writings of Jefferson and others and in the issues which engendered them is to be found irrefutable confirmation of the Amendment's sweeping content. * * *

In view of this history no further proof is needed that the Amendment forbids any appropriation, large or small, from public funds to aid or support any and all religious exercises. But if more were called for, the debates in the First Congress and this Court's consistent expressions, whenever it has touched on the matter directly, supply it.

By contrast with the Virginia history, the congressional debates on consideration of the Amendment reveal only sparse discussion, reflecting the fact that the essential issues had been settled. Indeed the matter had become so well understood as to have been taken for granted in all but formal phrasing. Hence, the only enlightening reference shows concern, not to preserve any power to use public funds in aid of religion, but to prevent the Amendment from outlawing private gifts inadvertently by virtue of the breadth of its wording. * * *

Does New Jersey's action furnish support for religion by use of the taxing power? Certainly it does, if the test remains undiluted as Jefferson and Madison made it, that money taken by taxation from one is not to be used or given to support another's religious training or belief, or indeed one's own. Today as then the furnishing of "contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves" is the forbidden exaction; and the prohibition is absolute for whatever measure brings that consequence and whatever amount may be sought or given to that end.

The funds used here were raised by taxation. The Court does not dispute nor could it that their use does in fact give aid and encouragement to religious instruction. It only concludes that this aid is not "support" in law. But Madison and Jefferson were concerned with aid and support in fact, not as a legal conclusion "entangled in precedents." Remonstrance, Par. 3. Here parents pay money to send their children to parochial schools and funds raised by taxation are used to reimburse them. This not only helps the children to get to school and the parents to send them. It aids them in a substantial way to get the very thing they are sent to the particular school to secure, namely, religious training and teaching.

Believers of all faiths, and others who do not express their feeling toward ultimate issues of existence in any creedal form, pay the New Jersey tax. When the money so raised is used to pay for transportation to religious schools the Catholic taxpayer to the extent of his proportionate share pays for the transportation of Lutheran, Jewish and otherwise religiously affiliated children to receive their non-Catholic religious instruction. Their parents likewise pay proportionately for the transportation of Catholic children to receive Catholic instruction. Each thus contributes to "the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves" in so far as their religions differ, as do others who accept no creed without regard to those differences. * * *

No one conscious of religious values can be unsympathetic toward the burden which our constitutional separation puts on parents who desire religious instruction mixed with secular for their children. They pay taxes for others' children's education, at the same time the added cost of instruction for their own. Nor can one happily see benefits denied to children which others receive, because in conscience they or their parents for them desire a different kind of training others do not demand.

But if these feelings should prevail, there would be an end to our historic constitutional policy and command. No more unjust or discriminatory in fact is it to deny attendants at religious schools the cost of their transportation than it is to deny them tuitions, sustenance for their teachers, or any other educational expense which others receive at public cost. Hardship in fact there is which none can blink. But, for assuring to those who undergo it the greater, the most comprehensive freedom, it is one written by design and firm intent into our basic law. * * *

Two great drives are constantly in motion to abridge, in the name of education, the complete division of religion and civil authority which our forefathers made. One is to introduce religious education and observances into the public schools. The other, to obtain public funds for the aid and support of various private religious schools. * * * In my opinion both avenues were closed by the Constitution. Neither should be opened by this Court. The matter is not one of quantity, to be measured by the amount of money expended. Now as in Madison's day it is one of principle, to keep separate the separate spheres as the First Amendment drew them; to prevent the first experiment upon our liberties; and to keep the question from becoming entangled in corrosive precedents. We should not be less strict to keep strong and untarnished the one side of the shield of religious freedom than we have been of the other.

The judgment should be reversed.

NOTE

1. Cochran v. Louisiana State Board of Education, 281 U. S. 370, 74 L. ed. 913, 50 Sup. Ct. 335 (1930) found no valid objection under the Fourteenth Amendment to a state law providing free textbooks to school children, some of whom attended private and parochial schools, since the general welfare is deemed to be promoted through education.

ZORACH v. CLAUSON.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1952.
343 U. S. 306, 96 L. ed. 954, 72 Sup. Ct. 679.

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS delivered the opinion of the Court.

New York City has a program which permits its public schools to release students during the school day so that they may leave the school buildings and school grounds and go to religious centers for religious instruction or devotional exercises. A student is released on written request of his parents. Those not released stay in the classrooms. The churches make weekly reports to the schools, sending a list of children who have been released from public school but who have not reported for religious instruction.

This "released time" program involves neither religious instruction in public school classrooms nor the expenditure of public funds. All costs, including the application blanks, are paid by the religious organizations. The case is therefore unlike McCullum v. Board of Education, 333 U. S. 203, which involved a "released time" program from Illinois. In that case the classrooms were turned over to religious instructors. We accordingly held that the program violated the First Amendment which (by reason of the Fourteenth Amendment) prohibits the states from establishing religion or prohibiting its free exercise.

Appellants, who are taxpayers and residents of New York City and whose children attend its public schools, challenge the present law, contending it is in essence not different from the one involved in the McCullum case. Their argument, stated elaborately in various ways, reduces itself to this: the weight and influence of the school is put behind a program for religious instruction; public school teachers police it, keeping tab on students who are released; the classroom activities come to a halt while the students who are released for religious instruction are on leave; the school is a crutch on which the churches are leaning for support in their religious training; without the co-operation of the schools this "released time" program, like the one in the McCullum case, would be futile and ineffective. The New York Court of Appeals sustained the law against this claim of unconstitutionality. 303 N. Y. 161, 100 N. E. 2d 463. The case is here on appeal. 28 U. S. C. § 1257(2) [F. C. A. 28 § 1257(2)].

The briefs and arguments are replete with data bearing on the merits of this type of "released time" program. Views pro and con are expressed, based on practical experience with these programs and with their implications. We do not stop to summarize these materials nor to burden the opinion with an analysis of them. For they involve considerations not germane to the narrow constitutional issue presented. They largely concern the wisdom of the system, its efficiency from an educational point of view, and the political considerations which have motivated its adoption or rejection in some communities. Those matters are of no concern here, since our problem reduces itself to whether New York by this system has either prohibited the "free exercise" of religion or has made a law "respecting an establishment of religion" within the meaning of the First Amendment.

It takes obtuse reasoning to inject any issue of the "free exercise" of religion into the present case. No one is forced to go to the religious classroom and no religious exercise or instruction is brought to the classrooms of the public schools. A student need not take religious instruction. He is left to his own desires as to the manner or time of his religious devotions, if any.

There is a suggestion that the system involves the use of coercion to get public school students into religious classrooms. There is no evidence in the record before us that supports that conclusion. The present record indeed tells us that the school authorities are neutral in this regard and do no more than release students whose parents so request. If in fact coercion were used, if it were established that any one or more teachers were using their office to persuade or force students to take the religious instruction, a wholly different case would be presented. Hence we put aside that claim of coercion both as respects the "free exercise" of religion and "an establishment of religion" within the meaning of the First Amendment.

Moreover, apart from that claim of coercion, we do not see how New York by this type of "released time" program has made a law respecting an establishment of religion within the meaning of the First Amendment. There is much talk of the separation of Church and State in the history of the Bill of Rights and in the decisions clustering around the First Amendment. See Everson v. Board of Education, 330 U. S. 1; McCullum v. Board of Education, supra. There cannot be the slightest doubt that the First Amendment reflects the philosophy that Church and State should be separated. And so far as interference with the "free exercise" of religion and an "establishment" of religion are concerned, the separation must be complete and unequivocal. The First Amendment within the scope of its coverage permits no exception; the prohibition is absolute. The First Amendment, however, does not say that in every and all respects there shall be a separation of Church and State. Rather, it studiously defines the manner, the specific ways, in which there shall be no concert or union or dependency one on the other. That is the common sense of the matter. Otherwise the state and religion would be aliens to each other—hostile, suspicious, and even unfriendly. Churches could not be required to pay even property taxes. Municipalities would not be permitted to render police or fire protection to religious groups. Policemen who helped parishioners into their places of worship would violate the Constitution. Prayers in our legislative halls; the appeals to the Almighty in the messages of the Chief Executive; the proclamations making Thanksgiving Day a holiday; "so help me God" in our courtroom oaths—these and all other references to the Almighty that run through our laws, our public rituals, our ceremonies would be flouting the First Amendment. A fastidious atheist or agnostic could even object to the supplication with which the Court opens each session: "God save the United States and this Honorable Court."

We would have to press the concept of separation of Church and State to these extremes to condemn the present law on constitutional grounds. The nullification of this law would have wide and profound effects. A Catholic student applies to his teacher for permission to leave the school during hours on a Holy Day of Obligation to attend a mass.

A Jewish student asks his teacher for permission to be excused for Yom Kippur. A Protestant wants the afternoon off for a family baptismal ceremony. In each case the teacher requires parental consent in writing. In each case the teacher, in order to make sure the student is not a truant, goes further and requires a report from the priest, the rabbi, or the minister. The teacher in other words cooperates in a religious program to the extent of making it possible for her students to participate in it. Whether she does it occasionally for a few students, regularly for one, or pursuant to a systematized program designed to further the religious needs of all the students does not alter the character of the act.

We are a religious people whose institutions presuppose a Supreme Being. We guarantee the freedom to worship as one chooses. We make room for as wide a variety of beliefs and creeds as the spiritual needs of man deem necessary. We sponsor an attitude on the part of government that shows no partiality to any one group and that lets each flourish according to the zeal of its adherents and the appeal of its dogma. When the state encourages religious instruction or cooperates with religious authorities by adjusting the schedule of public events to sectarian needs, it follows the best of our traditions. For it then respects the religious nature of our people and accommodates the public service to their spiritual needs. To hold that it may not would be to find in the Constitution a requirement that the government show a callous indifference to religious groups. That would be preferring those who believe in no religion over those who do believe. Government may not finance religious groups nor undertake religious instruction nor blend secular and sectarian education nor use secular institutions to force one or some religion on any person. But we find no constitutional requirement which makes it necessary for government to be hostile to religion and to throw its weight against efforts to widen the effective scope of religious influence. The government must be neutral when it comes to competition between sects. It may not thrust any sect on any person. It may not make a religious observance compulsory. It may not coerce anyone to attend church, to observe a religious holiday, or to take religious instruction. But it can close its doors or suspend its operations as to those who want to repair to their religious sanctuary for worship or instruction. No more than that is undertaken here.

This program may be unwise and improvident from an educational or a community viewpoint. That appeal is made to us on a theory, previously advanced, that each case must be decided on the basis of "our own prepossessions." See McCullum v. Board of Education, supra, 333 U. S. at page 238. Our individual preferences, however, are not the constitutional standard. The constitutional standard is the separation of Church and State. The problem, like many problems in constitutional law, is one of degree. See McCullum v. Board of Education, supra, 333 U. S. at page 231.

In the McCollum case the classrooms were used for religious instruction and the force of the public school was used to promote that instruction. Here, as we have said, the public schools do no more than accommodate their schedules to a program of outside religious instruction. We follow the McCollum case. But we cannot expand it to cover the present released time program unless separation of Church and State means that public institutions can make no adjustments of their schedules to accommodate the religious needs of the people. We cannot read into the Bill of Rights such a philosophy of hostility to religion. Affirmed.

Mr. JUSTICE BLACK, dissenting.

Illinois ex rel. McCollum v. Board of Education, 333 U. S. 203, held invalid as an "establishment of religion" an Illinois system under which school children, compelled by law to go to public schools, were freed from some hours of required school work on condition that they attend special religious classes held in the school buildings. Although the classes were taught by sectarian teachers neither employed nor paid by the state, the state did use its power to further the program by releasing some of the children from regular class work, insisting that those released attend the religious classes, and requiring that those who remained behind do some kind of academic work while the others received their religious training. * * *

I see no significant difference between the invalid Illinois system and that of New York here sustained. Except for the use of the school buildings in Illinois, there is no difference between the systems which I consider even worthy of mention. In the New York program, as in that of Illinois, the school authorities release some of the children on the condition that they attend the religious classes, get reports on whether they attend, and hold the other children in the school building until the religious hour is over. As we attempted to make categorically clear, the McCollum decision would have been the same if the religious classes had not been held in the school buildings. We said:

"Here not only are the state's tax-supported public school buildings used for dissemination of religious doctrines. The State also affords sectarian groups an invaluable aid in that it helps to provide pupils for their religious classes through use of the state's compulsory public school machinery. This is not separation of Church and State." (Emphasis supplied.) McCollum v. Board of Education, supra, 333 U. S. at page 212. McCollum thus held that Illinois could not constitutionally manipulate the compelled classroom hours of its compulsory school machinery so as to channel children into sectarian classes. Yet that is exactly what the Court holds New York can do.

I am aware that our McCollum decision on separation of church and state has been subjected to a most searching examination throughout the country. Probably few opinions from this Court in recent years have attracted more attention or stirred wider debate. Our insistence on "a wall between Church and State which must be kept high and impregnable" has seemed to some a correct exposition of the philosophy and a true interpretation of the language of the First Amendment to which we should strictly adhere. With equal conviction and sincerity, others have thought the McCollum decision fundamentally wrong and have pledged continuous warfare against it. The opinions in the court below and the briefs here reflect these diverse viewpoints. In dissenting today, I mean to do more than give routine approval to our McCollum decision. I mean also to reaffirm my faith in the fundamental philosophy expressed in McCollum and Everson v. Board of Education, 330 U. S. 1. That reaffirmance can be brief because of the exhaustive opinions in those recent cases.

Difficulty of decision in the hypothetical situations mentioned by the Court, but not now before us, should not confuse the issues in this case. Here the sole question is whether New York can use its compulsory education laws to help religious sects get attendance presumably too unenthusiastic to go unless moved to do so by the pressure of this state machinery. That this is the plan, purpose, design and consequence of the New York program cannot be denied. The state thus makes religious sects beneficiaries of its power to compel children to attend secular schools. Any use of such coercive power by the state to help or hinder some religious sects or to prefer all religious sects over non-believers or vice versa is just what I think the First Amendment forbids. In considering whether a state has entered this forbidden field the question is not whether it has entered too far but whether it has entered at all. New York is manipulating its compulsory education laws to help religious sects get pupils. This is not separation but combination of Church and State. * * *

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, dissenting.

By way of emphasizing my agreement with Mr. JUSTICE JACKSON's dissent, I add a few words.

The Court tells us that in the maintenance of its public schools, "[The State government] can close its doors or suspend its operations" so that its citizens may be free for religious devotions or instruction. If that were the issue, it would not rise to the dignity of a constitutional controversy. Of course a State may provide that the classes in its schools shall be dismissed, for any reason, or no reason, on fixed days, or for special occasions. The essence of this case is that the school system did not "close its doors" and did not "suspend its operations." There is all the difference in the world between letting the children out of school and letting some of them out of school into religious classes. If every one is free to make what use he will of time wholly unconnected from schooling required by law—those who wish sectarian instruction devoting it to that purpose, those who have ethical instruction at home, to that, those who study music, to that—then of course there is no conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment.

The pith of the case is that formalized religious instruction is substituted for other school activity which those who do not participate in the released-time program are compelled to attend. The school system is very much in operation during this kind of released time. If its doors are closed, they are closed upon those students who do not attend the religious instruction in order to keep them within the school. That is the very thing which raises the constitutional issue. It is not met by disregarding it. Failure to discuss this issue does not take it out of the case.

Again, the Court relies upon the absence from the record of evidence of coercion in the operation of the system. "If in fact coercion were used," according to the Court, "if it were established that any one or more teachers were using their office to persuade or force students to take the religious instruction, a wholly different case would be presented." Thus, "coercion" in the abstract is acknowledged to be fatal. But the Court disregards the fact that as the case comes to us, there could be no proof of coercion, for the petitioners were not allowed to make proof of it. Petitioners alleged that "The operation of the released time program has resulted and inevitably results in the exercise of pressure and coercion upon parents and children to secure attendance by the children for religious instruction." This allegation—that coercion was in fact present and is inherent in the system, no matter what disavowals might be made in the operating regulations—was denied by respondents. Thus were drawn issues of fact which cannot be determined, on any conceivable view of judicial notice, by judges out of their own knowledge or experience. Petitioners sought an opportunity to adduce evidence in support of these allegations at an appropriate trial. And though the courts below cited the concurring opinion in McCullum v. Board of Education, 333 U. S. 203, 226, to "emphasize the importance of detailed analysis of the facts to which the Constitutional test of Separation is to be applied," they denied that opportunity on the ground that such proof was irrelevant to the issue of constitutionality. See 198 Misc. 631, 641; 303 N. Y. 161, 174-175.

When constitutional issues turn on facts, it is a strange procedure indeed not to permit the facts to be established. When such is the case, there are weighty considerations for us to require the State court to make its determination only after a thorough canvass of all the circumstances and not to bar them from consideration. Cf. Chastleton Corp. v. Sinclair, 264 U. S. 543; Hammond v. Schappi Bus Line, 275 U. S. 164. If we are to decide this case on the present record, however, a strict adherence to the usage of courts in ruling on the sufficiency of pleadings would require us to take as admitted the facts pleaded in the petitioners' complaint, including the fact of coercion, actual and inherent. See Judge Fuld, dissenting below, 303 N. Y. at page 185. Even on a more latitudinarian view, I cannot see how a finding that coercion was absent, deemed critical by this Court in sustaining the practice, can be made here, when petitioners were prevented from making a timely showing of coercion because the courts below thought it irrelevant.

The result in the McCullum case, 333 U. S. 203, was based on principles that received unanimous acceptance by this Court, barring only a single vote. I agree with MR. JUSTICE BLACK that those principles are disregarded in reaching the result in this case. Happily they are not disavowed by the Court. From this I draw the hope that in future variations of the problem which are bound to come here, these principles may again be honored in the observance. * * *

MR. JUSTICE JACKSON, dissenting.

This released time program is founded upon a use of the State's power of coercion, which, for me, determines its unconstitutionality. Stripped to its essentials, the plan has two stages, first, that the State compel each student to yield a large part of his time for public secular education and, second, that some of it be "released" to him on condition that he devote it to sectarian religious purposes. * * *

The greater effectiveness of this system over voluntary attendance after school hours is due to the truant officer who, if the youngster fails to go to the Church school, dogs him back to the public school-room. Here schooling is more or less suspended during the "released time" so the nonreligious attendants will not forge ahead of the churchgoing absentees. But it serves as a temporary jail for a pupil who will not go to Church. It takes more subtlety of mind than I possess to deny that this is governmental constraint in support of religion. It is as unconstitutional, in my view, when exerted by indirection as when exercised forthrightly. * * *

The day that this country ceases to be free for irreligion it will cease to be free for religion—except for the sect that can win political power. The same epithetical jurisprudence used by the Court today to beat down those who oppose pressuring children into some religion can devise as good epithets tomorrow against those who object to pressuring them into a favored religion. And, after all, if we concede to the state power and wisdom to single out "duly constituted religious" bodies as exclusive alternatives for compulsory secular instruction, it would be logical to also uphold the power and wisdom to choose the true faith among those "duly constituted." We start down a rough road when we begin to mix compulsory public education with compulsory godliness.

A number of Justices just short of a majority of the majority that promulgates today's passionate dialectics joined in answering them in Illinois ex rel. McCullum v. Board of Education, 333 U. S. 203. The distinction attempted between that case and this is trivial, almost to the point of cynicism, magnifying its nonessential details and disparaging compulsion which was the underlying reason for invalidity. A reading of the Court's opinion in that case along with its opinion in this case will show such difference of overtones and undertones as to make clear that the McCollum case has passed like a storm in a teacup. The wall which the Court was professing to erect between Church and State has become even more warped and twisted than I expected. Today's judgment will be more interesting to students of psychology and of the judicial processes than to students of constitutional law.

NOTES

1. The principal case and its predecessor, Illinois ex rel. McCollum v. Board of Education, 333 U. S. 203, 92 L. ed. 649, 68 Sup. Ct. 461, 2 A. L. R. (2d) 1338 (1948), together with Everson v. Board of Education, supra, provoked a flood of contemporary discussion and controversy. For a comprehensive treatment from various points of view, see the symposium, Religion and the State, 14 Law and Contemporary Problems 1 (Winter, 1949). See also, Owen, The McCollum Case, 22 Temp. L. Q. 159 (1948); Schmidt, Religious Liberty and the Supreme Court of the United States, 17 Fordham L. Rev. 173 (1948); Sutherland, Due Process and Disestablishment, 62 Harv. L. Rev. 1306 (1949); Waite, Jefferson's "Wall of Separation": What and Where? 33 Minn. L. Rev. 494 (1949); Cushman, Public Support of Religious Education in American Constitutional Law, 45 Ill. L. Rev. 333 (1950); Pfeffer, Church and State: Something Less Than Separation, 19 U. of Chi. L. Rev. 1 (1951); Drinan, The Novel "Liberty" Created by the McCollum Decision, 39 Geo. L. J. 216 (1951); Note, 17 Geo. Wash. L. Rev. 516 (1949); Comment, 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 423 (1949); Comment, 26 So. Cal. L. Rev. 186 (1953). Several recent books dealing with problems of church and state are of interest: Johnson and Yost, Separation of Church and State in the United States (1948); Parsons, The First Freedom (1948); O'Neill, Religion and Education Under the Constitution (1949); and Stokes, Church and State in the United States (1950).

2. Doremus v. Board of Education, 342 U. S. 429, 96 L. ed. 475, 72 Sup. Ct. 394 (1952) was an action in the state courts of New Jersey for a declaratory judgment to declare invalid a statute which provides for the reading, without comment, of five verses of the Old Testament at the opening of each public-school day. The action was brought by a taxpayer and by a parent of a pupil on the ground that the statute violated the religious establishment prohibition of the First Amendment of the federal Constitution. On appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court of New Jersey sustaining the statute, the Supreme Court of the United States, without reaching the merits of the controversy, held that neither the parent nor the taxpayer had a standing to raise the constitutional question. The parent's action had become moot, since the pupil had graduated from the school before the appeal was taken. The taxpayer's action raised no justiciable controversy, since there was no allegation that the activity in question was supported by any separate tax or paid for from any particular appropriation or that it added any sum whatever to the cost of conducting the school. Justices Douglas, Reed and Burton, dissenting, thought that the case deserved a decision on the merits. Conceding that if it were a suit to enjoin a federal law, it could not be maintained by reason of Massachusetts v. Mellon, 262 U. S. 447, 67 L. ed. 1078, 43 Sup. Ct. 597 (1923), they expressed the view that New Jersey could fashion her own rules governing the institution of suits in her courts and thus give these taxpayers the status to sue. The court's opinion distinguished Everson v. Board of Education, supra, on the ground that there a measurable appropriation or disbursement of school-district funds had been shown, occasioned solely by the activities complained of.

3. In Fowler v. Rhode Island, 345 U. S. 67, 97 L. ed. 828, 73 Sup. Ct. 526 (1953) a minister of Jehovah's Witnesses was convicted in the state courts for violating a municipal ordinance by addressing an orderly meeting of his congregation in a public park. The state conceded, on oral argument before the Supreme Court, that the ordinance did not prohibit church services in the park; other faiths could conduct their services there without violating the ordinance. Reversing the conviction, the court held that this plainly showed that a religious service of Jehovah's Witnesses was treated differently than a similar service of other sects, thus constituting a state preference of some religious groups over this one, in violation of the establishment clause of the First Amendment. "To call the words which one minister speaks to his congregation a sermon, immune from regulation, and the words of another minister an address, subject to regulation, is merely an indirect way of preferring one religion over another." Mr. Justice Frankfurter concurred in the opinion except insofar as it derived support from the First Amendment; he thought the decision should have been rested solely on the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Mr. Justice Jackson concurred in the result.

CHAPTER IX

CONSTITUTIONAL LIMITATIONS: THE EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS

Section 1.—Classification for Purposes of Legislation.

MISSOURI v. LEWIS.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1880.
101 U. S. 22, 25 L. ed. 989.

[The Constitution of Missouri created the St. Louis Court of Appeals giving it jurisdiction of appeals from the circuit courts of St. Louis and four adjoining counties, its decision being final in all except certain enumerated types of cases. Disbarment proceedings were not excepted. From the circuit courts of the other counties of the state appeals lay to the State Supreme Court. A judgment of disbarment of one Bowman given in the circuit court of St. Louis County was affirmed by the St. Louis Court of Appeals. He petitioned the Supreme Court of the state to issue a mandamus to compel Lewis and the other judges of the St. Louis Court of Appeals to allow an appeal from the affirmance. The state Supreme Court denied the petition and this writ of error was taken.]

MR. JUSTICE BRADLEY delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

The plaintiff in error contends that this feature of the judicial system of Missouri is in conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, because it denies to suitors in the courts of Saint Louis and the counties named the equal protection of the laws, in that it denies to them the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of Missouri in cases where it gives that right to suitors in the courts of the other counties of the state.

If this position is correct, the Fourteenth Amendment has a much more far-reaching effect than has been supposed. It would render invalid all limitations of jurisdiction based on the amount or character of the demand. * * *

If, however, we take into view the general objects and purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment, we shall find no reasonable ground for giving it any such application. * * * It contemplates persons and classes of persons. It has not respect to local and municipal regulations that do not injuriously affect or discriminate between persons or classes of persons within the places or municipalities for which such regulations are made. The Amendment could never have been intended to prevent a state from arranging and parceling out the jurisdiction of its several courts at its discretion. * * *

The last restriction, as to the equal protection of the laws, is not violated by any diversity in the jurisdiction of the several courts as to subject-matter, amount, or finality of decision, if all persons within the territorial limits of their respective jurisdictions have an equal right, in like cases and under like circumstances, to resort to them for redress. Each state has the right to make political subdivisions of its territory for municipal purposes, and to regulate their local government. As respects the administration of justice, it may establish one system of courts for cities and another for rural districts, one system for one portion of its territory and another system for another portion. Convenience, if not necessity, often requires this to be done, and it would seriously interfere with the power of a state to regulate its internal affairs to deny to it this right. We think it is not denied or taken away by anything in the Constitution of the United States, including the Amendments thereto.

We might go still further, and say, with undoubted truth, that there is nothing in the Constitution to prevent any state from adopting any system of laws or judicature it sees fit for all or any part of its territory. If the State of New York, for example, should see fit to adopt the civil law and its method of procedure for New York City and the surrounding counties, and the common law and its method of procedure for the rest of the state, there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States to prevent its doing so. This would not, of itself, within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment, be a denial to any person of the equal protection of the laws. If every person residing or being in either portion of the state should be accorded the equal protection of the laws prevailing there, he could not justly complain of a violation of the clause referred to. For as before said it has respect to persons and classes of persons. It means that no person or class of persons shall be denied the same protection of the laws which is enjoyed by other persons or other classes in the same place and under like circumstances.

The Fourteenth Amendment does not profess to secure to all persons in the United States the benefit of the same laws and the same remedies. Great diversities in these respects may exist in two states separated only by an imaginary line. * * * Diversities which are allowable in different states are allowable in different parts of the same state. Where part of a state is thickly settled, and another part has but few inhabitants, it may be desirable to have different systems of judicature for the two portions—trial by jury in one, for example, and not in the other. Large cities may require a multiplication of courts and a peculiar arrangement of jurisdictions. It would be an unfortunate restriction of the powers of the state government if it could not, in its discretion, provide for these various exigencies. * * *

It is not impossible that a distinct territorial establishment and jurisdiction might be intended as, or might have the effect of, a discrimination against a particular race or class, where such race or class should happen to be the principal occupants of the disfavored district. Should such a case ever arise, it will be time enough then to consider it. No such case is pretended to exist in the present instance. * * *

Judgment affirmed.

NOTES

1. The Fort Smith Traction Company of Fort Smith, Arkansas, complained of a state statute which operated upon it alone, requiring it to defray the cost of paving streets occupied by it. In upholding the statute the Supreme Court said: "The act is in form a general statute, but by reason of provisions making it applicable to street railways operating under indeterminate permits in cities of the first class other than in Miller County, it in fact applied to the plaintiff in error alone. * * * The Fourteenth Amendment does not prohibit legislation merely because it is special, or limited in its application to a particular geographical or political subdivision of the state." Ft. Smith Light & Traction Co. v. Board of Improvement, 274 U. S. 387, 71 L. ed. 1112, 47 Sup. Ct. 595 (1927). See also Chappell Chemical & Fertilizer Co. v. Sulphur Mines Co., 172 U. S. 474, 43 L. ed. 520, 19 Sup. Ct. 268 (1899) (Maryland abridged the right of trial by jury in the courts of Baltimore but not elsewhere in the state); Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 30 L. ed. 578, 7 Sup. Ct. 350 (1887) (the prosecution was allowed fifteen peremptory challenges in large cities and eight elsewhere in the state); Cincinnati Street R. Co. v. Snell, 193 U. S. 30, 48 L. ed. 604, 24 Sup. Ct. 319 (1904) (holding valid a state statute which provided that in a suit to which a corporation having fifty or more shareholders is a party, pending in the county where the corporation has its chief office, the opposing party should have an unqualified right to a change of venue, though no corresponding right was given the corporation); Gardner v. Michigan, 199 U. S. 325, 50 L. ed. 212, 26 Sup. Ct. 106 (1905) (different method of making up jury lists in one county than elsewhere in the state).

2. "An act of the legislature which in terms gave to one individual certain rights and denied to another similarly situated the same rights might be challenged on the ground of unjust discrimination and a denial of the equal protection of the laws. But that does not prevent a legislature, which has established a certain rule of procedure, and continued it in force for years, from subsequently repealing the act and establishing an entirely different mode of procedure. In other words, there is no absolute right vested in the individual as against the power of the legislature to change modes of procedure. And a similar thought controls where the courts of the state have construed a statute as prescribing one form of procedure, and parties have acted under that construction, and then subsequently the same court has held that the statute was theretofore misconstrued, and really provided a different mode of procedure. This last adjudication cannot be set aside in the federal courts on the ground of an unjust discrimination or a denial of the equal protection of the laws." Mr. Justice Brewer, for the court, in Backus v. Fort Street Union Depot Co., 169 U. S. 557, 571, 42 L. ed. 853, 18 Sup. Ct. 445 (1898).

3. An Illinois statute requires that the nominating petition of a new political party, in addition to being signed by at least 25,000 qualified voters, contain 200 signatures from each of at least 50 of the 102 counties in the state. The effect of the statutory requirement is that the electorate in 49 of the counties with 87% of the registered voters cannot, but 25,000 of the remaining 13% of registered voters, properly distributed among the 53 remaining counties, can form a new party. In an action brought by appellant to enjoin the enforcement of the law, the court upheld the statute as against the claim that it was so discriminatory in its application as to constitute a violation of the guaranty of the equal protection of the laws. It was said that the state has the power to assure a proper diffusion of political initiative as between its thinly populated counties and those having concentrated masses, in view of the fact that the latter have practical opportunities for exerting their political weight at the polls not available to the former. Justices Douglas, Black and Murphy dissented. MacDougall v. Green, 335 U. S. 281, 93 L. ed. 3, 69 Sup. Ct. 1 (1948).

4. The doctrine of the principal case was recently applied in Salsburg v. Maryland, 346 U. S. 545, 98 L. ed. 281, 74 Sup. Ct. 280 (1954), where the court upheld as not violative of the equal protection guaranty a Maryland statute providing generally that illegally procured evidence is inadmissible, but excepting prosecutions in specified counties for violation of the state gambling laws.

RADICE v. NEW YORK.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1924.

264 U. S. 292, 68 L. ed. 690, 44 Sup. Ct. 325.

[Plaintiff in error was convicted in the City Court of Buffalo upon the charge of having violated the provisions of a statute of the State of New York, prohibiting the employment of women in restaurants in cities of the first and second class, between the hours of 10 o'clock at night and 6 o'clock in the morning. Plaintiff contended that because of the express exemptions made in the statute, which are stated in the opinion, the statute violated the equality requirement. The New York Court of Appeals having sustained the conviction this writ of error was taken.]

MR. JUSTICE SUTHERLAND delivered the opinion of the Court.

* * *

Nor is the statute vulnerable to the objection that it constitutes a denial of the equal protection of the laws. The points urged under this head are (a) that the act discriminates between cities of the first and second class and other cities and communities; and (b) excludes from its operation women employed in restaurants as singers and performers, attendants in ladies' cloak rooms and parlors, as well as those employed in dining rooms and kitchens of hotels and in lunch rooms or restaurants conducted by employers solely for the benefit of their employees.

The limitation of the legislative prohibition to cities of the first and second class does not bring about an unreasonable and arbitrary classification. Packard v. Banton, 264 U. S. 140; Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68. Nor is there substance in the contention that the exclusion of restaurant employees of a special kind, and of hotels and employees' lunch rooms, renders the statute obnoxious to the Constitution. The statute does not present a case where some persons of a class are selected for special restraint from which others of the same class are left free (Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540, 564); but a case where all in the same class of work, are included in the restraint. Of course, the mere fact of classification is not enough to put a statute beyond the reach of the equality provision of the Fourteenth Amendment. Such classification must not be "purely arbitrary, oppressive or capricious." American Sugar Refining Co. v. Louisiana, 179 U. S. 89, 92. But the mere production of inequality is not enough. Every selection of persons for regulation so results, in some degree. The inequality produced, in order to encounter the challenge of the Constitution, must be "actually and palpably unreasonable and arbitrary." Arkansas Natural Gas Co. v. Railroad Commission, 261 U. S. 379, 384, and cases cited. Thus classifications have been sustained which are based upon differences between fire insurance and other kinds of insurance, Orient Insurance Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 562; between railroads and other corporations, Tullis v. Lake Erie & Western R. R. Co., 175 U. S. 348, 351; between barber shop employment and other kinds of labor, Petit v. Minnesota, 177 U. S. 164, 168; between "immigrant agents" engaged in hiring laborers to be employed beyond the limits of a state and persons engaged in the business of hiring for labor within the state, Williams v. Fears, 179 U. S. 270, 275; between sugar refiners who produce the sugar and those who purchase it, American Sugar Refining Co. v. Louisiana, supra. More directly applicable are recent decisions of this Court, sustaining hours of labor for women in hotels but omitting women employees of boarding houses, lodging houses, etc., Miller v. Wilson, 236 U. S. 373, 382; and limiting the hours of labor of women pharmacists and student nurses in hospitals but excepting graduate nurses. Bosley v. McLaughlin, 236 U. S. 385, 394-396. The opinion in the first of these cases was delivered by Mr. Justice Hughes, who, after pointing out that in hotels women employees are for the most part chambermaids and waitresses; that it cannot be said that the conditions of work are the same as those which obtain in the other establishments; and that it is not beyond the power of the legislature to recognize the differences, said (pp. 383-384):

"The contention as to the various omissions which are noted in the objections here urged ignores the well-established principle that the legislature is not bound, in order to support the constitutional validity of its regulation, to extend it to all cases which it might possibly reach. Dealing with practical exigencies, the legislature may be guided by experience. Patson v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 138, 144. It is free to recognize degrees of harm, and it may confine its restrictions to those classes of cases where the need is deemed to be clearest. As has been said, it may 'proceed cautiously, step by step,' and 'if an evil is specially experienced in a particular branch of business' it is not necessary that the prohibition 'should be couched in all-embracing terms.' Carroll v. Greenwich Insurance Co., 199 U. S. 401, 411. If the law presumably hits the evil where it is most felt, it is not to be overthrown because there are other instances to which it might have been applied. Keokee Coke Co. v. Taylor, 234 U. S. 224, 227. Upon this principle which has had abundant illustration in the decisions cited below, it cannot be concluded that the failure to extend the act to other and distinct lines of business, having their own circumstances and conditions, or to domestic service, created an arbitrary discrimination as against the proprietors of hotels."

The judgment below is

Affirmed.

NOTES

1. In Dominion Hotel v. Arizona, 249 U. S. 265, 63 L. ed. 597, 39 Sup. Ct. 273 (1919) a statute was sustained which prescribed a maximum of eight hours per day for women workers in hotels and restaurants and required further that the eight hours per day must fall within the period of twelve consecutive hours, but this last requirement was not to apply to railroad restaurants or eating houses located upon railroad rights of way and operated by or under contract with any railroad company. Mr. Justice Holmes, for the court, said: "The Fourteenth Amendment is not a pedagogical requirement of the impracticable. The equal protection of the laws does not mean that all occupations that are called by the same name must be treated in the same way. The power of the state 'may be determined by degrees of evil or exercised in cases where detriment is specially experienced.' Armour & Co. v. North Dakota, 240 U. S. 510, 517. It may do what it can to prevent what is deemed an evil and stop short of those cases in which the harm to the few concerned is thought less important than the harm to the public that would ensue if the rule laid down were made mathematically exact. * * * If in its theory the distinction is justifiable, as for all that we know it is, the fact that some cases, including the plaintiff's, are very near to the line makes it none the worse. That is the inevitable result of drawing a line where the distinctions are distinctions of degree; and the constant business of the law is to draw such lines."

2. In Goesaert v. Cleary, 335 U. S. 464, 93 L. ed. 163, 69 Sup. Ct. 198 (1948) a Michigan statute forbidding women from being licensed as bartenders and at the same time making an exception in favor of the wives and daughters of the owners of liquor establishments was held not to violate the equal protection clause. "Michigan evidently believes that the oversight assured through ownership of a bar by a barmaid's husband or father minimizes hazards that may confront a barmaid without such protecting oversight." Justices Rutledge, Douglas and Murphy dissented.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA & SANTA FE R. CO. v. MATTHEWS.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1899.

174 U. S. 96, 43 L. ed. 909, 19 Sup. Ct. 609.

Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Kansas.

MR. JUSTICE BREWER delivered the opinion of the Court.

In 1885 the legislature of Kansas passed the following act: "An act relating to the liability of railroads for damages by fire.

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the legislature of the State of Kansas: That in all actions against any railway company organized or doing business in this state, for damages by fire, caused by the operating of said railroad, it shall be only necessary for the plaintiff in said action to establish the fact that said fire complained of was caused by the operating of said railroad, and the amount of his damages, (which proof shall be prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of said railroad): Provided, That in estimating the damages under this act, the contributory negligence of the plaintiff shall be taken into consideration.

"Sec. 2. In all actions commenced under this act, if the plaintiff shall recover, there shall be allowed him by the court a reasonable attorney's fee, which shall become a part of the judgment." (Sess. Laws 1885, c. 155, 258.)

Under it an action was brought in the district court of Cloud County which resulted in a judgment against the railroad company, plaintiff in error, for $2094 damages and $225 attorney's fees. This judgment having been affirmed by the Supreme Court of the state, the company brought the case here on error.

All questions of fact are settled by the decision of the state courts, Hedrick v. Atchison, Topeka &c. Railroad, 167 U. S. 673, 677, and cases cited in the opinion, and the single matter for our consideration is the constitutionality of this statute. It is contended that it is in conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment to the federal Constitution, and this contention was distinctly ruled upon by the Supreme Court of the state adversely to the railroad company. In support of this contention great reliance is placed upon Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150. In that case a statute of Texas allowing an attorney's fee to the plaintiffs in actions against railroad corporations on claims, not exceeding in amount $50, for personal services rendered or labor done, or for damages, or for overcharges on freight, or for stock killed or injured, was adjudged unconstitutional. It was held to be simply a statute imposing a penalty on railroad corporations for failing to pay certain debts, and not one to enforce compliance with any police regulations. It was so regarded by the Supreme Court of the state, and its construction was accepted in this court as correct. While the right to classify was conceded, it was said that such classification must be based upon some difference bearing a reasonable and just relation to the act in respect to which the classification is attempted; that no mere arbitrary selection can ever be justified by calling it classification. And there is no good reason why railroad corporations alone should be punished for not paying their debts. Compelling the payment of debts is not a police regulation. We see no reason to change the views then expressed, and if the statute before us were the counterpart of that, we should be content to refer to that case as conclusive.

But while there is a similarity, yet there are important differences, and differences which in our judgment compel an opposite conclusion. The purpose of this statute is not to compel the payment of debts, but to secure the utmost care on the part of railroad companies to prevent the escape of fire from their moving trains. This is obvious from the fact that liability for damages by fire is not cast upon such corporations in all cases, but only in those in which the fire is "caused by the operating" of the road. It is true that no special act of precaution was required of the railroad companies, failure to do which was to be visited with this penalty, so that it is not precisely like the statutes imposing double damages for stock killed where there has been a failure to fence. Missouri Pac. Railway v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512. And yet its purpose is not different. Its monition to the railroads is not, pay your debts without suit or you will, in addition, have to pay attorney's fees; but rather, see to it that no fire escapes from your locomotives, for if it does you will be liable, not merely for the damage it causes, but also for the reasonable attorney's fees of the owner of the property injured or destroyed. * * *

That there is peculiar danger of fire from the running of railroad trains is obvious. The locomotives, passing, as they do at great rates of speed, and often when the wind is blowing a gale, will, unless the utmost care is taken, (and sometimes in spite of such care,) scatter fire along the track. The danger to adjacent property is one which is especially felt in a prairie state like Kansas. * * * Fire catching in the dry grass often runs for miles, destroying not merely crops but houses and barns. * * *

In 1887 the legislature of the State of Missouri felt constrained to pass an act making every railroad corporation responsible in damages for all property destroyed by fire communicated directly or indirectly from its engines, and giving the corporation an insurable interest in the property along its road. This statute was, after a full examination of all the authorities, held by this Court a valid exercise of the legislative power. St. Louis & San Francisco Railway v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1. So, when the legislature of Kansas made a classification, and included in one class all corporations engaged in this business of peculiar hazard, it did so upon a difference having a reasonable relation to the object sought to be accomplished, to wit, the securing of protection of property from damage or destruction by fire. * * *

Many cases have been before this Court, involving the power of state legislatures to impose special duties or liabilities upon individuals and corporations, or classes of them, and while the principles of separation between those cases which have been adjudged to be within the power of the legislature and those beyond its power, are not difficult of comprehension or statement, yet their application often becomes very troublesome, especially when a case is near to the dividing line. It is easy to distinguish between the full light of day and the darkness of midnight, but often very difficult to determine whether a given moment in the twilight hour is before or after that in which the light predominates over the darkness. The equal protection of the laws which is guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment does not forbid classification. That has been asserted in the strongest language. Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27. In that case, after in general terms declaring that the Fourteenth Amendment designed to secure the equal protection of the laws, the Court added (pp. 31 and 32):

"But neither the Amendment—broad and comprehensive as it is—nor any other amendment, was designed to interfere with the power of the state, sometimes termed its police power, to prescribe regulations to promote the health, peace, morals, education and good order of the people, and to legislate so as to increase the industries of the state, develop its resources, and add to its wealth and prosperity. From the very necessities of society, legislation of a special character, having these objects in view, must often be had in certain districts, such as for draining marshes and irrigating arid plains. Special burdens are often necessary for general benefits—for supplying water, preventing fires, lighting districts, cleaning streets, opening parks, and many other objects. Regulations for these purposes may press with more or less weight upon one than upon another, but they are designed, not to impose unequal or unnecessary restrictions upon any one, but to promote, with as little inconvenience as possible, the general good. Though, in many respects, necessarily special in their character, they do not furnish just ground of complaint if they operate alike upon all persons and property under the same circumstances and conditions. Class legislation, discriminating against some and favoring others, is prohibited, but legislation which, in carrying out a public purpose, is limited in its application, if within the sphere of its operation it affects alike all persons similarly situated, is not within the Amendment."

This declaration has, in various language, been often repeated, and the power of classification upheld whenever such classification proceeds upon any difference which has a reasonable relation to the object sought to be accomplished. * * *

It is the essence of a classification that upon the class are cast duties and burdens different from those resting upon the general public. Thus, when the legislature imposes on railroad corporations a double liability for stock killed by passing trains it says, in effect, that if suit be brought against a railroad company for stock killed by one of its trains it must enter into the courts under conditions different from those resting on ordinary suitors. If it is beaten in the suit it must pay not only the damages which it has done, but twice that amount. If it succeeds, it recovers nothing. On the other hand, if it should sue an individual for destruction of its livestock it could under no circumstances recover any more than the value of that stock. So that it may be said that in matter of liability, in case of litigation, it is not placed on an equality with other corporations and individuals; yet this court has unanimously said that this differentiation of liability, this inequality of right in the courts, is of no significance upon the question of constitutionality. Indeed, the very idea of classification is that of inequality, so that it goes without saying that the fact of inequality in no manner determines the matter of constitutionality.

Our conclusion in respect to this statute is that, for the reasons above stated, giving full force to its purpose as declared by the Supreme Court of Kansas, to the presumption which attaches to the action of a legislature that it has full knowledge of the conditions within the state, and intends no arbitrary selection or punishment, but simply seeks to subserve the general interest of the public, it must be sustained, and the judgment of the Supreme Court of Kansas is

Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN, with whom concurred MR. JUSTICE BROWN, MR. JUSTICE PECKHAM and MR. JUSTICE McKENNA, dissenting.

* * *

There is no classification here except one that denies the equal protection of the laws. It would seem that what was said in the Ellis case was exactly in point, namely, "as no duty is imposed there can be no penalty for non-performance." Instead of prescribing some penalty for the neglect by the railroad company of duties specifically enjoined upon it, the state attempts—and by the decision just rendered is enabled—to take from the company the right which we declared in the Ellis case was secured by the Constitution, namely, the right to "appeal to the courts as other litigants, under like conditions and with like protection." * * *

May the state meet the railroad corporation at the doors of its courts of justice and say to it, "If you enter here for the purpose of defending the suit brought against you it must be subject to the condition that a special attorney's fee shall be taxed against you if unsuccessful, while none shall be taxed against the plaintiff if he be unsuccessful?" * * * If there is one place under our system of government where all should be in a position to have equal and exact justice done to them, it is a court of justice—a principle which I had supposed was as old as Magna Charta.

In my opinion the statute of Kansas denies to a litigant, upon whom no duty has been imposed by statute and whose liability for wrongs done by it depends upon general principles of law applicable to all alike, that equality of right given by the law of the land to all suitors, and consequently it should be adjudged to deny the equal protection of the laws.

NOTES

1. "The exact point of objection is that the improvement [paving a street] is not to be made if a majority of the resident owners of the property liable to taxation therefor shall file with the city clerk a protest against such improvement, which privilege of protest is not given to nonresident owners, thereby discriminating against them. It is well settled, however, that not every discrimination of this character violates constitutional rights. It is not the purpose of the Fourteenth Amendment, as has been frequently held, to prevent the states from classifying the subjects of legislation and making different regulations as to the property of different individuals differently situated. The provision of the federal Constitution is satisfied if all persons similarly situated are treated alike in privileges conferred or liabilities imposed. * * * The alleged discrimination is certainly not an arbitrary one; the presence within the city of the resident property owners, their direct interest in the subject matter and their ability to protest promptly if the means employed are objectionable, place them on a distinct footing from the nonresidents whom it may be difficult to reach. Furthermore, there is no discrimination among property owners in taxing for the improvement. When the assessment is made it operates upon all alike. * * * If the legislature saw fit to give those most directly interested and whose consent could be most readily obtained, the right to protest, such action did not deprive other persons of rights guaranteed by the Constitution." Field v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 194 U. S. 618, 621-622, 48 L. ed. 1142, 24 Sup. Ct. 784 (1904).

2. "The question of constitutional law to which we have referred cannot be disposed of by saying that the statute in question may be referred to what are called the police powers of the state. * * * The state has undoubtedly the power, by appropriate legislation, to protect the public morals, the public health and the public safety, but if, by their necessary operation, its regulations looking to either of those ends amount to a denial to persons within its jurisdiction of the equal protection of the laws, they must be deemed unconstitutional and void." Mr. Justice Harlan, for the court, in Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540, 558, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. 431 (1902).

3. Numerous cases on the validity of statutory provision for attorneys' fees are collected in 11 A. L. R. 884 (1921). See especially cases holding valid allowance of attorneys' fees to successful plaintiffs only, in suits against insurance companies: Fidelity Mut. Life Assn. v. Mettler, 185 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 922, 22 Sup. Ct. 662 (1902); Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Dobney, 189 U. S. 301, 47 L. ed. 821, 23 Sup. Ct. 565 (1903).

MISSOURI, KANSAS & TEXAS R. CO. v. MAY.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1904.

194 U. S. 267, 48 L. ed. 971, 24 Sup. Ct. 638.

Error to the County Court of Bell County, State of Texas.

MR. JUSTICE HOLMES delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is an action to recover a penalty of twenty-five dollars, brought by the owner of a farm contiguous to the railroad of the plaintiff in error, on the ground that the latter has allowed Johnson grass to mature and go to seed upon its road. The penalty is given to contiguous owners by a Texas statute of 1901, ch. 117, directed solely against railroad companies for permitting such grass or Russian thistle to go to seed upon their right of way, subject, however, to the condition that the plaintiff has not done the same thing. The case is brought here on the ground that the statute is contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

It is admitted that Johnson grass is a menace to crops, that it is propagated only by seed, and that a general regulation of it for the protection of farming would be valid. It is admitted also that legislation may be directed against a class when any fair ground for discrimination exists. But it is said that this particular subjection of railroad companies to a liability not imposed on other owners of land on which Johnson grass may grow is so arbitrary as to amount to a denial of the equal protection of the laws. There is no dispute about general principles. The question is whether this case lies on one side or the other of a line which has to be worked out between cases differing only in degree. With regard to the manner in which such a question should be approached, it is obvious that the legislature is the only judge of the policy of a proposed discrimination. The principle is similar to that which is established with regard to a decision of Congress that certain means are necessary and proper to carry out one of its express powers. McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316. When a state legislature has declared that in its opinion policy requires a certain measure, its action should not be disturbed by the courts under the Fourteenth Amendment, unless they can see clearly that there is no fair reason for the law that would not require with equal force its extension to others whom it leaves untouched.

Approaching the question in this way, we feel unable to say that the law before us may not have been justified by local conditions. It would have been more obviously fair to extend the regulation at least to highways. But it may have been found, for all that we know, that the seed of Johnson grass is dropped from the cars in such quantities as to cause special trouble. It may be that the neglected strips occupied by railroads afford a ground where noxious weeds especially flourish, and that whereas self-interest leads the owners of farms to keep down pests, the railroad companies have done nothing in a matter which concerns their neighbors only. Other reasons may be imagined. Great constitutional provisions must be administered with caution. Some play must be allowed for the joints of the machine, and it must be remembered that legislatures are ultimate guarantors of the liberties and welfare of the people in quite as great a degree as the courts.

Judgment affirmed.

[MR. JUSTICE BREWER, concurred in the judgment. MR. JUSTICE BROWN delivered a dissenting opinion. JUSTICES WHITE and MCKENNA also dissented.]

NOTE

1. In Asbury Hospital v. Cass County, 326 U. S. 207, 90 L. ed. 6, 66 Sup. Ct. 61 (1945) the Supreme Court held that the exception of corporations dealing in farm lands and of farmer cooperatives from a statute requiring corporations within ten years from the date of the act to dispose of land not necessary to conduct their business did not constitute a denial of the equal protection of the laws. The court said, through Chief Justice Stone: "The legislature is free to make classifications in the application of a statute which are relevant to the legislative purpose. The ultimate test of validity is not whether the classes differ but whether the differences between them are pertinent to the subject with respect to which the classification is made. * * * Statutory discrimination between classes which are in fact different must be presumed to be relevant to a permissible legislative purpose, and will not be deemed to be a denial of equal protection if any state of facts could be conceived which would support it."

LINDSLEY v. NATURAL CARBONIC GAS CO.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1911.
220 U. S. 61, 55 L. ed. 369, 31 Sup. Ct. 337.

[In the Circuit Court of the United States plaintiff, a shareholder in the defendant corporation, sought an injunction to restrain the corporation from obeying, and New York officials from enforcing, a New York statute, entitled an act for the protection of natural mineral springs. The statute as interpreted in other cases by the New York Court of Appeals prohibited forced pumping of carbonic acid gas from any well made by boring into rock, for the purpose of selling the gas otherwise than in connection with the mineral water, unless the forced pumping did not draw unreasonably or wastefully upon gas lying beneath the land of others. From a decree dismissing plaintiff's bill this appeal was taken.]

MR. JUSTICE VAN DEVANTER delivered the opinion of the Court.

[After deciding that the statute did not violate the due process limitation, because its definition or restriction of the interests of any surface owner was justified as reasonable protection to adjoining surface owners having equal rights to draw from a common source of gas, citing Ohio Oil Co. v. Indiana, 177 U. S. 190, the opinion continues:]

Because the statute is directed against pumping from wells bored or drilled into the rock, but not against pumping from wells not penetrating the rock, and because it is directed against pumping for the purpose of collecting the gas and vending it apart from the waters, but not against pumping for other purposes, the contention is made that it is arbitrary in its classification, and consequently denies the equal protection of the laws to those whom it affects.

The rules by which this contention must be tested, as is shown by repeated decisions of this Court, are these: 1. The equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment does not take from the state the power to classify in the adoption of police laws, but admits of the exercise of a wide scope of discretion in that regard, and avoids what is done only when it is without any reasonable basis, and therefore is purely arbitrary. 2. A classification having some reasonable basis does not offend against that clause merely because it is not made with mathematical nicety, or because in practice it results in some inequality. 3. When the classification in such a law is called in question, if any state of facts reasonably can be conceived that would sustain it, the existence of that state of facts at the time the law was enacted must be assumed. 4. One who assails the classification in such a law must carry the burden of showing that it does not rest upon any reasonable basis, but is essentially arbitrary. * * *

Unfortunately, the allegations of the bill shed but little light upon the classification in question. They do not indicate that pumping from wells not penetrating the rock appreciably affects the common supply therein, or is calculated to result in injury to the rights of others, and neither do they indicate that such pumping as is done for purposes other than collecting and vending the gas apart from the waters is excessive or wasteful, or otherwise operates to impair the rights of others. In other words, for aught that appears in the bill, the classification may rest upon some substantial difference between pumping from wells penetrating the rock and pumping from those not penetrating it, and between pumping for the purpose of collecting and vending the gas apart from the waters and pumping for other purposes, and this difference may afford a reasonable basis for the classification. * * *

From statements made in the briefs of counsel and in oral argument, we infer that wells not penetrating the rock reach such waters only as escape naturally therefrom through breaks or fissures; and if this be so, it well may be doubted that pumping from such wells has anything like the same effect—if, indeed, it has any—upon the common supply or upon the rights of others, as does pumping from wells which take the waters from within the rock, where they exist under great hydrostatic pressure.

As respects the discrimination made between pumping for the purpose of collecting and vending the gas apart from the waters, and pumping for other purposes, this is to be said: The greater demand for the gas alone, and the value which attaches to it in consequence of this demand, furnish a greater incentive for exercising the common right excessively and wastefully when the pumping is for the purpose proscribed than when it is for other purposes; and this suggestion becomes stronger when it is reflected that the proportion of gas in the commingled fluids as they exist in the rock is so small that to obtain a given quantity of gas involves the taking of an enormously greater quantity of water, and to satisfy appreciably the demand for the gas alone involves a great waste of the water from which it is collected. Thus, it well may be that in actual practice the pumping is not excessive or wasteful save when it is done for the purpose proscribed.

These considerations point with more or less persuasive force to a substantial difference, in point of harmful results, between pumping from wells penetrating the rock, and pumping from those not penetrating it, and between pumping for the purpose of collecting and vending the gas apart from the waters, and pumping for other purposes. If there be such a difference, it justifies the classification, for plainly a police law may be confined to the occasion for its existence. As is said in Carroll v. Greenwich Insurance Co., 199 U. S. 401, 411: "If an evil is specially experienced in a particular branch of business, the Constitution embodies no prohibition of laws confined to the evil, or doctrinaire requirement that they should be couched in all-embracing terms."

* * *

Decree affirmed.

TIGNER v. TEXAS.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1940.

310 U. S. 141, 84 L. ed. 1124, 60 Sup. Ct. 879, 130 A. L. R. 1321.

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is an appeal under § 237 (a) of the Judicial Code, as amended, 28 U. S. C. § 344, to review a judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas sustaining the constitutionality of a Texas anti-trust law, and therefore upholding an indictment under it. Appellant was charged with participation in a conspiracy to fix the retail price of beer. Such a conspiracy is made a criminal offense by Title 19, Chapter 3, of the Texas Penal Code. Because the provisions of this law do not "apply to agricultural products or livestock in the hands of the producer or raiser," Art. 1642, Tigner challenged the validity of the entire statute and sought release in the local courts by habeas corpus. His claim has been rejected by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals. 132 S. W. 2d 885. Essentially his contention is that the exemption granted by the Texas statute falls within the condemnation of Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540, as offensive to "the equal protection of the laws" which the Fourteenth Amendment safeguards. If that case controls, appellant contends, the Texas Act cannot survive and he must go free.

The court below recognized that the exemption was identical with that deemed fatal to the Illinois statute involved in Connolly's case. But it felt that time and circumstances had drained that case of vitality, leaving it free to treat the exemption as an exercise of legislative discretion. A similar attitude has been reflected by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, Northern Wisconsin Co-operative Tobacco Pool v. Bekkedal, 182 Wis. 571, 593; 197 N. W. 936, and appears to underlie much recent state and federal legislation. Dealing as we are with an appeal to the Constitution, the Connolly case ought not to foreclose us from considering this exemption in its own setting.

The problem, in brief, is this: May Texas promote its policy of freedom for economic enterprise by utilizing the criminal law against various forms of combination and monopoly, but exclude from criminal punishment corresponding activities of agriculture?

Legislation, both state and federal, similar to that of Texas had its origin in fear of the concentration of industrial power following the Civil War. Law was invoked to buttress the traditional system of free competition, free markets and free enterprise. Pressure for this legislation came more particularly from those who as producers, as well as consumers, constituted the most dispersed economic groups. These large sections of the population—those who labored with their hands and those who worked the soil—were as a matter of economic fact in a different relation to the community from that occupied by industrial combinations. Farmers were widely scattered and inured to habits of individualism; their economic fate was in large measure dependent upon contingencies beyond their control. In these circumstances, legislators may well have thought combinations of farmers and stockmen presented no threat to the community, or, at least, the threat was of a different order from that arising through combinations of industrialists and middlemen. At all events legislation like that of Texas rested on this view, curbing industrial and commercial combinations, and did not visit the same condemnation upon collaborative efforts by farmers and stockmen because the latter were felt to have a different economic significance.

Since Connolly's case was decided, nearly forty years ago, an impressive legislative movement bears witness to general acceptance of the view that the differences between agriculture and industry call for differentiation in the formulation of public policy. The states as well as the United States have sanctioned cooperative action by farmers; have restricted their amenability to the anti-trust laws; have relieved their organizations from taxation. * * *

At the core of all these enactments lies a conception of price and production policy for agriculture very different from that which underlies the demands made upon industry and commerce by anti-trust laws. These various measures are manifestations of the fact that in our national economy agriculture expresses functions and forces different from the other elements in the total economic process. Certainly these are differences which may be acted upon by the lawmakers. The equality at which the "equal protection" clause aims is not a disembodied equality. The Fourteenth Amendment enjoins "the equal protection of the laws," and laws are not abstract propositions. They do not relate to abstract units A, B and C, but are expressions of policy arising out of specific difficulties, addressed to the attainment of specific ends by the use of specific remedies. The Constitution does not require things which are different in fact or opinion to be treated in law as though they were the same. And so we conclude that to write into law the differences between agriculture and other economic pursuits was within the power of the Texas legislature. Connolly's case has been worn away by the erosion of time, and we are of opinion that it is no longer controlling.

Another feature of Texas anti-trust legislation is relied on by Tigner to invalidate the criminal statute under which he is being prosecuted. Beginning with the first enactment in 1894, the Texas anti-trust laws have had a complicated and checkered history. At present there are two statutes directed at combination and monopoly—the one under which Tigner was indicted, and another, subjecting to civil penalties the same conduct at which the challenged criminal law is aimed. Title 126, Revised Civil Statutes. From such civil proceedings, which the Attorney General initiates, no exemption is given to farmers and stockmen. Appellant urges that the divergence between civil and criminal laws relating to the same conduct undermines the validity of the exemption in the criminal statute and thus invalidates the whole of it. This argument is but a minor variation on appellant's main theme. It amounts to a claim that differences substantial enough to permit substantive differentiation in formulating legislative policy do not permit differentiation as to remedy.

How to effectuate policy—the adaptation of means to legitimately sought ends—is one of the most intractable of legislative problems. Whether proscribed conduct is to be deterred by qui tam action or triple damages or injunction, or by criminal prosecution, or merely by defense to actions in contract, or by some, or all, of these remedies in combination, is a matter within the legislature's range of choice. Judgment on the deterrent effect of the various weapons in the armory of the law can lay little claim to scientific basis. Such judgment as yet is largely a prophecy based on meager and uninterpreted experience. How empiric the process is of adjusting remedy to policy, is shown by the history of anti-trust laws in Texas and elsewhere. The Sherman Law originally employed the injunction at the suit of the government, private action for triple damages, criminal prosecution and forfeiture. Later the injunction was made available to private suitors. In the case of combinations of common carriers the Sherman Law is qualified by the Interstate Commerce Act, Keogh v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 260 U. S. 156, and, in the case of shipping combinations, by the Merchant Marine Act, U. S. Navigation Co. v. Cunard S. S. Co., 284 U. S. 474. In its own groping efforts to deal with the problem of monopoly, the Texas legislature has in the course of nearly half a century invoked a dozen remedies. When Iowa superimposed upon its general anti-trust law an additional penalty in the case of fire insurance combinations, this Court sustained the validity of the statute. Carroll v. Greenwich Insurance Co., 199 U. S. 401.

Legislation concerning economic combinations presents peculiar difficulties in the fashioning of remedies. The sensitiveness of the economic mechanism, the risks of introducing new evils in trying to stamp out old, familiar ones, the difficulties of proof within the conventional modes of procedure, the effect of shifting tides of public opinion—these and many other subtle factors must influence legislative choice. Moreover, the whole problem of deterrence is related to still wider considerations affecting the temper of the community in which law operates. The traditions of a society, the habits of obedience to law, the effectiveness of the law-enforcing agencies, are all peculiarly matters of time and place. They are thus matters within legislative competence. To say that the legislature of Texas must give to farmers complete immunity or none at all, is to say that judgment on these vexing issues precludes the view that, while the dangers from combinations of farmers and stockmen are so tenuous that civil remedies suffice to secure deterrence, they are substantial enough not to warrant entire disregard. We hold otherwise. Here, again, we must be mindful not of abstract equivalent of conduct, but of conduct in the context of actuality. Differences that permit substantive differentiations also permit differentiations of remedy. We find no constitutional bar against excluding farmers and stockmen from the criminal statute against combination and monopoly, and so holding, we conclude that there was likewise no bar against making the exemption partial rather than complete.

Affirmed.

Mr. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS is of opinion that the judgment below should be reversed.

SKINNER v. OKLAHOMA EX REL. WILLIAMSON.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1942.

316 U. S. 535, 86 L. ed. 1655, 62 Sup. Ct. 1110.

Mr. JUSTICE DOUGLAS delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case touches a sensitive and important area of human rights. Oklahoma deprives certain individuals of a right which is basic to the perpetuation of a race—the right to have offspring. Oklahoma has decreed the enforcement of its law against petitioner, overruling his claim that it violated the Fourteenth Amendment. Because that decision raised grave and substantial constitutional questions, we granted the petition for certiorari.

The statute involved is Oklahoma's Habitual Criminal Sterilization Act. Okla. Stat. Ann. Tit. 57 §§ 171, et seq.; L. 1935, pp. 94 et seq. That Act defines an "habitual criminal" as a person who, having been convicted two or more times for crimes "amounting to felonies involving moral turpitude," either in an Oklahoma court or in a court of any other State, is thereafter convicted of such a felony in Oklahoma and is sentenced to a term of imprisonment in an Oklahoma penal institution. § 173. Machinery is provided for the institution by the Attorney General of a proceeding against such a person in the Oklahoma courts for a judgment that such person shall be rendered sexually sterile. §§ 176, 177. Notice, an opportunity to be heard, and the right to a jury trial are provided. §§ 177-181. The issues triable in such a proceeding are narrow and confined. If the court or jury finds that the defendant is an "habitual criminal" and that he "may be rendered sexually sterile without detriment to his or her general health," then the court "shall render judgment to the effect that said defendant be rendered sexually sterile" (§ 182) by the operation of vasectomy in case of a male and of salpingectomy in case of a female. § 174. Only one other provision of the Act is material here, and that is § 195, which provides that "offenses arising out of the violation of the prohibitory laws, revenue acts, embezzlement, or political offenses, shall not come or be considered within the terms of this Act."

Petitioner was convicted in 1926 of the crime of stealing chickens, and was sentenced to the Oklahoma State Reformatory. In 1929 he was convicted of the crime of robbery with firearms, and was sentenced to the reformatory. In 1934 he was convicted again of robbery with firearms, and was sentenced to the penitentiary. He was confined there in 1935 when the Act was passed. In 1936 the Attorney General instituted proceedings against him. Petitioner in his answer challenged the Act as unconstitutional by reason of the Fourteenth Amendment. A jury trial was had. The court instructed the jury that the crimes of which petitioner had been convicted were felonies involving moral turpitude, and that the only question for the jury was whether the operation of vasectomy could be performed on petitioner without detriment to his general health. The jury found that it could be. A judgment directing that the operation of vasectomy be performed on petitioner was affirmed by the Supreme Court of Oklahoma by a five to four decision. 189 Okla. 235, 115 P. 2d 123.

Several objections to the constitutionality of the Act have been pressed upon us. * * * We pass those points without intimating an opinion on them, for there is a feature of the Act which clearly condemns it. That is, its failure to meet the requirements of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

We do not stop to point out all of the inequalities in this Act. A few examples will suffice. In Oklahoma, grand larceny is a felony. Okla. Stats. Ann. Tit. 21, §§ 1705, 5. Larceny if grand larceny when the property exceeds $20 in value. Id. § 1704. Embezzlement is punishable "in the manner prescribed for feloniously stealing property of the value of that embezzled." Id. § 1462. Hence, he who embezzles property worth more than $20 is guilty of a felony. A clerk who appropriates over $20 from his employer's till (id. § 1456) and a stranger who steals the same amount are thus both guilty of felonies. If the latter repeats his act and is convicted three times, he may be sterilized. But the clerk is not subject to the pains and penalties of the Act no matter how large his embezzlements nor how frequent his convictions. A person who enters a chicken coop and steals chickens commits a felony (id. § 1719); and he may be sterilized if he is thrice convicted. If, however, he is a bailee of the property and fraudulently appropriates it, he is an embezzler. Id. § 1455. Hence, no matter how habitual his proclivities for embezzlement are and no matter how often his conviction, he may not be sterilized. Thus, the nature of the two crimes is intrinsically the same and they are punishable in the same manner. Furthermore, the line between them follows close distinctions—distinctions comparable to those highly technical ones which shaped the common law as to "trespass" or "taking." Bishop, Criminal Law (9th ed.) Vol. 2, §§ 760, 799, et seq.

* * *

It was stated in Buck v. Bell, 274 U. S. 200, that the claim that state legislation violates the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment is "the usual last resort of constitutional arguments." 274 U. S. p. 208. Under our constitutional system the States in determining the reach and scope of particular legislation need not provide "abstract symmetry." Patson v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 138, 144. They may mark and set apart the classes and types of problems according to the needs and as dictated or suggested by experience. See Bryant v. Zimmerman, 278 U. S. 63, and cases cited. It was in that connection that Mr. Justice Holmes, speaking for the Court in Bain Peanut Co. v. Pinson, 282 U. S. 499, 501, stated, "We must remember that the machinery of government would not work if it were not allowed a little play in its joints." Only recently we reaffirmed the view that the equal protection clause does not prevent the legislature from recognizing "degrees of evil" * * * by our ruling in Tigner v. Texas, 310 U. S. 141, 147, that "the Constitution does not require things which are different in fact or opinion to be treated in law as though they were the same." And see Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. v. Browning, 310 U. S. 362. Thus, if we had here only a question as to a State's classification of crimes, such as embezzlement or larceny, no substantial federal question would be raised. See Moore v. Missouri, 159 U. S. 673; Hawker v. New York, 170 U. S. 189; Finley v. California, 222 U. S. 28; Patson v. Pennsylvania, supra. For a State is not constrained in the exercise of its police power to ignore experience which marks a class of offenders or a family of offenses for special treatment. Nor is it prevented by the equal protection clause from confining "its restrictions to those classes of cases where the need is deemed to be clearest." Miller v. Wilson, 236 U. S. 373, 384. * * * As stated in Buck v. Bell, supra, p. 208, "* * * the law does all that is needed when it does all that it can, indicates a policy, applies it to all within the lines, and seeks to bring within the lines all similarly situated so far and so fast as its means allow."

But the instant legislation runs afoul of the equal protection clause, though we give Oklahoma that large deference which the rule of the foregoing cases requires. We are dealing here with legislation which involves one of the basic civil rights of man. Marriage and procreation are fundamental to the very existence and survival of the race. The power to sterilize, if exercised, may have subtle, far-reaching and devastating effects. In evil or reckless hands it can cause races or types which are inimical to the dominant group to wither and disappear. There is no redemption for the individual whom the law touches. Any experiment which the State conducts is to his irreparable injury. He is forever deprived of a basic liberty. We mention these matters not to re-examine the scope of the police power of the States. We advert to them merely in emphasis of our view that strict scrutiny of the classification which a State makes in a sterilization law is essential, lest unwittingly, or otherwise, invidious discriminations are made against groups or types of individuals in violation of the constitutional guaranty of just and equal laws. The guaranty of "equal protection of the laws is a pledge of the protection of equal laws." Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 369. When the law lays an unequal hand on those who have committed intrinsically the same quality of offense and sterilizes one and not the other, it has made as invidious a discrimination as if it had selected a particular race or nationality for oppressive treatment. Yick Wo v. Hopkins, supra; Gaines v. Canada, 305 U. S. 337. Sterilization of those who have thrice committed grand larceny, with immunity for those who are embezzlers, is a clear, pointed, unmistakable discrimination. Oklahoma makes no attempt to say that he who commits larceny by trespass or trick or fraud has biologically inheritable traits which he who commits embezzlement lacks. Oklahoma's line between larceny by fraud and embezzlement is determined, as we have noted, "with reference to the time when the fraudulent intent to convert the property to the taker's own use" arises. Riley v. State, supra, 64 Okla. Cr. at p. 189, 78 P. 2d p. 715. We have not the slightest basis for inferring that that line has any significance in eugenics, nor that the inheritability of criminal traits follows the neat legal distinctions which the law has marked between those two offenses. In terms of fines and imprisonment, the crimes of larceny and embezzlement rate the same under the Oklahoma code. Only when it comes to sterilization are the pains and penalties of the law different. The equal protection clause would indeed be a formula of empty words if such conspicuously artificial lines could be drawn. See Smith v. Wayne Probate Judge, 231 Mich. 409, 420-421, 204 N. W. 40. In Buck v. Bell, supra, the Virginia statute was upheld though it applied only to feeble-minded persons in institutions of the State. But it was pointed out that "so far as the operations enable those who otherwise must be kept confined to be returned to the world, and thus open the asylum to others, the equality aimed at will be more nearly reached." 274 U. S. p. 208. Here there is no such saving feature. Embezzlers are forever free. Those who steal or take in other ways are not. If such a classification were permitted, the technical common law concept of a "trespass" (Bishop, Criminal Law, 9th ed., vol. 1 §§ 566, 567) based on distinctions which are "very largely dependent upon history for explanation" (Holmes, The Common Law, p. 73) could readily become a rule of human genetics.

It is true that the Act has a broad severability clause. But we will not endeavor to determine whether its application would solve the equal protection difficulty. The Supreme Court of Oklahoma sustained the Act without reference to the severability clause. We have therefore a situation where the Act as construed and applied to petitioner is allowed to perpetuate the discrimination which we have found to be fatal. Whether the severability clause would be so applied as to remove this particular constitutional objection is a question which may be more appropriately left for adjudication by the Oklahoma court. Dorchy v. Kansas, 264 U. S. 286. That is re-emphasized here by our uncertainty as to what excision, if any, would be made as a matter of Oklahoma law. Cf. Smith v. Cahoon, 283 U. S. 553. It is by no means clear whether, if an excision were made, this particular constitutional difficulty might be solved by enlarging on the one hand or contracting on the other (cf. Mr. Justice Brandeis dissenting, National Life Ins. Co. v. United States, 277 U. S. 508, 534-535) the class of criminals who might be sterilized.

Reversed.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE STONE, concurring.

I concur in the result, but I am not persuaded that we are aided in reaching it by recourse to the equal protection clause.

If Oklahoma may resort generally to the sterilization of criminals on the assumption that their propensities are transmissible to future generations by inheritance, I seriously doubt that the equal protection clause requires it to apply the measure to all criminals in the first instance, or to none. See Rosenthal v. New York, 226 U. S. 260, 271; Keokee Coke Co. v. Taylor, 234 U. S. 224, 227; Patson v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 138, 144.

Moreover, if we must presume that the legislature knows—what science has been unable to ascertain—that the criminal tendencies of any class of habitual offenders are transmissible regardless of the varying mental characteristics of its individuals, I should suppose that we must likewise presume that the legislature, in its wisdom, knows that the criminal tendencies of some classes of offenders are more likely to be transmitted than those of others. And so I think the real question we have to consider is not one of equal protection, but whether the wholesale condemnation of a class to such an invasion of personal liberty, without opportunity to any individual to show that his is not the type of case which would justify resort to it, satisfies the demand of due process. * * *

MR. JUSTICE JACKSON concurring:

I join the CHIEF JUSTICE in holding that the hearings provided are too limited in the context of the present Act to afford due process of law. I also agree with the opinion of MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS that the scheme of classification set forth in the Act denies equal protection of the law. I disagree with the opinion of each in so far as it rejects or minimizes the grounds taken by the other. * * *

RAILWAY EXPRESS AGENCY v. NEW YORK.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1948.
336 U. S. 106, 93 L. ed. 533, 69 Sup. Ct. 463.

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS delivered the opinion of the Court.

Section 124 of the Traffic Regulations of the City of New York promulgated by the Police Commissioner provides:

"No person shall operate, or cause to be operated, in or upon any street an advertising vehicle; provided that nothing herein contained shall prevent the putting of business notices upon business delivery vehicles, so long as such vehicles are engaged in the usual business or regular work of the owner and not used merely or mainly for advertising."

Appellant is engaged in a nation-wide express business. It operates about 1,900 trucks in New York City and sells the space on the exterior sides of these trucks for advertising. That advertising is for the most part unconnected with its own business. It was convicted in the magistrate's court and fined. The judgment of conviction was sustained in the Court of Special Sessions. 188 Misc. 342, 67 N. Y. S. (2d) 732. The Court of Appeals affirmed without opinion by a divided vote. 297 N. Y. 703, 77 N. E. (2d) 13. The case is here on appeal. Judicial Code § 237(a), 28 U. S. C. § 344(a), as amended, (now § 1257) [F. C. A. 28 § 1257].

The Court in Fifth Ave. Coach Co. v. New York, 221 U. S. 467, sustained the predecessor ordinance to the present regulation over the objection that it violated the due process and equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment. It is true that that was a municipal ordinance resting on the broad base of the police power, while the present regulation stands or falls merely as a traffic regulation. But we do not believe that distinction warrants a different result in the two cases.

The Court of Special Sessions concluded that advertising on vehicles using the streets of New York City constitutes a distraction to vehicle drivers and to pedestrians alike and therefore affects the safety of the public in the use of the streets. We do not sit to weigh evidence on the due process issue in order to determine whether the regulation is sound or appropriate; nor is it our function to pass judgment on its wisdom. See Olsen v. Nebraska, 313 U. S. 236. We would be trespassing on one of the most intensely local and specialized of all municipal problems if we held that this regulation had no relation to the traffic problem of New York City. It is the judgment of the local authorities that it does have such a relation. And nothing has been advanced which shows that to be palpably false.

The question of equal protection of the laws is pressed more strenuously on us. It is pointed out that the regulation draws the line between advertisements of products sold by the owner of the truck and general advertisements. It is argued that unequal treatment on the basis of such a distinction is not justified by the aim and purpose of the regulation. It is said, for example, that one of appellant's trucks carrying the advertisement of a commercial house would not cause any greater distraction of pedestrians and vehicle drivers than if the commercial house carried the same advertisement on its own truck. Yet the regulation allows the latter to do what the former is forbidden from doing. It is therefore contended that the classification which the regulation makes has no relation to the traffic problem since a violation turns not on what kind of advertisements are carried on trucks but on whose trucks they are carried.

That, however, is a superficial way of analyzing the problem, even if we assume that it is premised on the correct construction of the regulation. The local authorities may well have concluded that those who advertise their own wares on their trucks do not present the same traffic problem in view of the nature or extent of the advertising which they use. It would take a degree of omniscience which we lack to say that such is not the case. If that judgment is correct, the advertising displays that are exempt have less incidence on traffic than those of appellants.

We cannot say that that judgment is not an allowable one. Yet if it is, the classification has relation to the purpose for which it is made and does not contain the kind of discrimination against which the Equal Protection Clause affords protection. It is by such practical considerations based on experience rather than by theoretical inconsistencies that the question of equal protection is to be answered. Patson v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 138, 144; Marcus Brown Holding Co. v. Feldman, 256 U. S. 170, 198, 199; Metropolitan Casualty Co. of New York v. Brownell, 294 U. S. 580, 585, 586. And the fact that New York City sees fit to eliminate from traffic this kind of distraction but does not touch what may be even greater ones in a different category, such as the vivid displays on Times Square, is immaterial. It is no requirement of equal protection that all evils of the same genus be eradicated or none at all. Central Lumber Co. v. South Dakota, 236 U. S. 157, 160.

* * *

Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE RUTLEDGE acquiesces in the Court's opinion and judgment, dubitante on the question of equal protection of the laws.

MR. JUSTICE JACKSON, concurring.

There are two clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment which this Court may invoke to invalidate ordinances by which municipal governments seek to solve their local problems. One says that no state shall "deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." The other declares that no state shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

My philosophy as to the relative readiness with which we should resort to these two clauses is almost diametrically opposed to the philosophy which prevails on this Court. While claims of denial of equal protection are frequently asserted, they are rarely sustained. But the Court frequently uses the due process clause to strike down measures taken by municipalities to deal with activities in their streets and public places which the local authorities consider to create hazards, annoyances or discomforts to their inhabitants. And I have frequently dissented when I thought local power was improperly denied. * * *

The burden should rest heavily upon one who would persuade us to use the due process clause to strike down a substantive law or ordinance. Even its provident use against municipal regulations frequently disables all government—state, municipal and federal—from dealing with the conduct in question because the requirement of due process is also applicable to State and Federal Governments. Invalidation of a statute or an ordinance on due process grounds leaves ungoverned and ungovernable conduct which many people find objectionable.

Invocation of the equal protection clause, on the other hand, does not disable any governmental body from dealing with the subject at hand. It merely means that the prohibition or regulation must have a broader impact. I regard it as a salutary doctrine that cities, states and the Federal Government must exercise their powers so as not to discriminate between their inhabitants except upon some reasonable differentiation fairly related to the object of regulation. This equality is not merely abstract justice. The framers of the Constitution knew, and we should not forget today, that there is no more effective practical guaranty against arbitrary and unreasonable government than to require that the principles of law which officials would impose upon a minority must be imposed generally. Conversely, nothing opens the door to arbitrary action so effectively as to allow those officials to pick and choose only a few to whom they will apply legislation and thus to escape the political retribution that might be visited upon them if larger numbers were affected. Courts can take no better measure to assure that laws will be just than to require that laws be equal in operation.

This case affords an illustration. Even casual observations from the sidewalks of New York will show that an ordinance which would forbid all advertising on vehicles would run into conflict with many interests, including some, if not all, of the great metropolitan newspapers, which use that advertising extensively. Their blandishment of the latest sensations is not less a cause of diverted attention and traffic hazard than the commonplace cigarette advertisement which this truck-owner is forbidden to display. But any regulation applicable to all such advertising would require much clearer justification in local conditions to enable its enactment than does some regulation applicable to a few. I do not mention this to criticize the motives of those who enacted this ordinance, but it dramatizes the point that we are much more likely to find arbitrariness in the regulation of the few than of the many. Hence, for my part, I am more receptive to attack on local ordinances for denial of equal protection than for denial of due process, while the Court has more often used the latter clause.

In this case, if the City of New York should assume that display of any advertising on vehicles tends and intends to distract the attention of persons using the highways and to increase the dangers of its traffic, I should think it fully within its constitutional powers to forbid it all. The same would be true if the City should undertake to eliminate or minimize the hazard by any generally applicable restraint, such as limiting the size, color, shape or perhaps to some extent the contents of vehicular advertising. Instead of such general regulation of advertising, however, the City seeks to reduce the hazard only by saying that while some may, others may not exhibit such appeals. The same display, for example, advertising cigarettes, which this appellant is forbidden to carry on its trucks, may be carried on the trucks of a cigarette dealer and might on the trucks of this appellant if it dealt in cigarettes. And almost an identical advertisement, certainly one of equal size, shape, color, and appearance, may be carried by this appellant if it proclaims its own offer to transport cigarettes. But it may not be carried so long as the message is not its own but a cigarette dealer's offer to sell the same cigarettes. * * *

That the difference between carrying on any business for hire and engaging in the same activity on one's own is a sufficient one to sustain some types of regulations of the one that is not applied to the other, is almost elementary. But it is usual to find such regulations applied to the very incidents wherein the two classes present different problems, such as in charges, liability and quality of service.

The difference, however, is invoked here to sustain a discrimination in a problem in which the two classes present identical dangers. The courts of New York have declared that the sole nature and purpose of the regulation before us is to reduce traffic hazards. There is not even a pretense here that the traffic hazard created by the advertising which is forbidden is in any manner or degree more hazardous than that which is permitted. It is urged with considerable force that this local regulation does not comply with the equal protection clause because it applies unequally upon classes whose differentiation is in no way relevant to the objects of the regulation.

As a matter of principle and in view of my attitude toward the equal protection clause, I do not think differences of treatment under law should be approved on classification because of differences unrelated to the legislative purpose. The equal protection clause ceases to assure either equality or protection if it is avoided by any conceivable difference that can be pointed out between those bound and those left free.
* * *

The question in my mind comes to this. Where individuals contribute to an evil or danger in the same way and to the same degree, may those who do so for hire be prohibited, while those who do so for their own commercial ends but not for hire be allowed to continue? I think the answer has to be that the hireling may be put in a class by himself and may be dealt with differently than those who act on their own. But this is not merely because such a discrimination will enable the lawmaker to diminish the evil. That might be done by many classifications, which I should think wholly unsustainable. It is rather because there is a real difference between doing in self-interest and doing for hire, so that it is one thing to tolerate action from those who act on their own and it is another thing to permit the same action to be promoted for a price. * * *

Of course, this appellant did not hold itself out to carry or display everybody's advertising, and its rental of space on the sides of its trucks was only incidental to the main business which brought its trucks into the streets. But it is not difficult to see that, in a day of extravagant advertising more or less subsidized by tax deduction, the rental of truck space could become an obnoxious enterprise. While I do not think highly of this type of regulation, that is not my business, and in view of the control I would concede to cities to protect citizens in quiet and orderly use for their proper purposes of the highways and public places, see dissent in Saia v. New York, 334 U. S. 558, I think the judgment below must be affirmed.

NASHVILLE, CHATTANOOGA & ST. LOUIS RY. v.
BROWNING.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1940.
310 U. S. 362, 84 L. ed. 1254, 60 Sup. Ct. 968.

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER delivered the opinion of the Court.
* * *

This brings us to the Company's claims under the Fourteenth Amendment. The Railway first asserts that it is a victim of such invidious discrimination in the administration of Tennessee's tax statutes as is proscribed by the guaranty of "the equal protection of the laws." The claim is founded upon the following circumstances. As we have already indicated, there are two separate modes for the assessment of property in Tennessee, each with its distinctive procedure. The property of public service corporations is assessed by the Commission; all other property by local officials. This broad classification, separating two very different types of property, has been reflected, according to petitioner's contention, by a corresponding difference in the bases of assessment. For more than forty years, so it was urged before the courts of Tennessee and later here, the county assessors have systematically valued property at far less than its true worth, while utility and railroad properties have been assessed by the Commission at full value. This systematic differentiation, petitioner claims, has been continuous and state-wide in its operation; has been "repeatedly brought to the attention of the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee"; has been left uncorrected by that body; and until the present case, so far as we are informed, has been unchallenged. In support of its claim the Railway adduced official and unofficial reports as well as a volume of affidavits from local assessing officials in the counties through which its lines run—all to the effect that locally assessed property was undervalued. The issue of forbidden discrimination was thus squarely raised below. But the Tennessee Supreme Court did not deem petitioner's evidence sufficient to overcome the presumption that in the exercise of its reviewing function, the Board had equalized assessments in accordance with the command of state law. We should be reluctant on such a question to reject the state court's determination as without foundation, and there is not enough in the record to warrant its repudiation. At the bar of this Court petitioner proffered the minutes of the State Board of Equalization—not in the record—to show the absence of equalization. Considering the nature of the litigation, the vigor and ability with which it was contested before the Circuit Court of Davidson County, on motion for new trial there, on the original appeal to the Supreme Court of Tennessee and finally on petition for rehearing, it would indeed turn this Court into a board of tax review if we were now to receive evidence not offered in any of the tribunals below.

But were we to take judicial notice of that which these minutes were offered to show, and therefore to regard the ground taken by the state court as a strained evasion of the differentiation between utility property on the one hand and all the rest on the other, we should still find no denial of the equal protection of the laws. It must be emphasized that the Company makes no claim that its property is singled out from among other public service corporations for discrimination. Its asserted grievance is common to the whole class. We must put to one side therefore all those cases relied on by the petitioner which invoked the Fourteenth Amendment against discriminations invidious to a particular taxpayer. * * * [Citations omitted.] All these cases are inapposite. None denied power to a state to apply different yardsticks to different classes of property. Equally irrelevant are those cases in which this Court, because of the nature of the litigation, was construing the uniformity clause of a state constitution, and was not applying the Fourteenth Amendment. Greene v. Louisville & I. R. Co., 244 U. S. 499; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Greene, 244 U. S. 522. This Court has previously had occasion to advert to the narrow and sometimes cramping provision of these state uniformity clauses, and has left no doubt that their inflexible restrictions upon the taxing powers of the state were not to be insinuated into that meritorious conception of equality which alone the Equal Protection Clause was designed to assure. See Puget Sound Co. v. King County, 264 U. S. 22, 27.

That the states may classify property for taxation; may set up different modes of assessment, valuation and collection; may tax some kinds of property at higher rates than others; and in making all these differentiations may treat railroads and other utilities with that separateness which their distinctive characteristics and functions in society make appropriate—these are among the commonplaces of taxation and of constitutional law. Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 321; Pacific Express Co. v. Sieber, 142 U. S. 339; Florida Central & P. R. Co. v. Reynolds, 183 U. S. 471; Southern Ry. Co. v. Watts, 260 U. S. 519; Atlantic Coast Line v. Daughton, 262 U. S. 413; Rapid Transit Corp. v. New York, 303 U. S. 573. Since, so far as the Federal Constitution is concerned, a state can put railroad property into one pigeonhole and other property into another, the only question relevant for us is whether the state has done so. If the discrimination of which the Railway complains had been formally written into the statutes of Tennessee, challenge to its constitutionality would be frivolous. If the state Supreme Court had construed the requirement of uniformity in the Tennessee Constitution so as to permit recognition of these diversities, no appeal could successfully be made to the Fourteenth Amendment. Here, according to petitioner's own claim, all the organs of the state are conforming to a practice, systematic, unbroken for more than forty years, and now questioned for the first time. It would be a narrow conception of jurisprudence to confine the notion of "laws" to what is found written on the statute books, and to disregard the gloss which life has written upon it. Settled state practice cannot supplant constitutional guarantees, but it can establish what is state law. The Equal Protection Clause did not write an empty formalism into the Constitution. Deeply embodied traditional ways of carrying out the state policy, such as those of which petitioner complains, are often tougher and truer law than the dead words of the written text. Compare Carino v. Insular Government, 212 U. S. 449, 459. And if the state Supreme Court chooses to cover up under a formal veneer of uniformity the established system of differentiation between two classes of property, an exposure of the fiction is not enough to establish its unconstitutionality. Fictions have played an important and sometimes fruitful part in the development of law; and the Equal Protection Clause is not a command of candor. So we are of opinion that such a discrimination, not invidious but long-sanctioned and indeed conventional, would not be offensive to the Fourteenth Amendment simply because Tennessee had reached it by a circuitous road. It is not the Fourteenth Amendment's function to uproot systems of taxation inseparable from the state's tradition of fiscal administration and ingrained in the habits of its people. * * *

Affirmed.

NOTES

1. In Quong Wing v. Kirkendall, 223 U. S. 59, 56 L. ed. 350, 32 Sup. Ct. 192 (1912) a statute of Montana imposing a license fee on hand laundries was held not to constitute a denial of the equal protection of the laws because it did not apply to steam laundries, and because it exempted from its operation laundries not employing more than two women.

2. In Metropolis Theater Co. v. Chicago, 228 U. S. 61, 57 L. ed. 730, 33 Sup. Ct. 441 (1913) it was held that an ordinance grading a municipal license fee for theaters according to the price asked for the highest priced seats, rather than according to revenue, was not so palpably arbitrary as to violate the equal protection guaranty, although it was shown that some of the theaters charging a higher admission had less revenue than those charging a smaller price, and therefore paying lower license fees.

3. In W. W. Cargill Co. v. Minnesota, 180 U. S. 452, 45 L. ed. 619, 21 Sup. Ct. 423 (1901) a state statute requiring the proprietors of warehouses situated on the right of way of a railroad to secure a license from a state commission, and containing no such requirement with respect to warehouses not so situated but doing the same kind of business, was held not to violate the equal protection clause.

4. In American Sugar Refining Co. v. Louisiana, 179 U. S. 89, 45 L. ed. 102, 21 Sup. Ct. 43 (1900) a license tax imposed upon persons and corporations carrying on the business of refining sugar and molasses, which excepted from the tax planters and farmers grinding and refining their own sugar and molasses, was held not to work an unconstitutional discrimination.

5. In Rast v. Van Deman & Lewis Co., 240 U. S. 342, 60 L. ed. 679, 36 Sup. Ct. 370 (1916) the court sustained a statute placing taxes additional to the usual occupation taxes on persons who offered, with merchandise bargained or sold in the course of trade, coupons, profit-sharing certificates, or the like, as against the contention that it was arbitrary and unreasonable, in that the only difference between the other merchants and those who used trading stamps was a difference in the method of advertising.

6. Under a Pennsylvania statute all moneyed securities were subject to an annual state tax of three mills on the dollar of their actual value, except bonds and other securities issued by corporations, which were taxed at three mills on the dollar of their nominal or par value. In an action by the state to enforce the payment of a tax assessed against the defendant railroad company, one of the contentions advanced in the Supreme Court was that the law violated the equal protection of the laws. In sustaining the tax, the Supreme Court, through Mr. Justice Bradley, said: "The provision in the Fourteenth Amendment, that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, was not intended to prevent a state from adjusting its system of taxation in all proper and reasonable ways. It may, if it chooses, exempt certain classes of property from any taxation at all, such as churches, libraries, and the property of charitable institutions. It may impose different specific taxes upon different trades and professions, and may vary the rates of excise upon various products; it may tax real estate and personal property in a different manner; it may tax visible property only, and not tax securities for payment of money; it may allow deductions for indebtedness, or not allow them. * * * We think we are safe in saying that the Fourteenth Amendment was not intended to compel the states to adopt an iron rule of equal taxation." Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 33 L. ed. 892, 10 Sup. Ct. 533 (1890).

7. In holding invalid as a violation of the equal protection guaranty a Pennsylvania statute which imposed a tax upon the gross receipts of all corporations owning or operating any device for the transportation of passengers or freight, the Supreme Court, in an opinion by Justice Butler, said: "The gross receipts of incorporated operators are taxed, while those of natural persons and partnerships carrying on the same business are not. The character of the owner is the sole fact on which the distinction and discrimination are made to depend. The tax is imposed merely because the owner is a corporation. The discrimination is not justified by any difference in the source of the receipts or in the situation or character of the property employed. It follows that the section fails to meet the requirement that a classification, to be consistent with the equal protection clause, must be based on a real and substantial difference having reasonable relation to the subject of the legislation." Justices Holmes, Brandeis and Stone delivered dissenting opinions, taking the view that there were real and important differences between a business carried on in corporate form and the same business carried on by natural persons and that such differences justified the imposition of special taxes on corporations. Quaker City Cab Co. v. Pennsylvania, 277 U. S. 389, 72 L. ed. 927, 48 Sup. Ct. 553 (1928).

8. An Indiana statute made it a misdemeanor for any person, firm, association, or corporation to operate a store without first obtaining a license, and prescribed a graduated annual license fee based on the number of stores conducted under a single ownership or management. In sustaining the statute, as against the claim that the classification was unreasonable and arbitrary and resulted in a denial of the equal protection of the laws, the Supreme Court said: "In view of the numerous distinctions above pointed out between the business of a chain store and other types of store, we cannot pronounce the classification made by the statute to be arbitrary and unreasonable. That there are differences and advantages in favor of the chain store is shown by the number of such chains established and by their astonishing growth. More and more persons, like the appellee, have found advantages in this method of merchandising and have therefore adopted it." Justices Sutherland, Van Devanter, McReynolds and Butler dissented. State Board of Tax Commissioners v. Jackson, 283 U. S. 527, 75 L. ed. 1248, 51 Sup. Ct. 540, 73 A. L. R. 1464, 75 A. L. R. 1536 (1931).

9. In holding invalid a Kentucky graduated state tax on gross sales, the rates of which varied in proportion to the volume of sales in retail stores owned, operated or controlled by the same merchant, the court distinguished State Board of Tax Commissioners v. Jackson, supra, and other decisions applying the doctrine of that case, and said: "The Kentucky statute ignores the form of organization and the method of conducting business. The taxable class is retail merchants, whether individuals, partnerships, or corporations; those who sell in one store or many; those who offer but one sort of goods and those who through departments deal in many lines of merchandise. The law arbitrarily classified these vendors for the imposition of a varying rate of taxation, solely by reference to the volume of their transactions, disregarding the absence of any reasonable relation between the chosen criterion of classification and the privilege the enjoyment of which is said to be the subject taxed. It exacts from two persons different amounts for the privilege of doing exactly similar acts because the one has performed the act oftener than the other." Justices Cardozo, Brandeis and Stone dissented, citing prior decisions, including the chain store cases, as justifying classification according to size of the business enterprise. Stewart Dry Goods Co. v. Lewis, 294 U. S. 550, 79 L. ed. 1054, 55 Sup. Ct. 525 (1935).

10. Plaintiffs brought an action of mandamus to compel the refund of taxes alleged to have been exacted illegally. The state code provided for the taxation of national and state bank shares and competitive capital at one rate and for the taxation of non-competing investments at a rate which was only from one-fifth to one-seventh as great. The assessor and the local board of review had properly applied the bank rate in taxing the shares of a number of competing domestic corporations, but the county auditor, in making up the tax list, wrongfully changed these assessments. Conceding that there was discrimination in favor of shares in the competing domestic corporations, the state Supreme Court denied relief on the ground that the auditor was without authority to make the alteration and that his act and the ensuing collection were void and not attributable to the state. It was held that the petitioners had no other remedy than to await action by the taxing authorities to collect the taxes remaining due from their competitors or to initiate proceedings themselves to compel such collection. In reversing this judgment, the Supreme Court, through Mr. Justice Brandeis, held that the state was responsible for the consequences of the illegal acts of its taxing officers and that the state court, in giving judgment against the bank, had in effect ratified the act of the state in retaining the taxes known to have been wrongfully collected. The court further held that a taxpayer who has been subjected to discriminatory taxation through the favoring of others in violation of the federal Constitution cannot be required himself to assume the burden of seeking an increase of the taxes which the others should have paid. Iowa-Des Moines National Bank v. Bennett, 284 U. S. 239, 76 L. ed. 265, 52 Sup. Ct. 133 (1931). Other leading cases involving discrimination in the administration of tax laws are Sioux City Bridge Co. v. Dakota County, 260 U. S. 441, 67 L. ed. 340, 43 Sup. Ct. 190, 28 A. L. R. 979 (1923); Cumberland Coal Co. v. Board of Revision, 284 U. S. 23, 76 L. ed. 146, 52 Sup. Ct. 48 (1931); Hillsborough Township v. Cromwell, 326 U. S. 620, 90 L. ed. 358, 66 Sup. Ct. 445 (1946).

11. For a recent discussion of problems arising under the equal protection clause, particularly with respect to the legislative power of classification, see Tussman and TenBroek, The Equal Protection of the Laws, 37 Cal. L. Rev. 341 (1949).

KENTUCKY FINANCE CORPORATION v. PARAMOUNT AUTO EXCHANGE CORPORATION.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1923.
262 U. S. 544, 67 L. ed. 1112, 43 Sup. Ct. 636.

Error to a judgment of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, sustaining two orders, one for the examination of the plaintiff before answer, and the second striking out its complaint and dismissing its action for failure to comply with the first.

MR. JUSTICE VAN DEVANTER delivered the opinion of the Court.

The plaintiff in error, a Kentucky corporation, brought an action of replevin in a state court at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, against the defendant in error, a Wisconsin corporation, to recover an automobile,—the right of recovery asserted in the complaint being put on the ground that the plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession of the automobile, that one Allen had unlawfully taken it from the plaintiff's possession at Louisville, Kentucky, had fraudulently removed it to Milwaukee, and had there wrongfully delivered it to the defendant, and that the defendant was unjustly withholding it from the plaintiff under some groundless claim derived from Allen. The defendant appeared and obtained from the court an order requiring the plaintiff's secretary, who resided at Louisville and was in the plaintiff's service there, to appear in Milwaukee at a fixed time before a designated court commissioner, to bring with him all papers, files and records of the plaintiff which were under his control and relevant to the controversy, and then and there to submit to an examination by the defendant. The order was sought and granted on the ground that the examination would better enable the defendant to plead to the complaint, which as yet it had not done. The plaintiff was not engaged in any business in Wisconsin, nor had it complied with the law of that state prescribing conditions on which it might do so. It had no property in the state other than the automobile and it had gone into the state only for the purpose of instituting and prosecuting the action to repossess itself of that vehicle. Its secretary was not within the state, nor did it have any representative there other than the attorneys who were prosecuting the action in its behalf. For itself and its secretary it consented that such an examination as was sought might be held at Louisville at any time, and before any officer, the court might designate, but it objected to any order requiring that the examination be had in Milwaukee. The objection was overruled and the court put in the order a direction that the defendant tender to the plaintiff for its secretary the railroad fare from the southern boundary of Wisconsin to Milwaukee and return, being $4.74, and one day's witness fee, being $1.50. The tender was made and declined and the secretary, with the plaintiff's approval, refused to comply with the order. Because of this the court, on the defendant's motion and over the plaintiff's objection, made a further order striking the plaintiff's complaint from the files and dismissing its cause of action, with costs. On appeal to the Supreme Court of the state both orders were sustained over the plaintiff's contention that they and the statute under which they were made violate the due process and equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment. 171 Wis. 586.

[The procedure of the trial court conformed to a Wisconsin statutory provision applicable to foreign corporations. Other statutory provisions made a resident of the state subject to such oral interrogation only in the county of his residence, and where the party was a non-resident natural person the examination could be had in Wisconsin only if he could be personally served therein with notice and subpoena and then only in the county where such service was had.]

By subd. 7 of § 4096, before quoted, an exception was made as to foreign corporations, whereby examinations within the state might be ordered and compelled against them regardless of their nonresidence and of any inability to obtain service on them in the state. Thus they were subjected to a rule much more onerous than that applicable to nonresident individuals in like situations, and also more onerous than that applicable to resident suitors, whether individuals or corporations. The Supreme Court justified this difference in legislative treatment and also the order for an examination in this case on the ground that they amounted to no more than a reasonable exercise of the authority of the state over a nonresident corporation coming voluntarily into the state to seek a remedy in her courts against a resident defendant.

We take a different view of the matter. According to the sworn complaint, to the allegations of which due regard must be had, the automobile belonged to the plaintiff. It had been unlawfully taken from the plaintiff's possession in Kentucky and put in the defendant's possession in Wisconsin. It did not get into the latter state through any act of the plaintiff; nor did the acts by which it got there make it any the less the plaintiff's property. Only by going into that state and there instituting an action of replevin against the wrongful possessor could the plaintiff repossess itself of its property. Unless it took that course its property would be lost. The state court whose aid it invoked was one whose jurisdiction was general and adequate for the purpose. In the circumstances, the right to bring the action was plain. See Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. v. Sawyer, 44 Wis. 387; Chicago Title & T. Co. v. Bashford, 120 Wis. 281; Sioux Remedy Co. v. Cope, 235 U. S. 197. To have denied that right would, in effect, have deprived the plaintiff of its property and have been an intolerable injustice. That the plaintiff owed its corporate existence to Kentucky did not enable Wisconsin to treat its plight with indifference. It was a "person" within the meaning of both the due process clause and the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Santa Clara County v. Southern P. R. Co., 118 U. S. 394, 396; Covington & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Sandford, 164 U. S. 578, 592; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 522; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Vosburg, 238 U. S. 56. The latter clause declares that no state shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws," meaning, of course, the protection of laws applying equally to all in the same situation. The words "within its jurisdiction" are comprehensive, but we have no need for attempting a full definition of them here. It is enough to say that, when the plaintiff went into Wisconsin, as it did, for the obviously lawful purpose of repossessing itself, by a permissible action in her courts, of specific personal property unlawfully taken out of its possession elsewhere and fraudulently carried into that state, it was, in our opinion, within her jurisdiction for all the purposes of that undertaking. See Southern R. Co. v. Greene, 216 U. S. 400; Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239. And we think there is no tenable ground for regarding it as any less entitled to the equal protection of the laws in that state than an individual would have been in the same circumstances; for, as was held in Atchison, Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 154, "a state has no more power to deny to corporations the equal protection of the law than it has to individual citizens."

No doubt a corporation of one state seeking relief in the courts of another must conform to the prevailing modes of proceeding in those courts and submit to reasonable rules respecting the payment of costs or giving security therefor and the like (see Canadian Northern Ry.

Co. v. Eggen, 252 U. S. 553, 561); but it cannot be subjected, merely because it is such a corporation, to onerous requirements having no reasonable support in that fact and not laid on other suitors in like situations. Here the statute authorized the imposition, and there was imposed on the plaintiff a highly burdensome requirement because of its corporate origin,—a requirement which under the statute could not be laid on an individual suitor in the same situation. The discrimination was essentially arbitrary. There could be no reason for requiring a corporate resident of Louisville to send its secretary, papers, files and books to Milwaukee for the purpose of an adversary examination that would not apply equally to an individual resident of Louisville in a like case. The discrimination is further illustrated by the provision that, as to all residents of Wisconsin, individual and corporate, the examination should be had in the county of their residence, no matter what its distance from the place of suit.

We hold that the statute as it was applied in this case was invalid, and the orders made under it were erroneous, as denying to the plaintiff the equal protection of the laws. This conclusion renders it unnecessary to consider the contention made under the due process clause.

Judgment reversed.

MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS, dissenting, with whom MR. JUSTICE HOLMES concurs: * * * It cannot be that the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment deprives a state of the power to authorize its courts to so mold their process as to secure, in this way, the adequate presentation of a case.

To sustain the contention that the statute denies to plaintiff equal protection of the laws would seem to require the Court to overrule Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 260, 261, and many other cases. The plaintiff, a foreign corporation not doing business within the state of Wisconsin, was not a person "within its jurisdiction." Moreover, the statutory provision complained of put nonresidents substantially upon an equality with residents. Compare Kane v. New Jersey, 242 U. S. 160, 167. No question of interstate commerce is involved. In my opinion the equal protection clause does not prevent Wisconsin from molding, in the case of foreign corporations, the details of its judicial procedure to accord with the requirements of justice.

NOTES

1. In Santa Clara County v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 118 U. S. 394, 30 L. ed. 118, 6 Sup. Ct. 1132 (1886) the Supreme Court for the first time held that the word "person" in the Fourteenth Amendment included corporations. In this case Chief Justice Waite advised counsel as follows: "The court does not wish to hear argument on the question whether the provision in the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution, which forbids a state to deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, applies to these corporations. We are all of opinion that it does." In Connecticut General Life Insur- ance Co. v. Johnson, 303 U. S. 77, 82 L. ed. 673, 58 Sup. Ct. 436 (1938), Mr. Justice Black dissented, saying: "I do not believe that the word 'person' in the Fourteenth Amendment includes corporations. * * * A constitutional interpretation that is wrong should not stand. I believe this court should now overrule previous decisions which interpreted the Fourteenth Amendment to include corporations." For an analysis of the historical evidence which sheds much light on the question at issue, see Graham, The "Conspiracy Theory" of the Fourteenth Amendment, 47 Yale L. J. 371 (1938), 1 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 236. See also Boudin, Truth and Fiction about the Fourteenth Amendment, 16 N. Y. U. L. Q. Rev. 19 (1938).

In Wheeling Steel Corporation v. Glander, 337 U. S. 562, 93 L. ed. 1544, 69 Sup. Ct. 1291 (1949), Mr. Justice Douglas, with the concurrence of Mr. Justice Black, dissented on the ground that a corporation is not a "person" within the meaning of the equal protection clause. The dissent said: "We are dealing with a question of vital concern to the people of the nation. It may be most desirable to give corporations this protection from the operation of the legislative process. But that question is not for us. It is for the people. If they want corporations to be treated as humans are treated, if they want to grant corporations this large degree of emancipation from state regulation, they should say so. The Constitution provides a method by which they may do so. We should not do it for them through the guise of interpretation." Mr. Justice Jackson, who wrote the opinion of the court, in an independent statement which he deemed necessary "to complete the record," pointed out that since the Santa Clara decision the court had consistently proceeded on the assumption that corporations were entitled to the protection of the Fourteenth Amendment.

2. Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 43 L. ed. 432, 19 Sup. Ct. 165 (1898) held, inter alia, that a foreign corporation not doing business in Tennessee "under conditions that subjected it to process issuing from the courts of Tennessee at the instance of suitors" could not rely upon the equal protection clause in attacking a statute of that state giving preference to the claims of resident creditors in the distribution of assets of insolvent foreign mining and manufacturing corporations admitted to do business in the state. In its opinion sustaining this statute the court said: "That prohibition manifestly relates only to the denial by the state of equal protection to persons 'within its jurisdiction.' Observe, that the prohibition against the deprivation of property without due process of law is not qualified by the words 'within its jurisdiction,' while those words are found in the succeeding clause relating to the equal protection of the laws. The court cannot assume that those words were inserted without any object, nor is it at liberty to eliminate them from the Constitution, and to interpret the clause in question as if they were not to be found in that instrument." Is the dissenting opinion in the principal case correct in its assertion that the result of that case "would seem to require" the court to overrule Blake v. McClung?

3. Arkansas statutes required actions for personal injuries, if against a domestic corporation, to be brought in a county where it had a place of business or in which its chief officer resided, and, if against a natural person, in a county where he resided or might be found; but they permitted such actions, if against a foreign corporation, to be brought in any county of the state. The Supreme Court (Justices Holmes and Brandeis dissenting) found no sufficient reason for this difference as to venue of actions so far as foreign corporations having a fixed place of business in the state and a resident agent were concerned, and as to them held the statute to constitute a denial of the equal protection of the laws. The court added: "No doubt there are subjects as to which corporations admissibly may be classified separately from individuals and accorded different treatment, and also subjects as to which foreign corporations may be classified separately from both individuals and domestic corporations and dealt with differently. But there are other subjects as to which such a course is not admissible; the distinguishing principle being that classification must rest on differences pertinent to the subject in respect of which the classification is made." Power Mfg. Co. v. Saunders, 274 U. S. 490, 71 L. ed. 1165, 47 Sup. Ct. 678 (1927).

4. That domestic corporations may for some purposes be exempted from regulations imposed upon those of foreign origin is exemplified in Metropolitan Casualty Ins. Co. v. Brownell, 294 U. S. 580, 79 L. ed. 1070, 55 Sup. Ct. 538 (1935), sustaining an Indiana statute applicable only to foreign insurance companies which declared that "no condition or agreement not to sue for a period of less than three years shall be valid." The court said: "There is no showing that the situation of foreign corporations, writing casualty insurance contracts in Indiana, is so similar to that of domestic corporations as to preclude any rational distinction between them as regards the time required for negotiating settlements of claims and the determination whether suits upon them should be prosecuted within or without the state. Where the record is silent, we cannot presume to declare that there is such similarity, or to say that a state is prohibited from making any distinction in the length of time within which suit must be brought. It is not beyond the range of probability that foreign casualty companies, as distinguished from domestic companies, generally keep their funds and maintain their business offices, and their agencies for the settlement of claims, outside the state. * * * We cannot say that these considerations may not have moved the legislature to insist that a longer time should be given for bringing suits against foreign companies than the latter." Justices Van Devanter, McReynolds, Sutherland and Butler dissented.

Section 2.—Race Discrimination and the Problem of "State Action."

CIVIL RIGHTS CASES.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1883.

109 U. S. 3, 27 L. ed. 835, 3 Sup. Ct. 18.

These cases were all founded on the first and second sections of the act of Congress, known as the Civil Rights Act, passed March 1st, 1875, entitled "An Act to protect all Citizens in their Civil and Legal Rights." 18 Stat. 335. Two of the cases, those against Stanley and Nichols, were indictments for denying to persons of color the accommodations and privileges of an inn or hotel; two of them, those against Ryan and Singleton, were, one an information, the other an indictment, for denying to individuals the privileges and accommodations of a theatre, the information against Ryan being for refusing a colored person a seat in the dress circle of Maguire's theatre in San Francisco; and the indictment against Singleton was for denying to another person, whose color was not stated, the full enjoyment of the accommodations of the theatre known as the Grand Opera House in New York, "said denial not being made for any reasons by law applicable to citizens of every race and color, and regardless of any previous condition of servitude." * * * The cases of Stanley, Nichols, and Singleton, came up on certificates of division of opinion between the judges below as to the constitutionality of the first and second sections of the act referred to; and the case of Ryan, on a writ of error to the judgment of the Circuit Court for the District of California sustaining a demurrer to the information.

The Stanley, Ryan, Nichols, and Singleton cases were submitted together, by the Solicitor-General at the last term of court, on the 7th day of November, 1882. There were no appearances and no briefs filed for the defendants. The statute follows:

"Sec. 1. That all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations, advantages, facilities, and privileges of inns, public conveyances on land or water, theatres, and other places of public amusement; subject only to the conditions and limitations established by law, and applicable alike to citizens of every race and color, regardless of any previous condition of servitude.

"Sec. 2. That any person who shall violate the foregoing section by denying to any citizen, except for reasons by law applicable to citizens of every race and color, and regardless of any previous condition of servitude, the full enjoyment of any of the accommodations, advantages, facilities, or privileges in said section enumerated, or by aiding or inciting such denial, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of five hundred dollars to the person aggrieved thereby, to be recovered in an action of debt, with full costs; and shall also, for every such offence, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than five hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, or shall be imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than one year: Provided, That all persons may elect to sue for the penalty aforesaid, or to proceed under their rights at common law and by State statutes; and having so elected to proceed in the one mode or the other, their right to proceed in the other jurisdiction shall be barred. But this provision shall not apply to criminal proceedings, either under this Act or the criminal law of any State: And provided further, That a judgment for the penalty in favor of the party aggrieved, or a judgment upon an indictment, shall be a bar to either prosecution respectively."

MR. JUSTICE BRADLEY delivered the opinion of the Court.

It is obvious that the primary and important question in all the cases is the constitutionality of the law: for if the law is unconstitutional none of the prosecutions can stand. * * *

Are these sections constitutional? The first section, which is the principle one, cannot be fairly understood without attending to the last clause, which qualifies the preceding part.

The essence of the law is, not to declare broadly that all persons shall be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations, advantages, facilities, and privileges of inns, public conveyances, and theatres; but that such enjoyment shall not be subject to any conditions applicable only to citizens of a particular race or color, or who had been in a previous condition of servitude. In other words, it is the purpose of the law to declare that, in the enjoyment of the accommodations and privileges of inns, public conveyances, theatres, and other places of public amusement, no distinction shall be made between citizens of different race or color, or between those who have, and those who have not, been slaves. Its effect is to declare, that in all inns, public conveyances, and places of amusement, colored citizens, whether formerly slaves or not, and citizens of other races, shall have the same accommodations and privileges in all inns, public conveyances, and places of amusement as are enjoyed by white citizens; and vice versa. The second section makes it a penal offence in any person to deny to any citizen of any race or color, regardless of previous servitude, any of the accommodations or privileges mentioned in the first section.

Has Congress constitutional power to make such a law? Of course, no one will contend that the power to pass it was contained in the Constitution before the adoption of the last three amendments. The power is sought, first, in the Fourteenth Amendment, and the views and arguments of distinguished senators, advanced whilst the law was under consideration, claiming authority to pass it by virtue of that amendment, are the principal arguments adduced in favor of the power. We have carefully considered those arguments, as was due to the eminent ability of those who put them forward, and have felt, in all its force, the weight of authority which always invests a law that Congress deems itself competent to pass. But the responsibility of an independent judgment is now thrown upon this court; and we are bound to exercise it according to the best lights we have.

The first section of the Fourteenth Amendment (which is the one relied on), after declaring who shall be citizens of the United States, and of the several States, is prohibitory in its character, and prohibitory upon the states. It declares that:

"No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

It is state action of a particular character that is prohibited. Individual invasion of individual rights is not the subject-matter of the Amendment. It has a deeper and broader scope. It nullifies and makes void all state legislation, and state action of every kind, which impairs the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, or which injures them in life, liberty or property without due process of law, or which denies to any of them the equal protection of the laws. It not only does this, but, in order that the national will, thus declared, may not be a mere brutum fulmen, the last section of the Amendment invests Congress with power to enforce it by appropriate legislation. To enforce what? To enforce the prohibition. To adopt appropriate legislation for correcting the effects of such prohibited state laws and state acts, and thus to render them effectually null, void, and innocuous. This is the legislative power conferred upon Congress, and this is the whole of it. It does not invest Congress with power to legislate upon subjects which are within the domain of state legislation; but to provide modes of relief against state legislation, or state action, of the kind referred to. It does not authorize Congress to create a code of municipal law for the regulation of private rights; but to provide modes of redress against the operation of state laws, and the action of state officers executive or judicial, when these are subversive of the fundamental rights specified in the Amendment. Positive rights and privileges are undoubtedly secured by the Fourteenth Amendment; but they are secured by way of prohibition against state laws and state proceedings affecting those rights and privileges, and by power given to Congress to legislate for the purpose of carrying such prohibition into effect; and such legislation must necessarily be predicated upon such supposed state laws or state proceedings, and be directed to the correction of their operation and effect. * * *

And so in the present case, until some state law has been passed, or some state action through its officers or agents has been taken, adverse to the rights of citizens sought to be protected by the Fourteenth Amendment, no legislation of the United States under said amendment, nor any proceeding under such legislation, can be called into activity: for the prohibitions of the Amendment are against state laws and acts done under state authority. Of course, legislation may, and should be, provided in advance to meet the exigency when it arises; but it should be adapted to the mischief and wrong which the Amendment was intended to provide against; and that is, state laws, or state action of some kind, adverse to the rights of the citizen secured by the Amendment. Such legislation cannot properly cover the whole domain of rights appertaining to life, liberty and property, defining them and providing for their vindication. That would be to establish a code of municipal law regulative of all private rights between man and man in society. It would be to make Congress take the place of the state legislatures and to supersede them. It is absurd to affirm that, because the rights of life, liberty and property (which include all civil rights that men have), are by the amendment sought to be protected against invasion on the part of the state without due process of law, Congress may therefore provide due process of law for their vindication in every case; and that, because the denial by a state to any persons, of the equal protection of the laws, is prohibited by the amendment, therefore Congress may establish laws for their equal protection. In fine, the legislation which Congress is authorized to adopt in this behalf is not general legislation upon the rights of the citizen, but corrective legislation, that is, such as may be necessary and proper for counteracting such laws as the states may adopt or enforce, and which, by the amendment, they are prohibited from making or enforcing, or such acts and proceedings as the states may commit or take, and which, by the amendment, they are prohibited from committing or taking. It is not necessary for us to state, if we could, what legislation would be proper for Congress to adopt. It is sufficient for us to examine whether the law in question is of that character.

An inspection of the law shows that it makes no reference whatever to any supposed or apprehended violation of the Fourteenth Amendment on the part of the states. It is not predicated on any such view. It proceeds ex directo to declare that certain acts committed by individuals shall be deemed offences, and shall be prosecuted and punished by proceedings in the courts of the United States. It does not profess to be corrective of any constitutional wrong committed by the states; it does not make its operation to depend upon any such wrong committed. It applies equally to cases arising in states which have the justest laws respecting the personal rights of citizens, and whose authorities are ever ready to enforce such laws, as to those which arise in states that may have violated the prohibition of the amendment. In other words, it steps into the domain of local jurisprudence, and lays down rules for the conduct of individuals in society towards each other, and imposes sanctions for the enforcement of those rules, without referring in any manner to any supposed action of the state or its authorities.

If this legislation is appropriate for enforcing the prohibitions of the amendment, it is difficult to see where it is to stop. Why may not Congress with equal show of authority enact a code of laws for the enforcement and vindication of all rights of life, liberty, and property? If it is supposable that the states may deprive persons of life, liberty, and property without due process of law (and the amendment itself does suppose this), why should not Congress proceed at once to prescribe due process of law for the protection of every one of these fundamental rights, in every possible case, as well as to prescribe equal privileges in inns, public conveyances, and theatres? The truth is, that the implication of a power to legislate in this manner is based upon the assumption that if the states are forbidden to legislate or act in a particular way on a particular subject, and power is conferred upon Congress to enforce the prohibition, this gives Congress power to legislate generally upon that subject, and not merely power to provide modes of redress against such state legislation or action. The assumption is certainly unsound. It is repugnant to the Tenth Amendment of the Constitution, which declares that powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively or to the people.

We have not overlooked the fact that the fourth section of the act now under consideration has been held by this court to be constitutional. That section declares "that no citizen, possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law, shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States, or of any state, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and any officer or other person charged with any duty in the selection or summoning of jurors who shall exclude or fail to summon any citizen for the cause aforesaid, shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be fined not more than five thousand dollars." In Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, it was held that an indictment against a state officer under this section for excluding persons of color from the jury list is sustainable. But a moment's attention to its terms will show that the section is entirely corrective in its character. Disqualifications for service on juries are only created by the law, and the first part of the section is aimed at certain disqualifying laws, namely, those which make mere race or color a disqualification; and the second clause is directed against those who, assuming to use the authority of the state government, carry into effect such a rule of disqualification. In the Virginia case, the state, through its officer, enforced a rule of disqualification which the law was intended to abrogate and counteract. Whether the statute-book of the state actually laid down any such rule of disqualification, or not, the state, through its officer, enforced such a rule: and it is against such state action, through its officers and agents, that the last clause of the section is directed. This aspect of the law was deemed sufficient to divest it of any unconstitutional character, and makes it differ widely from the first and second sections of the same act which we are now considering.

* * *

In this connection it is proper to state that civil rights, such as are guaranteed by the Constitution against state aggression, cannot be impaired by the wrongful acts of individuals, unsupported by state authority in the shape of laws, customs, or judicial or executive proceedings. The wrongful act of an individual, unsupported by any such authority, is simply a private wrong, or a crime of that individual; an invasion of the rights of the injured party, it is true, whether they affect his person, his property, or his reputation; but if not sanctioned in some way by the state, or not done under state authority, his rights remain in full force, and may presumably be vindicated by resort to the laws of the state for redress. An individual cannot deprive a man of his right to vote, to hold property, to buy and sell, to sue in the courts, or to be a witness or a juror; he may, by force or fraud, interfere with the enjoyment of the right in a particular case; he may commit an assault against the person, or commit murder, or use ruffian violence at the polls, or slander the good name of a fellow-citizen; but, unless protected in these wrongful acts by some shield of state law or state authority, he cannot destroy or injure the right; he will only render himself amenable to satisfaction or punishment; and amenable therefore to the laws of the state where the wrongful acts are committed. Hence, in all those cases where the Constitution seeks to protect the rights of the citizen against discriminative and unjust laws of the state by prohibiting such laws, it is not individual offences, but abrogation and denial of rights, which it denounces, and for which it clothes the Congress with power to provide a remedy. This abrogation and denial of rights, for which the states alone were or could be responsible, was the great seminal and fundamental wrong which was intended to be remedied. And the remedy to be provided must necessarily be predicated upon that wrong. It must assume that in the cases provided for, the evil or wrong actually committed rests upon some state law or state authority for its excuse and perpetration.

Of course, these remarks do not apply to those cases in which Congress is clothed with direct and plenary powers of legislation over the whole subject, accompanied with an express or implied denial of such power to the states, as in the regulation of commerce with foreign nations, among the several states, and with the Indian tribes, the coining of money, the establishment of post-offices and post-roads, the declaring of war, etc. In these cases Congress has power to pass laws for regulating the subjects specified in every detail, and the conduct and transactions of individuals in respect thereof. But where a subject is not submitted to the general legislative power of Congress, but is only submitted thereto for the purpose of rendering effective some prohibition against particular state legislation or state action in reference to that subject, the power given is limited by its object, and any legislation by Congress in the matter must necessarily be corrective in its character, adapted to counteract and redress the operation of such prohibited state laws or proceedings of state officers.

If the principles of interpretation which we have laid down are correct, as we deem them to be (and they are in accord with the principles laid down in the cases before referred to, as well as in the recent case of United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629), it is clear that the law in question cannot be sustained by any grant of legislative power made to Congress by the Fourteenth Amendment. That Amendment prohibits the states from denying to any person the equal protection of the laws, and declares that Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of the amendment. The law in question, without any reference to adverse state legislation on the subject, declares that all persons shall be entitled to equal accommodations and privileges of inns, public conveyances, and places of public amusement, and imposes a penalty upon any individual who shall deny to any citizen such equal accommodations and privileges. This is not corrective legislation; it is primary and direct; it takes immediate and absolute possession of the subject of the right of admission to inns, public conveyances, and places of amusement. It supersedes and displaces state legislation on the same subject, or only allows it permissive force. It ignores such legislation, and assumes that the matter is one that belongs to the domain of national regulation. Whether it would not have been a more effective protection of the rights of citizens to have clothed Congress with plenary power over the whole subject, is not now the question. What we have to decide is, whether such plenary power has been conferred upon Congress by the Fourteenth Amendment; and, in our judgment, it has not.

We have discussed the question presented by the law on the assumption that a right to enjoy equal accommodation and privileges in all inns, public conveyances, and places of public amusement, is one of the essential rights of the citizen which no state can abridge or interfere with. Whether it is such a right, or not, is a different question which, in the view we have taken of the validity of the law on the ground already stated, it is not necessary to examine.

We have also discussed the validity of the law in reference to cases arising in the states only; and not in reference to cases arising in the Territories or the District of Columbia, which are subject to the plenary legislation of Congress in every branch of municipal regulation. Whether the law would be a valid one as applied to the Territories and the District is not a question for consideration in the cases before us: they all being cases arising within the limits of states. And whether Congress, in the exercise of its power to regulate commerce amongst the several states, might or might not pass a law regulating rights in public conveyances passing from one state to another, is also a question which is not now before us, as the sections in question are not conceived in any such view.

But the power of Congress to adopt direct and primary, as distinguished from corrective legislation, on the subject in hand, is sought, in the second place, from the Thirteenth Amendment, which abolishes slavery. This Amendment declares "that neither slavery, nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction;" and it gives Congress power to enforce the amendment by appropriate legislation.

This Amendment, as well as the Fourteenth, is undoubtedly self-executing without any ancillary legislation, so far as its terms are applicable to any existing state of circumstances. By its own unaided force and effect it abolished slavery, and established universal freedom. Still, legislation may be necessary and proper to meet all the various cases and circumstances to be affected by it, and to prescribe proper modes of redress for its violation in letter or spirit. And such legislation may be primary and direct in its character; for the Amendment is not a mere prohibition of state laws establishing or upholding slavery, but an absolute declaration that slavery or involuntary servitude shall not exist in any part of the United States. * * *

The Amendments are different, and the powers of Congress under them are different. What Congress has power to do under one, it may not have power to do under the other. Under the Thirteenth Amendment, it has only to do with slavery and its incidents. Under the Fourteenth Amendment, it has power to counteract and render nugatory all state laws and proceedings which have the effect to abridge any of the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, or to deprive them of life, liberty or property without due process of law, or to deny to any of them the equal protection of the laws. Under the Thirteenth Amendment, the legislation, so far as necessary or proper to eradicate all forms and incidents of slavery and involuntary servitude, may be direct and primary, operating upon the acts of individuals, whether sanctioned by state legislation or not; under the Fourteenth, as we have already shown, it must necessarily be, and can only be, corrective in its character, addressed to counteract and afford relief against state regulations or proceedings. * * * The Thirteenth Amendment has respect, not to distinctions of race, or class, or color, but to slavery. * * * It would be running the slavery argument into the ground to make it apply to every act of discrimination which a person may see fit to make as to the guests he will entertain, or as to the people he will take into his coach or cab or car, or admit to his concert or theatre, or deal with in other matters of intercourse or business. Innkeepers and public carriers, by the laws of all states, so far as we are aware, are bound, to the extent of their facilities, to furnish proper accommodation to all unobjectionable persons who in good faith apply for them. If the laws themselves make any unjust discrimination, amenable to the prohibitions of the Fourteenth Amendment, Congress has full power to afford a remedy under that Amendment and in accordance with it. * * *

On the whole we are of opinion, that no countenance of authority for the passage of the law in question can be found in either the Thirteenth or Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution; and no other ground of authority for its passage being suggested, it must necessarily be declared void, at least so far as its operation in the several states is concerned.

[MR. JUSTICE HARLAN wrote a dissenting opinion.]

NOTE

1. In several cases, decided during the period following the adoption of the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution, the Supreme Court considered the constitutionality of various provisions of the federal Civil Rights Acts, and in others it dealt with the question of whether the particular rights claimed to have been violated were granted or secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States.

In United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. ed. 588 (1875) the defendants were indicted for "banding" and "conspiring" together to hinder and prevent Negro citizens from the exercise of certain rights and privileges granted to them under the First, Second, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments. The Supreme Court, affirming a lower court decision arresting judgment entered on a verdict of guilty, found that the counts alleging such interference were objectionable because the rights asserted were not "granted or secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States," within the meaning of the Enforcement Act of 1870. Concerning the alleged violation of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, the court held that the conspiracy provision of the statute did not afford protection unless such violation was on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude. The court said: "When stripped of its verbiage, the case as presented amounts to nothing more than that the defendants conspired to prevent certain citizens of the United States, being within the State of Louisiana, from enjoying the equal protection of the laws of the State and of the United States."

In United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. ed. 563 (1876) a section of the Enforcement Act of 1870, providing punishment for an inspector of election who should wrongfully refuse to receive or count the vote of any Negro citizen, was held invalid because it did not in express terms limit the offense to a wrongful discrimination on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude.

In Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. ed. 676 (1880) the injunction of the Fourteenth Amendment that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws was held to be infringed by a Virginia county judge who excluded Negroes from juries in violation of a specific provision of the Civil Rights Acts, although not authorized to do so by Virginia law. Upon the question whether his act was that of the state, so that he could be punished under the statute, the court said: "A State acts by its legislative, its executive, or its judicial authorities. It can act in no other way. The constitutional provision, therefore, must mean that no agency of the State, or of the officers or agents by whom its powers are exerted, shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. Whoever, by virtue of public position under a State government, deprives another of property, life, or liberty, without due process of law, or denies or takes away the equal protection of the laws, violates the constitutional inhibition; and as he acts in the name and for the State, and is clothed with the State's power, his act is that of the State. This must be so, or the constitutional prohibition has no meaning." To the same effect was Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, 25 L. ed. 664 (1880), where, however, the discrimination was authorized by a West Virginia statute controlling the selection of grand and petit jurors.

In Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 371, 25 L. ed. 717 (1880) provisions of the Civil Rights Acts making it a criminal offense for officers of elections at which representatives in Congress were voted for to violate any duty imposed upon them in regard to such elections by any state or federal law, were upheld under the federal power to control elections conferred by Art. I, § 4, cl. 1.

In United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629, 27 L. ed. 290, 1 Sup. Ct. 601 (1883) a provision of the Civil Rights Acts (popularly known as the Ku Klux Act) making it a criminal offense for two or more persons to conspire or go in disguise upon the highway or upon another's premises for the purpose of depriving any persons of the equal protection of the laws or equal privileges and immunities under the laws, was held invalid on the ground that Congress has no power to punish a private person for invasion of his fellow citizens' rights conferred by the state upon its residents. The court said that as "the section of the law under consideration is directed exclusively against the action of private persons, without reference to the laws of the state or their administration by her officers" it was not warranted by any clause in the Fourteenth Amendment.

On the other hand, in Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S. 651, 28 L. ed. 274, 4 Sup. Ct. 152 (1884), the conviction of private individuals for beating and wounding a Negro while exercising his right to vote for a member of Congress was sustained under the conspiracy provision of the Civil Rights Acts as a valid exercise of the power granted to Congress to enforce the Fifteenth Amendment. The court, through Mr. Justice Miller, said: "The reference to cases in this court in which the power of Congress under the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment has been held to relate alone to acts done under state authority can afford petitioners no aid in the present case. For, while it may be true that acts which are mere invasions of private rights, which acts have no sanctions in the statutes of a state, or which are not committed by any one exercising its authority, are not within the scope of that Amendment, it is quite a different matter when Congress undertakes to protect the citizen in the exercise of rights conferred by the Constitution of the United States, essential to the healthy organization of the government itself."

In United States v. Waddell, 112 U. S. 76, 28 L. ed. 673, 5 Sup. Ct. 35 (1884) the right of a citizen under the Homestead Acts, having made an entry on public land within the limits of a state, to continue to reside on the land for five years, for the purpose of perfecting his title to a patent, was held to be a right dependent on and secured by the laws of the United States, and hence a conspiracy to prevent the exercise of this right was held to be a violation of the conspiracy provision of the Civil Rights Acts.

The conspiracy statute was also held to have been violated in Logan v. United States, 144 U. S. 263, 36 L. ed. 429, 12 Sup. Ct. 617 (1892), where the defendants attacked persons in the custody of a United States marshal, causing the death of some of them. The court held that the right of a person arrested and in custody under a lawful commitment to answer for an offense against the United States to be secure against lawless violence came within the protection of the conspiracy provision as a right created and secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Another violation of the conspiracy statute was held to have been involved in In re Quarles, 158 U. S. 532, 39 L. ed. 1080, 15 Sup. Ct. 959 (1895), where the defendants, private individuals, assaulted and maltreated a citizen because he had informed the appropriate authorities of violations of the federal internal revenue laws. The court said: "The right of a citizen informing of a violation of law, like the right of a prisoner in custody upon a charge of such violation, to be protected against lawless violence, does not depend upon any of the Amendments to the Constitution, but arises out of the creation and establishment by the Constitution itself of a national government, paramount and supreme within its sphere of action." To the same effect is Motes v. United States, 178 U. S. 458, 44 L. ed. 1150, 20 Sup. Ct. 993 (1900).

On the other hand, in Hodges v. United States, 203 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 65, 27 Sup. Ct. 6 (1906), the conspiracy provision was held not to be applicable where individuals were charged with compelling Negro citizens, solely because of their race, by force and intimidation, to desist from performing their contracts of employment. The civil rights statute involved provided that all persons had the same right to make and enforce contracts as was enjoyed by white citizens, and should be subject to like pains, penalties, taxes, licenses and exactions, and to no other. The court held that the Fourteenth Amendment did not justify the legislation, since its prohibitions applied to state action and here no act of state authorities was involved. It was also held that the Thirteenth Amendment afforded no basis for the statute, since that Amendment was a denunciation of the condition of slavery, reaching every race and every individual, and not a declaration in favor of the colored race or an attempt to commit that race to the care of the nation. Justices Harlan and Day dissented.

HOME TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO.
v. LOS ANGELES.Supreme Court of the United States, 1913.
227 U. S. 278, 57 L. ed. 510, 33 Sup. Ct. 312.

[The telephone company filed a bill for an injunction against the city of Los Angeles in the District Court of the United States to restrain enforcement by the city of an ordinance which prescribed telephone rates. The company alleged that the rates prescribed were so low that to enforce compliance with them would deprive it of its property in violation of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The city pleaded to the jurisdiction, asserting that there was a like due process clause in the California state constitution and that if the ordinance was lacking in due process it would be invalid under the state constitution, that in that contingency the ordinance could not be considered "state" action within the prohibition of the Fourteenth Amendment but only the unauthorized act of a state agent, and therefore the plaintiff could not make out a case for relief in a federal court unless upon proceedings had in the state courts the latter should sustain the ordinance as authorized by the state. The District Court sustained the plea and dismissed the bill, and this appeal was taken.]

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

* * *

1. By the proposition the prohibitions and guarantees of the Amendment are addressed to and control the states only in their complete governmental capacity, and as a result give no authority to exert federal judicial power until by the decision of a court of last resort of a state, acts complained of under the Fourteenth Amendment have been held valid and therefore state acts in the fullest sense. To the contrary the provisions of the Amendment as conclusively fixed by previous decisions are generic in their terms, are addressed, of course, to the states, but also to every person whether natural or juridical who is the repository of state power. By this construction the reach of the Amendment is shown to be coextensive with any exercise by a state of power, in whatever form exerted.

2. As previously stated, the proposition relied upon presupposes that the terms of the Fourteenth Amendment reach only acts done by state officers which are within the scope of the power conferred by the state. The proposition hence applies to the prohibitions of the Amendment the law of principal and agent governing contracts between individuals and consequently assumes that no act done by an officer of a state is within the reach of the Amendment unless such act can be held to be the act of the state by the application of such law of agency. In other words, the proposition is that the Amendment deals only with the acts of state officers within the strict scope of the public powers possessed by them and does not include an abuse of power by an officer as the result of a wrong done in excess of the power delegated. Here again the settled construction of the Amendment is that it presupposes the possibility of an abuse by a state officer or representative of the powers possessed and deals with such a contingency. It provides, therefore, for a case where one who is in possession of state power uses that power to the doing of the wrongs which the Amendment forbids even although the consummation of the wrong may not be within the powers possessed, if the commission of the wrong itself is rendered possible or is efficiently aided by the state authority lodged in the wrongdoer. That is to say, the theory of the Amendment is that where an officer or other representative of a state in the exercise of the authority with which he is clothed misuses the power possessed to do a wrong forbidden by the Amendment, inquiry concerning whether the state has authorized the wrong is irrelevant and the federal judicial power is competent to afford redress for the wrong by dealing with the officer and the result of his exertion of power. * * *

[After quoting from Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 313, Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339 and Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356.] In Raymond v. Traction Company, 207 U. S. p. 20, the whole subject—almost in the identical aspect<sup>1</sup> which is here involved—came under consideration. The case concerned the repugnancy to the Fourteenth Amendment of a reassessment made by a state board of equalization, and the suit was originally commenced in a federal court. It was pressed that as the claim of the complainant was in effect that the board in the reassessment had violated an express requirement of the state constitution in that the board had “disobeyed the authentic command of the state by failing to make its valuations in such a way that every person shall pay a tax in proportion to the value of his property,” the act of the subordinate board could not be deemed the act of the state. This contention was held to be unsound and it was decided that even although the act of the board was wrongful from the point of view of the state constitution or law, it was nevertheless an act of a state officer within the intendment of the Fourteenth Amendment. It was pointed out that as the result of the enforcement of the reassessment would be an assertion of state power accomplishing a wrong which the Fourteenth Amendment forbade, the claim of right to prevent such act under the Fourteenth Amendment “constitutes a federal question beyond all controversy.” It was then said (pp. 35-36):

“The state board of equalization is one of the instrumentalities provided by the state for the purpose of raising the public revenue by way of taxation. * * * Acting under the constitution and laws of the state, the board therefore represents the state, and its action is the action of the state. The provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment are not confined to the action of the state through its legislature, or through the executive or judicial authority. Those provisions relate to and cover all the instrumentalities by which the state acts, and so it has been held that, whoever by virtue of public position under a state government, deprives another of any right protected by that amendment against deprivation by the state, violates the constitutional inhibition; and as he acts in the name of the state and for the state, and is clothed with the state's powers, his act is that of the state." * * *

Reversed.

NOTES

1. An earlier decision, Barney v. New York, 193 U. S. 430, 48 L. ed. 737, 24 Sup. Ct. 502 (1904) held that federal courts, in the absence of diversity of citizenship, have no jurisdiction to enjoin state administrative action alleged to contravene the Fourteenth Amendment when such action is prohibited by state law. Although the opinion in the principal case did not expressly overrule the Barney decision, the theory on which that case was decided—that action unauthorized by state law is not state action within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment—was plainly disavowed. In accord with the principal case is Iowa-Des Moines National Bank v. Bennett, 284 U. S. 239, 76 L. ed. 265, 52 Sup. Ct. 133 (1931), holding that a state is responsible for the consequences of the illegal acts of its taxing officers even though done without authority of state law, the court saying: "When a state official, acting under color of state authority, invades, in the course of his duties, a private right secured by the federal Constitution, that right is violated, even if the state officer not only exceeded his authority but disregarded special commands of the state law." Compare Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 52 L. ed. 714, 28 Sup. Ct. 441, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 932, 14 Ann. Cas. 764 (1908), holding that a suit to enjoin a state Attorney-General from enforcing an unconstitutional statute is not a suit against a state prohibited by the Eleventh Amendment, since the officer is stripped of his official or representative character and is subjected to the consequences of his individual conduct. The cases are discussed briefly in Howard, The Supreme Court and State Action Challenged Under the Fourteenth Amendment, 1931-1932, 81 U. of Pa. L. Rev. 505, 528-531 (1933). For more extended analysis of the issues, see Isseks, Jurisdiction of the Lower Federal Courts to Enjoin Unauthorized Action of State Officials, 40 Harv. L. Rev. 969 (1927); James, Federal Equity Jurisdiction to Enjoin Acts of State Officers, 18 Iowa L. Rev. 1 (1932).

2. In Snowden v. Hughes, 321 U. S. 1, 88 L. ed. 497, 64 Sup. Ct. 397 (1944) plaintiff brought suit in a federal court to recover damages for alleged infringement of his civil rights secured by the Fourteenth Amendment and various sections of the Civil Rights Acts by the act of a state primary canvassing board, in violation of state law, in refusing to issue to him a certificate of nomination for a state office, although he had received a sufficient number of votes to entitle him thereto. The court held (Justices Douglas and Murphy dissenting) that since the allegations of the complaint failed to show an intentional or purposeful discrimination in the administration of state law they were insufficient to raise any issue of equal protection of the laws. The court thus found it "unnecessary to consider whether the action by the state board of which petitioner complains is state action within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment." In a concurring opinion Mr. Justice Frankfurter expressed the view that Barney v. New York, supra, was controlling and said that he was "unable to grasp the principle on which the state can here be said to deny the plaintiff the equal protection of the laws of the state when the foundation of his claim is that the board has disobeyed the authentic command of the state." He continued: "I am clear, therefore, that the action of the canvassing board taken, as the plaintiff himself acknowledges, in defiance of the duty of that board under Illinois law, cannot be deemed the action of the state, certainly not until the highest court of the state confirms such action and thereby makes it the law of the state."

WILLIAMS v. UNITED STATES.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1951.
341 U. S. 97, 95 L. ed. 774, 71 Sup. Ct. 576.

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS delivered the opinion of the Court.

The question in this case is whether a special police officer who in his official capacity subjects a person suspected of crime to force and violence in order to obtain a confession may be prosecuted under § 20 of the Criminal Code, 18 U. S. C. (1946 ed.) § 52.

Section 20 provides in pertinent part:

"Whoever, under color of any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom, willfully subjects, or causes to be subjected, any inhabitant of any State, Territory, or District to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured or protected by the Constitution and laws of the United States, * * *, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both."

The facts are these: The Lindsley Lumber Co. suffered numerous thefts and hired petitioner, who operated a detective agency, to ascertain the identity of the thieves. Petitioner held a special police officer's card issued by the City of Miami, Florida and had taken an oath and qualified as a special police officer. Petitioner and others over a period of three days took four men to a paint shack on the company's premises and used brutal methods to obtain a confession from each of them. A rubber hose, a pistol, a blunt instrument, a sash cord and other implements were used in the project. One man was forced to look at a bright light for fifteen minutes; when he was blinded, he was repeatedly hit with a rubber hose and a sash cord and finally knocked to the floor. Another was knocked from a chair and hit in the stomach again and again. He was put back in the chair and the procedure was repeated. One was backed against the wall and jammed in the chest with a club. Each was beaten, threatened, and unmercifully punished for several hours until he confessed. One Ford, a policeman, was sent by his superior to lend authority to the proceedings. And petitioner, who committed the assaults, went about flashing his badge.

The indictment charged among other things that petitioner acting under color of law used force to make each victim confess to his guilt and implicate others, and that the victims were denied the right to be tried by due process of law and if found guilty to be sentenced and punished in accordance with the laws of the state. Petitioner was found guilty by a jury under instructions which conformed with the rulings of the Court in Screws v. United States, 325 U. S. 91. The Court of Appeals affirmed. 179 F. 2d 656. The case, which is a companion to No. 26, United States v. Williams, 341 U. S. 70, and No. 134, United States v. Williams, decided this day, 341 U. S. 58, is here on certiorari.

We think it clear that petitioner was acting "under color" of law within the meaning of § 20, or at least that the jury could properly so find. We interpreted this phrase of § 20 in United States v. Classic, 313 U. S. 299, 326, "Misuse of power, possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because the wrongdoer is clothed with the authority of state law, is action taken 'under color of' state law." And see Screws v. United States, supra. It is common practice, as we noted in National Labor Relations Board v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. 331 U. S. 416, 429, for private guards or detectives to be vested with policemen's powers. We know from the record that that is the policy of Miami, Florida. Moreover, this was an investigation conducted under the aegis of the state, as evidenced by the fact that a regular police officer was detailed to attend it. We need go no further to conclude that the lower court to whom we give deference on local law matters, see Gardner v. New Jersey, 329 U. S. 565, 583, was correct in holding that petitioner was no mere interloper but had a semblance of policeman's power from Florida. There was, therefore, evidence that he acted under authority of Florida law; and the manner of his conduct of the interrogations makes clear that he was asserting the authority granted him and not acting in the role of a private person. In any event the charge to the jury drew the line between official and unofficial conduct which we explored in Screws v. United States, supra, and gave petitioner all of the protection which "color of" law as used in § 20 offers.

The main contention is that the application of § 20 so as to sustain a conviction for obtaining a confession by use of force and violence is unconstitutional. The argument is the one that a clear majority of the Court rejected in Screws v. United States, and runs as follows:

Criminal statutes must have an ascertainable standard of guilt or they fall for vagueness. See United States v. L. Cohen Grocery Co., 255 U. S. 81; Winters v. New York, 333 U. S. 507. Section 20, it is argued, lacks the necessary specificity when rights under the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment are involved. We are pointed to the course of decisions by this Court under the Due Process Clause as proof of the vague and fluid standard for "rights, privileges, or immunities secured or protected by the Constitution" as used in § 20. We are referred to decisions where we have been closely divided on whether state action violated due process. More specifically we are cited many instances where the Court has been conspicuously in disagreement on the illegal character of confessions under the Due Process Clause. If the Court cannot agree as to what confessions violate the Fourteenth Amendment, how can one who risks criminal prosecutions for his acts be sure of the standard? Thus it is sought to show that police officers such as petitioner walk on ground far too treacherous for criminal responsibility.

Many criminal statutes might be extended to circumstances so extreme as to make their application unconstitutional. Conversely, as we held in Screws v. United States, a close construction will often save an act from vagueness that is fatal. The present case is as good an illustration as any. It is as plain as a pikestaff that the present confessions would not be allowed in evidence whatever the school of thought concerning the scope and meaning of the Due Process Clause. This is the classic use of force to make a man testify against himself. The result is as plain as if the rack, the wheel, and the thumb screw—the ancient methods of securing evidence by torture * * * were used to compel the confession. Some day the application of § 20 to less obvious methods of coercion may be presented and doubts as to the adequacy of the standard of guilt may be presented. There may be a similar doubt when an officer is tried under § 20 for beating a man to death. That was a doubt stirred in the Screws Case; and it was the reason we held that the purpose must be plain, the deprivation of the constitutional right willful. But where police take matters in their own hands, seize victims, beat and pound them until they confess, there cannot be the slightest doubt that the police have deprived the victim of a right under the Constitution. It is the right of the accused to be tried by a legally constituted court, not by a kangaroo court. Hence when officers wring confessions from the accused by force and violence, they violate some of the most fundamental, basic, and well established constitutional rights which every citizen enjoys. Petitioner and his associates acted willfully and purposely; their aim was precisely to deny the protection that the Constitution affords. It was an arrogant and brutal deprivation of rights which the Constitution specifically guarantees. Section 20 would be denied the high service for which it was designed if rights so palpably plain were denied its protection. Only casuistry could make vague and nebulous what our constitutional scheme makes so clear and specific.

An effort, however, is made to free Williams by an extremely technical construction of the indictment and charge, so as to condemn the application of § 20 on the grounds of vagueness.

The indictment charged that petitioners deprived designated persons of rights and privileges secured to them by the Fourteenth Amendment. These deprivations were defined in the indictment to include "illegal" assault and battery. But the meaning of these rights in the context of the indictment was plain, viz. immunity from the use of force and violence to obtain a confession. Thus count 2 of the indictment charges that the Fourteenth Amendment rights of one Purnell were violated in the following respects:

"* * * the right and privilege not to be deprived of liberty without due process of law, the right and privilege to be secure in his person while in the custody of the State of Florida, the right and privilege not to be subjected to punishment without due process of law, the right and privilege to be immune, while in the custody of persons acting under color of the laws of the State of Florida, from illegal assault and battery by any person exercising the authority of said State, and the right and privilege to be tried by due process of law and if found guilty to be sentenced and punished in accordance with the laws of the State of Florida; that is to say, on or about the 28th day of March, 1947, the defendants arrested and detained and caused to be arrested and detained the said Frank J. Purnell, Jr., and brought and caused him to be brought to and into a certain building sometimes called a shack on the premises of the Lindsley Lumber Co., at or near 3810 N. W. 17th Avenue, in said City of Miami, Florida, and did there detain the said Frank J. Purnell, Jr., and while he was so detained the defendants did then and there illegally strike, bruise, batter, beat, assault and torture the said Frank J. Purnell, Jr., in order illegally to coerce and force the said Frank J. Purnell, Jr., to make an admission and confession of his guilt in connection with the alleged theft of personal property, alleged to be the property of said Lindsley Lumber Co., and in order illegally to coerce and force the said Frank J. Purnell, Jr., to name and accuse other persons as participants in alleged thefts of personal property, alleged to be the property of the said Lindsley Lumber Co., and for the purpose of imposing illegal summary punishment upon the said Frank J. Purnell, Jr."

The trial judge in his charge to the jury summarized Count 2 as meaning that the defendants beat Purnell "for the purpose of forcing him to make a confession and for the purpose of imposing illegal summary punishment upon him." It further made clear in its charge that the defendants were "not here on trial for a violation of any law of the State of Florida for assault" nor "for assault under any laws of the United States." There cannot be the slightest doubt from the reading of the indictment and charge as a whole that the defendants were charged with and tried for one of the most brutal deprivations of constitutional rights that can be imagined. It therefore strains at technicalities to say that any issue of vagueness of § 20 as construed and applied is present in the case. Our concern is to see that substantial justice is done, not to search the record for possible errors which will defeat the great purpose of Congress in enacting § 20.

Affirmed.

[MR. JUSTICE BLACK dissented. MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, MR. JUSTICE JACKSON and MR. JUSTICE MINTON dissented for the reasons set forth in the dissent in Screws v. United States.]

NOTES

1. As indicated in the above opinion, the proposition that acts of a state officer in violation of a state law may violate the Fourteenth Amendment and thus subject the officer to criminal prosecution and punishment in the federal courts had previously been reconsidered and reaffirmed in Screws v. United States, 325 U. S. 91, 89 L. ed. 1495, 65 Sup. Ct. 1031, 162 A. L. R. 1330 (1945), where state police officers were convicted of violating the same statute (§ 20 of the Criminal Code, now 18 U. S. C. § 242; F. C. A. 18 § 242) as was before the court in the principal case. Screws, sheriff in a Georgia county, aided by a deputy and a policeman, arrested Hall, a Negro, for the alleged theft of a tire. There was evidence that Screws had a grudge against Hall and threatened to "get" him. The three officers handcuffed the prisoner, took him from his home at night to the courthouse square and there began beating him with their fists and with a solid-bar blackjack until he became unconscious. He was then dragged feet first through the courthouse yard into the jail and thrown upon the floor dying. An ambulance was called and Hall was removed to a hospital, where he died within the hour and without regaining consciousness. The indictment charged that the three officers, acting under color of the laws of Georgia, "willfully" caused Hall to be deprived of rights, privileges, or immunities secured to him by the Fourteenth Amendment: the right not to be deprived of life without due process of law; the right to be tried, upon the charge on which he was arrested, by due process of law and if found guilty to be punished in accordance with the laws of Georgia. Although the Supreme Court reversed and remanded for a new trial, a majority (speaking through Mr. Justice Douglas, with Mr. Justice Rutledge concurring specially in the result) agreed that the federal statute could validly be applied to fact situations of the type presented. In answer to the contention that the statute was unconstitutional because of vagueness in the standard of guilt it set up, the court held that the word "willfully" made the statute sufficiently specific by requiring that a defendant convicted under it must be shown to have had a specific intent to deprive a person of a federal constitutional right. Since this issue was not submitted to the jury, a new trial was ordered (at which, incidentally, Screws was acquitted). On the question of state action the court held that defendants acted under "color" of law in making the arrest of Hall and assaulting him. Mr. Justice Douglas said: "Here the state officers were authorized to make an arrest and to take such steps as were necessary to make the arrest effective. They acted without authority only in the sense that they used excessive force in making the arrest effective. It is clear that under 'color' of law means under 'pretense' of law. Thus acts of officers in the ambit of their personal pursuits are plainly excluded. Acts of officers who undertake to perform their official duties are included whether they hew to the line of their authority or overstep it. If, as suggested, the statute was designed to embrace only action which the state in fact authorized, the words 'under color of any law' were hardly apt words to express the idea." Mr. Justice Murphy, dissenting, thought that the judgment should be affirmed, since evidence of defendants' guilt was clear and the statute unmistakably outlaws such lawless action by state officers. Justices Roberts, Frankfurter and Jackson, dissenting, thought that the statute should be confined to attempted deprivations of federal rights by state law and not extended to cover clear violations of state law by its officials. They said: "Of course the petitioners are punishable. The only issue is whether Georgia alone has the power and duty to punish, or whether this patently local crime can be made the basis of a federal prosecution." The several opinions are analyzed and criticized in Cohen, The Screws Case: Federal Protection of Negro Rights, 46 Col. L. Rev. 94 (1946), and Comment, 44 Mich. L. Rev. 814 (1946). For a general discussion see Hale, Unconstitutional Acts as Federal Crimes, 60 Harv. L. Rev. 65 (1946).

2. In United States v. Williams, 341 U. S. 70, 95 L. ed. 758, 71 Sup. Ct. 581 (1951), a companion case to the principal case, the same defendant, two of his employees and the police officer detailed to assist him were convicted in a federal court for violation of § 19 of the Criminal Code (now 18 U. S. C. § 241; F. C. A. 18 § 241), which prohibits a conspiracy to injure a citizen in the free enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution. Mr. Justice Frankfurter, announcing the judgment of the court in an opinion in which Chief Justice Vinson and Justices Jackson and Minton joined, took the view that the conspiracy provision covers only conduct which interferes with rights which arise from the relation of the victim and the federal government, and not to interference by state officers with rights which the federal government merely guarantees from abridgment by the states. Mr. Justice Black concurred in the result and Justices Douglas, Reed, Burton and Clark dissented. The dissenting opinion said: "One would indeed have to strain hard at words to find any difference of substance between 'any right or privilege secured' by the Constitution or laws of the United States (§ 19) and 'any rights, privileges, or immunities secured or protected by the Constitution and laws of the United States' (§ 20). If § 20 embraces a broader range of rights than § 19, it must be because it includes 'immunities' as well as 'rights' and 'privileges' and 'protects' them as well as 'secures' them. When no major difference between §§ 19 and 20 is apparent from the words themselves, it is strange to hear it said that though § 20 extends to rights guaranteed against state action by the Fourteenth Amendment, § 19 is limited to rights which the federal government can secure against invasion by private persons. The division of powers between state and nation is so inherent in our republican form of government and so well established throughout our history that if Congress had desired to draw a distinction along that line, it is hard to imagine that it would not have made its purpose clear in the language used." Since Mr. Justice Black's concurrence in the result was on the ground that a prior conviction of one of the defendants and an acquittal of the others of the substantive charge under § 20 barred their further prosecution on the conspiracy charge under § 19, it is clear that the eight justices who expressed themselves were equally divided on the issue of the extent of the protection afforded by the conspiracy provision in fact situations of this type.

3. For the view that inaction by state officers constitutes a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, see Catlette v. United States, 132 F. (2d) 902 (C. C. A. 4th 1943), where the conviction of a sheriff was affirmed for failing to protect persons from mob violence in the exercise of their constitutional rights, the court saying that "culpable official state inaction may constitute a denial of equal protection." This proposition affords the primary constitutional underpinning for the proposed federal Anti-Lynching Act, which would impose criminal and civil liability upon state officers for their failure to prevent or punish lynching. See Note, Constitutionality of Proposed Federal Anti-Lynching Legislation, 34 Va. L. Rev. 944 (1948); Comment, Federal Power to Prosecute Violence Against Minority Groups, 57 Yale L. J. 855 (1948).

4. Generally speaking, the federal Civil Rights Acts have not played an effective part in the enforcement of the prohibitions of the Fourteenth Amendment. The usual recourse of the individual has been to defend in court state action alleged to offend its guarantees or, where possible, to prevent such action through the use of the injunction. Only in recent years have more concerted efforts been made by federal authorities to afford protection by intervening in situations where state and local authorities have seemed unable or unwilling to take effective action. In 1939 a Civil Rights Section was established in the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice to "direct, supervise and conduct prosecutions of violations of the provisions of the Constitution or Acts of Congress guaranteeing civil rights to individuals." For a review of this program, see Carr, Federal Protection of Civil Rights (1947). See also, Putzel, Federal Civil Rights Enforcement: A Current Appraisal, 99 U. of Pa. L. Rev. 439 (1951); Gressman, The Unhappy History of Civil Rights Legislation, 50 Mich. L. Rev. 1323 (1952). The arguments in support of the proposal that the national government should assume leadership in a program to secure better enforcement of civil rights are carefully marshalled in the report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights. See, To Secure These Rights—The Report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights (U. S. Government Printing Office, 1947). Those opposed to such a course of action, whether in the form of additional legislation or otherwise, argue that under our federal system the states must continue to assume primary responsibility for the enforcement of civil rights and contend that the hostility of communities where violations occur often defeats attempted federal law enforcement.

COLLINS v. HARDYMAN.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1951.
341 U. S. 651, 95 L. ed. 1253, 71 Sup. Ct. 937.

MR. JUSTICE JACKSON delivered the opinion of the Court.

This controversy arises under 8 U. S. C. § 47(3) [F. C. A. 8 § 47 (3)], which provides civil remedies for certain conspiracies. A motion to dismiss the amended complaint raises the issue of its sufficiency and, of course, requires us to accept its well-pleaded facts as the hypothesis for decision.

Its essential allegations are that plaintiffs are citizens of the United States, residents of California, and members or officers of a voluntary association or political club organized for the purpose of participating in the election of officers of the United States, petitioning the national government for redress of grievances, and engaging in public meetings for the discussion of national public issues. It planned a public meeting for November 14, 1947, on the subject, "The Cominform and the Marshall Plan," at which it was intended to adopt a resolution opposing said Marshall Plan, to be forwarded, by way of a petition for the redress of grievances, to appropriate federal officials.

The conspiracy charged as being within the Act is that defendants, with knowledge of the meeting and its purposes, entered into an agreement to deprive the plaintiffs, "as citizens of the United States, of the privileges and immunities as citizens of the United States, of the rights peaceably to assemble for the purpose of discussing and communicating upon national public issues * * *." And further, "to deprive the plaintiffs as well as the members of the said club as citizens of the United States, of equal privileges and immunities under the laws of the United States * * *." This is amplified by allegations that defendants knew of many public meetings in the locality, at which resolutions were adopted by groups with whose opinions defendants agreed, and with which defendants did not interfere or conspire to interfere. "With respect to the meeting aforesaid on November 14, 1947, however, the defendants conspired to interfere with said meeting for the reason that the defendants opposed the views of the plaintiffs * * *.”

* * *

The complaint then separately sets out the overt acts of injury and damage relied upon to meet the requirements of the Act. To carry out the conspiracy, it is alleged that defendants proceeded to the meeting place and, by force and threats of force, did assault and intimidate plaintiffs and those present at the meeting and thereby broke up the meeting, thus interfering with the right of the plaintiffs to petition the Government for redress of grievances. Both compensatory and punitive damages are demanded.

It is averred that the cause of action arises under the statute cited and under the Constitution of the United States. But apparently the draftsman was scrupulously cautious not to allege that it arose under the Fourteenth Amendment, or that defendants had conspired to deprive plaintiffs of rights secured by that Amendment, thus seeking to avoid the effect of earlier decisions of this Court in Fourteenth Amendment cases.

The complaint makes no claim that the conspiracy or the overt acts involved any action by state officials, or that defendants even pretended to act under color of state law. It is not shown that defendants had or claimed any protection or immunity from the law of the State, or that they in fact enjoyed such because of any act or omission by state authorities. Indeed, the trial court found that the acts alleged are punishable under the laws of California relating to disturbance of the peace, assault, and trespass, and are also civilly actionable.

The District Judge held that the statute does not and cannot constitutionally afford redress for invasions of civil rights at the hands of individuals, but can only be applied to injuries to civil rights by persons acting pursuant to or under color of state law. In reversing the District Court's dismissal of the complaint, the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit held otherwise, one judge dissenting. The Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, in Love v. Chandler, 124 F. (2d) 785, has ruled in accord with the District Judge and the dissenting Court of Appeals Judge here. To resolve the conflict, we granted certiorari.

This statutory provision has long been dormant. It was introduced into the federal statutes by the Act of April 20, 1871, entitled, "An Act to enforce the Provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and for other Purposes." The Act was among the last of the reconstruction legislation to be based on the "conquered province" theory which prevailed in Congress for a period following the Civil War. This statute, without separability provisions, established the civil liability with which we are here concerned as well as other civil liabilities, together with parallel criminal liabilities. It also provided that unlawful combinations and conspiracies named in the Act might be deemed rebellions, and authorized the President to employ the militia to suppress them. The President was also authorized to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus. It prohibited any person from being a federal grand or petit juror in any case arising under the Act unless he took and subscribed an oath in open court "that he has never, directly or indirectly, counselled, advised, or voluntarily aided any such combination or conspiracy." Heavy penalties and liabilities were laid upon any person who, with knowledge of such conspiracies, aided them or failed to do what he could to suppress them.

The Act, popularly known as the Ku Klux Act, was passed by a partisan vote in a highly inflamed atmosphere. It was preceded by spirited debate which pointed out its grave character and susceptibility to abuse, and its defects were soon realized when its execution brought about a severe reaction.

The provision establishing criminal conspiracies in language indistinguishable from that used to describe civil conspiracies came to judgment in United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629. It was held unconstitutional. This decision was in harmony with that of other important decisions during that period by a Court, every member of which had been appointed by Presidents Lincoln, Grant, Hayes, Garfield or Arthur—all indoctrinated in the cause which produced the Fourteenth Amendment, but convinced that it was not to be used to centralize power so as to upset the federal system.

While we have not been in agreement as to the interpretation and application of some of the post-Civil War legislation, the Court recently unanimously declared, through the Chief Justice:

"Since the decision of this Court in the Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 3, the principle has become firmly embedded in our constitutional law that the action inhibited by the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment is only such action as may fairly be said to be that of the States. That Amendment erects no shield against merely private conduct, however discriminatory or wrongful." * * *

It is apparent that, if this complaint meets the requirements of this Act, it raises constitutional problems of the first magnitude that, in the light of history, are not without difficulty. These would include issues as to congressional power under and apart from the Fourteenth Amendment, the reserved power of the States, the content of rights derived from national as distinguished from state citizenship, and the question of separability of the Act in its application to those two classes of rights. The latter question was long ago decided adversely to the plaintiffs. Baldwin v. Franks, 120 U. S. 678. Before we embark upon such a constitutional inquiry, it is necessary to satisfy ourselves that the attempt to allege a cause of action within the purview of the statute has been successful.

The section under which this action is brought falls into two divisions. The forepart defines conspiracies that may become the basis of liability, and the latter portion defines overt acts necessary to consummate the conspiracy as an actionable wrong. While a mere unlawful agreement or conspiracy may be made a federal crime, as it was at common law, this statute does not make the mere agreement or understanding for concerted action which constitutes the forbidden conspiracy an actionable wrong unless it matures into some action that inflicts injury. That, we think, is the significance of the second division of the section.

The provision with reference to the overt act will bear repeating, with emphasis supplied: "* * * [I]n any case of conspiracy set forth in this section, if one or more persons engaged therein do, or cause to be done, any act in furtherance of the object of such conspiracy, whereby another is injured in his person or property, or deprived of having and exercising any right or privilege of a citizen of the United States, the party so injured or deprived may have an action for the recovery of damages * * *."

In the light of the dictum in United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 552, we assume, without deciding, that the facts pleaded show that defendants did deprive plaintiffs "of having and exercising" a federal right which, provided the defendants were engaged in a "conspiracy set forth in this section," would bring the case within the Act.

The "conspiracy" required is differently stated from the required overt act and we think the difference is not accidental but significant. Its essentials, with emphasis supplied, are that two or more persons must conspire (1) for the purpose of depriving any person or class of persons of the equal protection of the laws, or of equal privileges and immunities under the law; or (2) for the purpose of preventing or hindering the constituted authorities from giving or securing to all persons the equal protection of the laws; or (3) to prevent by force, intimidation, or threat, any citizen entitled to vote from giving his support or advocacy in a legal manner toward election of an elector for President or a member of Congress; or (4) to injure any citizen in person or property on account of such support or advocacy. There is no claim that any allegation brings this case within the provisions that we have numbered (2), (3), and (4), so we may eliminate any consideration of those categories. The complaint is within the statute only if it alleges a conspiracy of the first described class. It is apparent that this part of the Act defines conspiracies of a very limited character. They must, we repeat, be "for the purpose of depriving * * * of the equal protection of the laws, or of equal privileges and immunities under the laws." (Italics supplied.)

Passing the argument, fully developed in the Civil Rights Cases, that an individual or group of individuals not in office cannot deprive anybody of constitutional rights, though they may invade or violate those rights, it is clear that this statute does not attempt to reach a conspiracy to deprive one of rights, unless it is a deprivation of equality, of "equal protection of the laws," or of "equal privileges and immunities under the laws." That accords with the purpose of the Act to put the lately freed Negro on an equal footing before the law with his former master. The Act apparently deemed that adequate and went no further.

What we have here is not a conspiracy to affect in any way these plaintiffs' equality of protection by the law, or their equality of privileges and immunities under the law. There is not the slightest allegation that defendants were conscious of or trying to influence the law, or were endeavoring to obstruct or interfere with it. The only inequality suggested is that the defendants broke up plaintiffs' meeting and did not break up meetings of others with whose sentiments they agreed. To be sure, this is not equal injury, but it is no more a deprivation of "equal protection" or of "equal privileges and immunities" than it would be for one to assault one neighbor without assaulting them all, or to libel some persons without mention of others. Such private discrimination is not inequality before the law unless there is some manipulation of the law or its agencies to give sanction or sanctuary for doing so. Plaintiffs' rights were certainly invaded, disregarded and lawlessly violated, but neither their rights nor their equality of rights under the law have been, or were intended to be, denied or impaired. Their rights under the laws and to protection of the laws remain untouched and equal to the rights of every other Californian, and may be vindicated in the same way and with the same effect as those of any other citizen who suffers violence at the hands of a mob.

We do not say that no conspiracy by private individuals could be of such magnitude and effect as to work a deprivation of equal protection of the laws, or of equal privileges and immunities under laws. Indeed, the post Civil War Ku Klux Klan, against which this Act was fashioned, may have, or may reasonably have been thought to have, done so. It is estimated to have had a membership of around 550,000, and thus to have included "nearly the entire adult male white population of the South." It may well be that a conspiracy, so far-flung and embracing such numbers, with a purpose to dominate and set at naught the "carpetbag" and "scalawag" governments of the day, was able effectively to deprive Negroes of their legal rights and to close all avenues of redress or vindication, in view of the then disparity of position, education and opportunity between them and those who made up the Ku Klux Klan. We do not know. But here nothing of that sort appears. We have a case of a lawless political brawl, precipitated by a handful of white citizens against other white citizens. California courts are open to plaintiffs and its laws offer redress for their injury and vindication for their rights.

We say nothing of the power of Congress to authorize such civil actions as respondents have commenced or otherwise to redress such grievances as they assert. We think that Congress has not, in the narrow class of conspiracies defined by this statute, included the conspiracy charged here. We therefore reach no constitutional questions. The facts alleged fall short of a conspiracy to alter, impair or deny equality of rights under the law, though they do show a lawless invasion of rights for which there are remedies in the law of California. It is not for this Court to compete with Congress or attempt to replace it as the Nation's law-making body.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals is reversed.      Reversed.

MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS dissents.

MR. JUSTICE BURTON, with whom MR. JUSTICE BLACK and MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS concur, dissenting.

I cannot agree that the respondents in their complaint have failed to state a cause of action under R. S. § 1980(3), 8 U. S. C. § 47(3) [F. C. A. 8 § 47(3)].

The right alleged to have been violated is the right to petition the Federal Government for a redress of grievances. This right is expressly recognized by the First Amendment and this Court has said that "The very idea of a government, republican in form, implies a right on the part of its citizens to meet peaceably for consultation in respect to public affairs and to petition for a redress of grievances." United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 552, and see In re Quarles and Butler, 158 U. S. 532, 535. The source of the right in this case is not the Fourteenth Amendment. The complaint alleges that petitioners "knowingly" did not interfere with the "many public meetings" whose objectives they agreed with, but that they did conspire to break up respondents' meeting because petitioners were opposed to respondents' views, which were expected to be there expressed. Such conduct does not differ materially from the specific conspiracies which the Court recognizes that the statute was intended to reach.

The language of the statute refutes the suggestion that action under color of state law is a necessary ingredient of the cause of action which it recognizes. R. S. § 1980(3) speaks of "two or more persons in any State or Territory" conspiring. That clause is not limited to state officials. Still more obviously, where the section speaks of persons going "in disguise on the highway * * * for the purpose of depriving * * * any person or class of persons of the equal protection of the laws," it certainly does not limit its reference to actions of that kind by state officials. When Congress, at this period, did intend to limit comparable civil rights legislation to action under color of state law, it said so in unmistakable terms. In fact, R. S. § 1980(3) originally was § 2 of the Act of April 20, 1871, and § 1 of that same Act said "That any person who, under color of any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage of any State, shall subject * * * any person within the jurisdiction of the United States to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution of the United States, shall * * * be liable to the party injured * * * ." (Emphasis added.) 17 Stat. 13.

Congress certainly has the power to create a federal cause of action in favor of persons injured by private individuals through the abridgment of federally created constitutional rights. It seems to me that Congress has done just this in R. S. § 1980(3). This is not inconsistent with the principle underlying the Fourteenth Amendment. That amendment prohibits the respective states from making laws abridging the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States or denying to any person within the jurisdiction of a state the equal protection of the laws. Cases holding that those clauses are directed only at state action are not authority for the contention that Congress may not pass laws supporting rights which exist apart from the Fourteenth Amendment.

Accordingly, I would affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeals.

NOTE

1. The federal cases involving liability in damages under 8 U. S. C. § 47; F. C. A. § 47 for conspiring to deprive a person of his civil rights are collected in 95 L. ed. 1261 (1951).

NORRIS v. ALABAMA.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1935.
294 U. S. 587, 79 L. ed. 1074, 55 Sup. Ct. 579.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE HUGHES delivered the opinion of the Court.

Petitioner, Clarence Norris, is one of nine negro boys who were indicted in March, 1931, in Jackson County, Alabama, for the crime of rape. On being brought to trial in that county, eight were convicted. The Supreme Court of Alabama reversed the conviction of one of these and affirmed that of seven, including Norris. This Court reversed the judgments of conviction upon the ground that the defendants had been denied due process of law in that the trial court had failed in the light of the circumstances disclosed, and of the inability of the defendants at that time to obtain counsel, to make an effective appointment of counsel to aid them in preparing and presenting their defense. Powell v. Alabama, 287 U. S. 45.

After the remand, a motion for change of venue was granted and the cases were transferred to Morgan County. Norris was brought to trial in November, 1933. At the outset, a motion was made on his behalf to quash the indictment upon the ground of the exclusion of negroes from juries in Jackson County where the indictment was found. A motion was also made to quash the trial venire in Morgan County upon the ground of the exclusion of negroes from juries in that county. In relation to each county, the charge was of long-continued, systematic, and arbitrary exclusion of qualified negro citizens from service on juries, solely because of their race and color, in violation of the Constitution of the United States. The state joined issue on this charge and after hearing the evidence, which we shall presently review, the trial judge denied both motions, and exception was taken. The trial then proceeded and resulted in the conviction of Norris who was sentenced to death. On appeal, the Supreme Court of the state considered and decided the federal question which Norris had raised and affirmed the judgment. We grant a writ of certiorari. 293 U. S. 552.

First. There is no controversy as to the constitutional principle involved. That principle, long since declared, was not challenged, but was expressly recognized, by the Supreme Court of the state. Summing up precisely the effect of earlier decisions, this Court thus stated the principle in Carter v. Texas, 177 U. S. 442, 447, in relation to exclusion from service on grand juries: "Whenever by any action of a state, whether through its Legislature, through its courts, or through its executive or administrative officers, all persons of the African race are excluded, solely because of their race or color, from serving as grand jurors in the criminal prosecution of a person of the African race, the equal protection of the laws is denied to him, contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 397; Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 565." This statement was repeated in the same terms in Rogers v. Alabama, 192 U. S. 226, 231, and again in Martin v. Texas, 200 U. S. 316, 319. The principle is equally applicable to a similar exclusion of negroes from service on petit juries. Strauder v. West Virginia, supra; Martin v. Texas, supra. And although the state statute defining the qualifications of jurors may be fair on its face, the constitutional provision affords protection against action of the state through its administrative officers in effecting the prohibited discrimination. Neal v. Delaware, supra; Carter v. Texas, supra. Compare Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 313, 322, 323; In re Wood, 140 U. S. 278, 285; Thomas v. Texas, 212 U. S. 278, 282, 283.

The question is of the application of this established principle to the facts disclosed by the record. That the question is one of fact does not relieve us of the duty to determine whether in truth a federal right has been denied. When a federal right has been specially set up and claimed in a state court, it is our province to inquire not merely whether it was denied in express terms but also whether it was denied in substance and effect. If this requires an examination of evidence, that examination must be made. Otherwise, review by this Court would fail of its purpose in safeguarding constitutional rights. Thus, whenever a conclusion of law of a state court as to a federal right and findings of fact are so intermingled that the latter control the former, it is incumbent upon us to analyze the facts in order that the appropriate enforcement of the federal right may be assured. * * *

Second. The evidence on the motion to quash the indictment. In 1930, the total population of Jackson County, where the indictment was found, was 36,881, of whom 2,688 were negroes. The male population over twenty-one years of age numbered 8,801, and of these 666 were negroes.

The qualifications of jurors were thus prescribed by the state statute (Alabama Code 1923, § 8603): "The jury commission shall place on the jury roll and in the jury box the names of all male citizens of the county who are generally reputed to be honest and intelligent men, and are esteemed in the community for their integrity, good character and sound judgment, but no person must be selected who is under twenty-one or over sixty-five years of age, or, who is an habitual drunkard, or who, being afflicted with a permanent disease or physical weakness is unfit to discharge the duties of a juror, or who cannot read English, or who has ever been convicted of any offense involving moral turpitude. If a person cannot read English and has all the other qualifications prescribed herein and is a freeholder or householder, his name may be placed on the jury roll and in the jury box." See Gen. Acts Alabama 1931, No. 47, p. 59, § 14.

Defendant adduced evidence to support the charge of unconstitutional discrimination in the actual administration of the statute in Jackson County. The testimony, as the state court said, tended to show that "in a long number of years no negro had been called for jury service in that county." It appeared that no negro had served on any grand or petit jury in that county within the memory of witnesses who had lived there all their lives. Testimony to that effect was given by men whose ages ran from fifty to seventy-six years. Their testimony was uncontradicted. It was supported by the testimony of officials. The clerk of the jury commission and the clerk of the circuit court had never known of a negro serving on a grand jury in Jackson County. The court reporter, who had not missed a session in that county in twenty-four years, and two jury commissioners testified to the same effect. One of the latter, who was a member of the commission which made up the jury roll for the grand jury which found the indictment, testified that he had "never known of a single instance where any negro sat on any grand or petit jury in the entire history of that county."

That testimony in itself made out a prima facie case of the denial of the equal protection which the Constitution guarantees. See Neal v. Delaware, supra. The case thus made was supplemented by direct testimony that specified negroes, thirty or more in number, were qualified for jury service. Among these were negroes who were members of school boards, or trustees, of colored schools, and property owners and householders. It also appeared that negroes from that county had been called for jury service in the federal court. Several of those who were thus described as qualified were witnesses. While there was testimony which cast doubt upon the qualifications of some of the negroes who had been named, and there was also general testimony by the editor of a local newspaper who gave his opinion as to the lack of "sound judgment" of the "good negroes" in Jackson County, we think that the definite testimony as to the actual qualifications of individual negroes, which was not met by any testimony equally direct, showed that there were negroes in Jackson County qualified for jury service.

The question arose whether names of negroes were in fact on the jury roll. The books containing the jury roll for Jackson County for the year 1930-31 were produced. They were produced from the custody of a member of the jury commission which, in 1931, had succeeded the commission which had made up the jury roll from which the grand jury in question had been drawn. On the pages of this roll appeared the names of six negroes. They were entered, respectively, at the end of the precinct lists which were alphabetically arranged. The genuineness of these entries was disputed. It appeared that after the jury roll in question had been made up, and after the new jury commission had taken office, one of the new commissioners directed the new clerk to draw lines after the names which had been placed on the roll by the preceding commission. These lines, on the pages under consideration, were red lines, and the clerk of the old commission testified that they were not put in by him. The entries made by the new clerk, for the new jury roll, were below these lines.

The names of the six negroes were in each instance written immediately above the red lines. An expert of long experience testified that these names were superimposed upon the red lines, that is, that they were written after the lines had been drawn. The expert was not cross-examined and no testimony was introduced to contradict him. In denying the motion to quash, the trial judge expressed the view that he would not "be authorized to presume that somebody had committed a crime" or to presume that the jury board "had been unfaithful to their duties and allowed the books to be tampered with." His conclusion was that names of negroes were on the jury roll.

We think that the evidence did not justify that conclusion. The Supreme Court of the state did not sustain it. That court observed that the charge that the names of negroes were fraudulently placed on the roll did not involve any member of the jury board, and that the charge "was, by implication at least, laid at the door of the clerk of the board." The court, reaching its decision irrespective of that question, treated that phase of the matter as "wholly immaterial" and hence passed it by "without any expression of opinion thereon."

The state court rested its decision upon the ground that even if it were assumed that there was no name of a negro on the jury roll, it was not established that race or color caused the omission. The court pointed out that the statute fixed a high standard of qualifications for jurors (Green v. State, 73 Ala. 26; State v. Curtis, 210 Ala. 1, 97 So. 291) and that the jury commission was vested with a wide discretion. The court adverted to the fact that more white citizens possessing age qualifications had been omitted from the jury roll than the entire negro population of the county, and regarded the testimony as being to the effect that "the matter of race, color, politics, religion or fraternal affiliations" had not been discussed by the commission and had not entered into their consideration, and that no one had been excluded because of race or color. * * *

We are of the opinion that the evidence required a different result from that reached in the state court. We think that the evidence that for a generation or longer no negro had been called for service on any jury in Jackson County, that there were negroes qualified for jury service, that according to the practice of the jury commission their names would normally appear on the preliminary list of male citizens of the requisite age but that no names of negroes were placed on the jury roll, and the testimony with respect to the lack of appropriate consideration of the qualifications of negroes, established the discrimination which the Constitution forbids. The motion to quash the indictment on that ground should have been granted.

Third. The evidence on the motion to quash the trial venire. The population of Morgan County, where the trial was had, was larger than that of Jackson County, and the proportion of negroes was much greater. The total population of Morgan County in 1930 was 46,176, and of this number 8,311 were negroes.

Within the memory of witnesses, long resident there, no negro had ever served on a jury in that county or had been called for such service. Some of these witnesses were over fifty years of age and had always lived in Morgan County. Their testimony was not contradicted. A clerk of the circuit court, who had resided in the county for thirty years, and who had been in office for over four years, testified that during his official term approximately 2,500 persons had been called for jury service and that not one of them was a negro; that he did not recall "ever seeing any single person of the colored race serve on any jury in Morgan County."

There was abundant evidence that there were a large number of negroes in the county who were qualified for jury service. Men of intelligence, some of whom were college graduates, testified to long lists (said to contain nearly 200 names) of such qualified negroes, including many business men, owners of real property and householders. When defendant's counsel proposed to call many additional witnesses in order to adduce further proof of qualifications of negroes for jury service, the trial judge limited the testimony, holding that the evidence was cumulative.

We find no warrant for a conclusion that the names of any of the negroes as to whom this testimony was given, or of any other negroes, were placed on the jury rolls. No such names were identified. The evidence that for many years no negro had been called for jury service itself tended to show the absence of the names of negroes from the jury rolls, and the state made no effort to prove their presence. The trial judge limited the defendant's proof "to the present year, the present jury roll." The sheriff of the county, called as a witness for defendants, scanned the jury roll and after "looking over every single name on that jury roll, from A to Z," was unable to point out "any single negro on it."

For this long-continued, unvarying, and wholesale exclusion of negroes from jury service we find no justification consistent with the constitutional mandate. We have carefully examined the testimony of the jury commissioners upon which the state court based its decision.

* * *

We think that this evidence failed to rebut the strong prima facie case which defendant had made. That showing as to the long-continued exclusion of negroes from jury service, and as to the many negroes qualified for that service, could not be met by mere generalities. If, in the presence of such testimony as defendant adduced, the mere general assertions by officials of their performance of duty were to be accepted as an adequate justification for the complete exclusion of negroes from jury service, the constitutional provision—adopted with special reference to their protection—would be but a vain and illusory requirement.

* * *

We are concerned only with the federal question which we have discussed, and in view of the denial of the federal right suitably asserted, the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS did not hear the argument and took no part in the consideration and decision of this case.

NOTES

1. Beginning with Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, 25 L. ed. 664 (1880) and Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. ed. 676 (1880) many cases have held that the state exclusion of Negroes from grand and petit juries solely because of their race denied Negro defendants in criminal prosecutions the equal protection of the laws, regardless of whether the discrimination was embodied in a statute or resulted from the administrative practices of state officials charged with the selection of juries. On the other hand, in a number of cases, beginning with Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 313, 25 L. ed. 667 (1880), the court has held that a defendant in a criminal case has no constitutional right to be indicted or tried by a jury composed in part of members of his race. Thus a Negro defendant is not entitled to have Negroes on the jury but is only protected against discrimination in the selection thereof. The significance of the principal case (the second "Scottsboro case") is that here for the first time the court took cognizance of the procedure by which the juries which had indicted and tried the defendants had been chosen, convinced itself upon investigation that Negroes had been barred from them for racial reasons, and held that this de facto exclusion was equivalent to exclusion by law. The court thus activated the principle that the denial of equal protection by the exclusion of Negroes from juries may be shown by extrinsic evidence of a purposeful discriminatory administration of a statute fair on its face. Other cases decided since Norris v. Alabama in which the evidence was held sufficient to show systematic and intentional discrimination against Negroes in the selection of grand or petit juries: Hale v. Kentucky, 303 U. S. 613, 82 L. ed. 1050, 58 Sup. Ct. 753 (1938); Pierre v. Louisiana, 306 U. S. 354, 83 L. ed. 757, 59 Sup. Ct. 536 (1939); Smith v. Texas, 311 U. S. 128, 85 L. ed. 84, 61 Sup. Ct. 164 (1940); Hill v. Texas, 316 U. S. 400, 86 L. ed. 1559, 62 Sup. Ct. 1159 (1942); Patton v. Mississippi, 332 U. S. 463, 92 L. ed. 76, 68 Sup. Ct. 184, 1 A. L. R. (2d) 1286 (1947); Cassell v. Texas, 339 U. S. 282, 94 L. ed. 839, 70 Sup. Ct. 629 (1950); Shepherd v. Florida, 341 U. S. 50, 95 L. ed. 740, 71 Sup. Ct. 549 (1951); Avery v. Georgia, 345 U. S. 559, 97 L. ed. 1244, 73 Sup. Ct. 891 (1953). While a defendant must offer proof of such intentional discrimination, it was early established that his constitutional rights are violated where the court refuses to receive or hear any evidence to this effect. Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. ed. 567 (1881); Carter v. Texas, 177 U. S. 442, 44 L. ed. 839, 20 Sup. Ct. 687 (1900); Martin v. Texas, 200 U. S. 316, 50 L. ed. 497, 26 Sup. Ct. 338 (1906). Cases involving racial discrimination in the selection of juries are collected and discussed in the annotations in 94 L. ed. 856 (1950) and 97 L. ed. 1249 (1953).

2. In Akins v. Texas, 325 U. S. 398, 89 L. ed. 1692, 65 Sup. Ct. 1276 (1945) the court held that fairness in the selection of a jury does not require proportional representation of races thereon and that racial discrimination in the selection of the grand jury which indicted defendant was not established by showing that the grand jury panel of sixteen contained the name of only one Negro, who was among the twelve chosen to serve. Chief Justice Stone and Justices Black and Murphy dissented.

In Brown v. Allen, 344 U. S. 443, 97 L. ed. 469, 73 Sup. Ct. 397 (1953) the court found no violation of the equal protection clause in the use, nondiscriminatory as to race, of property tax lists for selection of grand and petit jurors, even though that practice resulted in the appearance on jury panels of fewer Negroes than whites, having regard for their proportion of the population. The court said: "Short of an annual census or required population registration, these tax lists offer the most comprehensive source of available names. We do not think a use, nondiscriminatory as to race, of the tax lists violates the Fourteenth Amendment, nor can we conclude on the evidence adduced that the results of the use required a conclusion of unconstitutionality." Justices Black and Douglas dissented.

In selecting jurors for the trial of a Negro in a state court on a charge of rape, the drawings were made from a box containing white tickets, bearing the names of white veniremen, and colored tickets bearing the names of colored veniremen. Although the judge who picked out the tickets denied any discrimination, not a single Negro was in the panel, though many were available. Reversing the affirmation of a conviction by the highest state court, the Supreme Court held that the use of separately colored tickets constituted prima facie evidence of discrimination and that the State had not met the burden of overcoming this evidence. Avery v. Georgia, 345 U. S. 559, 97 L. ed. 1244, 73 Sup. Ct. 891 (1953).

3. The constitutional guaranty of equal protection of the laws was held to have been violated where, in the conviction of a person of Mexican descent of the crime of murder, it appeared that persons of similar ancestry had been systematically excluded from service as jury commissioners, grand jurors, and petit jurors, in the county in which he was convicted, although there were such persons fully qualified under the law to serve. The court, through Chief Justice Warren, said: "When the existence of a distinct class is demonstrated, and it is further shown that the laws, as written or as applied, single out that class for different treatment not based on some reasonable classification, the guarantees of the Constitution have been violated. The Fourteenth Amendment is not directed solely against discrimination due to a 'two-class theory'—that is, based upon differences between 'white' and Negro." The court said further that no question of the rejected theory of "proportional representation" of component ethnic groups was involved, as here the defendant's only claim was the right to be indicted and tried by juries from which all persons of his national origin or descent were not systematically excluded. Hernandez v. Texas, 347 U. S. 475, 98 L. ed. 866, 74 Sup. Ct. 667 (1954).

4. While specially constituted or "blue ribbon" juries are not a new device, their value has been the subject of much controversy among commentators and their constitutionality has recently been attacked in the Supreme Court. In Fay v. New York, 332 U. S. 261, 91 L. ed. 2043, 67 Sup. Ct. 1613 (1947) defendants, union leaders convicted of extortion, alleged that application of the special jury statute resulted in a panel from which laborers, operatives, craftsmen, foremen, service employees and women were systematically, intentionally and deliberately excluded, and that the special panel so composed had shown greater inclination to convict than the general panel. In a five-to-four decision, the court held that there was nothing in the standards New York had prescribed which made the statute unconstitutional on its face and that there was no clear showing that its administrative application had resulted in a denial of equal protection or due process of law. Justices Murphy, Black, Douglas and Rutledge dissented, contending that the "blue ribbon" jury "denies the defendant his constitutional right to be tried by a jury fairly drawn from a cross-section of the community" and "forces upon him a jury drawn from a panel chosen in a manner which tends to obliterate the representative basis of the jury." In Moore v. New York, 333 U. S. 565, 92 L. ed. 881, 68 Sup. Ct. 705 (1948) the constitutionality of the New York statute was again upheld on the authority of the Fay case, the same justices dissenting.

5. In Frazier v. United States, 335 U. S. 497, 93 L. ed. 187, 69 Sup. Ct. 201 (1948) it was held that a defendant convicted in a federal court of the District of Columbia of violating the Harrison Narcotics Act was not denied trial "by an impartial jury" guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment in that the jury was comprised entirely of government employees, and that one of the jurors and the wife of another were employed in the Treasury Department (though not in the Narcotics Bureau) which is charged with enforcing the act. Justices Jackson, Frankfurter, Douglas and Murphy dissented on the ground that a jury, every member of which is in the hire of one of the litigants, lacks the impartiality upon which the Supreme Court in exercising its supervisory powers over federal courts should insist.

Dennis v. United States, 339 U. S. 162, 94 L. ed. 734, 70 Sup. Ct. 519 (1950) involved a criminal prosecution in the District of Columbia against a member of the Communist Party for contempt of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. Defendant, on voir dire, challenged for cause prospective jurors who were employed by the federal government on the ground that bias should be implied as a matter of law, since these employees were subject to the President's "Loyalty Order" and were thus liable to discharge upon reasonable grounds for belief that they were disloyal to the government. The refusal of the trial court to sustain this challenge was alleged to deprive defendant of an impartial jury, as guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment. The Supreme Court repudiated this contention, refusing to impute bias to the jurors solely by reason of their employment by the government in the absence of any evidence showing actual bias. Justices Black and Frankfurter dissented and Justices Douglas and Clark did not participate.

PLESSY v. FERGUSON.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1896.
163 U. S. 537, 41 L. ed. 256, 16 Sup. Ct. 1138.

[A statute of Louisiana, Acts of 1890, No. 111, required railways carrying passengers in the state to provide "equal but separate accommodations for the white and colored races," making it an offense punishable by fine for any person to insist upon going into space assigned to persons of the other race. Plessy being charged before Ferguson, judge of the Criminal Court for the parish of Orleans, for violation of the statute, petitioned the state Supreme Court for a writ of prohibition to restrain Ferguson from proceeding to fine him. The petition recited that the charge was that the petitioner had insisted upon riding in a coach assigned to the white race, that the petitioner was "a citizen of the United States and a resident of the State of Louisiana, of mixed descent, in the proportion of seven-eighths Caucasian and one-eighth African blood." The state Supreme Court denied the petition and this writ of error was taken.]

MR. JUSTICE BROWN delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

The object of the [Fourteenth] Amendment was undoubtedly to enforce the absolute equality of the two races before the law, but, in the nature of things, it could not have been intended to abolish distinctions based upon color, or to enforce social, as distinguished from political, equality, or a commingling of the two races upon terms unsatisfactory to either. Laws permitting, and even requiring, their separation, in places where they are liable to be brought into contact, do not necessarily imply the inferiority of either race to the other, and have been generally, if not universally, recognized as within the competency of the state legislatures in the exercise of their police power. The most common instance of this is connected with the establishment of separate schools for white and colored children, which has been held to be a valid exercise of the legislative power even by courts of states where the political rights of the colored race have been longest and most earnestly enforced.

One of the earliest of these cases is that of Roberts v. City of Boston, 5 Cush. 198, in which the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts held that the general school committee of Boston had power to make provision for the instruction of colored children in separate schools established exclusively for them, and to prohibit their attendance upon the other schools. * * * Similar laws have been enacted by Congress under its general power of legislation over the District of Columbia, Rev. Stat. D. C. §§ 281, 282, 283, 310, 319, as well as by the legislatures of many of the states, and have been generally, if not uniformly, sustained by the courts. * * *

Laws forbidding the intermarriage of the two races may be said in a technical sense to interfere with the freedom of contract, and yet have been universally recognized as within the police power of the state.

* * *

In this connection, it is also suggested by the learned counsel for the plaintiff in error that the same argument that will justify the state legislature in requiring railways to provide separate accommodations for the two races will also authorize them to require separate cars to be provided for people whose hair is of a certain color, or who are aliens, or who belong to certain nationalities, or to enact laws requiring colored people to walk upon one side of the street, and white people upon the other, or requiring white men's houses to be painted white, and colored men's black, or their vehicles or business signs to be of different colors, upon the theory that one side of the street is as good as the other, or that a house or vehicle of one color is as good as one of another color. The reply to all this is that every exercise of the police power must be reasonable, and extend only to such laws as are enacted in good faith for the promotion of the public good, and not for the annoyance or oppression of a particular class.

So far, then, as a conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment is concerned, the case reduces itself to the question whether the statute of Louisiana is a reasonable regulation, and with respect to this there must necessarily be a large discretion on the part of the legislature. In determining the question of reasonableness, it is at liberty to act with reference to the established usages, customs, and traditions of the people, and with a view to the promotion of their comfort, and the preservation of the public peace and good order. Gauged by this standard, we cannot say that a law which authorizes or even requires the separation of the two races in public conveyances is unreasonable, or more obnoxious to the Fourteenth Amendment than the acts of Congress requiring separate schools for colored children in the District of Columbia, the constitutionality of which does not seem to have been questioned, or the corresponding acts of state legislatures.

We consider the underlying fallacy of the plaintiff's argument to consist in the assumption that the enforced separation of the two races stamps the colored race with a badge of inferiority. If this be so, it is not by reason of anything found in the act, but solely because the colored race chooses to put that construction upon it.

* * * The argument also assumes that social prejudices may be overcome by legislation, and that equal rights cannot be secured to the negro except by an enforced commingling of the two races. We cannot accept this proposition. If the two races are to meet upon terms of social equality, it must be the result of natural affinities, a mutual appreciation of each other's merits, and a voluntary consent of individuals. * * * Legislation is powerless to eradicate racial instincts, or to abolish distinctions based upon physical differences, and the attempt to do so can only result in accentuating the difficulties of the present situation. If the civil and political rights of both races be equal, one cannot be inferior to the other civilly or politically. If one race be inferior to the other socially, the Constitution of the United States cannot put them upon the same plane. * * *

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. JUSTICE HARLAN dissenting. * * * The white race deems itself to be the dominant race in this country. And so it is, in prestige, in achievements, in education, in wealth and in power. So, I doubt not, it will continue to be for all time, if it remains true to its great heritage and holds fast to the principles of constitutional liberty. But in view of the Constitution, in the eye of the law, there is in this country no superior, dominant, ruling class of citizens. There is no caste here. Our Constitution is color-blind, and neither knows nor tolerates classes among citizens. In respect of civil rights, all citizens are equal before the law. The humblest is the peer of the most powerful. The law regards man as man, and takes no account of his surroundings or of his color when his civil rights as guaranteed by the supreme law of the land are involved. It is, therefore, to be regretted that this high tribunal, the final expositor of the fundamental law of the land, has reached the conclusion that it is competent for a state to regulate the enjoyment by citizens of their civil rights solely upon the basis of race. * * *

[Mr. JUSTICE BREWER did not participate in the decision.]

NOTE

1. A state may not authorize a railway to provide sleeping cars, dining cars and chair cars for one race without also providing them for the other, and the fact that the demand for such accommodations by Negro passengers is so small as not to warrant the necessary outlay for them is immaterial. McCabe v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 235 U. S. 151, 59 L. ed. 169, 35 Sup. Ct. 69 (1914). In the absence of federal legislation prohibiting it, a railway company may separate its white and Negro passengers in interstate commerce by virtue of its power to make "reasonable regulations" of its service, the court saying: "Regulations which are induced by the general sentiment of the community for whom they are made and upon whom they operate, cannot be said to be unreasonable." Chiles v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 218 U. S. 71, 54 L. ed. 936, 30 Sup. Ct. 667, 20 Ann. Cas. 980 (1910).

But the policy of segregating or not segregating white and Negro passengers on common carriers engaged in interstate commerce is not a local matter with which the states may deal. In Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 485, 24 L. ed. 547 (1878) a Louisiana statute forbidding the segregation of the races on public carriers, in this case a steamboat on the Mississippi River, was held invalid as a burden on interstate commerce. In Morgan v. Virginia, 328 U. S. 373, 90 L. ed. 1317, 66 Sup. Ct. 1050, 165 A. L. R. 574 (1946) a Virginia statute requiring segregation on interstate motor busses was held invalid for the same reason, the court saying: "It seems clear to us that seating arrangements for the different races in interstate motor travel require a single, uniform rule to promote and protect national travel."

The Interstate Commerce Act (49 U. S. C. § 3(1); F. C. A. 49 § 3(1) (1946)) makes it unlawful for a railroad in interstate commerce to subject any person to "any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever." This provision has been construed to forbid a railroad to deny facilities to a Negro passenger because those available have been set aside for white passengers. In Mitchell v. United States, 313 U. S. 80, 85 L. ed. 1201, 61 Sup. Ct. 873 (1941) an interstate Negro passenger holding a first-class ticket was compelled to transfer in Arkansas from a Pullman to a second-class car, although a seat in the former would have been available to him if he had been white. An Arkansas statute required segregation of Negroes from white passengers on railroad trains by the use of cars or partitioned sections providing "equal, but separate and sufficient accommodations" for both races. The court held that the passenger had been subjected to an unreasonable disadvantage in violation of the Interstate Commerce Act. The opinion stated: "The question whether this was a discrimination forbidden by the Interstate Commerce Act is not a question of segregation but one of equality of treatment. The denial to appellant of accommodations because of his race would be an invasion of a fundamental individual right which is guaranteed against state action by the Fourteenth Amendment * * * and in view of the nature of the right and of our Constitutional policy it cannot be maintained that the discrimination as it was alleged was not essentially unjust." Applying the doctrine of the Mitchell case, the court held in Henderson v. United States, 339 U. S. 816, 94 L. ed. 1302, 70 Sup. Ct. 843 (1950) that railroad rules and practices which divided each dining car so as to allot ten tables exclusively to white passengers and one table exclusively to Negro passengers, and which called for a curtain or partition between that table and the others, violated the same section of the Interstate Commerce Act.

SWEATT v. PAINTER.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1950.
339 U. S. 629, 94 L. ed. 1114, 70 Sup. Ct. 848.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE VINSON delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case and McLaurin v. Oklahoma State Regents, 339 U. S. 637, present different aspects of this general question: To what extent does the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment limit the power of a state to distinguish between students of different races in professional and graduate education in a state university? Broader issues have been urged for our consideration, but we adhere to the principle of deciding constitutional questions only in the context of the particular case before the Court. We have frequently reiterated that this Court will decide constitutional questions only when necessary to the disposition of the case at hand, and that such decisions will be drawn as narrowly as possible. Rescue Army v. Municipal Court, 331 U. S. 549, and cases cited therein. Because of this traditional reluctance to extend constitutional interpretations to situations or facts which are not before the Court, much of the excellent research and detailed argument presented in these cases is unnecessary to their disposition.

In the instant case, petitioner filed an application for admission to the University of Texas Law School for the February, 1946 term. His application was rejected solely because he is a Negro. Petitioner thereupon brought this suit for mandamus against the appropriate school officials, respondents here, to compel his admission. At that time, there was no law school in Texas which admitted Negroes.

The State trial court recognized that the action of the State in denying petitioner the opportunity to gain a legal education while granting it to others deprived him of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. The court did not grant the relief requested, however, but continued the case for six months to allow the State to supply substantially equal facilities. At the expiration of the six months, in December, 1946, the court denied the writ on the showing that the authorized university officials had adopted an order calling for the opening of a law school for Negroes the following February. While petitioner's appeal was pending, such a school was made available, but petitioner refused to register therein. The Texas Court of Civil Appeals set aside the trial court's judgment and ordered the cause "remanded generally to the trial court for further proceedings without prejudice to the right of any party to this suit."

On remand, a hearing was held on the issue of the equality of the educational facilities at the newly established school as compared with the University of Texas Law School. Finding that the new school offered petitioner "privileges, advantages, and opportunities for the study of law substantially equivalent to those offered by the State to white students at the University of Texas," the trial court denied mandamus. The Court of Civil Appeals affirmed, 210 S. W. (2d) 442. Petitioner's application for a writ of error was denied by the Texas Supreme Court. We granted certiorari, 338 U. S. 865, because of the manifest importance of the constitutional issues involved.

* The University of Texas Law School, from which petitioner was excluded, was staffed by a faculty of sixteen full-time and three part-time professors, some of whom are nationally recognized authorities in their field. Its student body numbered 850. The library contained over 65,000 volumes. Among the other facilities available to the students were a law review, moot court facilities, scholarship funds, and Order of the Coif affiliation. The school's alumni occupy the most distinguished positions in the private practice of the law and in the public life of the State. It may properly be considered one of the nation's ranking law schools.

The law school for Negroes which was to have opened in February, 1947, would have had no independent faculty or library. The teaching was to be carried on by four members of the University of Texas Law School faculty, who were to maintain their offices at the University of Texas while teaching at both institutions. Few of the 10,000 volumes ordered for the library had arrived; nor was there any full-time librarian. The school lacked accreditation.

Since the trial of this case, respondents report the opening of a law school at the Texas State University for Negroes. It is apparently on the road to full accreditation. It has a faculty of five full-time professors; a student body of 23; a library of some 16,500 volumes served by a full-time staff; a practice court and legal aid association; and one alumnus who has become a member of the Texas Bar.

Whether the University of Texas Law School is compared with the original or the new law school for Negroes, we cannot find substantial equality in the educational opportunities offered white and Negro law students by the State. In terms of number of the faculty, variety of courses and opportunity for specialization, size of the student body, scope of the library, availability of law review and similar activities, the University of Texas Law School is superior. What is more important, the University of Texas Law School possesses to a far greater degree those qualities which are incapable of objective measurement but which make for greatness in a law school. Such qualities, to name but a few, include reputation of the faculty, experience of the administration, position and influence of the alumni, standing in the community, traditions and prestige. It is difficult to believe that one who had a free choice between these law schools would consider the question close.

Moreover, although the law is a highly learned profession, we are well aware that it is an intensely practical one. The law school, the proving ground for legal learning and practice, cannot be effective in isolation from the individuals and institutions with which the law interacts. Few students and no one who has practiced law would choose to study in an academic vacuum, removed from the interplay of ideas and the exchange of views with which the law is concerned. The law school to which Texas is willing to admit petitioner excludes from its student body members of the racial groups which number 85% of the population of the State and include most of the lawyers, witnesses, jurors, judges and other officials with whom petitioner will inevitably be dealing when he becomes a member of the Texas Bar. With such a substantial and significant segment of society excluded, we cannot conclude that the education offered petitioner is substantially equal to that which he would receive if admitted to the University of Texas Law School.

It may be argued that excluding petitioner from that school is no different from excluding white students from the new law school. This contention overlooks realities. It is unlikely that a member of a group so decisively in the majority, attending a school with rich traditions and prestige which only a history of consistently maintained excellence could command, would claim that the opportunities afforded him for legal education were unequal to those held open to petitioner. That such a claim, if made, would be dishonored by the State, is no answer. "Equal protection of the laws is not achieved through indiscriminate imposition of inequalities." Shelley v. Kraemer, 334 U. S. 1, 22.

It is fundamental that these cases concern rights which are personal and present. This Court has stated unanimously that "The State must provide [legal education] for [petitioner] in conformity with the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment and provide it as soon as it does for applicants of any other group." Sipuel v. Board of Regents, 332 U. S. 631, 633. That case "did not present the issue whether a state might not satisfy the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment by establishing a separate law school for Negroes." Fisher v. Hurst, 333 U. S. 147, 150. In Missouri ex rel. Gaines v. Canada, 305 U. S. 337, 351, the Court, speaking through Chief Justice Hughes, declared that "petitioner's right was a personal one. It was as an individual that he was entitled to the equal protection of the laws, and the State was bound to furnish him within its borders facilities for legal education substantially equal to those the State there afforded for persons of the white race, whether or not other Negroes sought the same opportunity." These are the only cases in this Court which present the issue of the constitutional validity of race distinctions in state-supported graduate and professional education.

In accordance with these cases, petitioner may claim his full constitutional right: legal education equivalent to that offered by the State to students of other races. Such education is not available to him in a separate law school as offered by the State. We cannot, therefore, agree with respondents that the doctrine of Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 537, requires affirmance of the judgment below. Nor need we reach petitioner's contention that Plessy v. Ferguson should be reexamined in the light of contemporary knowledge respecting the purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment and the effects of racial segregation.

We hold that the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment requires that petitioner be admitted to the University of Texas Law School. The judgment is reversed and the cause is remanded for proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion. Reversed.

McLAURIN v. OKLAHOMA STATE REGENTS.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1950.
339 U. S. 637, 94 L. ed. 1149, 70 Sup. Ct. 851.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE VINSON delivered the opinion of the Court.

In this case, we are faced with the question whether a state may, after admitting a student to graduate instruction in its state university, afford him different treatment from other students solely because of his race. We decide only this issue; see Sweatt v. Painter, 339 U. S. 629.

Appellant is a Negro citizen of Oklahoma. Possessing a Master's degree, he applied for admission to the University of Oklahoma in order to pursue studies and courses leading to a Doctorate in Education. At that time, his application was denied, solely because of his race. The school authorities were required to exclude him by the Oklahoma statutes, 70 Okl. Stat. §§ 455, 456, 457 (1941) which made it a misdemeanor to maintain or operate, teach or attend a school at which both whites and Negroes are enrolled or taught. Appellant filed a complaint requesting injunctive relief, alleging that the action of the school authorities and the statutes upon which their action was based were unconstitutional and deprived him of the equal protection of the laws. Citing our decisions in Missouri ex rel. Gaines v. Canada, 305 U. S. 337, and Sipuel v. Board of Regents, 332 U. S. 631, a statutory three-judge District Court held that the State had a constitutional duty to provide him with the education he sought as soon as it provided that education for applicants of any other group. It further held that to the extent the Oklahoma statutes denied him admission they were unconstitutional and void. On the assumption, however, that the State would follow the constitutional mandate, the court refused to grant the injunction, retaining jurisdiction of the cause with full power to issue any necessary and proper orders to secure McLaurin the equal protection of the laws.

Following this decision, the Oklahoma legislature amended these statutes to permit the admission of Negroes to institutions of higher learning attended by white students, in cases where such institutions offered courses not available in the Negro schools. The amendment provided, however, that in such cases the program of instruction "shall be given at such colleges or institutions of higher education upon a segregated basis." Appellant was thereupon admitted to the University of Oklahoma Graduate School. In apparent conformity with the amendment, his admission was made subject to "such rules and regulations as to segregation as the President of the University shall consider to afford Mr. G. W. McLaurin substantially equal educational opportunities as are afforded to other persons seeking the same education at the Graduate College," a condition which does not appear to have been withdrawn. Thus he was required to sit apart at a designated desk in an anteroom adjoining the classroom; to sit at a designated desk on the mezzanine floor of the library, but not to use the desks in the regular reading room; and to sit at a designated table and to eat at a different time from the other students in the school cafeteria.

To remove these conditions, appellant filed a motion to modify the order and judgment of the District Court. That court held that such treatment did not violate the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment and denied the motion. This appeal followed.

In the interval between the decision of the court below and the hearing in this Court, the treatment afforded appellant was altered. For some time, the section of the classroom in which appellant sat was surrounded by a rail on which there was a sign stating, "Reserved For Colored," but these have been removed. He is now assigned to a seat in the classroom in a row specified for colored students; he is assigned to a table in the library on the main floor; and he is permitted to eat at the same time in the cafeteria as other students, although here again he is assigned to a special table.

It is said that the separations imposed by the State in this case are in form merely nominal. McLaurin uses the same classroom, library and cafeteria as students of other races; there is no indication that the seats to which he is assigned in these rooms have any disadvantage of location. He may wait in line in the cafeteria and there stand and talk with his fellow students, but while he eats he must remain apart.

These restrictions were obviously imposed in order to comply, as nearly as could be, with the statutory requirements of Oklahoma. But they signify that the State, in administering the facilities it affords for professional and graduate study, sets McLaurin apart from the other students. The result is that appellant is handicapped in his pursuit of effective graduate instruction. Such restrictions impair and inhibit his ability to study, to engage in discussions and exchange views with other students, and, in general, to learn his profession.

Our society grows increasingly complex, and our need for trained leaders increases correspondingly. Appellant's case represents, perhaps, the epitome of that need, for he is attempting to obtain an advanced degree in education, to become, by definition, a leader and trainer of others. Those who will come under his guidance and influence must be directly affected by the education he receives. Their own education and development will necessarily suffer to the extent that his training is unequal to that of his classmates. State-imposed restrictions which produce such inequalities cannot be sustained.

It may be argued that appellant will be in no better position when these restrictions are removed, for he may still be set apart by his fellow students. This we think irrelevant. There is a vast difference—a Constitutional difference—between restrictions imposed by the state which prohibit the intellectual commingling of students, and the refusal of individuals to commingle where the state presents no such bar. Shelley v. Kraemer, 334 U. S. 1, 13-14. The removal of the state restrictions will not necessarily abate individual and group predilections, prejudices and choices. But at the very least, the state will not be depriving appellant of the opportunity to secure acceptance by his fellow students on his own merits.

We conclude that the conditions under which this appellant is required to receive his education deprive him of his personal and present right to the equal protection of the laws. See Sweatt v. Painter, 339 U. S. 629. We hold that under these circumstances the Fourteenth Amendment precludes differences in treatment by the state based upon race. Appellant, having been admitted to a state-supported graduate school, must receive the same treatment at the hands of the state as students of other races.

The judgment is Reversed.

NOTES

1. In Missouri ex rel. Gaines v. Canada, 305 U. S. 337, 83 L. ed. 208, 59 Sup. Ct. 232 (1938) it was held that Missouri denied the Negro petitioner the equal protection of its laws when it refused to admit him to the School of Law of the University of Missouri. The fact that, in accordance with state law, the University had offered to pay his tuition cost at any of the qualified law schools in neighboring states, was held not to alleviate the racial discrimination involved. The court, through Chief Justice Hughes, said: "The question here is not of a duty of the State to supply legal training, or of the quality of the training which it does supply, but of its duty when it provides such training to furnish it to the residents of the state upon the basis of an equality of right. By the operation of the laws of Missouri a privilege has been created for white law students which is denied to Negroes by reason of their race. The white resident is afforded legal education within the state; the Negro resident having the same qualifications is refused it there and must go outside the state to obtain it. That is a denial of the equality of legal right to the enjoyment of the privilege which the state has set up, and the provision for the payment of tuition fees in another state does not remove the discrimination." Justices McReynolds and Butler dissented.

2. Prior to the decision in the Gaines case, the Supreme Court was apparently satisfied with something less than absolute or exact equality in the matter of educational facilities provided by the states. For example, in Cumming v. County Board of Education, 175 U. S. 528, 44 L. ed. 262, 20 Sup. Ct. 197 (1899) it upheld refusal of a Georgia state court to enjoin a school board from appropriating money or collecting taxes for the purpose of building a high school for white children, although there was no similar school for Negroes, the funds not being sufficient to maintain one in addition to needed primary schools for colored children. The court said that "the education of the people in schools maintained by state taxation is a matter belonging to the respective states, and any interference on the part of federal authority with the management of such schools cannot be justified except in the case of a clear and unmistakable disregard of rights secured by the supreme law of the land."

3. In Sipuel v. Board of Regents of University of Oklahoma, 332 U. S. 631, 92 L. ed. 247, 68 Sup. Ct. 299 (1948) the petitioner, a Negro, concededly qualified to receive professional legal education, was denied admission to the University of Oklahoma solely because of her color. Petitioner's application for a writ of mandamus was denied in the state district court and the Supreme Court of Oklahoma affirmed. The Supreme Court of the United States reversed and remanded, directing the state to provide legal education for the petitioner in conformity with the equal protection clause and provide it as soon as it did for applicants of any other group. Following this decision, the state within one month established a separate law school for Negroes. Petitioner, refusing to apply there, sought leave to file a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel compliance with the court's mandate in the Sipuel case. In Fisher v. Hurst, 333 U. S. 147, 92 L. ed. 604, 68 Sup. Ct. 389 (1948) the Supreme Court denied the motion, holding that the order of the Oklahoma district court following the Sipuel decision was in conformity with the mandate of that case. Pointing out that the district court had retained jurisdiction to hear and determine any question arising under its order, the Supreme Court said that whether or not the order was followed or disobeyed should be determined in the first instance by that court.

4. In an increasing number of cases in recent years judicial relief has been sought from existing inequalities in segregated school systems. The separate but equal doctrine was applied in McKissick v. Carmichael, 187 F. (2d) 949 (C. A. 4th 1951), cert. den., 341 U. S. 951, 95 L. ed. 1374, 71 Sup. Ct. 1021

(1951), where, in reversing the judgment of the federal district court, it was held that a separate law school established for Negroes in North Carolina was clearly inferior to the School of Law of the University of North Carolina. See, also, Corbin v. County School Board of Pulaski County, 177 F. (2d) 924 (C. A. 4th 1949); Carr v. Corning, 182 F. (2d) 14, 86 App. D. C. 173 (1950); Carter v. School Board of Arlington, 182 F. (2d) 531 (C. A. 4th 1950); Brown v. Ramsey, 185 F. (2d) 225 (C. A. 8th 1950). In Alston v. School Board of City of Norfolk, 112 F. (2d) 992, 130 A. L. R. 1506 (1940), cert. den., 311 U. S. 693, 85 L. ed. 448, 61 Sup. Ct. 75 (1940) it was held that in the segregated school system of Norfolk, Virginia, Negro teachers must be paid the same salaries as white teachers where they perform the same duties.

5. As the opinions in Missouri ex rel. Gaines v. Canada and Sweatt v. Painter make clear, the Supreme Court never (prior to its decision on May 17, 1954) construed the guaranty of the equal protection of the laws as preventing the states from providing for racial segregation in education. It was content to follow the rule of Plessy v. Ferguson, limited only by the general requirement that the "separate" accommodations and facilities supplied for the two races be "equal." In Berea College v. Kentucky, 211 U. S. 45, 53 L. ed. 81, 29 Sup. Ct. 33 (1908) the court upheld a Kentucky statute prohibiting domestic corporations from operating any school where white and Negro students were received together as pupils for instruction, unless they were taught at separate branches at a distance of at least twenty-five miles from each other. Against the contention of the college that the statute impaired the terms of its charter and hence violated the contract clause, the court said that the state had reserved the power to alter or repeal and the law did not substantially impair the object of the grant. In Gong Lum v. Rice, 275 U. S. 78, 72 L. ed. 172, 48 Sup. Ct. 91 (1927) a girl of Chinese parentage, an American citizen by birth, was excluded under a segregation provision of the Mississippi Constitution from enrollment in a white school and permitted only to attend a school for Negroes. In answer to the contention that classifying Negroes and Mongolians together while distinguishing between whites and Mongolians operated as a denial of equal protection, the court said: "The question here is whether a Chinese citizen of the United States is denied equal protection of the laws when he is classed among the colored races and furnished facilities for education equal to that offered to all, whether white, brown, yellow, or black. Were this a new question, it would call for very full argument and consideration, but we think that it is the same question which has been many times decided to be within the constitutional power of the state legislature to settle without intervention of the federal courts under the federal Constitution."

For a recent analysis of the historical evidence in which the authors conclude that "a very large number" of the supporters of the Fourteenth Amendment thought that it forbade segregated schools, see Frank and Munro, The Original Understanding of "Equal Protection of the Laws," 50 Col. L. Rev. 131, 153-162 (1950). Among other valuable recent materials dealing with various aspects of racial discrimination in education, see the following: Reppy, Civil Rights in the United States (1951), ch. VI; Segregation and the Equal Protection Clause: Brief for the Committee of Law Teachers Against Segregation in Legal Education, 34 Minn. L. Rev. 289 (1950); Roche, Education, Segregation and the Supreme Court—A Political Analysis, 99 U. of Pa. L. Rev. 949 (1951); Ransmeier, The Fourteenth Amendment and the "Separate but Equal" Doctrine, 50 Mich. L. Rev. 203 (1951); Taylor, The Demise of Race Restrictions in Graduate Education, 1 Duke B. J. 135 (1951); Note, 1950 Wash. U. L. Q. 594; Note, 61 Yale L. J. 730 (1952); Comment, 24 So. Cal. L. Rev. 74 (1950). Supreme Court decisions dealing with all forms of race discrimination are collected in the annotation in 94 L. ed. 1121 (1950).

BROWN v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF TOPEKA.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1954.

347 U. S. 483, 98 L. ed. 873, 74 Sup. Ct. 686, 38 A. L. R. (2d) 1180.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN delivered the opinion of the Court.

These cases come to us from the States of Kansas, South Carolina, Virginia, and Delaware. They are premised on different facts and different local conditions, but a common legal question justifies their consideration together in this consolidated opinion.

In each of the cases, minors of the Negro race, through their legal representatives, seek the aid of the courts in obtaining admission to the public schools of their community on a nonsegregated basis. In each instance, they have been denied admission to schools attended by white children under laws requiring or permitting segregation according to race. This segregation was alleged to deprive the plaintiffs of the equal protection of the laws under the Fourteenth Amendment. In each of the cases other than the Delaware case, a three-judge federal district court denied relief to the plaintiffs on the so-called "separate but equal" doctrine announced by this Court in Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 537. Under that doctrine, equality of treatment is accorded when the races are provided substantially equal facilities, even though these facilities be separate. In the Delaware case, the Supreme Court of Delaware adhered to that doctrine, but ordered that the plaintiffs be admitted to the white schools because of their superiority to the Negro schools.

The plaintiffs contend that segregated public schools are not "equal" and cannot be made "equal," and that hence they are deprived of the equal protection of the laws. Because of the obvious importance of the question presented, the Court took jurisdiction. Argument was heard in the 1952 Term, and reargument was heard this Term on certain questions propounded by the Court.

Reargument was largely devoted to the circumstances surrounding the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment in 1868. It covered exhaustively consideration of the Amendment in Congress, ratification by the states, then existing practices in racial segregation, and the views of proponents and opponents of the Amendment. This discussion and our own investigation convince us that, although these sources cast some light, it is not enough to resolve the problem with which we are faced. At best, they are inconclusive. The most avid proponents of the post-War Amendments undoubtedly intended them to remove all legal distinctions among "all persons born or naturalized in the United States." Their opponents, just as certainly, were antagonistic to both the letter and the spirit of the Amendments and wished them to have the most limited effect. What others in Congress and the state legislatures had in mind cannot be determined with any degree of certainty.

An additional reason for the inconclusive nature of the Amendment's history, with respect to segregated schools, is the status of public education at that time. In the South, the movement toward free common schools, supported by general taxation, had not yet taken hold. Education of white children was largely in the hands of private groups. Education of Negroes was almost nonexistent, and practically all of the race were illiterate. In fact, any education of Negroes was forbidden by law in some states. Today, in contrast, many Negroes have achieved outstanding success in the arts and sciences as well as in the business and professional world. It is true that public education had already advanced further in the North, but the effect of the Amendment on Northern States was generally ignored in the congressional debates. Even in the North, the conditions of public education did not approximate those existing today. The curriculum was usually rudimentary; ungraded schools were common in rural areas; the school term was but three months a year in many states; and compulsory school attendance was virtually unknown. As a consequence, it is not surprising that there should be so little in the history of the Fourteenth Amendment relating to its intended effect on public education.

In the first cases in this Court construing the Fourteenth Amendment, decided shortly after its adoption, the Court interpreted it as proscribing all state-imposed discriminations against the Negro race. The doctrine of "separate but equal" did not make its appearance in this Court until 1896 in the case of Plessy v. Ferguson, supra, involving not education but transportation. American courts have since labored with the doctrine for over half a century. In this Court, there have been six cases involving the "separate but equal" doctrine in the field of public education. In Cumming v. Board of Education of Richmond County, 175 U. S. 528 and Gong Lum v. Rice, 275 U. S. 78, the validity of the doctrine itself was not challenged. In more recent cases, all on the graduate school level, inequality was found in that specific benefits enjoyed by white students were denied to Negro students of the same educational qualifications. Missouri ex rel. Gaines v. Canada, 305 U. S. 337; Sipuel v. Board of Regents of University of Oklahoma, 332 U. S. 631; Sweatt v. Painter, 339 U. S. 629; McLaurin v. Oklahoma State Regents, 339 U. S. 637. In none of these cases was it necessary to reexamine the doctrine to grant relief to the Negro plaintiff. And in Sweatt v. Painter, supra, the Court expressly reserved decision on the question whether Plessy v. Ferguson should be held inapplicable to public education.

In the instant cases, that question is directly presented. Here, unlike Sweatt v. Painter, there are findings below that the Negro and white schools involved have been equalized, or are being equalized, with respect to buildings, curricula, qualifications and salaries of teachers, and other "tangible" factors. Our decision, therefore, cannot turn on merely a comparison of these tangible factors in the Negro and white schools involved in each of the cases. We must look instead to the effect of segregation itself on public education.

In approaching this problem, we cannot turn the clock back to 1868 when the Amendment was adopted, or even to 1896 when Plessy v. Ferguson was written. We must consider public education in the light of its full development and its present place in American life throughout the Nation. Only in this way can it be determined if segregation in public schools deprives these plaintiffs of the equal protection of the laws.

Today, education is perhaps the most important function of state and local governments. Compulsory school attendance laws and the great expenditures for education both demonstrate our recognition of the importance of education to our democratic society. It is required in the performance of our most basic public responsibilities, even service in the armed forces. It is the very foundation of good citizenship. Today it is a principal instrument in awakening the child to cultural values, in preparing him for later professional training, and in helping him to adjust normally to his environment. In these days, it is doubtful that any child may reasonably be expected to succeed in life if he is denied the opportunity of an education. Such an opportunity, where the state has undertaken to provide it, is a right which must be made available to all on equal terms.

We come then to the question presented: Does segregation of children in public schools solely on the basis of race, even though the physical facilities and other "tangible" factors may be equal, deprive the children of the minority group of equal educational opportunities? We believe that it does.

In Sweatt v. Painter, supra, in finding that a segregated law school for Negroes could not provide them equal educational opportunities, this Court relied in large part on "those qualities which are incapable of objective measurement but which make for greatness in a law school." In McLaurin v. Oklahoma State Regents, supra, the Court, in requiring that a Negro admitted to a white graduate school be treated like all other students, again resorted to intangible considerations: "* * * his ability to study, to engage in discussions and exchange views with other students, and, in general, to learn his profession." Such considerations apply with added force to children in grade and high schools. To separate them from others of similar age and qualifications solely because of their race generates a feeling of inferiority as to their status in the community that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlikely ever to be undone. The effect of this separation on their educational opportunities was well stated by a finding in the Kansas case by a court which nevertheless felt compelled to rule against the Negro plaintiffs:

"Segregation of white and colored children in public schools has a detrimental effect upon the colored children. The impact is greater when it has the sanction of the law; for the policy of separating the races is usually interpreted as denoting the inferiority of the Negro group. A sense of inferiority affects the motivation of a child to learn. Segregation with the sanction of law, therefore, has a tendency to retard the educational and mental development of Negro children and to deprive them of some of the benefits they would receive in a racially integrated school system."

Whatever may have been the extent of psychological knowledge at the time of Plessy v. Ferguson, this finding is amply supported by modern authority. Any language in Plessy v. Ferguson contrary to this finding is rejected.

We conclude that in the field of public education the doctrine of "separate but equal" has no place. Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal. Therefore, we hold that the plaintiffs and others similarly situated for whom the actions have been brought are, by reason of the segregation complained of, deprived of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. This disposition makes unnecessary any discussion whether such segregation also violates the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Because these are class actions, because of the wide applicability of this decision, and because of the great variety of local conditions, the formulation of decrees in these cases presents problems of considerable complexity. On reargument, the consideration of appropriate relief was necessarily subordinated to the primary question—the constitutionality of segregation in public education. We have now announced that such segregation is a denial of the equal protection of the laws. In order that we may have the full assistance of the parties in formulating decrees, the cases will be restored to the docket, and the parties are requested to present further argument on Questions 4 and 5 previously propounded by the Court for the reargument this Term. The Attorney General of the United States is again invited to participate. The Attorneys General of the states requiring or permitting segregation in public education will also be permitted to appear as amici curiae upon request to do so by September 15, 1954, and submission of briefs by October 1, 1954.

It is so ordered.

Cases ordered restored to docket for further argument on question of appropriate decrees.

BOLLING v. SHARPE.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1954.
347 U. S. 497, 98 L. ed. 884, 74 Sup. Ct. 693.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WARREN delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case challenges the validity of segregation in the public schools of the District of Columbia. The petitioners, minors of the Negro race, allege that such segregation deprives them of due process of law under the Fifth Amendment. They were refused admission to a public school attended by white children solely because of their race. They sought the aid of the District Court for the District of Columbia in obtaining admission. That court dismissed their complaint. We granted a writ of certiorari before judgment in the Court of Appeals because of the importance of the constitutional question presented. 344 U. S. 873.

We have this day held that the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment prohibits the states from maintaining racially segregated public schools. The legal problem in the District of Columbia is somewhat different, however. The Fifth Amendment, which is applicable in the District of Columbia, does not contain an equal protection clause as does the Fourteenth Amendment which applies only to the states. But the concepts of equal protection and due process, both stemming from our American ideal of fairness, are not mutually exclusive. The "equal protection of the laws" is a more explicit safeguard of prohibited unfairness than "due process of law," and, therefore, we do not imply that the two are always interchangeable phrases. But, as this Court has recognized, discrimination may be so unjustifiable as to be violative of due process.

Classifications based solely upon race must be scrutinized with particular care, since they are contrary to our traditions and hence constitutionally suspect. As long ago as 1896, this Court declared the principle "that the Constitution of the United States, in its present form, forbids, so far as civil and political rights are concerned, discrimination by the general government, or by the states, against any citizen because of his race." And in Buchanan v. Warley, 245 U. S. 60, the Court held that a statute which limited the right of a property owner to convey his property to a person of another race was, as an unreasonable discrimination, a denial of due process of law.

Although the Court has not assumed to define "liberty" with any great precision, that term is not confined to mere freedom from bodily restraint. Liberty under law extends to the full range of conduct which the individual is free to pursue, and it cannot be restricted except for a proper governmental objective. Segregation in public education is not reasonably related to any proper governmental objective, and thus it imposes on Negro children of the District of Columbia a burden that constitutes an arbitrary deprivation of their liberty in violation of the Due Process Clause.

In view of our decision that the Constitution prohibits the states from maintaining racially segregated public schools, it would be unthinkable that the same Constitution would impose a lesser duty on the Federal Government. We hold that racial segregation in the public schools of the District of Columbia is a denial of the due process of law guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution.

For the reasons set out in Brown v. Board of Education, this case will be restored to the docket for reargument on Questions 4 and 5 previously propounded by the Court. 345 U. S. 972.

It is so ordered.

Case restored to docket for reargument on question of appropriate decree.

NOTE

1. In declaring against segregation in the reported cases the Supreme Court rendered unconstitutional the laws providing for separate schools in twenty-one states. In seventeen of these states maintenance of separate school systems is mandatory. Segregation has also been practiced in the District of Columbia. The mandatory segregation states are: Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia and West Virginia. In four states, Wyoming, Kansas, New Mexico and Arizona, separate schools are permitted, particularly at the elementary level, at the option of local school boards either in all or in specified communities. In Wyoming the option has never been exercised. Sixteen states, either by their constitutions or by statutes, prohibit segregation. In a number of these the prohibition has been enacted since World War II. The remaining eleven states currently have no legislation on the subject. The end of segregation by law, however, does not necessarily mean the end of segregation in fact. In a number of northern states, in cities where there are large Negro populations, many schools exist where all, or nearly all, of the pupils are Negroes because no white children live in the neighborhood. (Congressional Quarterly—Weekly Report, June 4, 1954, pp. 689, 691.)

BUCHANAN v. WARLEY.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1917.
245 U. S. 60, 62 L. ed. 149, 38 Sup. Ct. 16.

[This was a suit for specific performance of a contract for the sale of real estate in Louisville, Kentucky, brought by the seller. The defendant answered that the seller had expressly stipulated that the buyer should not be required to accept a deed if he could not legally occupy the premises as his residence; that defendant was a Negro; that there were ten residences in the block of which the lot in question was a part, eight of them occupied by whites, two by Negroes, and that he could not lawfully occupy the premises because of a city ordinance which forbade any white or black person to move into and occupy as a residence any house upon any block in which more than half the houses were already occupied by persons of the other color. The plaintiff replied that the ordinance was invalid because violative of the Fourteenth Amendment. The Court of Appeals of Kentucky, 165 Ky. 559, held the ordinance valid and a complete defense to the action. Now on writ of error:]

Mr. JUSTICE DAY delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

This ordinance prevents the occupancy of a lot in the City of Louisville by a person of color in a block where the greater number of residences are occupied by white persons; where such a majority exists colored persons are excluded. This interdiction is based wholly upon color; simply that and nothing more. In effect, premises situated as are those in question in the so-called white block are effectively debarred from sale to persons of color, because if sold they cannot be occupied by the purchaser nor by him sold to another of the same color.

This drastic measure is sought to be justified under the authority of the state in the exercise of the police power. It is said such legislation tends to promote the public peace by preventing racial conflicts; that it tends to maintain racial purity; that it prevents the deterioration of property owned and occupied by white people, which deterioration, it is contended, is sure to follow the occupancy of adjacent premises by persons of color.

The authority of the state to pass laws in the exercise of the police power, having for their object the promotion of the public health, safety and welfare is very broad as has been affirmed in numerous and recent decisions of this Court. * * *

The Fourteenth Amendment protects life, liberty, and property from invasion by the states without due process of law. Property is more than the mere thing which a person owns. It is elementary that it includes the right to acquire, use, and dispose of it. The Constitution protects these essential attributes of property. * * *

True it is that dominion over property springing from ownership is not absolute and unqualified. The disposition and use of property may be controlled in the exercise of the police power in the interest of the public health, convenience, or welfare. * * *

The concrete question here is: May the occupancy, and, necessarily, the purchase and sale of property of which occupancy is an incident, be inhibited by the states, or by one of its municipalities, solely because of the color of the proposed occupant of the premises? That one may dispose of his property, subject only to the control of lawful enactments curtailing that right in the public interest, must be conceded. The question now presented makes it pertinent to enquire into the constitutional right of the white man to sell his property to a colored man, having in view the legal status of the purchaser and occupant. * * *

The defendant in error insists that Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 537, is controlling in principle in favor of the judgment of the court below. * * * It is to be observed that in that case there was no attempt to deprive persons of color of transportation in the coaches of the public carrier, and the express requirements were for equal though separate accommodations for the white and colored races. In

Plessy v. Ferguson, classification of accommodation was permitted upon the basis of equality for both races. * * *

That there exists a serious and difficult problem arising from a feeling of race hostility which the law is powerless to control, and to which it must give a measure of consideration, may be freely admitted. But its solution cannot be promoted by depriving citizens of their constitutional rights and privileges. * * *

It is the purpose of such enactments, and, it is frankly avowed it will be their ultimate effect, to require by law, at least in residential districts, the compulsory separation of the races on account of color. Such action is said to be essential to the maintenance of the purity of the races, although it is to be noted in the ordinance under consideration that the employment of colored servants in white families is permitted, and nearby residences of colored persons not coming within the blocks, as defined in the ordinance, are not prohibited.

The case presented does not deal with an attempt to prohibit the amalgamation of the races. The right which the ordinance annulled was the civil right of a white man to dispose of his property if he saw fit to do so to a person of color and of a colored person to make such disposition to a white person.

It is urged that this proposed segregation will promote the public peace by preventing race conflicts. Desirable as this is, and important as is the preservation of the public peace, this aim cannot be accomplished by laws or ordinances which deny rights created or protected by the federal Constitution.

It is said that such acquisitions by colored persons depreciate property owned in the neighborhood by white persons. But property may be acquired by undesirable white neighbors or put to disagreeable though lawful uses with like results.

We think this attempt to prevent the alienation of the property in question to a person of color was not a legitimate exercise of the police power of the state, and is in direct violation of the fundamental law enacted in the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution preventing state interference with property rights except by due process of law. That being the case the ordinance cannot stand. Booth v. Illinois, 184 U. S. 425, 429; Otis v. Parker, 187 U. S. 606, 609.

Reaching this conclusion it follows that the judgment of the Kentucky Court of Appeals must be reversed, and the cause remanded to that court for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Reversed.

NOTE

1. It will be noted that the principal case was decided under the due process clause. It was criticised adversely as extending greater protection under the Constitution to the property rights of Negroes than to their personal rights. The decision encouraged the use of restrictive covenants inserted in deeds of conveyance of real property by which the successive purchasers bound themselves not to sell or lease the property to Negroes. What cities were forbidden to do by municipal regulation was done by individual property owners through private contracts. For discussions of segregation ordinances, restrictive covenants and conditional conveyances, see Martin, Segregating Residences of Negroes, 32 Mich. L. Rev. 721 (1934), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 1175; Bowman, The Constitution and Common Law Restraints on Alienation, 8 B. U. L. Rev. 1 (1928), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 1195. A recent case invalidating a racial zoning ordinance of Birmingham, Alabama, is Birmingham v. Monk, 185 F. (2d) 859 (C. A. 5th 1950).

SHELLEY v. KRAEMER.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1948.
334 U. S. 1, 92 L. ed. 1161, 68 Sup. Ct. 836, 3 A. L. R. (2d) 441.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE VINSON delivered the opinion of the Court.

These cases present for our consideration questions relating to the validity of court enforcement of private agreements, generally described as restrictive covenants, which have as their purpose the exclusion of persons of designated race or color from the ownership or occupancy of real property. Basic constitutional issues of obvious importance have been raised.

The first of these cases comes to this Court on certiorari to the Supreme Court of Missouri. On February 16, 1911, thirty out of a total of thirty-nine owners of property fronting both sides of Labadie Avenue between Taylor Avenue and Cora Avenue in the city of St. Louis, signed an agreement, which was subsequently recorded, providing in part:

"* * * the said property is hereby restricted to the use and occupancy for the term of Fifty (50) years from this date, so that it shall be a condition all the time and whether recited and referred to as [sic] not in subsequent conveyances and shall attach to the land, as a condition precedent to the sale of the same, that hereafter no part of said property or any portion thereof shall be, for said term of Fifty years, occupied by any person not of the Caucasian race, it being intended to restrict the use of said property for said period of time against the occupancy as owners or tenants of any portion of said property for resident or other purpose by people of the Negro or Mongolian Race."

The entire district described in the agreement included fifty-seven parcels of land. The thirty owners who signed the agreement held title to forty-seven parcels, including the particular parcel involved in this case. At the time the agreement was signed, five of the parcels in the district were owned by Negroes. One of those had been occupied by Negro families since 1882, nearly thirty years before the restrictive agreement was executed. The trial court found that owners of seven out of nine homes on the south side of Labadie Avenue, within the restricted district and "in the immediate vicinity" of the premises in question, had failed to sign the restrictive agreement in 1911. At the time this action was brought, four of the premises were occupied by Negroes, and had been so occupied for periods ranging from twenty-three to sixty-three years. A fifth parcel had been occupied by Negroes until a year before this suit was instituted.

On August 11, 1945, pursuant to a contract of sale, petitioners Shelley, who are Negroes, for valuable consideration received from one Fitzgerald a warranty deed to the parcel in question. The trial court found that petitioners had no actual knowledge of the restrictive agreement at the time of the purchase.

On October 9, 1945, respondents, as owners of other property subject to the terms of the restrictive covenant, brought suit in the Circuit Court of the city of St. Louis praying that petitioners Shelley be restrained from taking possession of the property and that judgment be entered divesting title out of petitioners Shelley and revesting title in the immediate grantor or in such other person as the court should direct. The trial court denied the requested relief on the ground that the restrictive agreement, upon which respondents based their action, had never become final and complete because it was the intention of the parties to the agreement that it was not to become effective until signed by all property owners in the district, and signatures of all the owners had never been obtained.

The Supreme Court of Missouri sitting en banc reversed and directed the trial court to grant the relief for which respondents had prayed. That court held the agreement effective and concluded that enforcement of its provisions violated no rights guaranteed to petitioners by the Federal Constitution. At the time the court rendered its decision, petitioners were occupying the property in question.

The second of the cases under consideration comes to this Court from the Supreme Court of Michigan. The circumstances presented do not differ materially from the Missouri case. In June, 1934, one Ferguson and his wife, who then owned the property located in the city of Detroit which is involved in this case, executed a contract providing in part:

"This property shall not be used or occupied by any person or persons except those of the Caucasian race.

"It is further agreed that this restriction shall not be effective unless at least eighty percent of the property fronting on both sides of the street in the block where our land is located is subjected to this or a similar restriction."

The agreement provided that the restrictions were to remain in effect until January 1, 1960. The contract was subsequently recorded; and similar agreements were executed with respect to eighty percent of the lots in the block in which the property in question is situated.

By deed dated November 30, 1944, petitioners, who were found by the trial court to be Negroes, acquired title to the property and thereupon entered into its occupancy. On January 30, 1945, respondents, as owners of property subject to the terms of the restrictive agreement, brought suit against petitioners in the Circuit Court of Wayne County. After a hearing, the court entered a decree directing petitioners to move from the property within ninety days. Petitioners were further enjoined and restrained from using or occupying the premises in the future. On appeal, the Supreme Court of Michigan affirmed, deciding adversely to petitioners' contentions that they had been denied rights protected by the Fourteenth Amendment.

Petitioners have placed primary reliance on their contentions, first raised in the state courts, that judicial enforcement of the restrictive agreements in these cases has violated rights guaranteed to petitioners by the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution and Acts of Congress passed pursuant to that Amendment. Specifically, petitioners urge that they have been denied the equal protection of the laws, deprived of property without due process of law, and have been denied privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States. We pass to a consideration of those issues.

Whether the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment inhibits judicial enforcement by state courts of restrictive covenants based on race or color is a question which this Court has not heretofore been called upon to consider. Only two cases have been decided by this Court which in any way have involved the enforcement of such agreements. The first of these was the case of Corrigan v. Buckley, 271 U. S. 323. There, suit was brought in the courts of the District of Columbia to enjoin a threatened violation of certain restrictive covenants relating to lands situated in the city of Washington. Relief was granted, and the case was brought here on appeal. It is apparent that that case, which had originated in the federal courts and involved the enforcement of covenants on land located in the District of Columbia, could present no issues under the Fourteenth Amendment; for that Amendment by its terms applies only to the States. Nor was the question of the validity of court enforcement of the restrictive covenants under the Fifth Amendment properly before the Court, as the opinion of this Court specifically recognizes. The only constitutional issue which the appellants had raised in the lower courts, and hence the only constitutional issue before this Court on appeal, was the validity of the covenant agreements as such. This Court concluded that since the inhibitions of the constitutional provisions invoked, apply only to governmental action, as contrasted to action of private individuals, there was no showing that the covenants, which were simply agreements between private property owners, were invalid. Accordingly, the appeal was dismissed for want of a substantial question. Nothing in the opinion of this Court, therefore, may properly be regarded as an adjudication on the merits of the constitutional issues presented by these cases, which raise the question of the validity, not of the private agreements as such, but of the judicial enforcement of those agreements.

The second of the cases involving racial restrictive covenants was Hansberry v. Lee, 311 U. S. 32. In that case, petitioners, white property owners, were enjoined by the state courts from violating the terms of a restrictive agreement. The state Supreme Court had held petitioners bound by an earlier judicial determination, in litigation in which petitioners were not parties, upholding the validity of the restrictive agreement, although, in fact, the agreement had not been signed by the number of owners necessary to make it effective under state law. This Court reversed the judgment of the state Supreme Court upon the ground that petitioners had been denied due process of law in being held estopped to challenge the validity of the agreement on the theory, accepted by the state court, that the earlier litigation, in which petitioners did not participate, was in the nature of a class suit. In arriving at its result, this Court did not reach the issues presented by the cases now under consideration.

It is well, at the outset, to scrutinize the terms of the restrictive agreements involved in these cases. In the Missouri case, the covenant declares that no part of the affected property shall be "occupied by any person not of the Caucasian race, it being intended hereby to restrict the use of said property * * * against the occupancy as owners or tenants of any portion of said property for resident or other purpose by people of the Negro or Mongolian Race." Not only does the restriction seek to proscribe use and occupancy of the affected properties by members of the excluded class, but as construed by the Missouri courts, the agreement requires that title of any person who uses his property in violation of the restriction shall be divested. The restriction of the covenant in the Michigan case seeks to bar occupancy by persons of the excluded class. It provides that "This property shall not be used or occupied by any person or persons except those of the Caucasian race." * * *

It cannot be doubted that among the civil rights intended to be protected from discriminatory state action by the Fourteenth Amendment are the rights to acquire, enjoy, own and dispose of property. Equality in the enjoyment of property rights was regarded by the framers of that Amendment as an essential pre-condition to the realization of other basic civil rights and liberties which the Amendment was intended to guarantee. Thus, § 1978 of the Revised Statutes, derived from § 1 of the Civil Rights Act of 1866 which was enacted by Congress while the Fourteenth Amendment was also under consideration, provides:

"All citizens of the United States shall have the same right, in every State and Territory, as is enjoyed by white citizens thereof to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property."

This Court has given specific recognition to the same principle. Buchanan v. Warley, 245 U. S. 60.

It is likewise clear that restrictions on the right of occupancy of the sort sought to be created by the private agreements in these cases could not be squared with the requirements of the Fourteenth Amendment if imposed by state statute or local ordinance. We do not understand respondents to urge the contrary. In the case of Buchanan v. Warley, supra, a unanimous Court declared unconstitutional the provisions of a city ordinance which denied to colored persons the right to occupy houses in blocks in which the greater number of houses were occupied by white persons, and imposed similar restrictions on white persons with respect to blocks in which the greater number of houses were occupied by colored persons. During the course of the opinion in that case, this Court stated: "The Fourteenth Amendment and these statutes enacted in furtherance of its purpose operate to qualify and entitle a colored man to acquire property without state legislation discriminating against him solely because of color."

In Harmon v. Tyler, 273 U. S. 668, a unanimous Court, on the authority of Buchanan v. Warley, supra, declared invalid an ordinance which forbade any Negro to establish a home on any property in a white community, "except on the written consent of a majority of the persons of the opposite race inhabiting such community or portion of the City to be affected."

The precise question before this Court in both the Buchanan and Harmon cases, involved the rights of white sellers to dispose of their properties free from restrictions as to potential purchasers based on considerations of race or color. But that such legislation is also offensive to the rights of those desiring to acquire and occupy property and barred on grounds of race or color, is clear, not only from the language of the opinion in Buchanan v. Warley, supra, but from this Court's disposition of the case of Richmond v. Deans, 281 U. S. 704. There, a Negro, barred from the occupancy of certain property by the terms of an ordinance similar to that in the Buchanan case, sought injunctive relief in the federal courts to enjoin the enforcement of the ordinance, on the grounds that its provisions violated the terms of the Fourteenth Amendment. Such relief was granted, and this Court affirmed, finding the citation of Buchanan v. Warley, supra, and Harmon v. Tyler, supra, sufficient to support its judgment.

But the present cases, unlike those just discussed, do not involve action by state legislatures or city councils. Here the particular patterns of discrimination and the areas in which the restrictions are to operate, are determined, in the first instance, by the terms of agreements among private individuals. Participation of the State consists in the enforcement of the restrictions so defined. The crucial issue with which we are here confronted is whether this distinction removes these cases from the operation of the prohibitory provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Since the decision of this Court in the Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 3, the principle has become firmly embedded in our constitutional law that the action inhibited by the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment is only such action as may fairly be said to be that of the States. That Amendment erects no shield against merely private conduct, however discriminatory or wrongful.

We conclude, therefore, that the restrictive agreements standing alone cannot be regarded as a violation of any rights guaranteed to petitioners by the Fourteenth Amendment. So long as the purposes of those agreements are effectuated by voluntary adherence to their terms, it would appear clear that there has been no action by the State and the provisions of the Amendment have not been violated. Cf. Corrigan v. Buckley, supra.

But here there was more. These are cases in which the purposes of the agreements were secured only by judicial enforcement by state courts of the restrictive terms of the agreements. The respondents urge that judicial enforcement of private agreements does not amount to state action; or, in any event, the participation of the State is so attenuated in character as not to amount to state action within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment. Finally, it is suggested, even if the States in these cases may be deemed to have acted in the constitutional sense, their action did not deprive petitioners of rights guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. We move to a consideration of these matters.

That the action of state courts and of judicial officers in their official capacities is to be regarded as action of the State within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment, is a proposition which has long been established by decisions of this Court. That principle was given expression in the earliest cases involving the construction of the terms of the Fourteenth Amendment. Thus, in Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 313, 318, this Court stated: "It is doubtless true that a State may act through different agencies—either by its legislative, its executive, or its judicial authorities; and the prohibitions of the amendment extend to all action of the State denying equal protection of the laws, whether it be action by one of these agencies or by another." In Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 347, the Court observed: "A State acts by its legislative, its executive, or its judicial authorities. It can act in no other way."

* * *

In numerous cases, this Court has reversed criminal convictions in state courts for failure of those courts to provide the essential ingredients of a fair hearing. Thus it has been held that convictions obtained in state courts under the domination of a mob are void. Moore v. Dempsey, 261 U. S. 86. And see Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S. 309. Convictions obtained by coerced confessions, by the use of perjured testimony known by the prosecution to be such, or without the effective assistance of counsel, have been held also to be exertions of state authority in conflict with the fundamental rights protected by the Fourteenth Amendment.

But the examples of state judicial action which have been held by this Court to violate the Amendment's commands are not restricted to situations in which the judicial proceedings were found in some manner to be procedurally unfair. It has been recognized that the action of state courts in enforcing a substantive common-law rule formulated by those courts, may result in the denial of rights guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment, even though the judicial proceedings in such cases may have been in complete accord with the most rigorous conceptions of procedural due process. Thus, in American Federation of Labor v. Swing, 312 U. S. 321, enforcement by state courts of the common-law policy of the State, which resulted in the restraining of peaceful picketing, was held to be state action of the sort prohibited by the Amendment's guaranties of freedom of discussion. In Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U. S. 296, a conviction in a state court of the common-law crime of breach of the peace was, under the circumstances of the case, found to be a violation of the Amendment's commands relating to freedom of religion. In Bridges v. California, 314 U. S. 252, enforcement of the state's common-law rule relating to contempts by publication was held to be state action inconsistent with the prohibitions of the Fourteenth Amendment. * * *

The short of the matter is that from the time of the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment until the present, it has been the consistent ruling of this Court that the action of the States to which the Amendment has reference, includes action of state courts and state judicial officials. Although in construing the terms of the Fourteenth Amendment, differences have from time to time been expressed as to whether particular types of state action may be said to offend the Amendment's prohibitory provisions, it has never been suggested that state court action is immunized from the operation of those provisions simply because the act is that of the judicial branch of the state government.

* * *

We have no doubt that there has been state action in these cases in the full and complete sense of the phrase. The undisputed facts disclose that petitioners were willing purchasers of properties upon which they desired to establish homes. The owners of the properties were willing sellers; and contracts of sale were accordingly consummated. It is clear that but for the active intervention of the state courts, supported by the full panoply of state power, petitioners would have been free to occupy the properties in question without restraint.

These are not cases, as has been suggested, in which the States have merely abstained from action, leaving private individuals free to impose such discriminations as they see fit. Rather, these are cases in which the States have made available to such individuals the full coercive power of government to deny to petitioners, on the grounds of race or color, the enjoyment of property rights in premises which petitioners are willing and financially able to acquire and which the grantors are willing to sell. The difference between judicial enforcement and non-enforcement of the restrictive covenants is the difference to petitioners between being denied rights of property available to other members of the community and being accorded full enjoyment of those rights on an equal footing.

The enforcement of the restrictive agreements by the state courts in these cases was directed pursuant to the common-law policy of the States as formulated by those courts in earlier decisions. In the Missouri case, enforcement of the covenant was directed in the first instance by the highest court of the State after the trial court had determined the agreement to be invalid for want of the requisite number of signatures. In the Michigan case, the order of enforcement by the trial court was affirmed by the highest state court. The judicial action in each case bears the clear and unmistakable imprimatur of the State. We have noted that previous decisions of this Court have established the proposition that judicial action is not immunized from the operation of the Fourteenth Amendment simply because it is taken pursuant to the state's common-law policy. Nor is the Amendment ineffective simply because the particular pattern of discrimination, which the State has enforced, was defined initially by the terms of a private agreement. State action, as that phrase is understood for the purpose of the Fourteenth Amendment, refers to exertions of state power in all forms. And when the effect of that action is to deny rights subject to the protection of the Fourteenth Amendment, it is the obligation of this Court to enforce the constitutional commands.

We hold that in granting judicial enforcement of the restrictive agreements in these cases, the States have denied petitioners the equal protection of the laws and that, therefore, the action of the state courts cannot stand. We have noted that freedom from discrimination by the States in the enjoyment of property rights was among the basic objectives sought to be effectuated by the framers of the Fourteenth Amendment. That such discrimination has occurred in these cases is clear. Because of the race or color of these petitioners they have been denied rights of ownership or occupancy enjoyed as a matter of course by other citizens of different race or color. The Fourteenth Amendment declares "that all persons, whether colored or white, shall stand equal before the laws of the States, and, in regard to the colored race, for whose protection the Amendment was primarily designed, that no discrimination shall be made against them by law because of their color." * * * ownership or occupancy of property covered by such agreements, enforcement of covenants excluding colored persons may not be deemed a denial of equal protection of the laws to the colored persons who are thereby affected. This contention does not bear scrutiny. The parties have directed our attention to no case in which a court, state or federal, has been called upon to enforce a covenant excluding members of the white majority from ownership or occupancy of real property on grounds of race or color. But there are more fundamental considerations. The rights created by the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment are, by its terms, guaranteed to the individual. The rights established are personal rights. It is, therefore, no answer to these petitioners to say that the courts may also be induced to deny white persons rights of ownership and occupancy on grounds of race or color. Equal protection of the laws is not achieved through indiscriminate imposition of inequalities.

Respondents urge, however, that since the state courts stand ready to enforce restrictive covenants excluding white persons from the

Nor do we find merit in the suggestion that property owners who are parties to these agreements are denied equal protection of the laws if denied access to the courts to enforce the terms of restrictive covenants and to assert property rights which the state courts have held to be created by such agreements. The Constitution confers upon no individual the right to demand action by the state which results in the denial of equal protection of the laws to other individuals. And it would appear beyond question that the power of the State to create and enforce property interests must be exercised within the boundaries defined by the Fourteenth Amendment. Cf. Marsh v. Alabama, 326 U. S. 501. * * *

The historical context in which the Fourteenth Amendment became a part of the Constitution should not be forgotten. Whatever else the framers sought to achieve, it is clear that the matter of primary concern was the establishment of equality in the enjoyment of basic civil and political rights and the preservation of those rights from discriminatory action on the part of the States based on considerations of race or color. Seventy-five years ago this Court announced that the provisions of the Amendment are to be construed with this fundamental purpose in mind. Upon full consideration, we have concluded that in these cases the States have acted to deny petitioners the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment. Having so decided, we find it unnecessary to consider whether petitioners have also been deprived of property without due process of law or denied privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States.

For the reasons stated, the judgment of the Supreme Court of Missouri and the judgment of the Supreme Court of Michigan must be reversed.

Reversed.

MR. JUSTICE REED, MR. JUSTICE JACKSON, and MR. JUSTICE RUTLEDGE took no part in the consideration or decision of these cases.

NOTES

1. In the companion case of Hurd v. Hodge, 334 U. S. 24, 92 L. ed. 1187, 68 Sup. Ct. 847 (1948) the Supreme Court also invalidated the judicial enforcement of racial restrictive covenants by the federal courts of the District of Columbia. Here, however, the court rested its decision on the ground that the challenged judicial action violated the guaranties of the federal Civil Rights Act of 1866 (now 42 U. S. C. § 1982; F. C. A. 42 § 1982) which provides that "all citizens of the United States shall have the same right, in every state and territory, as is enjoyed by white citizens thereof to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property." The court also held that, even in the absence of the statute, the enforcement of the covenants was contrary to the public policy of the United States and, as such, should be corrected in the exercise of the court's supervisory powers over the District of Columbia courts. The court said: "White sellers, one of whom is a petitioner here, have been enjoined from selling the properties to any Negro or colored person. Under such circumstances, to suggest that the Negro petitioners have been accorded the same rights as white citizens to purchase, hold and convey real property is to reject the plain meaning of language." See also the dissenting opinion of Judge Edgerton in the court below, 162 F. (2d) 233, 82 App. D. C. 180 (1947).

2. For some twenty years Corrigan v. Buckley, 271 U. S. 323, 70 L. ed. 969, 46 Sup. Ct. 521 (1926), distinguished in the principal case, had been cited as authority for the proposition that racial restrictive covenants excluding Negroes from residential areas were both valid and enforceable. The blue-print for the constitutional attack which came to fruition in Shelley v. Kraemer and Hurd v. Hodge was drawn by the late Professor McGovney in his forthright and cogent analysis: Racial Residential Segregation by State Court Enforcement of Restrictive Agreements, Covenants or Conditions in Deeds is Unconstitutional, 33 Cal. L. Rev. 5 (1945). For discussions of the cases see Ming, Racial Restrictions and the Fourteenth Amendment: The Restrictive Covenant Cases, 16 U. of Chi. L. Rev. 203 (1949); Scanlan, Racial Restrictions in Real Estate—Property Values Versus Human Values, 24 Notre Dame Lawyer 157 (1948); Lowe, Racial Restrictive Covenants, 1 Ala. L. Rev. 15 (1948); Crooks, The Racial Covenant Cases, 37 Geo. L. Rev. 514 (1949); Lathrop, The Racial Covenant Cases, 1948 Wis. L. Rev. 508; Sayre, Shelley v. Kraemer and United Nations Law, 34 Iowa L. Rev. 1 (1948); Comment, 21 So. Cal. L. Rev. 358 (1948); Note, 61 Harv. L. Rev. 1450 (1948); Note, 48 Col. L. Rev. 1241 (1948). See also, generally, Waite, The Negro in the Supreme Court, 30 Minn. L. Rev. 219 (1946); Watt and Orlikoff, The Coming Vindication of Mr. Justice Harlan, 44 Ill. L. Rev. 13 (1949).

3. In Barrows v. Jackson, 346 U. S. 249, 97 L. ed. 1586, 73 Sup. Ct. 1031 (1953) the issue was whether a racial restrictive covenant can be enforced in a suit at law for damages against a co-covenantor. The owners of residential estates in the same neighborhood in Los Angeles entered into a covenant, running with the land, restricting the use and occupancy thereof to persons of the white or Caucasian race, and obligating the signers to incorporate this restriction in all transfers of land. For breaching the covenant in both respects, an action for damages was brought against defendant by other signers. No action was taken against the non-Caucasian occupants. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained by the trial court and this was affirmed by the district court of appeal, in view of the holding in Shelley v. Kraemer. On certiorari, "because of the importance of the constitutional question involved and to consider the conflict which has arisen in the decisions of the state courts since our ruling in the Shelley case," the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that award by a state court of damages against a covenantor for breach of the restrictive covenant would constitute state action which would deprive non-Caucasians, unidentified but identifiable, of equal protection of the laws in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. The opinion by Mr. Justice Minton said: "This court will not permit or require California to coerce respondent to respond in damages for failure to observe a restrictive covenant that this court would deny California the right to enforce in equity, Shelley, supra; or that this court would deny California the right to incorporate in a statute, Buchanan v. Warley, 245 U. S. 60; or that could not be enforced in a federal jurisdiction because such a covenant would be contrary to public policy." Chief Justice Vinson dissented on the ground that the defendant had not shown that she was, herself, a victim of unconstitutional discrimination. He said: "The plain, admitted fact that there is no identifiable non-Caucasian before this court who will be denied any right to buy, occupy or otherwise enjoy the properties involved in this lawsuit, or any other particular properties, is decisive to me."

Prior to this decision, state courts had reached divergent views on the question involved. Like the California courts, the Supreme Court of Michigan had sustained a dismissal of a claim for damages for breach of a racial restrictive covenant, Phillips v. Naff, 332 Mich. 389, 52 N. W. (2d) 158 (1952). The Supreme Court of Missouri reached a contrary result, Weiss v. Leon, 359 Mo. 1054, 225 S. W. (2d) 127 (1949), while the Supreme Court of Oklahoma had held that a claim for damages might be maintained against a white seller, an intermediate straw man, and a non-Caucasian purchaser for a conspiracy to violate the covenant, Correll v. Earley, 205 Okla. 366, 237 Pac. (2d) 1017 (1951). See Note, 37 Cal. L. Rev. 493 (1949); Groves, Judicial Interpretations of the Holdings of the United States Supreme Court in the Restrictive Covenant Cases, 45 Ill. L. Rev. 614 (1950).

4. Statutes in effect in a considerable number of states forbid the intermarriage of white persons and persons of various colored races. Prior to the decision of the Supreme Court of California in Perez v. Sharp, 32 Cal. (2d) 711, 198 Pac. (2d) 17 (1948), invalidating the California law prohibiting "marriages of white persons with Negroes, Mongolians, members of the Malay race, or mulattoes," such statutes were repeatedly held constitutional. In the Perez case, in a four to three decision, it was held that the right to marry the person of one's choice is a fundamental human right and that "legislation infringing such rights must be based upon more than prejudice and must be free from oppressive discrimination to comply with the constitutional requirements of due process and equal protection of the laws." For discussions of the case see Comment, 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 27 (1948); Comment, 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 31 (1948). See also Note, 58 Yale L. J. 472 (1949).

Section 3.—Discrimination Against Aliens.

YICK WO v. HOPKINS.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1886.
118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064.

[The city and county of San Francisco enacted an ordinance as follows: "It shall be unlawful, from and after the passage of this order, for any person or persons to establish, maintain, or carry on a laundry within the corporate limits of the city and county of San Francisco without having first obtained the consent of the board of supervisors, except the same be located in a building constructed either of brick or stone." Violation of the ordinance was made a misdemeanor punishable by fine or imprisonment. Yick Wo was convicted thereunder and committed for non-payment of a fine imposed. He applied to the Supreme Court of California for a writ of habeas corpus, contending that he was being held in violation of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The following allegations of fact were admitted: that Yick Wo was an alien of Chinese descent; that he had conducted a laundry in the same building for 22 years; that he had applied for and had been refused a renewal of his license; that his building had been inspected by the fire warden and approved; that his laundry had been inspected by the sanitary inspectors and approved; that of the 320 laundries in the city 240 were owned by Chinese aliens and that 310 were constructed of wood, as was Yick Wo's; that 200 Chinese who had applied for laundry licenses had been denied them, while all applications by persons who were not Chinese had been granted, with a single exception. The Supreme Court of California denied the petition and this writ of error was taken. Wo Lee, another Chinese alien, convicted upon like facts, petitioned a Circuit Court of the United States for a writ of habeas corpus. The petition was denied and his appeal to the United States Supreme Court was considered along with Yick Wo's writ of error.]

MR. JUSTICE MATTHEWS delivered the opinion of the Court.

* * *

The ordinance drawn in question in the present case * * * does not prescribe a rule and conditions for the regulation of the use of property for laundry purposes, to which all similarly situated may conform. It allows without restriction the use for such purposes of buildings of brick or stone; but, as to wooden buildings, constituting nearly all those in previous use, it divides the owners or occupiers into two classes, not having respect to their personal character and qualifications for the business, nor the situation and nature and adaptation of the buildings themselves, but merely by an arbitrary line, on one side of which are those who are permitted to pursue their industry by the mere will and consent of the supervisors, and on the other those from whom that consent is withheld, at their mere will and pleasure. And both classes are alike only in this, that they are tenants at will, under the supervisors, of their means of living. The ordinance, therefore, also differs from the not unusual case, where discretion is lodged by law in public officers or bodies to grant or withhold licenses to keep taverns, or places for the sale of spirituous liquors, and the like, when one of the conditions is that the applicant shall be a fit person for the exercise of the privilege, because in such cases the fact of fitness is submitted to the judgment of the officer, and calls for the exercise of a discretion of a judicial nature.

The rights of the petitioners, as affected by the proceedings of which they complain, are not less, because they are aliens and subjects of the Emperor of China. * * *

The Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution is not confined to the protection of citizens. It says: "Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." These provisions are universal in their application, to all persons within the territorial jurisdiction, without regard to any difference of race, or color, or of nationality, and the equal protection of the laws is a pledge of the protection of equal laws. * * *

It is contended on the part of the petitioners, that the ordinances for violations of which they are severally sentenced to imprisonment, are void on their face, as being within the prohibitions of the Fourteenth Amendment; and, in the alternative, if not so, that they are void by reason of their administration, operating unequally, so as to punish in the present petitioners what is permitted to others as lawful, without any distinction of circumstances—an unjust and illegal discrimination, it is claimed, which, though not made expressly by the ordinances, is made possible by them.

When we consider the nature and the theory of our institutions of government, the principles upon which they are supposed to rest, and review the history of their development, we are constrained to conclude that they do not mean to leave room for the play and action of purely personal and arbitrary power. Sovereignty itself is, of course, not subject to law, for it is the author and source of law; but in our system, while sovereign powers are delegated to the agencies of government, sovereignty itself remains with the people, by whom and for whom all government exists and acts. And the law is the definition and limitation of power. It is, indeed, quite true, that there must always be lodged somewhere, and in some person or body, the authority of final decision; and in many cases of mere administration the responsibility is purely political, no appeal lying except to the ultimate tribunal of the public judgment, exercised either in the pressure of opinion or by means of the suffrage. But the fundamental rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, considered as individual possessions, are secured by those maxims of constitutional law which are the monuments showing the victorious progress of the race in securing to men the blessings of civilization under the reign of just and equal laws, so that, in the famous language of the Massachusetts Bill of Rights, the government of the Commonwealth "may be a government of laws and not of men." For, the very idea that one man may be compelled to hold his life, or the means of living, or any material right essential to the enjoyment of life, at the mere will of another, seems to be intolerable in any country where freedom prevails, as being the essence of slavery itself.

* * *

In the present cases, we are not obliged to reason from the probable to the actual, and pass upon the validity of the ordinances complained of, as tried merely by the opportunities which their terms afford, of unequal and unjust discrimination in their administration. For the cases present the ordinances in actual operation, and the facts shown establish an administration directed so exclusively against a particular class of persons as to warrant and require the conclusion, that, whatever may have been the intent of the ordinances as adopted, they are applied by the public authorities charged with their administration, and thus representing the state itself, with a mind so unequal and oppressive as to amount to a practical denial by the state of that equal protection of the laws which is secured to the petitioners, as to all other persons, by the broad and benign provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Though the law itself be fair on its face and impartial in appearance, yet, if it is applied and administered by public authority with an evil eye and an unequal hand, so as practically to make unjust and illegal discriminations between persons in similar circumstances, material to their rights, the denial of equal justice is still within the prohibition of the Constitution. * * *

The present cases, as shown by the facts disclosed in the record, are within this class. It appears that both petitioners have complied with every requisite, deemed by the law or by the public officers charged with its administration, necessary for the protection of neighboring property from fire, or as a precaution against injury to the public health. No reason whatever, except the will of the supervisors, is assigned why they should not be permitted to carry on, in the accustomed manner, their harmless and useful occupation, on which they depend for a livelihood. And while this consent of the supervisors is withheld from them and from two hundred others who have also petitioned, all of whom happen to be Chinese subjects, eighty others, not Chinese subjects, are permitted to carry on the same business under similar conditions. The fact of this discrimination is admitted. No reason for it is shown, and the conclusion cannot be resisted, that no reason for it exists except hostility to the race and nationality to which the petitioners belong, and which in the eye of the law is not justified. The discrimination is, therefore, illegal, and the public administration which enforces it is a denial of the equal protection of the laws and a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution. The imprisonment of the petitioners is, therefore, illegal, and they must be discharged.

NOTE

1. "The purpose of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment is to secure every person within the state's jurisdiction against intentional and arbitrary discrimination, whether occasioned by express terms of a statute or by its improper execution through duly constituted agents." Sunday Lake Iron Co. v. Wakefield, 247 U. S. 350, 62 L. ed. 1154, 38 Sup. Ct. 495 (1918).

TRUAX v. RAICH.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1915.
239 U. S. 33, 60 L. ed. 131, 36 Sup. Ct. 7.

[Bill for an injunction in the United States District Court for the District of Arizona. Decree granted and defendants appeal.]

MR. JUSTICE HUGHES delivered the opinion of the Court.

Under the initiative provision of the Constitution of Arizona (Art. IV, § 1), there was adopted the following measure which was proclaimed by the Governor as a law of the state on December 14, 1914: [The enactment required every employer of more than five workers at any one time in Arizona to employ not less than 80% who were qualified electors or native-born citizens of the United States. Violation was declared a misdemeanor subject to a fine of not less than $100 and imprisonment for not less than 30 days.] * * *

Mike Raich (the appellee), a native of Austria, and an inhabitant of the State of Arizona but not a qualified elector, was employed as a cook by the appellant William Truax, Sr., in his restaurant in the City of Bisbee, Cochise County. Truax had nine employes, of whom seven were neither "native-born citizens" of the United States nor qualified electors. After the election at which the act was passed Raich was informed by his employer that when the law was proclaimed, and solely by reason of its requirements and because of the fear of the penalties that would be incurred in case of its violation, he would be discharged. Thereupon, on December 15, 1914, Raich filed this bill in the District Court of the United States for the District of Arizona, asserting among other things that the act denied to him the equal protection of the laws and hence was contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. Wiley E. Jones, the attorney general of the state, and W. G. Gilmore, the county attorney of Cochise County, were made defendants in addition to the employer Truax, upon the allegation that these officers would prosecute the employer unless he complied with its terms and that in order to avoid such a prosecution the employer was about to discharge the complainant. Averring that there was no adequate remedy at law, the bill sought a decree declaring the act to be unconstitutional and restraining action thereunder.

Soon after the bill was filed, an application was made for an injunction pendente lite. After notice of this application, Truax was arrested for a violation of the act, upon a complaint prepared by one of the assistants in the office of the County Attorney of Cochise County, and as it appeared that by reason of the determination of the officers to enforce the act there was danger of the complainant's immediate discharge from employment, the district judge granted a temporary restraining order.

The allegations of the bill were not controverted. The defendants joined in a motion to dismiss upon the grounds (1) that the suit was against the State of Arizona without its consent; (2) that it was sought to enjoin the enforcement of a criminal statute; (3) that the bill did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in equity; and (4) that there was an improper joinder of parties and the plaintiff was not entitled to sue for the relief asked. The application for an interlocutory injunction and the motion to dismiss were then heard before three judges, as required by section 266 of the Judicial Code. The motion to dismiss was denied and an interlocutory injunction restraining the defendants, the attorney general and the county attorney, and their successors and assistants, from enforcing the act against the defendant Truax, was granted. 219 Fed. 273. This direct appeal has been taken.

As the bill is framed upon the theory that the act is unconstitutional, and that the defendants who are public officers concerned with the enforcement of the laws of the State are about to proceed wrongfully to the complainant's injury through interference with his employment, it is established that the suit cannot be regarded as one against the State. Whatever doubt existed in this class of cases was removed by the decision in Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 155, 161, which has repeatedly been followed. * * *

It is also settled that while a court of equity, generally speaking, has "no jurisdiction over the prosecution, the punishment or the pardon of crimes or misdemeanors" (In re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 200, 210), a distinction obtains, and equitable jurisdiction exists to restrain criminal prosecutions under unconstitutional enactments, when the prevention of such prosecutions is essential to the safeguarding of rights of property. Davis & Farnum Mfg. Co. v. Los Angeles, 189 U. S. 207, 218; Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 223, 241; Ex parte Young, supra; Philadelphia Co. v. Stimson, 223 U. S. 605, 621. The right to earn a livelihood and to continue in employment unmolested by efforts to enforce void enactments should similarly be entitled to protection in the absence of adequate remedy at law. It is said that the bill does not show an employment for a term, and that under an employment at will the complainant could be discharged at any time for any reason or for no reason, the motive of the employer being immaterial. The conclusion, however, that is sought to be drawn is too broad. The fact that the employment is at the will of the parties, respectively, does not make it one at the will of others. The employé has manifest interest in the freedom of the employer to exercise his judgment without illegal interference or compulsion and, by the weight of authority, the unjustified interference of third persons is actionable although the employment is at will. * * * It is further urged that the complainant cannot sue save to redress his own grievance (McCabe v. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry., 235 U. S. 151, 162); that is, that the servant cannot complain for the master, and that it is the master who is subject to prosecution, and not the complainant. But the act undertakes to operate directly upon the employment of aliens and if enforced would compel the employer to discharge a sufficient number of his employés to bring the alien quota within the prescribed limit. It sufficiently appears that the discharge of the complainant will be solely for the purpose of meeting the requirements of the act and avoiding threatened prosecution under its provisions. It is, therefore, idle to call the injury indirect or remote. It is also entirely clear that unless the enforcement of the act is restrained the complainant will have no adequate remedy, and hence we think that the case falls within the class in which, if the unconstitutionality of the act is shown, equitable relief may be had.

The question then is whether the act assailed is repugnant to the Fourteenth Amendment. Upon the allegations of the bill, it must be assumed that the complainant, a native of Austria, has been admitted to the United States under the federal law. He was thus admitted with the privilege of entering and abiding in the United States, and hence of entering and abiding in any state in the Union. See Gegiov v. Uhl, 239 U. S. 3. Being lawfully an inhabitant of Arizona, the complainant is entitled under the Fourteenth Amendment to the equal protection of its laws. The description—"any person within its jurisdiction"—as it has frequently been held, includes aliens. * * * The discrimination defined by the act does not pertain to the regulation or distribution of the public domain, or of the common property or resources of the people of the state, the enjoyment of which may be limited to its citizens as against both aliens and the citizens of other states. Thus in McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 396, the restriction to the citizens of Virginia of the right to plant oysters in one of its rivers was sustained upon the ground that the regulation related to the common property of the citizens of the state, and an analogous principle was involved in Patsone v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 138, 145, 146, where the discrimination against aliens upheld by the court had for its object the protection of wild game within the states with respect to which it was said that the state could exercise its preserving power for the benefit of its own citizens if it pleased. The case now presented is not within these decisions, or within those relating to the devolution of real property (Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483; Blythe v. Hinckley, 180 U. S. 333, 341, 342); and it should be added that the act is not limited to persons who are engaged on public work or receive the benefit of public moneys. The discrimination here involved is imposed upon the conduct of ordinary private enterprise.

The act, it will be observed, provides that every employer (whether corporation, partnership, or individual) who employs more than five workers at any one time "regardless of kind or class of work, or sex of workers" shall employ "not less than eighty per cent. qualified electors or native born citizens of the United States or some subdivision thereof." It thus covers the entire field of industry with the exception of enterprises that are relatively very small. Its application in the present case is to employment in a restaurant the business of which requires nine employees. The purpose of an act must be found in its natural operation and effect (Henderson v. Mayor, 92 U. S. 259, 268; Bailey v. Alabama, 219 U. S. 219, 244), and the purpose of this act is not only plainly shown by its provisions, but it is frankly revealed in its title. It is there described as "An act to protect the citizens of the United States in their employment against non-citizens of the United States, in Arizona." As the appellants rightly say, there has been no subterfuge. It is an act aimed at the employment of aliens, as such, in the businesses described. * * *

It is sought to justify this act as an exercise of the power of the state to make reasonable classifications in legislating to promote the health, safety, morals and welfare of those within its jurisdiction. But this admitted authority, with the broad range of legislative discretion that it implies, does not go so far as to make it possible for the state to deny to lawful inhabitants, because of their race or nationality, the ordinary means of earning a livelihood. It requires no argument to show that the right to work for a living in the common occupations of the community is of the very essence of the personal freedom and opportunity that it was the purpose of the Amendment to secure. * * * If this could be refused solely upon the ground of race or nationality, the prohibition of the denial to any person of the equal protection of the laws would be a barren form of words. It is no answer to say, as it is argued, that the act proceeds upon the assumption that "the employment of aliens unless restrained was a peril to the public welfare." The discrimination against aliens in the wide range of employments to which the act relates is made an end in itself and thus the authority to deny to aliens, upon the mere fact of their alienage, the right to obtain support in the ordinary fields of labor is necessarily involved. It must also be said that reasonable classification implies action consistent with the legitimate interests of the state, and it will not be disputed that these cannot be so broadly conceived as to bring them into hostility to exclusive federal power. The authority to control immigration—to admit or exclude aliens—is vested solely in the Federal Government. Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698, 713. The assertion of an authority to deny to aliens the opportunity of earning a livelihood when lawfully admitted to the state would be tantamount to the assertion of the right to deny them entrance and abode, for in ordinary cases they cannot live where they cannot work. And, if such a policy were permissible, the practical result would be that those lawfully admitted to the country under the authority of the acts of Congress, instead of enjoying in a substantial sense and in their full scope the privileges conferred by the admission, would be segregated in such of the states as chose to offer hospitality.

It is insisted that the act should be supported because it is not "a total deprivation of the right of the alien to labor"; that is, the restriction is limited to those businesses in which more than five workers are employed, and to the ratio fixed. It is emphasized that the employer in any line of business who employs more than five workers may employ aliens to the extent of twenty per cent. of his employees. But the fallacy of this argument at once appears. If the state is at liberty to treat the employment of aliens as in itself a peril requiring restraint regardless of kind or class of work, it cannot be denied that the authority exists to make its measures to that end effective. Otis v. Parker, 187 U. S. 606; Silz v. Hesterburg, 211 U. S. 31; Purity Co. v. Lynch, 226 U. S. 192. If the restriction to twenty per cent. now imposed is maintainable the state undoubtedly has the power if it sees fit to make the percentage less. We have nothing before us to justify the limitation to twenty per cent. save the judgment expressed in the enactment, and if that is sufficient, it is difficult to see why the apprehension and conviction thus evidenced would not be sufficient were the restriction extended so as to permit only ten per cent. of the employees to be aliens or even a less percentage, or were it made applicable to all businesses in which more than three workers were employed instead of applying to those employing more than five. We have frequently said that the legislature may recognize degrees of evil and adapt its legislation accordingly (St. Louis Consol. Coal Co. v. Illinois, 185 U. S. 203, 207; McLean v. Arkansas, 211 U. S. 539, 551; Miller v. Wilson, 236 U. S. 373, 384); but underlying the classification is the authority to deal with that at which the legislation is aimed. The restriction now sought to be sustained is such as to suggest no limit to the state's power of excluding aliens from employment if the principle underlying the prohibition of the act is conceded. No special public interest with respect to any particular business is shown that could possibly be deemed to support the enactment, for as we have said it relates to every sort. The discrimination is against aliens as such in competition with citizens in the described range of enterprises and in our opinion it clearly falls under the condemnation of the fundamental law. * * * Order affirmed.

[MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS, conceding that the challenged act was invalid, dissented on the ground that the suit was against the State and thus barred by the Eleventh Amendment.]

NOTES

1. In Heim v. McCall, 239 U. S. 175, 60 L. ed. 206, 36 Sup. Ct. 78, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 287 (1915) a New York statute was upheld which provided that in the construction of public works by the state or a municipality only citizens of the United States should be employed. The decision was not rested on the ground that aliens might make less desirable laborers than citizens but on the proposition that the state as an employer has the same freedom to discriminate against any class in the selection of its employees as that enjoyed by an individual employer. The court regarded Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 48 L. ed. 148, 24 Sup. Ct. 124 (1903), as determinative of the constitutional issue. The statute upheld in that case forbade the employment of workmen more than eight hours per day by any contractor in the execution of contracts with the state or any of its counties, cities, or other municipal subdivisions, and required the payment of not less than the current rate of per diem wages in that locality. It has been pointed out in a careful analysis of the issues involved that no such discrimination as that present in the New York statute was before the court in Atkin v. Kansas, and that the decision in that case cannot properly be regarded as authority for Heim v. McCall. See Powell, The Right to Work for the State, 16 Col. L. Rev. 99 (1916), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 1237. See also Note, Constitutionality of Legislative Discrimination Against the Alien in his Right to Work, 83 U. of Pa. L. Rev. 74 (1934), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 1251. In this connection note the recently enacted (1945) New York Law Against Discrimination (N. Y. Exec. Law, Art. 15, §§ 290-301) which provides, inter alia, that "the opportunity to obtain employment without discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin is hereby recognized as and declared to be a civil right."

2. In Patson v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 138, 58 L. ed. 539, 34 Sup. Ct. 281 (1914) it was held that resident aliens may be forbidden shooting wild game within the state. The law was challenged under the Fourteenth Amendment as unjustifiably depriving aliens of property and as discriminating against them as a class. The decision was rested partly upon the view that wild game is the common property of the citizens of the state, as recognized in decisions holding that even citizens of other states may be forbidden to kill or capture it or subjected to discriminatory fees for hunting and fishing licenses, and partly on the idea that since the state may forbid the killing or capturing of the game absolutely, it may exercise an arbitrary power to preserve it for one class of persons while denying it to another class. "It is not enough to invalidate the law that others may do the same thing and go unpunished, if as a matter of fact, it is found that the danger is characteristic of the class named."

OHIO EX REL. CLARKE v. DECKEBACH.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1927.

274 U. S. 392, 71 L. ed. 1115, 47 Sup. Ct. 630.

MR. JUSTICE STONE delivered the opinion of the Court.

An ordinance, No. 76-1918, of the City of Cincinnati, requires the licensing of pool and billiard rooms, and prohibits the issue of licenses to aliens. Plaintiff in error petitioned the Supreme Court of Ohio for a writ of mandamus commanding defendant in error, the auditor of Cincinnati, to grant him a license to conduct a billiard and pool room in that city. The petition alleged that plaintiff was a subject of the King of England and that he had been refused a license solely because he was not a citizen. It drew in question the validity of the ordinance as violating Art. I of the treaty between Great Britain and the United States of July 3, 1815, 8 Stat. 228; August 6, 1927, 8 Stat. 361; 1 Malloy, Treaties, 624, 645, and as denying the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment.

Defendant answered, traversing the allegation of citizenship, and asserting that billiard and pool rooms in the City of Cincinnati are meeting places of idle and vicious persons; that they are frequented by lawbreakers and other undesirable persons, and contribute to juvenile delinquency; that numerous crimes and offenses have been committed in them and consequently they require strict police surveillance; that non-citizens as a class are less familiar with the laws and customs of this country than native born and naturalized citizens; that the maintenance of billiard and pool rooms by them is a menace to society and to the public welfare, and that the ordinance is a reasonable police regulation passed in the interest of and for the benefit of the public.

On plaintiff's motion, the Supreme Court of Ohio gave judgment on the pleadings, dismissing the petition. * * *

The objections to the constitutionality of the ordinance are not persuasive. Although the Fourteenth Amendment has been held to prohibit plainly irrational discrimination against aliens, Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356; Truax v. Raich, 239 U. S. 33; In re Tiburcio Parrott, 1 Fed. 481; In re Ah Chong, 2 Fed. 733; Ho Ah Kow v. Nunan, 5 Sawy. 552, 12 Fed. Cases, No. 6546; Wong Wai v. Williamson, 103 Fed. 1; Fraser v. McConway & Torley Co., 82 Fed. 257, it does not follow that alien race and allegiance may not bear in some instances such a relation to a legitimate object of legislation as to be made the basis of a permitted classification. Patson v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 138; Crane v. New York, 239 U. S. 195, 198; Terrace v. Thompson, 263 U. S. 197; Porterfield v. Webb, 263 U. S. 225; Webb v. O'Brien, 263 U. S. 313; Frick v. Webb, 263 U. S. 326; Cockrill v. California, 268 U. S. 258; cf. McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391.

The admitted allegations of the answer set up the harmful and vicious tendencies of public billiard and pool rooms, of which this Court took judicial notice in Murphy v. California, 225 U. S. 623. The regulation or even prohibition of the business is not forbidden. Murphy v. California, supra. The present regulation presupposes that aliens in Cincinnati are not as well qualified as citizens to engage in this business. It is not necessary that we be satisfied that this premise is well founded in experience. We cannot say that the city council gave unreasonable weight to the view admitted by the pleadings that the associations, experiences and interests of members of the class disqualified the class as a whole from conducting a business of dangerous tendencies.

It is enough for present purposes that the ordinance, in the light of facts admitted or generally assumed, does not preclude the possibility of a rational basis for the legislative judgment and that we have no such knowledge of local conditions as would enable us to say that it is clearly wrong. Fort Smith Light & Traction Co. v. Board of Improvement, 274 U. S. 387.

Some latitude must be allowed for the legislative appraisal of local conditions, Patson v. Pennsylvania, supra, 144; Adams v. Milwaukee, 228 U. S. 572, 583, and for the legislative choice of methods for controlling an apprehended evil. It was competent for the city to make such a choice, not shown to be irrational, by excluding from the conduct of a dubious business an entire class rather than its objectionable members selected by more empirical methods. See Westfall v. United States, 274 U. S. 256. Judgment affirmed.

NOTE

1. In Takahashi v. Fish and Game Commission, 334 U. S. 410, 92 L. ed. 1478, 68 Sup. Ct. 1138 (1948) the Supreme Court invalidated as a denial of equal protection a California statute forbidding the issuance of commercial fishing licenses to aliens ineligible to citizenship. Takahashi, born in Japan, came to this country and became a resident of California in 1907. Under an amendment to California laws passed in 1945, the issuance of fishing licenses was banned to any "person ineligible to citizenship," which classification (at that time) included Japanese. The Supreme Court of California (three judges dissenting) held that California had a proprietary interest in fish in the ocean waters within three miles of the shore, and that this interest justified the challenged legislation. Reversing, the Supreme Court rested its decision in part on Truax v. Raich, but further said that it did not follow that because the United States might regulate immigration and naturalization in part on the basis of race and color classifications, a state could adopt one or more of the same classifications to prevent aliens within its borders from earning a living in the same way that other inhabitants earn a living. The opinion also rejected the contention that there was any special public interest warranting California's exclusion of aliens from commercial fishing by reason of their ineligibility to citizenship. Justices Reed and Jackson, dissenting, said that while Congress may require the states to remove restrictions against aliens, until it does so the judiciary should not compel the states to place citizens and aliens on a basis of equality in such matters as the ownership of land and the exploitation of natural resources. They thought that, since fishing rights have been treated traditionally as a natural resource, California had power, in the absence of federal legislation, to regulate the taking and handling of fish in the waters bordering its shores.

TERRACE v. THOMPSON.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1923.

263 U. S. 197, 68 L. ed. 255, 44 Sup. Ct. 15.

[A statute of the State of Washington prohibited ownership by aliens (except those who had in good faith declared intention to become citizens of the United States) of any legal or equitable interest in any land (except for a few specified purposes). Terrace, a land owner, and Nakatsuka, an alien Japanese, who desired that the former should lease the land to the latter for farming (a forbidden purpose) joined in a suit in the District Court of the United States to enjoin the Attorney General of the State from enforcing the statute, and appealed from a dismissal of the suit.]

MR. JUSTICE BUTLER delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

This brings us to a consideration of appellants' contention that the act contravenes the equal protection clause. That clause secures equal protection to all in the enjoyment of their rights under like circumstances. * * * But this does not forbid every distinction in the law of a state between citizens and aliens resident therein. * * *

The rights, privileges and duties of aliens differ widely from those of citizens; and those of alien declarants differ substantially from those of nondeclarants. Formerly in many of the states the right to vote and hold office was extended to declarants, and many important offices have been held by them. But these rights have not been granted to nondeclarants. By various acts of Congress, declarants have been made liable to military duty, but no act has imposed that duty on nondeclarants. * * *

The inclusion of good faith declarants in the same class with citizens does not unjustly discriminate against aliens who are ineligible or against eligible aliens who have failed to declare their intention. The classification is based on eligibility and purpose to naturalize. Eligible aliens are free white persons and persons of African nativity or descent. Congress is not trammelled, and it may grant or withhold the privilege of naturalization upon any grounds or without any reason, as it sees fit. But it is not to be supposed that its acts defining eligibility are arbitrary or unsupported by reasonable consideration of public policy.

The state properly may assume that the considerations upon which Congress made such classification are substantial and reasonable. Generally speaking, the natives of European countries are eligible. Japanese, Chinese and Malays are not. Appellants' contention that the state act discriminates arbitrarily against Nakatsuka and other ineligible aliens because of their race and color is without foundation. All persons of whatever color or race who have not declared their intention in good faith to become citizens are prohibited from so owning agricultural lands. Two classes of aliens inevitably result from the naturalization laws—those who may and those who may not become citizens. The rule established by Congress on this subject, in and of itself, furnishes a reasonable basis for classification in a state law withholding from aliens the privilege of land ownership as defined in the act.

* * *

Truax v. Raich, 239 U. S. 33, does not support the appellants' contention. * * *

In the case before us, the thing forbidden is very different. It is not an opportunity to earn a living in common occupations of the community, but it is the privilege of owning or controlling agricultural land within the state. The quality and allegiance of those who own, occupy and use the farm lands within its borders are matters of highest importance and affect the safety and power of the state itself.

The Terraces, who are citizens, have no right safeguarded by the Fourteenth Amendment to lease their land to aliens lawfully forbidden to take or have such lease. The state act is not repugnant to the equal protection clause and does not contravene the Fourteenth Amendment.

* * *

The decree of the District Court is affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS and MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS think there is no justiciable question involved and that the case should have been dismissed on that ground.

MR. JUSTICE SUTHERLAND took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

NOTE

1. In accord with the principal case are the several decisions sustaining the California Alien Land Law forbidding aliens ineligible to citizenship under federal law from owning any legal or beneficial interest in agricultural land: Porterfield v. Webb, 263 U. S. 225, 68 L. ed. 278, 44 Sup. Ct. 21 (1923) (leasing of such land); Webb v. O'Brien, 263 U. S. 313, 68 L. ed. 318, 44 Sup. Ct. 112 (1923) (share-cropping of land); Frick v. Webb, 263 U. S. 326, 68 L. ed. 323, 44 Sup. Ct. 115 (1923) (acquiring stock in corporation holding land for agricultural purposes).

In Oyama v. California, 332 U. S. 633, 92 L. ed. 249, 68 Sup. Ct. 269 (1948) the constitutionality of the California statute was again challenged as a violation of the equal protection clause. Here the state sought to escheat two parcels of land which had been purchased by a Japanese father, ineligible for naturalization, for his son, a minor American citizen, in whose name title was taken, the father having obtained appointment as his guardian. The trial court found as facts that the father had had the beneficial use of the land and that the transfers were subterfuges effected with intent to evade or avoid escheat; it therefore held that the land had vested in the state as of the date of the attempted transfers. The California Supreme Court sustained the trial court's findings and ruled that the son was deprived of no constitutional guaranties since the land had passed to the state without ever vesting in him. The Supreme Court of the United States reversed on one ground only, i. e., the unconstitutionality of § 9 of the statute which (1) declared a prima facie presumption that a conveyance was made with intent to evade or avoid the statute if title to real property was taken in the name of a person eligible to citizenship and the consideration was paid by a noneligible alien, and (2) placed the burden on the grantee to show the conveyance was not made with the intent to evade or avoid escheat. The court declined to reexamine the constitutionality of any provision of the statute other than § 9. Chief Justice Vinson's opinion said that the state had discriminated against the son solely because of his parents' country of origin and that there was absent the compelling justification essential to sustain discrimination of that character. The effect of the statutory presumption was to place upon the son an onerous burden of proof which was not borne by other children in similar situations and thus to bring about an unconstitutional discrimination. In two separate concurring opinions four justices (Black, Douglas, Murphy and Rutledge) voiced the belief that the statute violated the equal protection clause and conflicted with federal laws and treaties governing the immigration of aliens and their rights after arrival in this country. Although the statute did not name the Japanese as such, its plain purpose and effect was to discriminate against them because of their origin. Three justices (Reed, Burton and Jackson) dissented. The dissents emphasized the logical difficulties involved in striking down the statutory presumption designed to facilitate the enforcement of the law and at the same time assuming the validity of its basic prohibition in respect to the ownership of land by ineligible aliens.

Two years later, in Sei Fujii v. California, 97 A. C. A. 154, 718, 217 Pac. (2d) 481, 218 Pac. (2d) 595 (1950), a California district court of appeal held the California law to be no longer enforceable because in conflict with the Charter of the United Nations. The Supreme Court of California, in the same litigation, reached the same result as the lower court but based its decision squarely on the due process and equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment. The court concluded that a reexamination of the constitutional issue was not foreclosed by the earlier decisions of the Supreme Court in 1923 upholding the statute, since the force and effect of these decisions had been materially weakened by Oyama v. California and Takahashi v. Fish and Game Commission, setting forth constitutional principles irreconcilable with the reasoning of the earlier cases. The court held that the rights to acquire, enjoy, own and dispose of property are among the civil rights intended to be protected from discriminatory state action by the Fourteenth Amendment and that the power of a state to regulate the use and ownership of land must be exercised subject to the controls and limitations of that Amendment. Hence, there could be no justification for a classification which operated to withhold property rights from some aliens, not because of anything they had done or any beliefs they held, but solely because they were members of a certain race. Three justices dissented, arguing that the court was bound by the earlier precedents. Sei Fujii v. California, 38 Cal. (2d) 718, 242 Pac. (2d) 617 (1952). It was announced officially by the Attorney-General of California that the state would not seek certiorari. Closely following the date of this decision, Congress enacted the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952, one of the provisions of which (8 U. S. C. § 1422; F. C. A. § 8 § 1422) removes the bar of racial origin as a condition of naturalization. The statute would thus have been rendered a dead letter, irrespective of its constitutional invalidity.

Section 4.—Equality in Suffrage.

JAMES V. BOWMAN.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1903.
190 U. S. 127, 47 L. ed. 979, 23 Sup. Ct. 678.

In December, 1900, an indictment was found by the United States District Court for the District of Kentucky against the appellee, Henry Bowman, and one Harry Weaver, based upon section 5507 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. The indictment charged in substance that certain "men of African descent, colored men, Negroes, and not white men," being citizens of Kentucky and of the United States, were, by means of bribery, unlawfully and feloniously intimidated and prevented from exercising their lawful right of voting at a certain election held in the Fifth Congressional District of Kentucky on the 8th day of November, 1898, for the election of a representative in the fifty-sixth Congress of the United States.

No allegation is made that the bribery was because of the race, color or previous condition of servitude of the men bribed. The appellee, Henry Bowman, having been arrested and held in default of bail, sued out a writ of habeas corpus on the ground of the unconstitutionality of section 5507. The District Judge granted the writ, following reluctantly the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, in Lackey v. United States, 46 C. C. A. 189; 107 Fed. Rep. 114. From that judgment the government has taken this appeal.

Section 5507 is as follows:

"Sec. 5507. Every person who prevents, hinders, controls, or intimidates another from exercising, or in exercising the right of suffrage, to whom that right is guaranteed by the Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, by means of bribery or threats of depriving such person of employment or occupation, or of ejecting such person from a rented house, lands, or other property, or by threats of refusing to renew leases or contracts for labor, or by threats of violence to himself or family, shall be punished as provided in the preceding section."

The Fifteenth Amendment provides:

"Sec. 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

"Sec. 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

MR. JUSTICE BREWER delivered the opinion of the Court.

The single question presented for our consideration is whether section 5507 can be upheld as a valid enactment, for if not, the indictment must also fall, and the defendant was rightfully discharged. On its face the section purports to be an exercise of the power granted to Congress by the Fifteenth Amendment, for it declares a punishment upon any one who by means of bribery prevents another to whom the right of suffrage is guaranteed by such amendment from exercising that right. But that amendment relates solely to action "by the United States or by any State," and does not contemplate wrongful individual acts. It is in this respect similar to * * * the Fourteenth Amendment. * * *

But we are not left alone to this reasoning from analogy. The Fifteenth Amendment itself has been considered by this Court and the same limitations placed upon its provisions. In United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 217, we said:

"The Fifteenth Amendment does not confer the right of suffrage upon any one. It prevents the states, or the United States, however, from giving preference, in this particular, to one citizen of the United States over another on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. Before its adoption this could be done. It was as much within the power of a state to exclude citizens of the United States from voting on account of race, etc., as it was on account of age, property or education. Now it is not. If citizens of one race having certain qualifications are permitted by law to vote, those of another having the same qualifications must be. Previous to this amendment, there was no constitutional guaranty against this discrimination; now there is. It follows that the amendment has invested the citizens of the United States with a new constitutional right which is within the protecting power of Congress. That right is exemption from discrimination in the exercise of the elective franchise on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. This, under the express provisions of the second section of the amendment, Congress may enforce by 'appropriate legislation.'

In passing it may be noticed that this indictment charges no wrong done by the State of Kentucky, or by any one acting under its authority. The matter complained of was purely an individual act of the defendant. Nor is it charged that the bribery was on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude. True, the parties who were bribed were alleged to be "men of African descent, colored men, Negroes, and not white men," and again, that they were "persons to whom the right of suffrage and the right to vote was then and there guaranteed by the Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States." But this merely describes the parties wronged as within the classes named in the amendment. They were not bribed because they were colored men, but because they were voters. No discrimination on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude is charged.

These authorities show that a statute which purports to punish purely individual action cannot be sustained as an appropriate exercise of the power conferred by the Fifteenth Amendment upon Congress to prevent action by the state through some one or more of its official representatives, and that an indictment which charges no discrimination on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude is likewise destitute of support by such amendment.

But the contention most earnestly pressed is that Congress has ample power in respect to elections of representatives in Congress; that the election which was held, and at which this bribery took place, was such an election; and that therefore under such general power this statute and this indictment can be sustained. The difficulty with this contention is that Congress has not by this section acted in the exercise of such power. It is not legislation in respect to elections of federal officers, but is levelled at all elections, state or federal and it does not purport to punish bribery of any voter, but simply of those named in the Fifteenth Amendment. On its face it is clearly an attempt to exercise power supposed to be conferred by the Fifteenth Amendment in respect to all elections, and not in pursuance of the general control by Congress over particular elections. To change this statute, enacted to punish bribery of persons named in the Fifteenth Amendment at all elections, to a statute punishing bribery of any voter at certain elections would be in effect judicial legislation. It would be wresting the statute from the purpose with which it was enacted and making it serve another purpose. Doubtless even a criminal statute may be good in part and bad in part, providing the two can be clearly separated, and it is apparent that the legislative body would have enacted the one without the other, but there are no two parts to the statute. If the contention be sustained it is simply a transformation of the statute in its single purpose and scope. * * *

Congress has no power to punish bribery at all elections. The limits of its power are in respect to elections in which the nation is directly interested, or in which some mandate of the national Constitution is disobeyed, and courts are not at liberty to take a criminal statute, broad and comprehensive in its terms and in these terms beyond the power of Congress, and change it to fix [fit] some particular transaction which Congress might have legislated for if it had seen fit.

The judgment of the District Court is Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE MCKENNA took no part in the decision of this case.
MR. JUSTICE HARLAN and MR. JUSTICE BROWN dissented.

NOTE

1. The disabilities imposed upon the states and the United States by the Fifteenth and Nineteenth Amendments confer correlatively upon citizens of the United States immunities from the types of discrimination therein prohibited. These immunities are conferred upon none but citizens and consequently constitute a part of the concept of citizenship of the United States, notwithstanding that the privilege of voting is not an element of such citizenship. In United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 555-556, 23 L. ed. 588 (1875), Mr. Chief Justice Waite, speaking for the court, said: "In United States v. Reese we held that the Fifteenth Amendment has invested the citizens of the United States with a new constitutional right, which is, exemption from discrimination in the exercise of the elective franchise on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. From this it appears that the right of suffrage is not a necessary attribute of national citizenship; but that exemption from discrimination in the exercise of that right on account of race, etc., is. The right to vote in the states comes from the states; but the right of exemption from the prohibited discrimination comes from the United States. The first has not been granted or secured by the Constitution of the United States; but the last has been."

GUINN v. UNITED STATES.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1915.

238 U. S. 347, 59 L. ed. 1340, 35 Sup. Ct. 926, L. R. A. 1916A, 1124.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WHITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case is before us on a certificate drawn by the court below as the basis of two questions which are submitted for our solution in order to enable the court correctly to decide issues in a case which it has under consideration. Those issues arose from an indictment and conviction of certain election officers of the State of Oklahoma (the plaintiffs in error) of the crime of having conspired unlawfully, wilfully and fraudulently to deprive certain negro citizens, on account of their race and color, of a right to vote at a general election held in that state in 1910, they being entitled to vote under the state law and which right was secured to them by the Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The prosecution was directly concerned with Sec. 5508, Rev. Stat., now Sec. 19 of the Penal Code.

* * *

The questions which the court below asks are these:

"1. Was the amendment to the constitution of Oklahoma, heretofore set forth, valid?

"2. Was that amendment void insofar as it attempted to debar from the right or privilege of voting for a qualified candidate for a member of Congress in Oklahoma, unless they were able to read and write any section of the constitution of Oklahoma, negro citizens of the United States who were otherwise qualified to vote for a qualified candidate for a member of Congress in that state, but who were not, and none of whose lineal ancestors was, entitled to vote under any form of government on January 1, 1866, or at any time prior thereto, because they were then slaves?"

As these questions obviously relate to the provisions concerning suffrage in the original constitution and the amendment to those provisions which forms the basis of the controversy, we state the text of both. The original clause so far as material was this:

"The qualified electors of the state shall be male citizens of the United States, male citizens of the state, and male persons of Indian descent native of the United States, who are over the age of twenty-one years, who have resided in the state one year, in the county six months, and in the election precinct thirty days, next preceding the election at which any such elector offers to vote."

And this is the amendment:

"No person shall be registered as an elector of this state or be allowed to vote in any election herein, unless he be able to read and write any section of the constitution of the state of Oklahoma; but no person who was, on January 1, 1866, or at any time prior thereto, entitled to vote under any form of government, or who at that time resided in some foreign nation, and no lineal descendant of such person, shall be denied the right to register and vote because of his inability to so read and write sections of such constitution. Precinct election inspectors having in charge the registration of electors shall enforce the provisions of this section at the time of registration, provided registration be required. Should registration be dispensed with, the provisions of this section shall be enforced by the precinct election officer when electors apply for ballots to vote."

Considering the questions in the light of the text of the suffrage amendment it is apparent that they are twofold because of the twofold character of the provisions as to suffrage which the amendment contains. The first question is concerned with that provision of the amendment which fixes a standard by which the right to vote is given upon conditions existing on January 1, 1866, and relieves those coming within that standard from the standard based on a literacy test which is established by the other provision of the amendment. The second question asks as to the validity of the literacy test and how far, if intrinsically valid, it would continue to exist and be operative in the event the standard based upon January 1, 1866, should be held to be illegal as violative of the Fifteenth Amendment. * * * Let us consider these subjects under separate headings.

1. The operation and effect of the Fifteenth Amendment. * * *

Beyond doubt the Amendment does not take away from the state governments in a general sense the power over suffrage which has belonged to those governments from the beginning * * *.

But it is equally beyond the possibility of question that the Amendment in express terms restricts the power of the United States or the states to abridge or deny the right of a citizen of the United States to vote on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude. The restriction is coincident with the power and prevents its exertion in disregard of the command of the Amendment. But while this is true, it is true also that the Amendment does not change, modify or deprive the states of their full power as to suffrage except of course as to the subject with which the Amendment deals and to the extent that obedience to its command is necessary. * * *

While in the true sense, therefore, the Amendment gives no right of suffrage, it was long ago recognized that in operation its prohibition might measurably have that effect; that is to say, that as the command of the Amendment was self-executing and reached without legislative action the conditions of discrimination against which it was aimed, the result might arise that as a consequence of the striking down of a discriminating clause a right of suffrage would be enjoyed by reason of the generic character of the provision which would remain after the discrimination was stricken out. Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S. 651; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370. * * *

2. The standard of January 1, 1866, fixed in the suffrage amendment and its significance.

The inquiry of course here is, Does the amendment as to the particular standard which this heading embraces involve the mere refusal to comply with the commands of the Fifteenth Amendment as previously stated? This leads us for the purpose of the analysis to recur to the text of the suffrage amendment. Its opening sentence fixes the literacy standard which is all-inclusive since it is general in its expression and contains no word of discrimination on account of race or color or any other reason. This however is immediately followed by the provisions creating the standard based upon the condition existing on January 1, 1866, and carving out those coming under that standard from the inclusion in the literacy test which would have controlled them but for the exclusion thus expressly provided for. * * * It is true it contains no express words of an exclusion from the standard which it establishes of any person on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude prohibited by the Fifteenth Amendment, but the standard itself inherently brings that result into existence since it is based purely upon a period of time before the enactment of the Fifteenth Amendment and makes that period the controlling and dominant test of the right of suffrage. In other words, we seek in vain for any ground which would sustain any other interpretation but that the provision, recurring to the conditions existing before the Fifteenth Amendment was adopted and the continuance of which the Fifteenth Amendment prohibited, proposed by in substance and effect lifting those conditions over to a period of time after the Amendment to make them the bases of the right to suffrage conferred in direct and positive disregard of the Fifteenth Amendment. And the same result, we are of opinion, is demonstrated by considering whether it is possible to discover any basis of reason for the standard thus fixed other than the purpose above stated. We say this because we are unable to discover how, unless the prohibitions of the Fifteenth Amendment were considered, the slightest reason was afforded for basing the classification upon a period of time prior to the Fifteenth Amendment. Certainly it cannot be said that there was any peculiar necromancy in the time named which engendered attributes affecting the qualification to vote which would not exist at another and different period unless the Fifteenth Amendment was in view. * * *

3. The determination of the validity of the literacy test and the possibility of its surviving the disappearance of the 1866 standard with which it is associated in the suffrage amendment.

No time need be spent on the question of the validity of the literacy test considered alone since as we have seen its establishment was but the exercise by the State of a lawful power vested in it not subject to our supervision, and indeed, its validity is admitted. Whether this test is so connected with the other one relating to the situation on January 1, 1866, that the invalidity of the latter requires the rejection of the former is really a question of state law, but in the absence of any decision on the subject by the Supreme Court of the state, we must determine it ourselves. * * * [The Court inferred that these clauses were intended to be inseparable.] * * *

We answer the first question, No, and the second question, Yes.

MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS took no part in the consideration and decision of this case.

NOTES

1. A substantially like statute of Maryland was held invalid in Myers v. Anderson, 238 U. S. 368, 59 L. ed. 1349, 35 Sup. Ct. 932 (1915). After the decision in the principal case, Oklahoma passed another statute in 1916 requiring (with certain exceptions) all citizens then qualified to vote but who had not voted in the election of 1914 to register within a twelve-day period. Those who did not apply during this period lost permanently the right to register. In 1939 the court invalidated this scheme under the Fifteenth Amendment, holding that its practical effect was "to accord to the members of the Negro race who had been discriminated against in the outlawed registration system of 1914, not more than twelve days within which to reassert constitutional rights which were found in the Guinn case to have been denied them." The court concluded that the "narrow basis of the supplemental registration, the very brief normal period of relief for the purposes in question, the practical difficulties, of which the record in this case gives glimpses, inevitable in the administration of such strict registration provisions, leave no escape from the conclusion that the means chosen as substitutes for the invalidated 'grandfather clause' were themselves invalid under the Fifteenth Amendment." Lane v. Wilson, 307 U. S. 268, 83 L. ed. 1281, 59 Sup. Ct. 872 (1939).

2. A state may require the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting. Breedlove v. Suttles, 302 U. S. 277, 82 L. ed. 252, 58 Sup. Ct. 205 (1937). Poll taxes, which were formerly imposed in eleven Southern states, are now in effect in only five. Proposals to abolish the poll tax by federal legislation have been advanced unsuccessfully on many occasions in recent years. The President's Committee on Civil Rights endorsed such legislation in 1947. See Boudin, State Poll Taxes and the Federal Constitution, 28 Va. L. Rev. 1 (1941); Kallenbach, Constitutional Aspects of Federal Anti-Poll Tax Legislation, 45 Mich. L. Rev. 717 (1947); Christensen, The Constitutionality of National Anti-Poll Tax Bills, 33 Minn. L. Rev. 217 (1949).

3. A state may require citizens of the United States who move into the state to make a declaration of intention to become citizens of the state one year before they may register as voters, and thus discriminate in granting the electoral privilege between those citizens who have and those who have not made the declaration. Pope v. Williams, 193 U. S. 621, 48 L. ed. 817, 24 Sup. Ct. 573 (1904).

4. Although a state may validly impose literacy, educational, character and other qualifications for voting, such tests must not be purposefully used as a device to disenfranchise only Negroes. In 1946 Alabama adopted the "Boswell Amendment" to its state constitution which required a prospective elector to "understand and explain any article of the Constitution of the United States" to the satisfaction of local registration officers. Negro plaintiffs alleged that the amendment was sponsored, its adoption obtained, and its provisions were being administered in order to prevent them, because of their race, from exercising their right to vote. A three-judge federal district court held that the amendment, both in its object and the manner of its administration, was in violation of the Fifteenth Amendment. The court said that it could not ignore the impact of the amendment upon Negro citizens merely because it avoided mention of race or color. The Supreme Court affirmed per curiam, without hearing argument. Davis v. Schnell, 81 F. Supp. 872 (D. C. S. D. Ala., 1949), affirmed 336 U. S. 933, 93 L. ed. 1093, 69 Sup. Ct. 749 (1949).

UNITED STATES v. CLASSIC.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1941.

313 U. S. 299, 85 L. ed. 1368, 61 Sup. Ct. 1031.

Appeal from the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Louisiana.

MR. JUSTICE STONE delivered the opinion of the Court.

Two counts of an indictment found in a federal district court charged that appellees, Commissioners of Elections, conducting a primary election under Louisiana law, to nominate a candidate of the Democratic Party for representative in Congress, willfully altered and falsely counted and certified the ballots of voters cast in the primary election. The questions for decision are whether the right of qualified voters to vote in the Louisiana primary and to have their ballots counted is a right "secured * * * by the Constitution" within the meaning of §§ 19 and 20 of the Criminal Code, and whether the acts of appellees charged in the indictment violate those sections.

On September 25, 1940, appellees were indicted in the District Court for Eastern Louisiana for violations of §§ 19 and 20 of the Criminal Code, 18 U. S. C. §§ 51, 52. The first count of the indictment alleged that a primary election was held on September 10, 1940, for the purpose of nominating a candidate of the Democratic Party for the office of Representative in Congress for the Second Congressional District of Louisiana, to be chosen at an election to be held on November 10th; that in that district nomination as a candidate of the Democratic Party is and always has been equivalent to an election; that appellees were Commissioners of Election, selected in accordance with the Louisiana law to conduct the primary in the Second Precinct of the Tenth Ward of New Orleans, in which there were five hundred and thirty-seven citizens and qualified voters.

The charge based on these allegations, was that the appellees conspired with each other and with others unknown, to injure and oppress citizens in the free exercise and enjoyment of rights and privileges secured to them by the Constitution and Laws of the United States, namely, (1) the right of qualified voters who cast their ballots in the primary election to have their ballots counted as cast for the candidate of their choice, and (2) the right of the candidates to run for the office of Congressman and to have the votes in favor of their nomination counted as cast. The overt acts alleged were that the appellees altered eighty-three ballots cast for one candidate and fourteen cast for another, marking and counting them as votes for a third candidate, and that they falsely certified the number of votes cast for the respective candidates to the chairman of the Second Congressional District Committee.

The second count, repeating the allegations of fact already detailed, charged that the appellees, as Commissioners of Election willfully and under color of law subjected registered voters at the primary who were inhabitants of Louisiana to the deprivation of rights, privileges and immunities secured and protected by the Constitution and Laws of the United States, namely their right to cast their votes for the candidates of their choice and to have their votes counted as cast. It further charged that this deprivation was effected by the wilful failure and refusal of defendants to count the votes as cast, by their alteration of the ballots, and by their false certification of the number of votes cast for the respective candidates in the manner already indicated.

The District Court sustained a demurrer to counts 1 and 2 on the ground that §§ 19 and 20 of the Criminal Code under which the indictment was drawn do not apply to the state of facts disclosed by the indictment and that, if applied to those facts, §§ 19 and 20 are without constitutional sanction, citing United States v. Gradwell, 243 U. S. 476, 488, 489; Newberry v. United States, 256 U. S. 232. The case comes here on direct appeal from the District Court under the provisions of the Criminal Appeals Act, Judicial Code, § 238, 18 U. S. C. § 682, 28 U. S. C. § 345, which authorize an appeal by the United States from a decision or judgment sustaining a demurrer to an indictment where the decision or judgment is "based upon the invalidity, or construction of the statute upon which the indictment is founded." * * *

Section 19 of the Criminal Code condemns as a criminal offense any conspiracy to injure a citizen in the exercise "of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States." Section 20 makes it a penal offense for anyone who, "acting under color of any law" "willfully subjects, or causes to be subjected, any inhabitant of any State * * * to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured or protected by the Constitution and laws of the United States." The Government argues that the right of a qualified voter in a Louisiana congressional primary election to have his vote counted as cast is a right secured by Article I, §§ 2 and 4 of the Constitution, and that a conspiracy to deprive the citizen of that right is a violation of § 19, and also that the willful action of appellees as state officials, in falsely counting the ballots at the primary election and in falsely certifying the count, deprived qualified voters of that right and of the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment, all in violation of § 20 of the Criminal Code.

Article I, § 2 of the Constitution, commands that "The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature." By § 4 of the same article "The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of choosing Senators." Such right as is secured by the Constitution to qualified voters to choose members of the House of Representatives is thus to be exercised in conformity to the requirements of state law subject to the restrictions prescribed by § 2 and to the authority conferred on Congress by § 4, to regulate the times, places and manner of holding elections for representatives. * * *

Pursuant to the authority given by § 2 of Article I of the Constitution, and subject to the legislative power of Congress under § 4 of Article I, and other pertinent provisions of the Constitution, the states are given, and in fact exercise a wide discretion in the formulation of a system for the choice by the people of representatives in Congress. In common with many other states Louisiana has exercised that discretion by setting up machinery for the effective choice of party candidates for representative in Congress by primary elections and by its laws it eliminates or seriously restricts the candidacy at the general election of all those who are defeated at the primary. All political parties, which are defined as those that have cast at least 5 per cent of the total vote at specified preceding elections, are required to nominate their candidates for representative by direct primary elections. Louisiana Act No. 46, Regular Session, 1940, §§ 1 and 3.

The primary is conducted by the state at public expense. Act No. 46, supra, § 35. The primary, as is the general election, is subject to numerous statutory regulations as to the time, place and manner of conducting the election, including provisions to insure that the ballots cast at the primary are correctly counted, and the results of the count correctly recorded and certified to the Secretary of State, whose duty it is to place the names of the successful candidates of each party on the official ballot.

The Secretary of State is prohibited from placing on the official ballot the name of any person as a candidate for any political party not nominated in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Act 46, § 1. * * *

The right to vote for a representative in Congress at the general election is, as a matter of law, thus restricted to the successful party candidate at the primary, to those not candidates at the primary who file nomination papers, and those whose names may be lawfully written into the ballot by the electors. Even if, as appellees argue, contrary to the decision in Serpas v. Trebucq, 1 So. 2d 346, voters may lawfully write into their ballots, cast at the general election, the name of a candidate rejected at the primary and have their ballots counted, the practical operation of the primary law in otherwise excluding from the ballot on the general election the names of candidates rejected at the primary is such as to impose serious restrictions upon the choice of candidates by the voters save by voting at the primary election. In fact, as alleged in the indictment, the practical operation of the primary in Louisiana, is and has been since the primary election was established in 1900 to secure the election of the Democratic primary nominee for the Second Congressional District of Louisiana.

Interference with the right to vote in the Congressional primary in the Second Congressional District for the choice of Democratic candidate for Congress is thus as a matter of law and in fact an interference with the effective choice of the voters at the only stage of the election procedure when their choice is of significance, since it is at the only stage when such interference could have any practical effect on the ultimate result, the choice of the Congressman to represent the district. The primary in Louisiana is an integral part of the procedure for the popular choice of Congressman. The right of qualified voters to vote at the Congressional primary in Louisiana and to have their ballots counted is thus the right to participate in that choice.

We come then to the question whether that right is one secured by the Constitution. Section 2 of Article I commands that Congressmen shall be chosen by the people of the several states by electors, the qualifications of which it prescribes. The right of the people to choose, whatever its appropriate constitutional limitations, where in other respects it is defined, and the mode of its exercise is prescribed by state action in conformity to the Constitution, is a right established and guaranteed by the Constitution and hence is one secured by it to those citizens and inhabitants of the state entitled to exercise the right. Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S. 651; United States v. Mosley, 238 U. S. 383. * * * While, in a loose sense, the right to vote for representatives in Congress is sometimes spoken of as a right derived from the states, see, Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 162, 170; United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 217, 218; McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1, 38, 39; Breedlove v. Suttles, 302 U. S. 277, 283, this statement is true only in the sense that the states are authorized by the Constitution, to legislate on the subject as provided by § 2 of Art. I, to the extent that Congress has not restricted state action by the exercise of its powers to regulate elections under § 4 and its more general power under Article I, § 8, clause 18 of the Constitution "To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers." See Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 371; Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S. 663, 664; Swafford v. Templeton, 185 U. S. 487; Wiley v. Sinkler, 179 U. S. 58, 64.

Obviously included within the right to choose, secured by the Constitution, is the right of qualified voters within a state to cast their ballots and have them counted at Congressional elections. This Court has consistently held that this is a right secured by the Constitution. * * * And since the constitutional command is without restriction or limitation, the right unlike those guaranteed by the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments, is secured against the action of individuals as well as of states. * * *

But we are now concerned with the question whether the right to choose at a primary election, a candidate for election as representative, is embraced in the right to choose representatives secured by Article I, § 2. We may assume that the framers of the Constitution in adopting that section, did not have specifically in mind the selection and elimination of candidates for Congress by the direct primary any more than they contemplated the application of the commerce clause to interstate telephone, telegraph and wireless communication which are concededly within it. But in determining whether a provision of the Constitution applies to a new subject matter, it is of little significance that it is one with which the framers were not familiar. For in setting up an enduring framework of government they undertook to carry out for the indefinite future and in all the vicissitudes of the changing affairs of men, those fundamental purposes which the instrument itself discloses. Hence we read its words, not as we read legislative codes which are subject to continuous revision with the changing course of events, but as the revelation of the great purposes which were intended to be achieved by the Constitution as a continuing instrument of government.

* * *

That the free choice by the people of representatives in Congress, subject only to the restrictions to be found in §§ 2 and 4 of Article I and elsewhere in the Constitution, was one of the great purposes of our Constitutional scheme of government cannot be doubted. We cannot regard it as any the less the constitutional purpose or its words as any the less guaranteeing the integrity of that choice when a state, exercising its privilege in the absence of Congressional action, changes the mode of choice from a single step, a general election, to two, of which the first is the choice at a primary of those candidates from whom, as a second step, the representative in Congress is to be chosen at the election.

Nor can we say that that choice which the Constitution protects is restricted to the second step because § 4 of Article I, as a means of securing a free choice of representatives by the people, has authorized Congress to regulate the manner of elections, without making any mention of primary elections. For we think that the authority of Congress, given by § 4, includes the authority to regulate primary elections when, as in this case, they are a step in the exercise by the people of their choice of representatives in Congress. The point whether the power conferred by § 4 includes in any circumstances the power to regulate primary elections was reserved in United States v. Gradwell, supra, 243 U. S. 487. In Newberry v. United States, supra, four Justices of this Court were of opinion that the term "elections" in § 4 of Article I did not embrace a primary election since that procedure was unknown to the framers. A fifth Justice who with them pronounced the judgment of the Court, was of opinion that a primary, held under a law enacted before the adoption of the Seventeenth Amendment, for the nomination of candidates for Senator, was not an election within the meaning of § 4 of Article I of the Constitution, presumably because the choice of the primary imposed no legal restrictions on the election of Senators by the state legislatures to which their election had been committed by Article I, § 3. The remaining four Justices were of the opinion that a primary election for the choice of candidates for Senator or Representative were elections subject to regulation by Congress within the meaning of § 4 of Article I. The question then has not been prejudged by any decision of this Court.

To decide it we turn to the words of the Constitution read in their historical setting as revealing the purpose of its framers, and in search for admissible meanings of its words which, in the circumstances of their application, will effectuate those purposes. As we have said, a dominant purpose of § 2, so far as the selection of representatives in Congress is concerned, was to secure to the people the right to choose representatives by the designated electors, that is to say, by some form of election. Cf. the Seventeenth Amendment as to popular "election" of Senators. From time immemorial an election to public office has been in point of substance no more and no less than the expression by qualified electors of their choice of candidates.

Long before the adoption of the Constitution the form and mode of that expression had changed from time to time. There is no historical warrant for supposing that the framers were under the illusion that the method of effecting the choice of the electors would never change or that if it did, the change was for that reason to be permitted to defeat the right of the people to choose representatives for Congress which the Constitution had guaranteed. The right to participate in the choice of representatives for Congress includes, as we have said, the right to cast a ballot and to have it counted at the general election whether for the successful candidate or not. Where the state law has made the primary an integral part of the procedure of choice, or where in fact the primary effectively controls the choice, the right of the elector to have his ballot counted at the primary, is likewise included in the right protected by Article I, § 2. And this right of participation is protected just as is the right to vote at the election, where the primary is by law made an integral part of the election machinery, whether the voter exercises his right in a party primary which invariably, sometimes or never determines the ultimate choice of the representative. Here, even apart from the circumstance that the Louisiana primary is made by law an integral part of the procedure of choice, the right to choose a representative is in fact controlled by the primary because, as is alleged in the indictment, the choice of candidates at the Democratic primary determines the choice of the elected representative. Moreover, we cannot close our eyes to the fact already mentioned that the practical influence of the choice of candidates at the primary may be so great as to affect profoundly the choice at the general election even though there is no effective legal prohibition upon the rejection at the election of the choice made at the primary and may thus operate to deprive the voter of his constitutional right of choice. This was noted and extensively commented upon by the concurring Justices in Newberry v. United States, supra.

Unless the constitutional protection of the integrity of "elections" extends to primary elections, Congress is left powerless to effect the constitutional purpose, and the popular choice of representatives is stripped of its constitutional protection save only as Congress, by taking over the control of state elections, may exclude from them the influence of the state primaries. Such an expedient would end that state autonomy with respect to elections which the Constitution contemplated that Congress should be free to leave undisturbed, subject only to such minimum regulation as it should find necessary to insure the freedom and integrity of the choice. Words, especially those of a constitution, are not to be read with such stultifying narrowness. The words of §§ 2 and 4 of Article I, read in the sense which is plainly permissible and in the light of the constitutional purpose, require us to hold that a primary election which involves a necessary step in the choice of candidates for election as representatives in Congress, and which in the circumstances of this case controls that choice, is an election within the meaning of the constitutional provision and is subject to congressional regulation as to the manner of holding it. * * *

There remains the question whether §§ 19 and 20 are an exercise of the congressional authority applicable to the acts with which appellees are charged in the indictment. Section 19 makes it a crime to conspire to "injure" or "oppress" any citizen "in the free exercise * * * of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution." In Ex parte Yarbrough, supra, and in United States v. Mosley, supra, as we have seen, it was held that the right to vote in a congressional election is a right secured by the Constitution, and that a conspiracy to prevent the citizen from voting or to prevent the official count of his ballot when cast, is a conspiracy to injure and oppress the citizen in the free exercise of a right secured by the Constitution within the meaning of § 19. In reaching this conclusion the Court found no uncertainty or ambiguity in the statutory language, obviously devised to protect the citizen "in the free exercise * * * of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution," and concerned itself with the question whether the right to participate in choosing a representative is so secured. Such is our function here. Conspiracy to prevent the official count of a citizen's ballot, held in United States v. Mosley, supra, to be a violation of § 19 in the case of a congressional election, is equally a conspiracy to injure and oppress the citizen when the ballots are cast in a primary election prerequisite to the choice of party candidates for a congressional election. In both cases the right infringed is one secured by the Constitution. The injury suffered by the citizen in the exercise of the right is an injury which the statute describes and to which it applies in the one case as in the other. * * *

In the face of the broad language of the statute, we are pointed to no principle of statutory construction and to no significant legislative history which could be thought to sanction our saying that the statute applies any the less to primaries than to elections, where in one as in the other it is the same constitutional right which is infringed.

* * *

It is hardly the performance of the judicial function to construe a statute, which in terms protects a right secured by the Constitution, here the right to choose a representative in Congress, as applying to an election whose only function is to ratify a choice already made at the primary but as having no application to the primary which is the only effective means of choice. To withdraw from the scope of the statute, an effective interference with the constitutional right of choice, because other wholly different situations not now before us may not be found to involve such an interference, cf. United States v. Bathgate, 246 U. S. 220; United States v. Gradwell, 243 U. S. 476, is to say that acts plainly within the statute should be deemed to be without it because other hypothetical cases may later be found not to infringe the constitutional right with which alone the statute is concerned.

If a right secured by the Constitution may be infringed by the corrupt failure to include the vote at a primary in the official count, it is not significant that the primary, like the voting machine, was unknown when § 19 was adopted. Abuse of either may infringe the right and therefore violate § 19. * * * Nor does the fact that in circumstances not here present there may be difficulty in determining whether the primary so affects the right of the choice as to bring it within the constitutional protection, afford any ground for doubting the construction and application of the statute once the constitutional question is resolved. That difficulty is inherent in the judicial administration of every federal criminal statute, for none, whatever its terms, can be applied beyond the reach of the congressional power which the Constitution confers. * * *

The right of the voters at the primary to have their votes counted is, as we have stated, a right or privilege secured by the Constitution, and to this § 20 also gives protection. The alleged acts of appellees were committed in the course of their performance of duties under the Louisiana statute requiring them to count the ballots, to record the result of the count, and to certify the result of the election. Misuse of power, possessed by virtue of state law and made possible only because the wrongdoer is clothed with the authority of state law, is action taken "under color of" state law. Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 346; Home Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Los Angeles, 227 U. S. 278, 287, et seq.; Hague v. C. I. O., 307 U. S. 496, 507, 519. Here the acts of appellees infringed the constitutional right and deprived the voters of the benefit of it within the meaning of § 20, unless by its terms its application is restricted to deprivations "on account of [an] inhabitant being an alien, or by reason of his color, or race."

The last clause of § 20 protects inhabitants of a state from being subjected to different punishments, pains or penalties by reason of alienage, color or race, than are prescribed for the punishment of citizens. That the qualification with respect to alienage, color and race, refers only to differences in punishment and not to deprivations of any rights or privileges secured by the Constitution, is evidenced by the structure of the section and the necessities of the practical application of its provisions. The qualification as to alienage, color and race, is a parenthetical phrase in the clause penalizing different punishments "than are prescribed for * * * citizens" and in the common use of language could refer only to the subject matter of the clause and not to that of the earlier one relating to the deprivation of rights to which it makes no reference in terms. * * *

So interpreted § 20 applies to deprivation of the constitutional rights of qualified voters to choose representatives in Congress. The generality of the section made applicable as it is to deprivations of any constitutional right, does not obscure its meaning or impair its force within the scope of its application, which is restricted by its terms to deprivations which are willfully inflicted by those acting under color of any law, statute and the like.

We do not discuss the application of § 20 to deprivations of the right to equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment, a point apparently raised and discussed for the first time in the Government's brief in this Court. The point was not specially considered or decided by the court below, and has not been assigned as error by the Government. Since the indictment on its face does not purport to charge a deprivation of equal protection to voters or candidates, we are not called upon to construe the indictment in order to raise a question of statutory validity or construction which we are alone authorized to review upon this appeal. Reversed.

The CHIEF JUSTICE took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

[MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS dissented, joined by MR. JUSTICE BLACK and MR. JUSTICE MURPHY. They thought that § 19 should not be construed to apply to primaries.]

NOTES

1. The power of Congress to make it a federal crime for officers of an election at which members of Congress are voted for to violate any duty imposed upon them by state or federal law was upheld under Art. I, § 4, cl. 1, in Ex parte Siebold, 100 U. S. 371, 25 L. ed. 717 (1880). And even though suffrage qualifications are fixed by state law, the right of a legally qualified elector to vote for members of Congress is a right derived from the Constitution which may be accorded protection by federal law. It was upon this theory, in Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S. 651, 28 L. ed. 274, 4 Sup. Ct. 152 (1884), that the conviction of private individuals for maltreating a Negro while exercising his right to vote for a member of Congress was sustained under the conspiracy provision of the Civil Rights Acts as a valid exercise of the power to enforce the Fifteenth Amendment by appropriate legislation. In United States v. Saylor, 322 U. S. 385, 88 L. ed. 1341, 64 Sup. Ct. 1101 (1944) the conspiracy provision was held to have been violated where election officials stuffed the ballot box at an election of a United States Senator in Kentucky.

2. The Democratic party of Alabama, exercising a state-delegated authority, closed the official primary to any candidate for presidential elector who refused to pledge himself to support any candidate named by the Democratic National Convention. The Supreme Court of Alabama held the pledge requirement to be a violation of the Twelfth Amendment since it restricted the freedom of a federal elector to vote in the Electoral College. Reversing this judgment, the Supreme Court of the United States, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Reed, held that the Twelfth Amendment does not demand absolute freedom for the elector to vote his own choice, uninhibited by a pledge, and that, "even if such promises of candidates for the Electoral College are legally unenforceable because violative of an assumed constitutional freedom of the elector" it did not follow that the pledge requirement was unconstitutional. Justices Jackson and Douglas dissented on the ground that under the Twelfth Amendment the electors were intended to be free agents and exercise an independent judgment as to the men best qualified for the nation's highest offices. Justices Black and Frankfurter did not participate. Ray v. Blair, 343 U. S. 214, 96 L. ed. 894, 72 Sup. Ct. 654 (1952).

SMITH v. ALLWRIGHT.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1944.

321 U. S. 649, 88 L. ed. 987, 64 Sup. Ct. 757, 151 A. L. R. 1110.

MR. JUSTICE REED delivered the opinion of the Court.

This writ of certiorari brings here for review a claim for damages in the sum of $5,000 on the part of petitioner, a Negro citizen of the 48th precinct of Harris County, Texas, for the refusal of respondents, election and associate election judges respectively of that precinct, to give petitioner a ballot or to permit him to cast a ballot in the primary election of July 27, 1940, for the nomination of Democratic candidates for the United States Senate and House of Representatives, and Governor and other state officers. The refusal is alleged to have been solely because of the race and color of the proposed voter.

The actions of respondents are said to violate §§ 31 and 43 of Title 8 of the United States Code, in that petitioner was deprived of rights secured by §§ 2 and 4 of Article I and the Fourteenth, Fifteenth and Seventeenth Amendments to the United States Constitution. The suit was filed in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Texas which had jurisdiction under Judicial Code § 24, subsection 14, 28 U. S. C. § 41 (14).

The District Court denied the relief sought and the Circuit Court of Appeals quite properly affirmed its action on the authority of Grovey v. Townsend, 295 U. S. 45. We granted the petition for certiorari to resolve a claimed inconsistency between the decision in the Grovey case and that of United States v. Classic, 313 U. S. 299.

The State of Texas by its Constitution and statutes provides that every person, if certain other requirements are met which are not here in issue, qualified by residence in the district or county "shall be deemed a qualified elector." Constitution of Texas, Article VI, § 2; Vernon's Civil Statutes (1939 ed.) Article 2955. Primary elections for United States Senators, Congressmen and state officers are provided for by Chapters Twelve and Thirteen of the statutes. Under these chapters, the Democratic Party was required to hold the primary which was the occasion of the alleged wrong to petitioner. A summary of the state statutes regulating primaries appears in the footnote. These nominations are to be made by the qualified voters of the party. Art. 3101.

The Democratic Party of Texas is held by the Supreme Court of that state to be a "voluntary association," Bell v. Hill, 123 Tex. 531, 534, 74 S. W. (2d) 113, protected by § 27 of the Bill of Rights, Art. 1, Constitution of Texas, from interference by the state except that:

"In the interest of fair methods and a fair expression by their members of their preferences in the selection of their nominees, the State may regulate such elections by proper laws." That court stated further:

"Since the right to organize and maintain a political party is one guaranteed by the Bill of Rights of this state, it necessarily follows that every privilege essential or reasonably appropriate to the exercise of that right is likewise guaranteed, including, of course, the privilege of determining the policies of the party and its membership. Without the privilege of determining the policy of a political association and its membership, the right to organize such an association would be a mere mockery. We think these rights, that is, the right to determine the membership of a political party and to determine its policies, of necessity are to be exercised by the State Convention of such party, and cannot, under any circumstances, be conferred upon a State or governmental agency." Page 546. Cf. Waples v. Marrast, 108 Tex. 5, 184 S. W. 180.

The Democratic party on May 24, 1932, in a State Convention adopted the following resolution, which has not since been "amended, abrogated, annulled or avoided":

"Be it resolved that all white citizens of the State of Texas who are qualified to vote under the Constitution and laws of the State shall be eligible to membership in the Democratic party and, as such, entitled to participate in its deliberations." It was by virtue of this resolution that the respondents refused to permit the petitioner to vote.

Texas is free to conduct her elections and limit her electorate as she may deem wise, save only as her action may be affected by the prohibitions of the United States Constitution or in conflict with powers delegated to and exercised by the National Government. The Fourteenth Amendment forbids a state from making or enforcing any law which abridges the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States and the Fifteenth Amendment specifically interdicts any denial or abridgment by a state of the right of citizens to vote on account of color. Respondents appeared in the District Court and the Circuit Court of Appeals and defended on the ground that the Democratic party of Texas is a voluntary organization with members banded together for the purpose of selecting individuals of the group representing the common political beliefs as candidates in the general election. As such a voluntary organization, it was claimed, the Democratic party is free to select its own membership and limit to whites participation in the party primary. Such action, the answer asserted, does not violate the Fourteenth, Fifteenth, or Seventeenth Amendment as officers of government cannot be chosen at primaries and the Amendments are applicable only to general elections where governmental officers are actually elected. Primaries, it is said, are political party affairs, handled by party, not governmental, officers. No appearance for respondents is made in this Court. Arguments presented here by the Attorney General of Texas and the Chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee of Texas, as amici curiae, urged substantially the same grounds as those advanced by the respondents.

The right of a Negro to vote in the Texas primary has been considered heretofore by this Court. The first case was Nixon v. Herndon, 273 U. S. 536. At that time, 1924, the Texas statute, Art. 3093a, afterwards numbered Art. 3107 (Rev. Stat. 1925) declared "in no event shall a Negro be eligible to participate in a Democratic party primary election in the State of Texas." Nixon was refused the right to vote in a Democratic primary and brought a suit for damages against the election officers under R. S. §§ 1979 and 2004, the present §§ 43 and 31 of Title 8, U. S. C., respectively. It was urged to this Court that the denial of the franchise to Nixon violated his Constitutional rights under the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments. Without consideration of the Fifteenth, this Court held that the action of Texas in denying the ballot to Negroes by statute was in violation of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment and reversed the dismissal of the suit.

The legislature of Texas reenacted the article but gave the State Executive Committee of the party the power to prescribe the qualifications of its members for voting or other participation. This article remains in the statutes. The State Executive Committee of the Democratic party adopted a resolution that white Democrats and none other might participate in the primaries of that party. Nixon was refused again the privilege of voting in a primary and again brought suit for damages by virtue of § 31, Title 8, U. S. C. This Court again reversed the dismissal of the suit for the reason that the Committee action was deemed to be State action and invalid as discriminatory under the Fourteenth Amendment. The test was said to be whether the Committee operated as representative of the State in the discharge of the State's authority. Nixon v. Condon, 286 U. S. 73. The question of the inherent power of a political party in Texas "without restraint by any law to determine its own membership" was left open. Id., 286 U. S. 84, 85.

In Grove v. Townsend, 295 U. S. 45, this Court had before it another suit for damages for the refusal in a primary of a county clerk, a Texas officer with only public functions to perform, to furnish petitioner, a Negro, an absentee ballot. The refusal was solely on the ground of race. This case differed from Nixon v. Condon, supra, in that a state convention of the Democratic party had passed the resolution of May 24, 1932, hereinbefore quoted. It was decided that the determination by the state convention of the membership of the Democratic party made a significant change from a determination by the Executive Committee. The former was party action, voluntary in character. The latter, as had been held in the Condon case, was action by authority of the State. The managers of the primary election were therefore declared not to be state officials in such sense that their action was state action. A state convention of a party was said not to be an organ of the state. This Court went on to announce that to deny a vote in a primary was a mere refusal of party membership with which "the state need have no concern," loc. cit. 295 U. S. at 55, while for a state to deny a vote in a general election on the ground of race or color violated the Constitution. Consequently, there was found no ground for holding that the county clerk's refusal of a ballot because of racial ineligibility for party membership denied the petitioner any right under the Fourteenth or Fifteenth Amendments.

Since Grove v. Townsend and prior to the present suit, no case from Texas involving primary elections has been before the Court. We did decide, however, United States v. Classic, 313 U. S. 299. We there held that § 4 of Article I of the Constitution authorized Congress to regulate primary as well as general elections, 313 U. S. at 316, 317, "where the primary is by law made an integral part of the election machinery." 313 U. S. at 318. Consequently, in the Classic case, we upheld the applicability to frauds in a Louisiana primary of §§ 19 and 20 of the Criminal Code, 18 U. S. C. §§ 51, 52. Thereby corrupt acts of election officers were subjected to Congressional sanctions because that body had power to protect rights of Federal suffrage secured by the Constitution in primary as in general elections. 313 U. S. at 323. This decision depended, too, on the determination that under the Louisiana statutes the primary was a part of the procedure for choice of Federal officials. By this decision the doubt as to whether or not such primaries were a part of "elections" subject to Federal control, which had remained unanswered since Newberry v. United States, 256 U. S. 232, was erased. The Nixon cases were decided under the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment without a determination of the status of the primary as part of the electoral process. The exclusion of Negroes from the primaries by action of the State was held invalid under that Amendment. The fusing by the Classic case of the primary and general elections into a single instrumentality for choice of officers has a definite bearing on the permissibility under the Constitution of excluding Negroes from primaries. This is not to say that the Classic case cuts directly into the rationale of Grovey v. Townsend. This latter case was not mentioned in the opinion. Classic bears upon Grovey v. Townsend not because exclusion of Negroes from primaries is any more or less state action by reason of the unitary character of the electoral process but because the recognition of the place of the primary in the electoral scheme makes clear that state delegation to a party of the power to fix the qualifications of primary elections is delegation of a state function that may make the party's action the action of the state. When Grovey v. Townsend was written, the Court looked upon the denial of a vote in a primary as a mere refusal by a party of party membership. 295 U. S. at 55. As the Louisiana statutes for holding primaries are similar to those of Texas, our ruling in Classic as to the unitary character of the electoral process calls for a reexamination as to whether or not the exclusion of Negroes from a Texas party primary was state action.

The statutes of Texas relating to primaries and the resolution of the Democratic party of Texas extending the privileges of membership to white citizens only are the same in substance and effect today as they were when Grovey v. Townsend was decided by a unanimous Court. The question as to whether the exclusionary action of the party was the action of the State persists as the determinative factor. In again entering upon consideration of the inference to be drawn as to state action from a substantially similar factual situation, it should be noted that Grovey v. Townsend upheld exclusion of Negroes from primaries through the denial of party membership by a party convention. A few years before this Court refused approval of exclusion by the State Executive Committee of the party. A different result was reached on the theory that the Committee action was state authorized and the Convention action was unfettered by statutory control. Such a variation in the result from so slight a change in form influences us to consider anew the legal validity of the distinction which has resulted in barring Negroes from participating in the nominations of candidates of the Democratic party in Texas. * * *

It may now be taken as a postulate that the right to vote in such a primary for the nomination of candidates without discrimination by the State, like the right to vote in a general election, is a right secured by the Constitution. United States v. Classic, 313 U. S. 314; Myers v. Anderson, 238 U. S. 368; Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S. 651, 663 et seq. By the terms of the Fifteenth Amendment that right may not be abridged by any state on account of race. Under our Constitution the great privilege of the ballot may not be denied a man by the State because of his color.

We are thus brought to an examination of the qualifications for Democratic primary electors in Texas, to determine whether state action or private action has excluded Negroes from participation. Despite Texas' decision that the exclusion is produced by private or party action, Bell v. Hill, supra, Federal courts must for themselves appraise the facts leading to that conclusion. It is only by the performance of this obligation that a final and uniform interpretation can be given to the Constitution, the "supreme Law of the Land * * *." Texas requires electors in a primary to pay a poll tax. Every person who does so pay and who has the qualifications of age and residence is an acceptable voter for the primary. Art. 2955 * * * Texas requires by the law the election of the county officers of a party. These compose the county executive committee. The county chairmen so selected are members of the district executive committee and choose the chairman for the district. Precinct primary election officers are named by the county executive committee. Statutes provide for the election by the voters of precinct delegates to the county convention of a party and the selection of delegates to the district and state conventions by the county convention. The state convention selects the state executive committee. No convention may place in platform or resolution any demand for specific legislation without endorsement of such legislation by the voters in a primary. Texas thus directs the selection of all party officers.

Primary elections are conducted by the party under state statutory authority. The county executive committee selects precinct election officials and the county, district or state executive committees, respectively, canvass the returns. These party committees or the state convention certify the party's candidates to the appropriate officers for inclusion on the official ballot for the general election. No name which has not been so certified may appear upon the ballot for the general election as a candidate of a political party. No other name may be printed on the ballot which has not been placed in nomination by qualified voters who must take oath that they did not participate in a primary for the selection of a candidate for the office for which the nomination is made.

The state courts are given exclusive original jurisdiction of contested elections and of mandamus proceedings to compel party officers to perform their statutory duties.

We think that this statutory system for the selection of party nominees for inclusion on the general election ballot makes the party which is required to follow these legislative directions an agency of the state in so far as it determines the participants in a primary election. The party takes its character as a state agency from the duties imposed upon it by state statutes; the duties do not become matters of private law because they are performed by a political party. The plan of the Texas primary follows substantially that of Louisiana, with the exception that in Louisiana the state pays the cost of the primary while Texas assesses the cost against candidates. In numerous instances, the Texas statutes fix or limit the fees to be charged. Whether paid directly by the state or through state requirements, it is state action which compels. When primaries become a part of the machinery for choosing officials, state and national, as they have here, the same tests to determine the character of discrimination or abridgment should be applied to the primary as are applied to the general election. If the state requires a certain electoral procedure, prescribes a general election ballot made up of party nominees so chosen and limits the choice of the electorate in general elections for state offices, practically speaking, to those whose names appear on such a ballot, it endorses, adopts and enforces the discrimination against Negroes, practiced by a party entrusted by Texas law with the determination of the qualifications of participants in the primary. This is state action within the meaning of the Fifteenth Amendment. Guinn v. United States, 238 U. S. 347, 362.

The United States is a constitutional democracy. Its organic law grants to all its citizens a right to participate in the choice of elected officials without restriction by any state because of race. This grant to the people of the opportunity for choice is not to be nullified by a state through casting its electoral process in a form which permits a private organization to practice racial discrimination in the election. Constitutional rights would be of little value if they could be thus indirectly denied. Lane v. Wilson, 307 U. S. 268, 275.

The privilege of membership in a party may be, as this Court said in Grove v. Townsend, 295 U. S. 45, 55, no concern of a state. But when, as here, that privilege is also the essential qualification for voting in a primary to select nominees for a general election, the state makes the action of the party the action of the state. In reaching this conclusion we are not unmindful of the desirability of continuity of decision in constitutional questions. However, when convinced of former error, this Court has never felt constrained to follow precedent. In constitutional questions, where correction depends upon amendment and not upon legislative action this Court throughout its history has freely exercised its power to reexamine the basis of its constitutional decisions. This has long been accepted practice, and this practice has continued to this day. This is particularly true when the decision believed erroneous is the application of a constitutional principle rather than an interpretation of the Constitution to extract the principle itself. Here we are applying, contrary to the recent decision in Grove v. Townsend, the well established principle of the Fifteenth Amendment, forbidding the abridgment by a state of a citizen's right to vote. Grove v. Townsend is overruled.

Judgment reversed.

MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER concurs in the result.

[MR. JUSTICE ROBERTS dissented in an opinion which is omitted here.]

NOTES

1. The principal case is discussed in Cushman, The Texas "White Primary" Case—Smith v. Allwright, 30 Corn. L. Q. 66 (1944); Hastie, Appraisal of Smith v. Allwright, 5 Lawyers Guild Rev. 65 (1945). For discussion of the earlier cases see Evans, Primary Elections and the Constitution, 32 Mich. L. Rev. 451 (1934). For the effect of the decision upon Negro suffrage in the Southern states, see Weeks, The White Primary: 1944-1948, 42 Am. Pol. Sci. Rev. 500 (1948); Note, 47 Col. L. Rev. 76 (1947). For the historical background of the "white primary", see McGovney, The American Suffrage Medley (1949), 99-104; Key, Southern Politics (1949), 619-24.

2. In an effort to circumvent the holding in the principal case, South Carolina repealed all statutes regulating primary elections, thus attempting to transform the Democratic party of the state into a "private voluntary association of individuals" which could exclude Negroes from primaries by "club rules." In a class suit brought by a Negro plaintiff to enjoin party officials from refusing primary ballots to Negroes, the federal district court, granting the injunction, held that the state Democratic primary still remained the only effective agency for the selection of federal and other officials and that Negroes could not, in conformity with Smith v. Allwright, be barred from participation therein. This decision was affirmed by the United States Court of Appeals, the opinion of Judge Parker saying: "The fundamental error in defendant's position consists in the premise that a political party is a mere private aggregation of individuals, like a country club, and that the primary is a mere piece of party machinery. The party may, indeed, have been a mere private aggregation of individuals in the early days of the Republic, but with the passage of the years, political parties have become in effect state institutions, governmental agencies through which sovereign power is exercised by the people." Rice v. Elmore, 165 F. (2d) 387 (C. C. A. 4th 1947), cert. den., 333 U. S. 875, 92 L. ed. 1151, 68 Sup. Ct. 905 (1948).

A later attempt to maintain a "white primary" in South Carolina by organizing the Democratic party into clubs open only to whites, and providing that qualified Negro electors were also entitled to vote in the primaries if they presented their general election certificates and took an oath that they believed in the social and educational separation of races and opposed a federal Fair Employment Practices Act, was defeated in Baskin v. Brown, 174 F. (2d) 391 (C. A. 4th 1949), where the court affirmed the issuance of a decree enjoining the use of these restrictive devices.

3. Terry v. Adams, 345 U. S. 461, 97 L. ed. 1152, 73 Sup. Ct. 809 (1953) raised the question whether the Fifteenth Amendment was violated by the practice of excluding Negroes from voting in the primaries of a Texas county political organization known as the Jaybird Democratic Association. The membership of the organization was limited to whites whose names appeared on the official list of county voters. Apart from excluding Negroes, the voting qualifications were identical with those prescribed by Texas laws. The organization's primaries were held prior to the primaries of the Democratic party and the names of its nominees were put on the ballot on the Democratic primary without indication that they had been nominated by the organization. While persons not so nominated were free to enter the official primaries, the organization's nominees usually won without opposition in these primaries and the general elections that followed. The admitted purpose of the organization was to deny Negroes any voice in the election of county officials. Against the contention that the Jaybird organization was not a political party but a self-governing voluntary club, whose activities were not state action, the Supreme Court, in an eight-to-one decision, held that these discriminatory practices were prohibited by the Fifteenth Amendment. Three opinions were written by the majority justices, each expressing a different point of view. Mr. Justice Minton dissented on the ground that the state's failure to prevent individuals from doing what they had a right to do did not amount to state action.

CHAPTER X
CONSTITUTIONAL LIMITATIONS: PROHIBITION OF SLAVERY AND INVOLUNTARY SERVITUDE

BAILEY v. ALABAMA.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1911.
219 U. S. 219, 55 L. ed. 191, 31 Sup. Ct. 145.

MR. JUSTICE HUGHES delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is a writ of error to review a judgment of the Supreme Court of the State of Alabama, affirming a judgment of conviction in the Montgomery city court. The statute upon which the conviction was based is assailed as in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States upon the ground that it deprived the plaintiff in error of his liberty without due process of law and denied him the equal protection of the laws, and also of the Thirteenth Amendment, and of the act of Congress providing for the enforcement of that Amendment, in that the effect of the statute is to enforce involuntary servitude by compelling personal service in liquidation of a debt.

The statute in question is § 4730 of the Code of Alabama of 1896, as amended in 1903 and 1907. * * * The section, thus amended, reads as follows:

"Any person who, with intent to injure or defraud his employer, enters into a contract in writing for the performance of any act of service, and thereby obtains money or other personal property from such employer, and with like intent, and without just cause, and without refunding such money, or paying for such property, refuses or fails to perform such act or service, must on conviction be punished by a fine in double the damage suffered by the injured party, but not more than $300, one half of said fine to go to the county and one half to the party injured; and any person who, with intent to injure or defraud his landlord, enters into any contract in writing for the rent of land, and thereby obtains any money or other personal property from such landlord, and with like intent, without just cause, and without refunding such money, or paying for such property, refuses or fails to cultivate such land, or to comply with his contract relative thereto, must on conviction be punished by fine in double the damage suffered by the injured party, but not more than $300, one half of said fine to go to the county and one half to the party injured. And the refusal or failure of any person, who enters into such contract, to perform such act or service, or to cultivate such land, or refund such money, or pay for such property, without just cause, shall be prima facie evidence of the intent to injure his employer or landlord or defraud him. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions hereof be and the same are hereby repealed."

There is also a rule of evidence enforced by the courts of Alabama which must be regarded as having the same effect as if read into the statute itself, that the accused, for the purpose of rebutting the statutory presumption, shall not be allowed to testify "as to his uncommunicated motives, purpose, or intention." Bailey v. State, 161 Ala. 77, 78, 49 So. 886. * * *

We at once dismiss from consideration the fact that the plaintiff in error is a black man. While the action of a state, through its officers charged with the administration of a law fair in appearance, may be of such a character as to constitute a denial of the equal protection of the laws (Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 373) such a conclusion is here neither required nor justified. The statute, on its face, makes no racial discrimination, and the record fails to show its existence in fact. No question of a sectional character is presented, and we may view the legislation in the same manner as if it had been enacted in New York or in Idaho. * * *

But the refusal or failure to perform the service, without just cause, constitutes the breach of the contract. The justice of the grounds of refusal or failure must, of course, be determined by the contractual obligation assumed. Whatever the reason for leaving the service, if, judged by the terms of the contract, it is insufficient in law, it is not "just cause." The money received and repayable, nothing more being shown, constitutes a mere debt. The asserted difficulty of proving the intent to injure or defraud is thus made the occasion for dispensing with such proof, so far as the prima facie case is concerned. And the mere breach of a contract for personal service, coupled with the mere failure to pay a debt which was to be liquidated in the course of such service, is made sufficient to warrant a conviction.

It is no answer to say that the jury must find, and here found, that a fraudulent intent existed. The jury by their verdict cannot add to the facts before them. If nothing be shown but a mere breach of a contract of service and a mere failure to pay a debt, the jury have nothing else to go upon, and the evidence becomes nothing more because of their finding. Had it not been for this statutory presumption, supplied by the amendment, no one would be heard to say that Bailey could have been convicted. * * *

We are not impressed with the argument that the Supreme Court of Alabama has construed the amendment to mean that the jury is not controlled by the presumption, if unrebutted, and still may find the accused not guilty. That court, in its opinion, said: "Again, it must be borne in mind that the rule of evidence fixed by the statute does not make it the duty of the jury to convict on the evidence referred to in the enactment, if unrebutted, whether satisfied thereby of the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt or not. On the contrary, with such evidence before them, the jury are still left free to find the accused guilty or not guilty, according as they may be satisfied of his guilt or not, by the whole evidence." 161 Ala. 78, 49 So. 886.

But the controlling construction of the statute is the affirmance of this judgment of conviction. It is not sufficient to declare that the statute does not make it the duty of the jury to convict, where there is no other evidence but the breach of the contract and the failure to pay the debt. The point is that, in such a case, the statute authorizes the jury to convict. It is not enough to say that the jury may not accept that evidence as alone sufficient; for the jury may accept it, and they have the express warrant of the statute to accept it as a basis for their verdict. And it is in this light that the validity of the statute must be determined. * * *

While, in considering the natural operation and effect of the statute, as amended, we are not limited to the particular facts of the case at the bar, they present an illuminating illustration. We may briefly restate them. Bailey made a contract to work for a year at $12 a month. He received $15, and he was to work this out, being entitled monthly only to $10.75 of his wages. No one was present when he made the contract but himself and the manager of the employing company. There is not a particle of evidence of any circumstance indicating that he made the contract or received the money with any intent to injure or defraud his employer. On the contrary, he actually worked for upwards of a month. His motive in leaving does not appear, the only showing being that it was without legal excuse and that he did not repay the money received. For this he is sentenced to a fine of $30 and to imprisonment at hard labor, in default of the payment of the fine and costs, for 136 days. Was not the case the same in effect as if the statute had made it a criminal act to leave the service without just cause and without liquidating the debt? To say that he has been found guilty of an intent to injure or defraud his employer, and not merely for breaking his contract and not paying his debt, is a distinction without a difference to Bailey.

Consider the situation of the accused under this statutory presumption. If, at the outset, nothing took place but the making of the contract and the receipt of the money, he could show nothing else. If there was no legal justification for his leaving his employment, he could show none. If he had not paid the debt, there was nothing to be said as to that. The law of the state did not permit him to testify that he did not intend to injure or defraud. Unless he were fortunate enough to be able to command evidence of circumstances affirmatively showing good faith, he was helpless. He stood, stripped by the statute of the presumption of innocence, and exposed to conviction for fraud upon evidence only of breach of contract and failure to pay.

It is said that we may assume that a fair jury would convict only where the circumstances sufficiently indicated a fraudulent intent. Why should this be assumed in the face of the statute and upon this record?

In the present case the jury did convict, although there is an absence of evidence sufficient to establish fraud under the familiar rule that fraud will not be presumed, and the obvious explanation of the verdict is that the trial court, in accordance with the statute, charged the jury that refusal to perform the service, or to repay the money, without just cause, constituted prima facie evidence of the commission of the offense which the statute defined. That is, the jury were told in effect that the evidence, under the statutory rule, was sufficient, and hence they treated it as such. There is no basis for an assumption that the jury would have acted differently if Bailey had worked for three months, or six months, or nine months, if in fact his debt had not been paid. The normal assumption is that the jury will follow the statute, and, acting in accordance with the authority it confers, will accept as sufficient what the statute expressly so describes. * * *

We cannot escape the conclusion that, although the statute in terms is to punish fraud, still its natural and inevitable effect is to expose to conviction for crime those who simply fail or refuse to perform contracts for personal service in liquidation of a debt; and judging its purpose by its effect, that it seeks in this way to provide the means of compulsion through which performance of such service may be secured. The question is whether such a statute is constitutional.

This Court has frequently recognized the general power of every legislature to prescribe the evidence which shall be received, and the effect of that evidence, in the courts of its own government. Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698, 749. In the exercise of this power numerous statutes have been enacted providing that proof of one fact shall be prima facie evidence of the main fact in issue; and where the inference is not purely arbitrary, and there is a rational relation between the two facts, and the accused is not deprived of a proper opportunity to submit all the facts bearing upon the issue, it has been held that such statutes do not violate the requirements of due process of law. * * *

In this class of cases where the entire subject-matter of the legislation is otherwise within state control, the question has been whether the prescribed rule of evidence interferes with the guaranteed equality before the law, or violates those fundamental rights and immutable principles of justice which are embraced within the conception of due process of law. But where the conduct or fact, the existence of which is made the basis of the statutory presumption, itself falls within the scope of a provision of the Federal Constitution, a further question arises. It is apparent that a constitutional prohibition cannot be transgressed indirectly by the creation of a statutory presumption any more than it can be violated by direct enactment. The power to create presumptions is not a means of escape from constitutional restrictions. And the state may not in this way interfere with matters withdrawn from its authority by the Federal Constitution, or subject an accused to conviction for conduct which it is powerless to proscribe.

In the present case it is urged that the statute as amended, through the operation of the presumption for which it provides, violates the Thirteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States and the act of Congress passed for its enforcement.

The Thirteenth Amendment provides:

"Section 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

"Section 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

Pursuant to the authority thus conferred, Congress passed the act of March 2, 1867, chap. 187, 14 Stat. at L. 546, the provisions of which are now found in §§ 1990 and 5526 of the Revised Statutes, as follows:

"Sec. 1990. The holding of any person to service or labor under the system known as peonage is abolished and forever prohibited in the territory of New Mexico, or in any other territory or state of the United States; and all acts, laws, resolutions, orders, regulations, or usages of the territory of New Mexico, or of any other territory or state, which have heretofore established, maintained, or enforced, or by virtue of which any attempt shall hereafter be made to establish, maintain, or enforce, directly or indirectly, the voluntary or involuntary service or labor of any persons as peons, in liquidation of any debt or obligation, or otherwise, are declared null and void."

"Sec. 5526. Every person who holds, arrests, returns, or causes to be held, arrested, or returned, or in any manner aids in the arrest or return, of any person to a condition of peonage, shall be punished by a fine of not less than one thousand nor more than five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not less than one year nor more than five years, or by both." * * *

Peonage is a term descriptive of a condition which has existed in Spanish America, and especially in Mexico. The essence of the thing is compulsory service in payment of a debt. A peon is one who is compelled to work for his creditor until his debt is paid. And in this explicit and comprehensive enactment, Congress was not concerned with mere names or manner of description, or with a particular place or section of the country. It was concerned with a fact, wherever it might exist; with a condition, however named and wherever it might be established, maintained, or enforced.

The fact that the debtor contracted to perform the labor which is sought to be compelled does not withdraw the attempted enforcement from the condemnation of the statute. The full intent of the constitutional provision could be defeated with obvious facility if, through the guise of contracts under which advances had been made, debtors could be held to compulsory service. It is the compulsion of the service that the statute inhibits, for when that occurs, the condition of servitude is created, which would be not less involuntary because of the original agreement to work out the indebtedness. The contract exposes the debtor to liability for the loss due to the breach, but not to enforced labor. * * *

The act of Congress, nullifying all state laws by which it should be attempted to enforce the "service or labor of any persons as peons, in liquidation of any debt or obligation, or otherwise," necessarily embraces all legislation which seeks to compel the service or labor by making it a crime to refuse or fail to perform it. Such laws would furnish the readiest means of compulsion. The Thirteenth Amendment prohibits involuntary servitude except as punishment for crime. But the exception, allowing full latitude for the enforcement of penal laws, does not destroy the prohibition. It does not permit slavery or involuntary servitude to be established or maintained through the operation of the criminal law by making it a crime to refuse to submit to the one or to render the service which would constitute the other. The state may impose involuntary servitude as a punishment for crime, but it may not compel one man to labor for another in payment of a debt, by punishing him as a criminal if he does not perform the service or pay the debt. * * *

What the state may not do directly it may not do indirectly. If it cannot punish the servant as a criminal for the mere failure or refusal to serve without paying his debt, it is not permitted to accomplish the same result by creating a statutory presumption which, upon proof of no other fact, exposes him to conviction and punishment. Without imputing any actual motive to oppress, we must consider the natural operation of the statute here in question * * * and we conclude that § 4730, as amended, of the Code of Alabama, in so far as it makes the refusal or failure to perform the act or service, without refunding the money or paying for the property received prima facie evidence of the commission of the crime which the section defines, is in conflict with the Thirteenth Amendment, and the legislation authorized by that Amendment, and is therefore invalid.

In this view it is unnecessary to consider the contentions which have been made under the Fourteenth Amendment. As the case was given to the jury under instructions which authorize a verdict in accordance with the statutory presumption, and the opposing instructions requested by the accused were refused, the judgment must be reversed.

Reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

MR. JUSTICE HOLMES, dissenting: * * *

The Thirteenth Amendment does not outlaw contracts for labor. That would be at least as great a misfortune for the laborer as for the man that employed him. For it certainly would affect the terms of the bargain unfavorably for the laboring man if it were understood that the employer could do nothing in case the laborer saw fit to break his word. But any legal liability for breach of a contract is a disagreeable consequence which tends to make the contractor do as he said he would. Liability to an action for damages has that tendency as well as a fine. If the mere imposition of such consequences as tend to make a man keep to his promise is the creation of peonage when the contract happens to be for labor, I do not see why the allowance of a civil action is not, as well as an indictment ending in fine. Peonage is service to a private master at which a man is kept by bodily compulsion against his will. But the creation of the ordinary legal motives for right conduct does not produce it. Breach of a legal contract without excuse is wrong conduct, even if the contract is for labor; and if a state adds to civil liability a criminal liability to fine, it simply intensifies the legal motive for doing right; it does not make the laborer a slave.

But if a fine may be imposed, imprisonment may be imposed in case of a failure to pay it. Nor does it matter if labor is added to the imprisonment. Imprisonment with hard labor is not stricken from the statute books. * * * If work in a jail is not condemned in itself, without regard to what the conduct is it punishes, it may be made a consequence of any conduct that the state has power to punish at all. I do not blink the fact that the liability to imprisonment may work as a motive when a fine without it would not, and that it may induce the laborer to keep on when he would like to leave. But it does not strike me as an objection to a law that it is effective. * * *

I think it a mistake to say that this statute attaches its punishment to the mere breach of a contract to labor. It does not purport to do so; what it purports to punish is fraudulently obtaining money by a false pretense of an intent to keep the written contract in consideration of which the money is advanced. * * * But the import of the statute is supposed to be changed by the provision, that a refusal to perform, coupled with a failure to return the money advanced, shall be prima facie evidence of fraudulent intent. I agree that if the statute created a conclusive presumption, it might be held to make a disguised change in the substantive law. Keller v. United States, 213 U. S. 138, 150. But it only makes the conduct prima facie evidence,—a very different matter. Is it not evidence that a man had a fraudulent intent if he receives an advance upon a contract over night and leaves in the morning? I should have thought that it very plainly was. Of course, the statute is in general terms, and applies to a departure at any time without excuse or repayment, but that does no harm except on a tacit assumption that this law is not administered as it would be in New York, and that juries will act with prejudice against the laboring man. * * *

To sum up, I think that obtaining money by fraud may be made a crime as well as murder or theft; that a false representation, expressed or implied, at the time of making a contract of labor, that one intends to perform it, and thereby obtaining an advance, may be declared a case of fraudulently obtaining money as well as any other; that if made a crime it may be punished like any other crime; and that an unjustified departure from the promised service without repayment may be declared a sufficient case to go to the jury for their judgment; all without in any way infringing the Thirteenth Amendment or the statutes of the United States.

MR. JUSTICE LURTON concurs in this dissent.

NOTES

1. In Taylor v. Georgia, 315 U. S. 25, 86 L. ed. 615, 62 Sup. Ct. 415 (1942) a like statute was held invalid. In Pollock v. Williams, 322 U. S. 4, 88 L. ed. 1095, 64 Sup. Ct. 792 (1944) the defendant pleaded guilty to violation of a statute similar to those of Alabama and Georgia. Against the contention of the state that the prima facie evidence provision should be excluded from consideration because in fact it played no part in producing the plea of guilty, the court, in reversing the conviction, made its position clear: "It is a mistake to believe that in dealing with statutes of this type we have held the presumption section to be the only source of invalidity. On the contrary, the substantive section has contributed largely to the conclusion of unconstitutionality of the presumption section. The latter in a different context might not be invalid. Indeed, we have sustained the power of the state to enact an almost identical presumption of fraud, but in transactions that did not involve involuntary labor to discharge a debt. James-Dickinson Farm Mortgage Co. v. Harry, 273 U. S. 119, 71 L. ed. 569, 47 Sup. Ct. 308." The court took the view that where in the same substantive context the state threatens by statute to convict on a presumption, its inherent coercive power is such that it is equally useful in attempts to enforce involuntary service in discharge of a debt, and the whole is invalid.

2. The Thirteenth Amendment is not merely a limitation upon governmental action but contains an absolute prohibition of slavery and involuntary servitude, whether brought about by acts of private individuals or state or federal legislation. In Clyatt v. United States, 197 U. S. 207, 49 L. ed. 726, 25 Sup. Ct. 429 (1905), sustaining the federal statute prohibiting peonage in any state or territory of the United States, the court said: "This Amendment denounces a status or condition, irrespective of the manner or authority by which it is created. The prohibitions of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments are largely upon the acts of the states; but the Thirteenth Amendment names no party or authority, but simply forbids slavery and involuntary servitude, grants to Congress power to enforce this prohibition by appropriate legislation. The differences between the Thirteenth and subsequent amendments have been so fully considered by this court that it is enough to refer to the decisions."

3. Historical considerations have been said to be the basis for holding valid certain types of compulsory service. Thus sailors may be compelled to perform their labor contracts. Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U. S. 275, 41 L. ed. 715, 17 Sup. Ct. 326 (1897) (holding valid a federal statute providing that seamen who desert their vessels may be arrested and forcibly returned for service, and providing a punishment by imprisonment for desertion). The government may require compulsory military service from all able-bodied citizens. Selective Draft Law Cases, 245 U. S. 366, 62 L. ed. 349, 38 Sup. Ct. 159, L. R. A. 1918C, 361, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 856 (1918). States may require able-bodied male persons over twenty-one and under forty-five years of age to work on the public roads for six days in each year, or in lieu thereof to furnish a substitute or pay three dollars per day. Butler v. Perry, 240 U. S. 328, 60 L. ed. 672, 36 Sup. Ct. 258 (1916).

CHAPTER XI
CONSTITUTIONAL LIMITATIONS: LAWS IMPAIRING OBLIGATIONS OF CONTRACTS

FLETCHER v. PECK.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1810.
6 Cranch 87, 3 L. ed. 162.

[See the statement of facts, ante, p. 21. The following part of the opinion was addressed to the issue raised by the pleading with reference to the fourth covenant.]

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL. * * * In this case the legislature may have had ample proof that the original grant was obtained by practices which can never be too much reprobated, and which would have justified its abrogation so far as respected those to whom crime was imputable. But the grant, when issued, conveyed an estate in fee-simple to the grantee, clothed with all the solemnities which law can bestow. This estate was transferable; and those who purchased parts of it were not stained by that guilt which infected the original transaction.
* * *

Is the power of the legislature competent to the annihilation of such title, and to a resumption of the property thus held?

The principle asserted is, that one legislature is competent to repeal any act which a former legislature was competent to pass; and that one legislature cannot abridge the powers of a succeeding legislature.

The correctness of this principle, so far as respects general legislation, can never be controverted. But if an act be done under a law, a succeeding legislature cannot undo it. The past cannot be recalled by the most absolute power. Conveyances have been made, those conveyances have vested legal estates, and, if those estates may be seized by the sovereign authority, still, that they originally vested is a fact, and cannot cease to be a fact.

When, then, a law is in its nature a contract, when absolute rights have vested under that contract, a repeal of the law cannot divest those rights; and the act of annulling them, if legitimate, is rendered so by a power applicable to the case of every individual in the community.

It may well be doubted whether the nature of society and of government does not prescribe some limits to the legislative power; and if any be prescribed, where are they to be found, if the property of an individual, fairly and honestly acquired, may be seized without compensation.

To the legislature all legislative power is granted; but the question, whether the act of transferring the property of an individual to the public, be in the nature of the legislative power, is well worthy of serious reflection. * * *

The Constitution of the United States declares that no state shall pass any bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts. Does the case now under consideration come within this prohibitory section of the Constitution?

In considering this very interesting question, we immediately ask ourselves what is a contract? Is a grant a contract? A contract is a compact between two or more parties, and is either executory or executed. An executory contract is one in which a party binds himself to do, or not to do, a particular thing; such was the law under which the conveyance was made by the governor. A contract executed is one in which the object of contract is performed; and this, says Blackstone, differs in nothing from a grant. The contract between Georgia and the purchasers was executed by the grant. A contract executed, as well as one which is executory, contains obligations binding on the parties. A grant, in its own nature, amounts to an extinguishment of the right of the grantor, and implies a contract not to reassert that right. A party is, therefore, always estopped by his own grant.

Since, then, in fact, a grant is a contract executed, the obligation of which still continues, and since the Constitution uses the general term contract, without distinguishing between those which are executory and those which are executed, it must be construed to comprehend the latter as well as the former. A law annulling conveyances between individuals, and declaring that the grantors should stand seized of their former estates, notwithstanding those grants, would be as repugnant to the Constitution as a law discharging the vendors of property from the obligation of executing their contracts by conveyances. It would be strange if a contract to convey was secured by the Constitution, while an absolute conveyance remained unprotected.

If, under a fair construction of the Constitution, grants are comprehended under the term contract, is a grant from the state excluded from the operation of the provision? Is the clause to be considered as inhibiting the state from impairing the obligation of contracts between two individuals, but as excluding from that inhibition contracts made with itself?

The words themselves contain no such distinction. They are general, and are applicable to contracts of every description. If contracts made with the state are to be exempted from their operation, the exception must arise from the character of the contracting party, not from the words which are employed. * * *

The state legislatures can pass no ex post facto law. An ex post facto law is one which renders an act punishable in a manner in which it was not punishable when it was committed. Such a law may inflict penalties on the person, or may inflict pecuniary penalties which swell the public treasury. The legislature is then prohibited from passing a law by which a man's estate, or any part of, it shall be seized for a crime which was not declared, by some previous law, to render him liable to that punishment. Why, then, should violence be done to the natural meaning of words for the purpose of leaving to the legislature the power of seizing, for public use, the estate of an individual in the form of a law annulling the title by which he holds that estate? The Court can perceive no sufficient grounds for making that distinction. This rescinding act would have the effect of an ex post facto law. It forfeits the estate of Fletcher for a crime not committed by himself, but by those from whom he purchased. This cannot be effected in the form of an ex post facto law, or bill of attainder; why, then, is it allowable in the form of a law annulling the original grant? * * *

It is, then, the unanimous opinion of the Court, that, in this case, the estate having passed into the hands of a purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice, the State of Georgia was restrained, either by general principles which are common to our free institutions, or by the particular provisions of the Constitution of the United States, from passing a law whereby the estate of the plaintiff in the premises so purchased could be constitutionally and legally impaired and rendered null and void. * * *

Judgment affirmed.

[MR. JUSTICE JOHNSON delivered a separate opinion dissenting in part from the opinion of the Court.]

NOTES

1. For analysis of the cases arising under the impairment of contracts clause, consult: Wright, The Contract Clause of the Constitution (1938); Note, The Contract Clause of the Federal Constitution, 32 Col. L. Rev. 476 (1932), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 301; Merrill, Application of the Obligation of Contract Clause to State Promises, 80 U. of Pa. L. Rev. 639 (1932), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 319; Kauper, What is a Contract Under the Contracts Clause of the Federal Constitution, 31 Mich. L. Rev. 187 (1933); Hale, The Supreme Court and the Contract Clause, 57 Harv. L. Rev. 512, 621, 852 (1944).

2. Concurring in Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 420, 572-573, 9 L. ed. 773 (1837), Mr. Justice McLean said: "A contract is defined to be an agreement between two or more persons to do or not to do a particular thing. The obligation of a contract is found in the terms of the agreement, sanctioned by moral and legal principles. * * * If it had not been otherwise laid down in the case of Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch 125, I should have doubted whether the inhibition did not apply exclusively to executory contracts. This doubt would have arisen as well from the consideration of the mischief against which this provision was intended to guard, as from the language of the provision itself. An executed contract is the evidence of a thing done; and it would seem, does not necessarily impose any duty or obligation on either party to do any act or thing. If a state convey land which it had previously granted, the second grant is void; not, it would seem to me, because the second grant impairs the obligation of the first, for in fact it does not impair it; but because, having no interest in the thing granted, the state could convey none. The second grant would be void in this country, on the same ground that it would be void in England, if made by the King. This is a principle of the common law; and it is as immutable as the basis of justice. It derives no strength from the above provision of the Constitution; nor does it seem to me to come within the scope of that provision."

3. In Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1, 5 L. ed. 547 (1823) Kentucky laws intended to protect land titles by requiring the claimant of land to pay the value of improvements made in good faith by an occupant as a condition of being put into possession, were held to violate a compact between Virginia and Kentucky at the time Kentucky became a state and hence the contract clause of the Constitution.

4. In Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629 (1819) the Supreme Court held that a grant by the Crown in 1769, to twelve trustees, of the privilege of incorporation, with power to appoint successors, conferring upon them all usual corporate powers to control and manage the college, was protected by the contract clause against state legislative impairment. It also held that a prohibited impairment would result if effect were given to certain statutes of New Hampshire, enacted in 1816. The statutes attempted to change the name to Dartmouth University, to increase the number of trustees to twenty-one, and to create an additional board of twenty-five, called a board of overseers, which would have power to veto all proceedings of the trustees relating to the appointment or removal of the president, professors and other permanent officers, to the establishment of colleges in the university or professorships and the erection of new buildings. The statutes attempted to make the president of the senate and the speaker of the house of representatives, of New Hampshire, and the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor of Vermont ex-officio members of the board of overseers, the other members of this board and the additional members of the board of trustees to be appointed by the state Governor and legislative council, of New Hampshire. The court therefore held that these statutes were inoperative because of the contract clause.

Chief Justice Marshall devoted a single paragraph of his long opinion to a finding that the facts gave rise to a contract. He said: "It can require no argument to prove that the circumstances of this case constitute a contract. An application is made to the Crown for a charter to incorporate a religious and literary institution. In the application it is stated that large contributions have been made for the object, which will be conferred on the corporation as soon as it shall be created. The charter is granted, and on its faith the property is conveyed. Surely in this transaction every ingredient of a complete and legitimate contract is to be found."

Admitting that education could be made a function of government and public corporations created to discharge the function, the Chief Justice concluded that it was a private function when performed by private individuals and mere incorporation did not make the incorporated persons public officers; that a corporation could be a private one though it was created to perform a service to members of the public, and that this incorporated board of trustees was a private corporation, such conclusion being strongly impelled by the fact that the corporation's funds were derived from private sources. An argument of expediency was added. Sound policy did not require an interpretation that would subject trusts for education to legislative alteration but, on the contrary, prospective donors should be encouraged by giving them assurance that their arrangements for the management of the trusts would be respected.

On the issue as to whether the legislation violated the contract clause, Marshall said: "On the effect of this law, two opinions cannot be entertained. Between acting directly, and acting through the agency of trustees and overseers, no essential difference is perceived. The whole power of governing the college is transferred from trustees appointed according to the will of the founder, expressed in the charter, to the executive of New Hampshire. The management and application of the funds of this eleemosynary institution which are placed by the donors in the hands of trustees named in the charter, and empowered to perpetuate themselves, are placed by this act under the control of the government of the State. The will of the State is substituted for the will of the donors in every essential operation of the college. This is not an immaterial change. The founders of the college contracted, not merely for the perpetual application of the funds which they gave to the objects for which those funds were given, they contracted also to secure that application by the constitution of the corporation. They contracted for a system which should, as far as human foresight can provide, retain forever the government of the literary institution they had formed, in the hands of persons approved by themselves. This system is totally changed. The charter of 1769 exists no longer. It is reorganized, and reorganized in such a manner as to convert a literary institution, moulded according to the will of its founders and placed under the control of private literary men, into a machine entirely subservient to the will of government. This may be for the advantage of this college in particular, and may be for the advantage of literature in general; but it is not according to the will of the donors, and is subversive of that contract on the faith of which their property was given."

Justices Washington and Story delivered concurring opinions. Justice Johnson concurred for the reasons stated by the Chief Justice. Justice Livingston concurred with all the opinions, and Justice Duval dissented.

For a graphic account of the Dartmouth College case in its historic setting see 4 Beveridge, The Life of John Marshall (1919), 220-231; see also, 1 Warren, The Supreme Court in United States History (1922), 474-492.

The consequences of the decision have long since been obviated. The states were not slow to adopt the suggestion in Justice Story's concurring opinion that a reservation of the statutory power to alter or repeal corporate charters would remove the constitutional objection and protect the states from the undesirable effects of the decision. This power is in some states reserved in the state constitution; in others it is inserted in the law under which corporate charters are granted. For a discussion of this power see Note, 31 Col. L. Rev. 1163 (1931), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 352.

5. Marriage is not a contract protected by the contract clause, and an act of a state or territorial legislature dissolving a marriage does not violate this clause. Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190, 31 L. ed. 654, 8 Sup. Ct. 723 (1888).

6. A public "officer" though elected or appointed for a definite term at a salary then fixed by law is not in a contract relation, and hence a legislative abolition of an office or the abolition or decrease of the salary, within the term, is not prohibited by the contract clause. Butler v. Pennsylvania, 10 How. 402, 13 L. ed. 472 (1850). However, many state "employees" stand in a contract relation and are protected. Hall v. Wisconsin, 103 U. S. 5, 26 L. ed. 302 (1880); and see Cramer v. New Brunswick Water Comrs., 57 N. J. Law 478, 31 Atl. 384 (1895). An "officer" has a contractual claim for salary accrued which is protected against impairment by state legislation. Fisk v. Jefferson Police Jury, 116 U. S. 131, 29 L. ed. 587, 6 Sup. Ct. 329 (1885); Robertson v. Miller, 276 U. S. 174, 72 L. ed. 517, 48 Sup. Ct. 266 (1928).

7. The obligation of a judgment based upon a tort is not an "obligation of contract," notwithstanding that a judgment is sometimes classified as a quasi-contract. Louisiana v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 27 L. ed. 936, 3 Sup. Ct. 211 (1883); Freeland v. Williams, 131 U. S. 405, 33 L. ed. 193, 9 Sup. Ct. 763 (1888). A statutory duty to pay interest on a judgment may be abolished by statute even as to an existing contract judgment. Morley v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 146 U. S. 162, 36 L. ed. 925, 13 Sup. Ct. 54 (1892). So a purely statutory right to compensation from a city for damages to property is not protected against impairment by subsequent legislation. Crane v. Hahlo, 258 U. S. 142, 66 L. ed. 514, 42 Sup. Ct. 214 (1922).

8. Statutes creating municipal corporations are not contracts. Trenton v. New Jersey, 262 U. S. 182, 67 L. ed. 937, 43 Sup. Ct. 534, 29 A. L. R. 1471 (1923).

9. Since the direction of corporate affairs is vested in boards of directors, the question has frequently arisen as to how far the state may go, under its reserved power to alter, amend or repeal grants of corporate authority, in enacting legislation which interferes with corporate internal affairs. Looker v. Maynard, 179 U. S. 46, 45 L. ed. 79, 21 Sup. Ct. 21 (1900) sustained the power of a state to provide that stockholders should have the power to cumulate their votes in the elections of directors, the court saying that the reserved power extends to any alteration or amendment of a charter "which will not defeat or substantially impair the object of the grant, or any right vested under the grant, and which the legislature may deem necessary to carry into effect the purpose of the grant, or to protect the rights of the public or of the corporation, its stockholders or creditors, or to promote the due administration of its affairs." See Note, Power of the State to Alter Corporate Charters, 31 Col. L. Rev. 1163 (1931), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 352.

10. A corporation was chartered by the state in 1866, the state reserving a right to alter or repeal the charter. In 1887 a city granted the corporation a franchise for thirty years to supply the inhabitants with water, contracting to renew for another thirty years or to buy the plant by a specified mode of appraisal. In 1911 the legislature declared all such franchises "indeterminate permits." After 1917 the company sued the city for specific performance of its promise to renew the franchise or buy the plant. The state Supreme Court construed "indeterminate permit" in the act of 1911 to mean indeterminate as to time, not limited to thirty years or any other period, and held that thus altered the franchise did not expire in 1917 and hence no duty on the part of the city to renew or buy the plant could accrue. The Supreme Court of the United States reversed, holding that the state's reservation of a power to alter or repeal the charter did not include a power to change the contract made between the city and the company without the latter's consent. Superior Water, Light & Power Co. v. Superior, 263 U. S. 125, 68 L. ed. 204, 44 Sup. Ct. 82 (1923).

FLEMING v. FLEMING.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1924.
264 U. S. 29, 68 L. ed. 547, 44 Sup. Ct. 246.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE TAFT delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is a writ of error to the Supreme Court of Iowa. The suit was begun in Polk County District Court by Anna B. Fleming, widow of Charles Fleming, against three brothers of her husband, one of whom had become his administrator, to secure her dower rights under the state statute in the share of her husband in the property of a partnership of the four brothers, in the business of soliciting and placing life insurance. The defendants' claim was that Charles lost all interest in the partnership upon his death, that by virtue of three contracts the property passed to the survivors, and the partnership of the three continued in possession and title free from any claim by heirs, next of kin, or the widow of Charles. The Supreme Court of Iowa held that these contracts constituted a contract by each partner to make a will to his survivors, were testamentary in character, and were avoided by § 3376 of the Code of Iowa, providing that as between husband and wife the survivor's share cannot be affected by any will of the spouse without previous consent of the survivor.

It is assigned for error that in this ruling the Supreme Court of the state reversed its former rulings, under which such a contract of partnership had been held to be valid and not avoided by § 3376 or any other section of the Code; that on the faith of these rulings, the partnership contracts herein had been entered into, and that the new construction of the statute was an impairment of the contracts of partnership in violation of Article I, § 10, of the federal Constitution. This objection was made in the Supreme Court of the state on the application for a second rehearing, and the court held in its opinion that the point was not well taken because no prior decisions had in fact been overruled. This is a sufficient consideration of the point by the state Supreme Court before its judgment, to justify an assignment of error raising the federal question, if in fact and in law it be one.

In Tidal Oil Co. v. Flanagan, 263 U. S. 444, we had occasion to consider the same issue. After a somewhat full examination, we held that, by a score of decisions of this court, a judicial impairment of a contract obligation was not within § 10, Article I, of the Constitution, since the inhibition was directed only against impairment by legislation, and that such judicial action presented no federal question of which this court could take jurisdiction on a writ of error from a state court.

It is urged upon us that the impairment here is legislative, in that the case turned on the effect of § 3376 of the Iowa Code; that the subsequent judicial construction of it became part of the statute and gave it a new effect as a law. In other words, the contention is that the same statute was one law when first construed, before the making of the contract, and has become a new and different act of the legislature by the later decision of the court. This is ingenious but unsound. It is the same law. The effect of the subsequent decisions is not to make a new law but only to hold that the law always meant what the court now says it means. The court has power to construe a legislative act, but it has no power by change in construction to date its passage as a law from the time of the later decision. A statute in force when a contract was made cannot be made a subsequent statute through new interpretation by the courts. Any different view would be at variance with the many decisions of this court cited in the Flanagan Case.

For these reasons, we must hold that the claim of plaintiffs in error does not raise a substantial federal question, and dismiss the writ of error for lack of jurisdiction.

Writ of error dismissed.

NOTES

1. In Tidal Oil Co. v. Flanagan, 263 U. S. 444, 451-452, 68 L. ed. 382, 44 Sup. Ct. 197 (1924), Chief Justice Taft, speaking for the court, said: "It has been settled by a long line of decisions, that the provision of § 10, Article I, of the federal Constitution, protecting the obligation of contracts against state action, is directed only against impairment by legislation and not by judgments of courts. * * * However, the fact that it has been necessary for this court to decide the question so many times is evidence of persistent error in regard to it. Among the cases relied on to sustain the error are Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 175; Butz v. Muscatine, 8 Wall. 575; Douglas v. Pike County, 101 U. S. 677; Anderson v. Santa Anna Twp., 116 U. S. 356; German Savings Bank v. Franklin County, 128 U. S. 526; Rowan v. Runnels, 3 How. 134; and Los Angeles v. Los Angeles City Water Co., 177 U. S. 558. These cases were not writs of error to the Supreme Court of a state. They were appeals or writs of error to federal courts where recovery was sought upon municipal or county bonds or some other form of contracts, the validity of which had been sustained by the Supreme Court of a state prior to their execution, and had been denied by the same court after their issue or making. In such cases the federal courts, exercising jurisdiction between citizens of different states, held themselves free to decide what the state law was, and to enforce it as laid down by the state Supreme Court before the contracts were made rather than in later decisions. They did not base this conclusion on Article I, § 10, of the federal Constitution, but on the state law as they determined it, which, in diverse citizenship cases, under the third article of the Constitution, they were empowered to do. * * * In such cases, as a general rule, they, in the interest of comity and uniformity, followed the decisions of state courts as to the state law, but where gross injustice would be otherwise done, they followed the earlier rather than the later decisions as to what it was. Had such cases been decided by the state courts, however, and had it been attempted to bring them here by writ of error to the state Supreme Court, they would have presented no federal question, and this court must have dismissed the writs for lack both of power and jurisdiction. This is well illustrated by the cases of Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 175, and Mississippi & M. R. Co. v. McClure, 10 Wall. 511. In the former, bonds sued on in the Circuit Court of the United States, were collected under judgment of this court. In the latter, like bonds sued on in a state court were held invalid, and a writ of error to the state Supreme Court was dismissed."

2. "This clause, as its terms disclose, is not directed against all impairment of contract obligations, but only against such as results from a subsequent exertion of the legislative power of the state. It does not reach mere errors committed by a state court when passing upon the validity or effect of a contract under the laws in existence when it was made. And so, while such errors may operate to impair the obligation of the contract, they do not give rise to a federal question. But when the state court, either expressly or by necessary implication, gives effect to a subsequent law of the state whereby the obligation of the contract is alleged to be impaired, a federal question is presented. In such a case it becomes our duty to take jurisdiction and to determine the existence and validity of the contract, what obligations arose from it, and whether they are impaired by the subsequent law." Cross Lake Shooting & Fishing Club v. Louisiana, 224 U. S. 632, 638-639, 56 L. ed. 924, 32 Sup. Ct. 577 (1912).

3. The scope of the contract clause has been restricted by the distinction drawn between "impairment of the obligation of the contract" and "breach of the contract." The result seems to be that the protection of the clause is virtually withdrawn from those executory state contracts in which the state is acting in the capacity of an individual entrepreneur. If a contract of this type were made between private individuals, the injured party in most cases would be denied specific performance, and the Supreme Court has apparently taken the view that when the state is a party the individual will not be unfairly dealt with if he is left to such remedies for the breach as the state may see fit to grant him in its courts or by appropriate legislative action. In Hays v. Seattle, 251 U. S. 233, 64 L. ed. 243, 40 Sup. Ct. 125 (1920) the plaintiff contracted with the State of Washington to excavate certain waterways. He was to use the excavated material to fill in certain submerged lands and was to have a lien on this land for the costs of the work. After seventeen years of delay in getting the work under way, the state passed a law abandoning the excavation scheme and vesting the title to the land in the Port of Seattle. Plaintiff sought to enjoin the enforcement of the statute. The bill was dismissed. In affirming this judgment, the Supreme Court, through Justice Pitney, said: "Upon the first constitutional point, it is important to note the distinction between a statute that has the effect of violating or repudiating a contract previously made by the state and one that impairs its obligation. Had the legislature of Washington, pending performance or after complete performance by complainant, passed an act to alter materially the scope of his contract, to diminish his compensation, or to defeat his lien upon the filled lands, there would no doubt have been an attempted impairment of the obligation. The legislation in question had no such purpose or effect. It simply, after seventeen years of delay without substantial performance of the contract, provided that the project should be abandoned and title to the public lands turned over to the municipality."

LARSON v. SOUTH DAKOTA.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1929.

278 U. S. 429, 73 L. ed. 441, 49 Sup. Ct. 196.

[Appellant, Larson, sued the State of South Dakota in the state Supreme Court as permitted by § 2109, South Dakota Revised Code of 1919, for damages for the destruction of his ferry franchise on the Missouri River. In 1916 and 1921 two boards of county commissioners acting under a state statute granted to Larson leases or ferry franchises to operate a ferry across the Missouri River for toll. He accepted the franchises and equipped the ferry with boats and landings. The statute provided that when "any ferry lease has been granted, no other lease shall be granted within a distance of two miles" from the ferry landing. Under acts of the legislature the state, during the years 1923 and 1924, built a free bridge across the river less than two miles from Larson's ferry landing. Larson alleged that this free bridge totally destroyed his business, his ferry franchises, and made his investment worthless, damaging him to the amount of $44,000, for which he asked judgment. The court sustained a demurrer to this complaint and this appeal was taken.]

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE TAFT delivered the opinion of the Court.

The exclusive ferry leases were contracts between the State and the petitioner. The Binghamton Bridge, 3 Wall. 51. Was the building of the bridge a breach of them?

The Supreme Court of the State has had the meaning of "exclusive ferry franchise" before it twice before this case, in Nixon v. Reid, 8

S. D. 507, and in Chamberlain Ferry & Cable Bridge v. King, 41 S. D. 246; but these cases did not require consideration of the effect of the term as applied to anything but ferries. The court said on that subject in the present case:

"All that is contemplated by the statute and all that was granted by the plaintiff's leases was the right to operate a ferry together with a prohibition upon the granting boards from granting other ferry leases within the granted area during the period. * * * Nowhere in the statute can be found or implied a provision that the state was binding itself not to construct, nor authorize the construction of, a bridge across the river within the four mile area, or not to permit carriage by aviation across it. The fair and reasonable construction of the statute is that it refers solely to transportation by ferry."

Coming from the State Supreme Court, this language is very persuasive of the meaning of the statute and would indicate that in its view the building of a bridge was not a breach of the ferry contracts.

The petitioner relies on the contract clause of the federal Constitution, and is not prevented from invoking from this Court an independent consideration of what the contract means, and whether by a proper construction, the building of a bridge impairs its obligation. * * *

We must therefore treat the question as an open one and determine as an independent matter what the parties must be held to have had in mind in the use of the term "exclusive lease."

The chapter of the Revised Code of the state immediately preceding that which directs the letting and granting of exclusive ferry leases provides for the building of bridges over the rivers of South Dakota. This close relation of the chapters suggests that if bridges were intended to be forbidden by the contract, the parties would have been likely to mention a bridge as a breach. But there is no mention of a bridge in the statute or contract dealing with ferries.

On the other hand, it is argued that it was so well understood by everyone, including the parties, that the erection of a bridge in the forbidden area would destroy the value of the ferry leases, and so defeat the real object of the leases, that an implication necessarily arises that a bridge would be a breach of the leases. * * *

We think, however, a broader question arises in the proper construction of a public grant like this. The leading case on the subject in Federal jurisprudence is that of Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 420, 547. In that case the legislature of Massachusetts incorporated a company to build a bridge over the Charles River where a ferry stood, granting it tolls. Years after, the legislature incorporated another company for the erection of another bridge within 800 feet of the original one. The new bridge was to become free after a few years, and at the time of the litigation it had become actually free. The Charles River Bridge was deprived of the tolls and its value was destroyed. Its proprietors filed a bill against the proprietors of the Warren

Bridge, for an injunction against the use of the bridge as an act impairing the obligations of a contract and repugnant to the Constitution of the United States. The Supreme Court of Massachusetts dismissed the bill and the case was brought by error to this Court, which affirmed the judgment of the Massachusetts court. The principle of the case is that public grants are to be strictly construed, that nothing passes to the grantee by implication. * * *

Chief Justice Taney, delivering the opinion in the Charles River Bridge case, said [p. 547]:

"But the object and end of all government is to promote the happiness and prosperity of the community by which it is established; and it can never be assumed that the government intended to diminish its powers of accomplishing the end for which it was created. And in a country like ours, free, active, and enterprising, continually advancing in numbers and wealth, new channels of communication are daily found necessary, both for travel and trade, and are essential to the comfort, convenience and prosperity of the people. A state ought never to be presumed to surrender this power, because, like the taxing power, the whole community have an interest in preserving it undiminished. And when a corporation alleges that a state has surrendered for seventy years its power of improvement and public accommodation, in a great and important line of travel, along which a vast number of its citizens must daily pass, the community have a right to insist, in the language of this court above quoted, 'that its abandonment ought not to be presumed in a case in which the deliberate purpose of the state to abandon does not appear.'"

The same principle is declared in Fanning v. Gregoire, 16 How. 524, 534; Wright v. Nagle, 101 U. S. 791, 796; Wheeling & Belmont Bridge Co. v. Wheeling Bridge Co., 138 U. S. 287, 293, and Williams v. Mingo, 177 U. S. 601, 603. Speaking for the Court in the last case Mr. Justice Brewer said:

"A contract binding the state is only created by clear language and is not to be extended by implication beyond the terms of the statute. Fanning v. Gregoire, 16 How. 524, is in point and decisive."

The cases above cited are not exactly on all fours with the specific issue presented here, but they serve to show with great emphasis the necessity for one who relies upon a public grant as a basis for a private right, to bring it expressly within the grant or statute. * * *

There is some conflicting authority on the main question. * * * But all of these cases are distinguishable in that the infringing bridge or ferry was established without legal authority, and there were other reasons such as obstruction to navigation, special statutes, or injury to tangible property which affected the decisions. * * *

We can hardly say, therefore, from the weight of authority, that an exclusive grant of a ferry franchise, without more, would prevent a legislature from granting the right to build a bridge near the ferry.

Following the cases in this Court in its limited and careful construction of public grants, it is manifest that we must reach in this case the same conclusion.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of South Dakota is Affirmed.

NOTE

1. The rule that grants by the state are to be construed strictly against the grantees and in favor of the public, and that nothing passes unless clearly granted, is a reflection of the contention early made that a state should not be permitted to part with its governmental powers by contract. It has become accepted doctrine of the Supreme Court and has frequently been applied to governmental grants of monopoly, special privileges, exemptions from taxation, exemption from rate regulation, power to lay tracks in public streets, to exercise the power of eminent domain, and the like, both in determining whether any such grant has been made and, if so, its scope and effect. See Note, The Contract Clause of the Federal Constitution, 32 Col. L. Rev. 476 (1932), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 301; Merrill, Application of the Obligation of Contract Clause to State Promises, 80 U. of Pa. L. Rev. 639 (1932), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 319.

"The principle is this: That all rights which are asserted against the state must be clearly defined, and not raised by inference or presumption; and if the charter is silent about a power, it does not exist. If, on a fair reading of the instrument, reasonable doubts arise as to the proper interpretation to be given to it, those doubts are to be solved in favor of the state; and where it is susceptible of two meanings, the one restricting and the other extending the powers of the corporation, that construction is to be adopted which works the least harm to the state. But if there is no ambiguity in the charter, and the powers conferred are plainly marked, and their limits can be readily ascertained, then it is the duty of the court to sustain and uphold it, and to carry out the true meaning and intention of the parties to it. Any other rule of construction would defeat all legislative grants, and overthrow all other contracts." Mr. Justice Davis in The Binghamton Bridge, 3 Wall. 51, 75, 18 L. ed. 137 (1865).

PIQUA BRANCH OF STATE BANK OF OHIO v. KNOOP.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1853.

16 How. 369, 14 L. ed. 977.

[Error to the Supreme Court of Ohio. A statute of Ohio of 1845 authorized any five or more persons to incorporate for the purpose of carrying on a bank in the state, subject to the terms of the statute. The Piqua bank was organized in 1847 under this statute. By Act of March 21, 1851 the legislature enacted that banks incorporated under the laws of the state should pay a tax on their capital at the rate levied on other personal property. The bank refused to pay this tax, relying upon Sec. 60 of the statute of 1845, which provided that banks accepting and complying with the provisions of the Act should pay to the State six per cent of their semi-annual profits in lieu of all taxes to which they would otherwise be subject. In an action in a state court to collect the tax, judgment went against the bank. On appeal the state Supreme Court affirmed the judgment and the bank took this writ of error.]

MR. JUSTICE M'LEAN delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

The idea that a state, by exempting from taxation certain property, parts with a portion of its sovereignty, is of modern growth; and so is the argument that if a State may part with this in one instance it may in every other, so as to divest itself of the sovereign power of taxation. Such an argument would be as strong and as conclusive against the exercise of the taxing power. For if the legislature may levy a tax upon property, they may absorb the entire property of the taxpayer. The same may be said of every power where there is an exercise of judgment. * * *

The assumption that a state, in exempting certain property from taxation, relinquishes a part of its sovereign power, is unfounded. The taxing power may select its objects of taxation; and this is generally regulated by the amount necessary to answer the purposes of the state. Now the exemption of property from taxation is a question of policy and not of power. A sound currency should be a desirable object to every government; and this in our country is secured generally through the instrumentality of a well-regulated system of banking. To establish such institutions as shall meet the public wants and secure the public confidence, inducements must be held out to capitalists to invest their funds. They must know the rate of interest to be charged by the bank, the time the charter shall run, the liabilities of the company, the rate of taxation, and other privileges necessary to a successful banking operation.

These privileges are proffered by the state, accepted by the stockholders, and in consideration funds are invested in the bank. Here is a contract by the state and the bank, a contract founded upon considerations of policy required by the general interests of the community, a contract protected by the laws of England and America, and by all civilized states where the common or the civil law is established. * * *

There is no constitutional objection to the exercise of the power to make a binding contract by a state. It necessarily exists in its sovereignty, and it has been so held by all the courts in this country. A denial of this is a denial of state sovereignty. It takes from the state a power essential to the discharge of its functions as sovereign. If it do not possess this attribute, it could not communicate it to others. There is no power possessed by it more essential than this. Through the instrumentality of contracts, the machinery of the government is carried on. Money is borrowed, and obligations given for payment. Contracts are made with individuals, who give bonds to the state. So in the granting of charters. If there be any force in the argument, it applies to contracts made with individuals, the same as with corporations. But it is said the state cannot barter away any part of its sovereignty. No one ever contended that it could.

A state, in granting privileges to a bank, with a view of affording a sound currency, or of advancing any policy connected with the public interest, exercises its sovereignty, and for a public purpose, of which it is the exclusive judge. Under such circumstances, a contract made for a specific tax, as in the case before us, is binding. This tax continues, although all other banks should be exempted from taxation. Having the power to make the contract, and rights becoming vested under it, it can no more be disregarded nor set aside by a subsequent legislature, than a grant for land. This act, so far from parting with any portion of the sovereignty, is an exercise of it. Can any one deny this power to the legislature? Has it not a right to select the objects of taxation and determine the amount? To deny either of these, is to take away state sovereignty.

It must be admitted that the state has the sovereign power to do this, and it would have the sovereign power to impair or annul a contract so made, had not the Constitution of the United States inhibited the exercise of such power. The vague and undefined and indefinable notion, that every exemption from taxation or a specific tax, which withdraws certain objects from the general tax law, affects the sovereignty of the state, is indefensible.

There has been rarely, if ever, it is believed, a tax law passed by any state in the Union, which did not contain some exemptions from general taxation. * * *

The argument is, and must be, that a sovereign state may make a binding contract with one of its citizens, and, in the exercise of its sovereignty, repudiate it. The Constitution of the Union, when first adopted, made states subject to the federal judicial power. Could a state, while this power continued, being sued for a debt contracted in its sovereign capacity, have repudiated it in the same capacity? In this respect the Constitution was very properly changed, as no state should be subject to the judicial power generally.

Much stress was laid on the argument, and in the decisions of the Supreme Court, on the fact that the banks paid no bonus for their charters, and that no contract can be binding which is not mutual. This is a matter which can have no influence in deciding the legal question. The state did not require a bonus, but other requisitions are found in the charter, which the legislature deemed sufficient, and this is not questionable by any other authority. The obligation is as strong on the state, from the privileges granted and accepted, as if a bonus had been paid. * * *

Judgment reversed.

[Brief concurring opinion of CHIEF JUSTICE TANAY, is here omitted. JUSTICES CATRON, DANIEL and CAMPBELL dissented.]

NOTES

1. A contract between the Delaware Indians and the colony of New Jersey in which the colony authorized the establishment of an Indian reservation in consideration of the release by the Indian tribe of all claims to other lands in the colony, and provided that such reservation should not thereafter be subject to taxation, was ratified by the colonial legislature. In 1801 the Indians sold the reserved lands with the consent of the legislature. In 1804 a law was enacted repealing the tax exemption clause of the colonial statute. In New Jersey v. Wilson, 7 Cranch 164, 3 L. ed. 303 (1812) the repealer statute was held to violate the contract clause. The question of the power of a state to make a valid contract for an exemption from taxation was not discussed in Chief Justice Marshall's opinion but seems to have been assumed. The power was impliedly recognized in Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet. 514, 7 L. ed. 939 (1830), where, however, the court refused to imply a covenant not to levy special taxes on corporations in a charter incorporating a bank, Chief Justice Marshall stating that "the taxing power is of vital importance" and its abandonment "is never to be assumed."

Mr. Justice Miller, dissenting in Washington University v. Rouse, 8 Wall. 439, 443-444, 19 L. ed. 498 (1869) said: "We do not believe that any legislative body, sitting under a state constitution of the usual character, has a right to sell, to give, or to bargain away the taxing power of the state. This is a power which, in modern political societies, is absolutely necessary to the continued existence of every such society."

In Home of the Friendless v. Rouse, 8 Wall. 430, 19 L. ed. 495 (1869) the court held that a declaration in a special charter incorporating a charitable institution "that all property of said corporation shall be exempt from taxation" became contractually binding upon the state by the acceptance of the charter and acting under it. The court said: "It is settled by the repeated adjudications of this court, that a state may by contract based upon a consideration exempt the property of an individual or corporation from taxation, either for a specified period or permanently. And it is equally well-settled that the exemption is presumed to be on sufficient consideration and binds the state if the charter containing it is accepted."

The rule that a contract under which a state has purported to grant immunity from taxation is to be construed strictly against the grantee and in favor of the public, and that no claim of exemption will be sustained unless within the express letter or the necessary scope of the exemption clause, has been generally followed by the Supreme Court. Ford v. Delta & Pine Land Co., 164 U. S. 662, 41 L. ed. 590, 17 Sup. Ct. 230 (1897); Hale v. Iowa State Board of Assessment and Review, 302 U. S. 95, 82 L. ed. 72, 58 Sup. Ct. 102 (1937); Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Phillips, 332 U. S. 168, 91 L. ed. 1977, 67 Sup. Ct. 1584, 173 A. L. R. 1 (1947). Legislative power to exempt property from taxation, whether by contract or other means, is now generally restricted by provisions of state constitutions. Cases involving tax exemption contracts are collected and discussed in the annotation in 82 L. ed. 82 (1938). See also the exhaustive annotation, Tax Exemptions and the Contract Clause, 173 A. L. R. 15 (1948).

2. A Masonic lodge was incorporated by the legislature of Louisiana in 1816. Its charter contained no tax exemption. In 1853 it acquired by deed land and a building to be used partly for a lodge hall and partly to produce income from rentals, the deed reciting a resolution of the lodge that it would use the income for the charitable purposes of the lodge. In 1855 the legislature enacted a law that this building, specifically mentioning it by description, should be exempt from state and parish taxes so long as it should be occupied by the lodge. The state constitution of 1879 prohibited exemptions of property of charitable institutions used or leased for purposes of private or corporate profit or income. The Supreme Court of Louisiana held that so much of the building as was used to produce income thereby became taxable. The United States Supreme Court sustained this decision, saying that there was no consideration for the exemption in the act of 1855, and that in these circumstances the exemption was a "mere gratuity or bounty" which the state could withdraw at any time. Grand Lodge v. New Orleans, 166 U. S. 143, 41 L. ed. 951, 17 Sup. Ct. 523 (1897).

3. Three cases involving public school teachers illustrate the importance of statutory interpretation in applying the contract clause. In Dodge v. Board of Education, 302 U. S. 74, 82 L. ed. 57, 58 Sup. Ct. 98 (1937) statutes of Illinois were construed as putting public school teachers' retirement annuities on a non-contractual basis and therefore unprotected against legislative impairment. A like decision was made with respect to tenure of public school teachers in New Jersey. Phelps v. Board of Education, 300 U. S. 319, 81 L. ed. 674, 57 Sup. Ct. 483 (1937). But in Indiana ex rel. Anderson v. Brand, 303 U. S. 95, 82 L. ed. 685, 58 Sup. Ct. 443, 113 A. L. R. 1482 (1938) an Indiana public school teachers' tenure law was interpreted as putting teachers' tenure on a contract basis and therefore constitutionally protected against impairment by subsequent state legislation.

STONE v. MISSISSIPPI.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1880.

101 U. S. 814, 25 L. ed. 1079.

[Writ of error to the Supreme Court of Mississippi which had affirmed a judgment of a lower state court ousting Stone and others from a lottery charter granted by the state legislature in 1867, the decision being based upon provisions in a new state constitution adopted in 1879 and statutes of 1870, forbidding the operation of lotteries.]

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WAITE delivered the opinion of the Court.

* * *

There can be no dispute but that under this form of words the Legislature of the State chartered a lottery company, having all the powers incident to such a corporation, for twenty-five years, and that in consideration thereof the company paid into the State treasury $5,000 for the use of a university, and agreed to pay, and until the commencement of this suit did pay, an annual tax of $1,000 and "one-half of one per cent on the amount of receipts derived from the sale of certificates or tickets." If the legislature that granted this charter had the power to bind the people of the State and all succeeding legislatures to allow the corporation to continue its corporate business during the whole term of its authorized existence, there is no doubt about the sufficiency of the language employed to effect that object, although there was an evident purpose to conceal the vice of the transaction by the phrases that were used. Whether the alleged contract exists, therefore, or not, depends on the authority of the legislature to bind the State and the people of the State in that way. * * *

The question is therefore directly presented, whether, in view of these facts, the legislature of a State can, by the charter of a lottery company, defeat the will of the people, authoritatively expressed, in relation to the further continuance of such business in their midst. We think it cannot. No legislature can bargain away the public health or the public morals. The people themselves cannot do it, much less their servants. The supervision of both these subjects of governmental power is continuing in its nature, and they are to be dealt with as the special exigencies of the moment may require. Government is organized with a view to their preservation, and cannot divest itself of the power to provide for them. For this purpose the largest legislative discretion is allowed, and the discretion cannot be parted with any more than the power itself. Boston Beer Company v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25.

* * *

The present case, we think, comes within this limitation. We have held, not, however, without strong opposition at times, that this clause [the contract clause] protected a corporation in its charter exemptions from taxation. While taxation is in general necessary for the support of government, it is not part of the government itself. Government was not organized for the purposes of taxation, but taxation may be necessary for the purposes of government. As such, taxation becomes an incident to the exercise of the legitimate functions of government, but nothing more. No government dependent on taxation for support can bargain away its whole power of taxation, for that would be substantially abdication. All that has been determined thus far is, that for a consideration it may, in the exercise of a reasonable discretion, and for the public good, surrender a part of its powers in this particular.

But the power of governing is a trust committed by the people to the government, no part of which can be granted away. The people, in their sovereign capacity, have established their agencies for the preservation of the public health and the public morals, and the protection of public and private rights. These several agencies can govern according to their discretion, if within the scope of their general authority, while in power; but they cannot give away nor sell the discretion of those that are to come after them, in respect to matters the government of which, from the very nature of things, must "vary with varying circumstances." They may create corporations, and give them, so to speak, a limited citizenship; but as citizens, limited in their privileges, or otherwise, these creatures of the government creation are subject to such rules and regulations as may from time to time be ordained and established for the preservation of health and morality. * * *

Any one, therefore, who accepts a lottery charter does so with the implied understanding that the people, in their sovereign capacity, and through their properly constituted agencies, may resume it at any time when the public good shall require, whether it be paid for or not. All that one can get by such a charter is a suspension of certain governmental rights in his favor, subject to withdrawal at will. He has in legal effect nothing more than a license to enjoy the privilege on the terms named for the specified time, unless it be sooner abrogated by the sovereign power of the State. It is a permit, good as against existing laws, but subject to future legislative and constitutional control or withdrawal. * * *

On the whole, we find no error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

NOTES

1. A fertilizing company, incorporated in 1867 for the purpose of maintaining chemical works for the conversion of dead animals into agricultural fertilizer, established its works within limits designated in its charter at a point then three miles south of Chicago. At that time the surrounding country was swampy and uninhabited, but it later became the location of the village of Hyde Park. In Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659, 24 L. ed. 1036 (1878) it was held that the charter authorization did not prevent the enforcement of a subsequent ordinance prohibiting the transportation of offal of the slaughterhouses of Chicago through the streets of the village of Hyde Park. The court said: "The charter was a sufficient license until revoked; but we cannot regard it as a contract guaranteeing, in the locality originally selected, exemption for fifty years from the exercise of the police power of the state, however serious the nuisance might become in the future, by reason of the growth of population around it. The owners had no such exemption before they were incorporated, and we think the charter did not give it to them." Dissenting, Mr. Justice Strong said: "The police power of a state is no more sacred than its taxing power. We have held again and again that a state may by contract with one of its corporations bind itself not to tax the property of that corporation. If so, why may it not bind itself not to exercise its police power over certain employments?"

2. Butchers' Union Slaughter House Co. v. Crescent City Live Stock Landing Co., 111 U. S. 746, 28 L. ed. 585, 4 Sup. Ct. 652 (1883) sustained a provision of the Constitution of Louisiana of 1879 and ordinances of the city of New Orleans of 1881 which threw open the slaughterhouse business in New Orleans to general competition, thereby abolishing the monopoly features of the charter of the Crescent City Company, granted by the state in 1869. Mr. Justice Miller, for the court, said: "While we are not prepared to say that the legislature can make valid contracts on no subject embraced in the largest definition of the police power, we think that, in regard to two subjects so embraced, it cannot by any contract, limit the exercise of those powers to the prejudice of the general welfare. These are the public health and public morals. The preservation of these is so necessary to the best interests of social organization that a wise policy forbids the legislative body to divest itself of the power to enact laws for the preservation of health and the repression of crime."

3. In Texas & New Orleans R. Co. v. Miller, 221 U. S. 408, 55 L. ed. 789, 31 Sup. Ct. 534 (1911) it was held that a state could validly repeal a provision in a railroad's charter exempting it from liability for the death of any employee.

NEW ORLEANS GAS-LIGHT CO. v. LOUISIANA LIGHT & HEAT PRODUCING & MFG. CO.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1885.

115 U. S. 650, 29 L. ed. 516, 6 Sup. Ct. 252.

[In 1875 the plaintiff succeeded to the ownership of a sole and exclusive right for fifty years, granted by the legislature, to lay pipes in the streets of New Orleans and supply the inhabitants with gas. The state Constitution of 1879 purported to annul the monopolistic feature of this grant. The defendant was incorporated in 1881 under a state statute, and a franchise to supply the inhabitants with gas was sold to it by the city of New Orleans. The present appeal arose from a suit to enjoin defendant from exercising this franchise.]

MR. JUSTICE HARLAN delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

It is true, as suggested in argument, that the manufacture and distribution of illuminating gas, by means of pipes or conduits placed, under legislative authority, in the streets of a town or city, is a business of a public character. Under proper management, the business contributes very materially to the public convenience, while, in the absence of efficient supervision, it may disturb the comfort and endanger the health and property of the community. It also holds important relations to the public through the facilities furnished, by the lighting of streets with gas, for the detection and prevention of crime. * * *

It is earnestly insisted that, as the supplying of New Orleans and its inhabitants with gas has relation to the public comfort, and, in some sense, to the public health and the public safety, and, for that reason, is an object to which the police power extends, it was not competent for one legislature to limit or restrict the power of a subsequent legislature in respect to those subjects. It is, consequently, claimed that the State may at pleasure recall the grant of exclusive privileges to the plaintiff; and that no agreement by her, upon whatever consideration, in reference to a matter connected in any degree with the public comfort, the public health, or the public safety, will constitute a contract the obligation of which is protected against impairment by the national Constitution. And this position is supposed by counsel to be justified by recent adjudications of this Court in which the nature and scope of the police power have been considered. * * *

That the police power, according to its largest definition, is restricted in its exercise by the national Constitution, is further shown by those cases in which grants of exclusive privileges respecting public highways and bridges over navigable streams have been sustained as contracts the obligations of which are fully protected against impairment by state enactments. * * *

Numerous other cases could be cited as establishing the doctrine that the state may by contract restrict the exercise of some of its most important powers. We particularly refer to those in which it is held that an exemption from taxation, for a valuable consideration at the time advanced, or for services to be thereafter performed, constitutes a contract within the meaning of the Constitution. * * *

If the state can, by contract, restrict the exercise of her power to construct and maintain highways, bridges, and ferries, by granting to a particular corporation the exclusive right to construct and operate a railroad within certain lines and between given points, or to maintain a bridge or operate a ferry over one of her navigable streams within designated limits; if she may restrict the exercise of the power of taxation, by granting exemption from taxation to particular individuals and corporations, it is difficult to perceive upon what ground we can deny her authority,—when not forbidden by her own organic law,—in consideration of money to be expended and important services to be rendered for the promotion of the public comfort, the public health, or the public safety, to grant a franchise, to be exercised exclusively by those who thus do for the public what the state might undertake to perform either herself or by subordinate municipal agencies.

The former adjudications of this Court, upon which counsel mainly rely, do not declare any different doctrine, or justify the conclusion for which the defendant contends. * * *

The principle upon which the decisions in Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, Stone v. Mississippi, and Butchers' Union Co. v. Crescent City Live-Stock Landing Co. rest is that one legislature cannot so limit the discretion of its successors that they may not enact such laws as are necessary to protect the public health, or the public morals. That principle, it may be observed, was announced with reference to particular kinds of private business which, in whatever manner conducted, were detrimental to the public health or the public morals. It is fairly the result of those cases that statutory authority given by the state to corporations or individuals to engage in a particular private business attended by such results, while it protects them for the time against public prosecution, does not constitute a contract preventing the withdrawal of such authority, or the granting of it to others.

The present case involves no such considerations. We have seen the manufacture of gas, and its distribution for public and private use by means of pipes laid, under legislative authority, in the streets and ways of a city, is not an ordinary business in which every one may engage, but is a franchise belonging to the government, to be granted, for the accomplishment of public objects, to whomsoever, and upon what terms, it pleases. It is a business of a public nature, and meets a public necessity for which the state may make provision. It is one which, so far from affecting the public injuriously, has become one of the most important agencies of civilization, for the promotion of the public convenience and the public safety. * * *

With reference to the contract in this case, it may be said that it is not, in any legal sense, to the prejudice of the public health or the public safety. It is none the less a contract because the manufacture and distribution of gas, when not subjected to proper supervision, may possibly work injury to the public; for the grant of exclusive privileges to the plaintiff does not restrict the power of the state, or of the municipal government of New Orleans acting under authority for that purpose, to establish and enforce regulations which are not inconsistent with the essential rights granted by plaintiff's charter, which may be necessary for the protection of the public against injury, whether arising from the want of due care in the conduct of its business, or from an improper use of the streets in laying gas pipes, or from the failure of the grantee to furnish gas of the required quality and amount. The constitutional prohibition upon state laws impairing the obligation of contracts does not restrict the power of the state to protect the public health, the public morals, or the public safety, as the one or the other may be involved in the execution of such contracts. Rights and privileges arising from contracts with the state are subject to regulations for the protection of the public health, the public morals, and the public safety, in the same sense, and to the same extent, as are all contracts and all property, whether owned by natural persons or corporations.

* * *

If, in the judgment of the state, the public interests will be best subserved by an abandonment of the policy of granting exclusive privileges to corporations, other than railroad companies, in consideration of services to be performed by them for the public, the way is open for the accomplishment of that result, with respect to corporations whose contracts with the state are unaffected by that change in her organic law. The rights and franchises which have become vested upon the faith of such contracts can be taken by the public, upon just compensation to the company, under the state's power of eminent domain. * * * In that way the plighted faith of the public will be kept with those who have made large investments upon the assurance by the state that the contract with them will be performed.

* * *

The complainant was entitled to a decree perpetually restraining the defendants. * * *

NOTES

1. A monopoly granted to a private corporation to lay water pipes in the public streets and to supply the inhabitants of the city of New Orleans with water was held to be protected against a later grant of an infringing right, on the reasoning of the principal case. New Orleans Water Works Co. v. Rivers, 115 U. S. 674, 29 L. ed. 525, 6 Sup. Ct. 273 (1885).

2. Illinois Central R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 36 L. ed. 1018, 13 Sup. Ct. 110 (1892) held repelable a grant made by the state legislature to the railroad company of all the state's rights and title to one thousand acres of submerged land under Lake Michigan along the harbor front of Chicago, though no right to repeal had been expressly reserved, the court saying that such property is held by the state, by virtue of its sovereignty, in trust for the public.

ST. CLOUD PUBLIC SERVICE CO. v. ST. CLOUD.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1924.
265 U. S. 352, 68 L. ed. 1050, 44 Sup. Ct. 492.

MR. JUSTICE SANFORD delivered the opinion of the Court.

This suit was brought by the Public Service Company to enjoin the city from interfering with a proposed increase in the rates charged for fuel gas.

The allegations of the bill, shortly stated, are: The company is a public service corporation organized under the laws of Minnesota, and the city, a municipal corporation of that state. In 1905 the city, by ordinance, granted the company's predecessor, its successors and assigns, the right to construct and maintain for thirty years works for the manufacture, distribution and sale of gas to the city and its inhabitants, and authorized it to sell fuel gas at a rate not exceeding $1.35 per thousand cubic feet. The grantee's rights were assigned to the company in 1915, and since then it has been engaged in manufacturing and selling fuel gas under the ordinance. Since 1917 the company has sold fuel gas at the maximum rate of $1.35 prescribed by the ordinance. This rate has not yielded, and cannot yield any return on the value of the property devoted to the gas business, has resulted in a constant loss and steadily increasing operating deficit, is inadequate and confiscatory, and deprives the company of its property without due process of law in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution. The City Commission has refused to entertain a petition to prescribe a rate yielding a reasonable return on the invested capital. To secure a fair and reasonable return, a rate of $3.39 per thousand cubic feet is necessary. The company intends to increase its rate to that price. The city, however, has threatened to interfere with the collection of the proposed increased rate, and, unless restrained, will attempt to force the company to continue to sell gas at the prescribed maximum rate, resulting in controversies and multiplicity of suits, and inflicting irreparable loss and injury upon the company.

The bill prays that the court adjudge that the maximum rate prescribed by the ordinance is confiscatory and violates the rights of the company under the Fourteenth Amendment; and that the city be enjoined from interfering with the company in raising the rate to $3.39, or attempting in any manner to force it to continue to sell gas at the ordinance rate.

A motion by the company for a preliminary injunction was denied. Thereafter, on motion of the city, the court dismissed the bill for want of equity, on the ground that there was a "valid and subsisting contract between the city and the plaintiff company governing the matter of a maximum rate for fuel gas." The company, by reason of the constitutional question involved, has appealed directly to this Court. Jud. Code, § 238; Columbus Ry. Co. v. Columbus, 249 U. S. 399.

It has been long settled that a state may authorize a municipal corporation to establish by an inviolable contract the rates to be charged by a public service corporation for a definite term, not grossly unreasonable in time, and that the effect of such a contract is to suspend, during its life, the governmental power of fixing and regulating the rates. Home Telephone Co. v. Los Angeles, 211 U. S. 265, 273, and cases there cited. And where a public service corporation and the municipality have power to contract as to rates, and exert that power by fixing the rates to govern during a particular time, the enforcement of such rates is controlled by the obligation resulting from the contract, and the question whether they are confiscatory is immaterial. Southern Iowa Elec. Co. v. Chariton, 255 U. S. 539, 542, and cases there cited; Paducah v. Paducah Ry. Co., 261 U. S. 267, 273; Georgia Ry. Co. v. Decatur, 262 U. S. 432, 438. The existence of a binding contract as to the maximum rate for fuel gas is therefore the controlling issue upon which this controversy depends. Its solution turns upon the questions whether the city had power to contract on this subject by the ordinance of 1905; and, if so, whether the ordinance constituted such a contract.

1. Was the city authorized to enter into a contract as to the rate to be charged for fuel gas? Such authority must clearly and unmistakably appear. * * * [Here the Court considered the provisions of the city charter and the decisions of the Supreme Court of Minnesota construing these provisions.]

In the light of these decisions of the Supreme Court of the State of Minnesota we think it is clear that the city had authority, in 1905, under its charter and the laws of the state, to enter, by ordinance, into a contract, in its proprietary capacity and for the benefit of its inhabitants as well as itself, providing for the construction and operation of gas works for a period of thirty years and fixing the rates to be charged for gas sold to it and its inhabitants. This power existed * * * under the provisions of the charter giving the council the power to provide for the control and erection of gas works for the purpose of supplying the city and its inhabitants with heat and light.

* * *

2. Did the ordinance constitute a contract fixing the maximum rate for gas? The intention to so contract must clearly and unmistakably appear. Paducah v. Paducah Ry. Co., supra, p. 272. [Here are stated the "essential provisions" of the ordinance.]

We think that the language of the ordinance, viewed in its entirety, clearly shows that it was the intention of the parties to enter into a contract for the construction of gas works and the manufacture and supply of gas to the city and its inhabitants during the thirty-year period, at the maximum rate prescribed. * * * The provision that the grantee is "authorized" to sell fuel gas at a rate not exceeding $1.35, clearly implies that it shall not sell such gas at a higher rate. This is recognized by the bill itself. * * *

3. The general provision of the Laws of 1919, c. 469, p. 603, authorizing cities of the class of the appellee "through its city council or like governing body, by ordinance, to prescribe from time to time the rates which any public service corporation supplying gas or electric current for lighting or power purposes within said city may charge for such service", has no application to the present case. Even if, in any aspect, it could otherwise be applicable, it is excluded from operating here by the specific proviso that it shall not be "construed to impair the obligation of any contract or franchise provision now existing between any such city and any such public service corporation." The city, clearly, could not avail itself of this statute to reduce the gas rates below the maximum prescribed in the contract of 1905; and the company, conversely, cannot under it obtain higher rates. The contract is binding on both parties alike.

The decree of the District Court is

Affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE BUTLER took no part in the hearing or decision of this case.

NOTES

1. Until the end of the nineteenth century rates for public utilities, if regulated at all, were usually fixed by contract in the charter of the corporation. In Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' Street Railway Co., 184 U. S. 368, 46 L. ed. 592, 22 Sup. Ct. 410 (1902) it was held that a charter provision that the rate of fare should not exceed five cents was a contract surrendering the power of the city to prescribe a lower rate.

2. In San Antonio v. San Antonio Public Service Co., 255 U. S. 547, 65 L. ed. 777, 41 Sup. Ct. 428 (1921) a state constitutional provision "that no irrevocable or uncontrollable grant of special privileges or immunities shall be made, but all privileges and franchises granted by the legislature, or created under its authority, shall be subject to the control thereof," was held to prevent a municipality, acting under the authority of the legislature, from entering into a binding contract as to public service rates.

MANIGAULT v. SPRINGS.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1905.

199 U. S. 473, 50 L. ed. 274, 26 Sup. Ct. 127.

[Plaintiff and defendants were adjoining riparian owners on the Santee River, at the mouth of Kinloch Creek. The creek was used as a highway by the riparian owners. In 1898 the defendants erected a dam across the creek. That same year the defendants removed the dam in pursuance of a contract between the plaintiff and the defendants whereby the latter agreed not to obstruct the channel of the creek. In 1903 the state legislature passed an act which recited the necessity of draining the low lands on the Santee River, whereby their taxable value would be greatly enhanced, and gave defendants by name authority to erect and maintain a dam across Kinloch Creek. Plaintiff sued in a circuit court of the United States to restrain the defendants from erecting the dam or otherwise obstructing the creek. From a dismissal of his bill, he brought this appeal.]

MR. JUSTICE BROWN delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

The main argument was addressed to the question whether the contract of August, 1898, providing for the removal of the obstruction on December 31 and the free ingress and egress through the creek thereafter, was impaired by the act of the General Assembly of 1903, permitting the defendants by name to construct and maintain the dam in question.

It is the settled law of this Court that the interdiction of statutes impairing the obligation of contracts does not prevent the state from exercising such powers as are vested in it for the promotion of the common weal, or are necessary for the general good of the public, though contracts previously entered into between individuals may thereby be affected. This power, which, in its various ramifications, is known as the police power, is an exercise of the sovereign right of the government to protect the lives, health, morals, comfort, and general welfare of the people, and is paramount to any rights under contracts between individuals. Familiar instances of this are where parties enter into contracts, perfectly lawful at the time, to sell liquor, operate a brewery or distillery, or carry on a lottery, all of which are subject to impairment by a change of policy on the part of the state, prohibiting the establishment or continuance of such traffic; in other words, that parties, by entering into contracts, may not estop the legislature from enacting laws intended for the public good.

While this power is subject to limitations in certain cases, there is wide discretion on the part of the legislature in determining what is and what is not necessary,—a discretion which courts ordinarily will not interfere with. The leading case upon this point is that of Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 420. * * *

It only remains to consider, in connection with this branch of the case, whether the act of the General Assembly of 1903 was a proper exercise of the police power of the state. Of this we have no doubt. Although it was not an exercise of that power in its ordinarily accepted sense of protecting the health, lives and morals of the community, it is defensible in its broader meaning of providing for the general welfare of the people, by the reclamation of swampy, overflowed and infertile lands, and the erection of dams, levees and dikes for that purpose. We have often held that private interests are subservient to that right, except where property is taken for which compensation must be paid, and must give way to any general scheme for the reclamation or improvement of said lands. * * *

Judgment affirmed.

NOTES

1. The student should note the distinction between those situations where contracts that may affect the public interest are made between individuals or corporations, and those where the state itself, or one of its subdivisions, has contracted with respect to such a subject matter.

2. In Union Dry Goods Co. v. Georgia Public Service Corporation, 248 U. S. 372, 63 L. ed. 309, 39 Sup. Ct. 117, 9 A. L. R. 1420 (1919) it was held that "reasonable" rates for supplying electricity fixed by the State Railroad Commission, pursuant to statutory authority, superseded rates fixed by private contract between the parties to the suit, entered into prior to the Commission's order.

3. "The power to fix rates, when exerted, is for the public welfare, to which private contracts must yield; but it is not an independent legislative function to vary or set aside such contracts, however unwise and unprofitable they may be. Indeed the exertion of legislative power solely to that end is precluded by the contract impairment clause of the Constitution. The power does not exist per se. It is the intervention of the public interest which justifies and at the same time conditions its exercise." Mr. Justice Sutherland, in Arkansas Natural Gas Co. v. Arkansas R. Commission, 261 U. S. 379, 383, 67 L. ed. 705, 43 Sup. Ct. 387 (1923).

4. During "a social emergency caused by an insufficient supply of dwelling houses and apartments, so grave that it constituted a serious menace to the health, morality, comfort and even to the peace of a large part of the people of the state," a state statute was held valid which changed the legal effect of existing leases by substituting for the specific amount of rent contracted for "a fair and reasonable rent" to be fixed by a court. Levy Leasing Co. v. Siegel, 258 U. S. 242, 66 L. ed. 595, 42 Sup. Ct. 289 (1922).

Other cases sustaining state legislation which impaired the obligation of existing contracts between private persons on the ground that they were enacted in the exercise of the police power: Marcus Brown Holding Co. v. Feldman, 256 U. S. 170, 65 L. ed. 877, 41 Sup. Ct. 465 (1921); Thornton v. Duffy, 254 U. S. 361, 65 L. ed. 304, 41 Sup. Ct. 137 (1920); Sutter Butte Canal Co. v. Railroad Commission, 279 U. S. 125, 73 L. ed. 637, 49 Sup. Ct. 325 (1929).

5. "The constitutional inhibition upon any state law impairing the obligation of contracts is not a limitation upon the power of eminent domain. The obligation of a contract is not impaired when it is appropriated to a public use and compensation made therefor. Such an exertion of power neither challenges its validity nor impairs its obligation. Both are recognized, for it is appropriated as an existing, enforceable contract. It is a taking, not an impairment of its obligation. If compensation be made, no constitutional right is violated." Cincinnati v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co., 223 U. S. 390, 400, 56 L. ed. 481, 32 Sup. Ct. 267 (1912). See also, Pennsylvania Hospital v. Philadelphia, 245 U. S. 20, 62 L. ed. 124, 38 Sup. Ct. 35 (1917); West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. 507, 12 L. ed. 535 (1848).

VON HOFFMAN v. QUINCY.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1866.

4 Wall. 535, 18 L. ed. 403.

[Error to review a judgment of the Circuit Court of the United States which had refused to issue a mandamus to the city ordering it to levy and collect a certain tax and to pay petitioner sufficient of the proceeds to satisfy a judgment he held against the city. The unsatisfied judgment was for interest on bonds issued by the city under statutes which authorized the city to levy a special annual tax, sufficient to pay the annual interest on these bonds, and to hold the proceeds of this tax as a separate fund for this purpose. The city answered that a subsequent statute had repealed this special tax law and reduced its power to tax so that after paying current expenses nothing was left to pay interest on the bonds. Petitioner demurred on the ground that the repeal was inoperative to take away his right to have the city levy the special tax.]

MR. JUSTICE SWAYNE delivered the opinion of the Court. * * *

It is * * * settled that the laws which subsist at the time and place of the making of a contract, and where it is to be performed, enter into and form a part of it, as if they were expressly referred to or incorporated in its terms. This principle embraces alike those which affect its validity, construction, discharge, and enforcement. Illustrations of this proposition are found, in the obligation of the debtor to pay interest after the maturity of the debt, where the contract is silent; in the liability of the drawer of a protested bill to pay exchange and damages, and in the right of the drawer and indorser to require proof of demand and notice. These are as much incidents and conditions of the contract as if they rested upon the basis of a distinct agreement. Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 92; Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. 319; McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. 612; People v. Bond, 10 Cal. 570; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 213.

In Green v. Biddle, the subject of laws which affect the remedy was elaborately discussed. The controversy grew out of a compact between the states of Virginia and Kentucky. It was made in contemplation of the separation of the territory of the latter from the former, and its erection into a state, and is contained in an act of the legislature of Virginia, passed in 1789, whereby it was provided "that all private rights and interests within" the district of Kentucky "derived from the laws of Virginia prior to such separation shall remain valid and secure under the laws of the proposed state, and shall be determined by the laws now existing in this state." By two acts of the legislature of Kentucky, passed respectively in 1797 and 1812, several new provisions relating to the consequences of a recovery in the action of ejectment—all eminently beneficial to the defendant, and onerous to the plaintiff—were adopted into the laws of that state. So far as they affected the lands covered by the compact, this Court declared them void. It was said: "It is no answer that the acts of Kentucky now in question are regulations of the remedy, and not of the right to the lands. If these acts so change the nature and extent of existing remedies as materially to impair the rights and interests of the owner, they are just as much violation of the compact as if they overturned his rights and interests."

In Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. 311, the subject was again fully considered. A mortgage was executed in Illinois containing a power of sale. Subsequently, an act of the legislature was passed which required mortgaged premises to be sold for not less than two-thirds of their appraised value, and allowed the mortgagor a year after the sale to redeem. It was held that the statute, by thus changing the pre-existing remedies, impaired the obligation of the contract, and was therefore void.

In McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. 608, the same principle, upon facts somewhat varied, was again sustained and applied. A statutory provision that personal property should not be sold under execution for less than two-thirds of its appraised value was adjudged, so far as it affected prior contracts, to be void, for the same reason. * * *

A statute of frauds embracing a pre-existing parol contract not before required to be in writing would affect its validity. A statute declaring that the word "ton" should thereafter be held, in prior as well as subsequent contracts, to mean half or double the weight before prescribed, would affect its construction. A statute providing that a previous contract of indebtedness may be extinguished by a process of bankruptcy would involve its discharge, and a statute forbidding the sale of any of the debtor's property, under a judgment upon such a contract, would relate to the remedy.

It cannot be doubted, either upon principle or authority, that each of such laws passed by a state would impair the obligation of the contract, and the last-mentioned not less than the first. Nothing can be more material to the obligation than the means of enforcement. Without the remedy the contract may, indeed, in the sense of the law, be said not to exist, and its obligation to fall within the class of those moral and social duties which depend for their fulfilment wholly upon the will of the individual. The ideas of validity and remedy are inseparable, and both are parts of, the obligation, which is guaranteed by the Constitution against invasion. The obligation of a contract "is the law which binds the parties to perform their agreement." Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 122, 197. The prohibition has no reference to the degree of impairment. The largest and least are alike forbidden. In Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 84, it was said: "The objection to a law on the ground of its impairing the obligation of a contract can never depend upon the extent of the change which the law effects in it. Any deviation from its terms by postponing or accelerating the period of performance which it prescribes, imposing conditions not expressed in the contract, or dispensing with those which are, however minute or apparently immaterial in their effect upon the contract of the parties, impairs its obligation. Upon this principle it is that if a creditor agree with his debtor to postpone the day of payment, or in any other way to change the terms of the contract, without the consent of the surety, the latter is discharged, although the change was for his advantage."

"One of the tests that a contract has been impaired is that its value has, by legislation, been diminished. It is not, by the Constitution, to be impaired at all. This is not a question of degree or cause, but of encroaching, in any respect, on its obligation—dispensing with any part of its force." * * *

This has reference to legislation which affects the contract directly, and not incidentally or only by consequence.

The right to imprison for debt is not a part of the contract. It is regarded as penal rather than remedial. The states may abolish it whenever they think proper. Beers v. Haughton, 9 Pet. 359; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 230; Mason v. Haile, 12 Wheat. 373; Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 122, 200. They may also exempt from sale, under execution, the necessary implements of agriculture, the tools of a mechanic, and articles of necessity in household furniture. It is said: "Regulations of this description have always been considered in every civilized community as properly belonging to the remedy, to be exercised by every sovereignty according to its own views of policy and humanity."

It is competent for the states to change the form of the remedy, or to modify it otherwise, as they may see fit, provided no substantial right secured by the contract is thereby impaired. No attempt has been made to fix definitely the line between alterations of the remedy, which are to be deemed legitimate, and those which, under the form of modifying the remedy, impair substantial rights. Every case must be determined upon its own circumstances. Whenever the result last mentioned is produced, the act is within the prohibition of the Constitution, and to that extent void. Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. 311; McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. 608.

If these doctrines were res integrae the consistency and soundness of the reasoning which maintains a distinction between the contract and the remedy—or, to speak more accurately, between the remedy and the other parts of the contract—might perhaps well be doubted. 1 Kent's Commentaries, 456; Sedgwick on Stat. and Cons. Law, 652; Mr. Justice Washington's dissenting opinion in Mason v. Haile, 12 Wheat. 379. But they rest in this Court upon a foundation of authority too firm to be shaken; and they are supported by such an array of judicial names that it is hard for the mind not to feel constrained to believe they are correct. The doctrine upon the subject established by the latest adjudications of this Court renders the distinction one rather of form than substance.

When the bonds in question were issued, there were laws in force which authorized and required the collection of taxes sufficient in amount to meet the interest, as it accrued from time to time, upon the entire debt. But for the act of the 14th of February, 1863, there would be no difficulty in enforcing them. The amount permitted to be collected by that act will be insufficient; and it is not certain that anything will be yielded applicable to that object. To the extent of the deficiency the obligation of the contract will be impaired, and if there be nothing applicable, it may be regarded as annulled. A right without a remedy is as if it were not. For every beneficial purpose it may be said not to exist.

It is well settled that a state may disable itself by contract from exercising its taxing power in particular cases. New Jersey v. Wilson, 7 Cranch, 166; Dodge v. Woolsey, 18 How. 331; Piqua Branch v. Knoop, 16 How. 369. It is equally clear that where a state has authorized a municipal corporation to contract and to exercise the power of local taxation to the extent necessary to meet its engagements, the power thus given cannot be withdrawn until the contract is satisfied. The state and the corporation, in such cases, are equally bound. The power given becomes a trust which the donor cannot annul, and which the donee is bound to execute; and neither the state nor the corporation can any more impair the obligation of the contract in this way than in any other.

The laws requiring taxes to the requisite amount to be collected, in force when the bonds were issued, are still in force for all the purposes of this case. The act of 1863 is, so far as it affects these bonds, a nullity. It is the duty of the city to impose and collect the taxes in all respects as if that act had not been passed. A different result would leave nothing of the contract but an abstract right—of no practical value—and render the protection of the Constitution a shadow and a delusion.

The Circuit Court erred in overruling the application for a mandamus. * * *

Judgment reversed.

NOTES

1. The court in the principal case discusses without discrimination cases involving changes of remedies for the enforcement of wholly private contracts while disposing of an issue relating to a public contract. The term "public contract" is used to include any contract at least one party to which is a governmental unit, whether the United States, a state, a municipality, a county, or other subordinate governmental agency. In analyzing the cases in this chapter the student should consider whether private and public contracts stand on the same footing with respect to the amount of protection afforded by the contract clause. Also worthy of consideration is the difference between contracts with a state and contracts with a subordinate public corporation of the state.

2. In Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 122, 4 L. ed. 529 (1819) it was held that, in the absence of a national bankruptcy law, a state could enact and enforce such a law within its territorial limits, but that a state law which not only released the person of the debtor from imprisonment but also discharged him from all liability for the debt, was invalid under the contract clause as applied to a debt contracted prior to its enactment. Later, in Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 213, 6 L. ed. 606 (1827) it was held that a state insolvency law discharging a debtor from the obligation of a contract does not violate the contract clause when applied to a contract made subsequent to the enactment of the law, such law being considered as having entered into the contract. It was further held, however, that a discharge of a debtor under a state insolvency act in force when the debt arose is not valid as against nonresident creditors who do not appear in the insolvency proceedings.

3. The contract clause was held to protect the title of a purchaser from the state of tax-forfeited lands against the effects of the repeal of a statute which had been originally enacted to prevent the setting aside of tax sales, and titles based upon them, for irregularities in assessment, levy or sale. Wood v. Lovett, 313 U. S. 362, 85 L. ed. 1404, 61 Sup. Ct. 983 (1941).

4. Lynch v. United States, 292 U. S. 571, 78 L. ed. 1434, 54 Sup. Ct. 840 (1934) held that war risk insurance policies issued by the government are legal obligations of the United States even though not entered into for gain, and that an Act of Congress repealing "all laws granting or pertaining to yearly renewable term insurance" was invalid when construed to take away the contractual right and not merely to withdraw consent to sue the United States. Mr. Justice Brandeis, speaking for the court, said: "The Fifth Amendment commands that property be not taken without making just compensation. Valid contracts are property, whether the obligor be a private individual, a municipality, a state or the United States. Rights against the United States arising out of a contract with it are protected by the Fifth Amendment. * * * When the United States enters into contract relations, its rights and duties therein are governed generally by the law applicable to contracts between private individuals. That the contracts of war risk insurance were valid when made is not questioned. As Congress had the power to authorize the Bureau of War Risk Insurance to issue them, the due process clause prohibits the United States from annulling them, unless, indeed, the action taken falls within the federal police power or some other paramount power. * * * Although consent to sue was thus given when the policy issued, Congress retained power to withdraw the consent at any time. For consent to sue the United States is a privilege accorded, not the grant of a property right protected by the Fifth Amendment. The consent may be withdrawn, although given after much deliberation and for a pecuniary consideration." The case thus applies the Fifth Amendment so as to afford protection against contract impairment by the national government, although there is no contract clause applicable in specific terms to the United States. Immunity from suit, however, is an attribute of sovereignty which may not be bartered away.

BANK OF MINDEN v. CLEMENT.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1921.
256 U. S. 126, 65 L. ed. 857, 41 Sup. Ct. 408.

MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS delivered the opinion of the Court.

By Act No. 189 of 1914, the Louisiana legislature undertook to exempt from debts of the assured the avails of insurance upon his life when payable to his estate.

Before passage of that act and while indebted to plaintiffs in error banks, by notes which were renewed from time to time until his death, O. P. Clement took out two policies upon his life with loss payable to his executors, administrators or assigns. He died in 1917 and his administratrix collected the stipulated sums amounting to $4,433.33. The succession was insolvent, and the banks sought to subject the insurance money to their claims, maintaining that if construed and applied so as to exempt such funds the Act of 1914 would impair the obligations of their contracts and violate § 10, Article I, federal Constitution. The Supreme Court of the State held that acceptance of the renewal notes did not operate as novations, but that the statute protected the insurance money without violating the federal Constitution since the exemption "impaired the obligation of the preexisting contract very slightly and remotely." 146 Louisiana, 385. * * *

When the deceased took out the policies of insurance upon his life they became his property subject to claims of his creditors. * * *

In Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 122, 197, 198, opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Marshall, it was said: "What is the obligation of a contract? and what will impair it? It would seem difficult to substitute words which are more intelligible, or less liable to misconstruction, than those which are to be explained. A contract is an agreement, in which a party undertakes to do, or not to do, a particular thing. The law binds him to perform his undertaking, and this is, of course, the obligation of his contract. * * * Any law which releases a part of this obligation, must, in the literal sense of the word, impair it. * * * But it is not true, that the parties have in view only the property in possession when the contract is formed, or that its obligation does not extend to future acquisitions. Industry, talents and integrity constitute a fund which is as confidently trusted as property itself. Future acquisitions are, therefore, liable for contracts; and to release them from this liability impairs their obligation." And, in Planters' Bank v. Sharp, 6 How. 301, 327, opinion by Mr. Justice Woodbury: "One of the tests that a contract has been impaired is, that its value has by legislation been diminished. It is not, by the Constitution, to be impaired at all. This is not a question of degree or manner or cause, but of encroaching in any respect on its obligation, dispensing with any part of its force." Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 213, 257; McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. 608, 612; Edwards v. Kearzey, 96 U. S. 595, 600.

So far as the statute of 1914 undertook to exempt the policies and their proceeds from antecedent debts it came into conflict with the federal Constitution. * * *

The judgment of the court below must be reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Reversed.

MR. JUSTICE CLARKE dissents.

NOTES

1. "The distinction was well expressed by Mr. Justice Harlan, speaking for this court, as follows: 'It is well settled that while, in a general sense, the laws in force at the time a contract is made enter into its obligation, parties have no vested right in the particular remedies or modes of procedure then existing. It is true the legislature may not withdraw all remedies, and thus, in effect, destroy the contract; nor may it impose such new restrictions or conditions as would materially delay or embarrass the enforcement of rights under the contract according to the usual course of justice as established when the contract was made. Neither could be done without impairing the obligation of the contract. But it is equally well settled that the legislature may modify or change existing remedies or prescribe new modes of procedure, without impairing the obligation of contracts, provided a substantial or efficacious remedy remains or is given, by means of which a party can enforce his rights under the contract.' Oshkosh Water Works Co. v. Oshkosh, 187 U. S. 437, 439; citing many previous cases." Mr. Justice Pitney in National Surety Co. v. Architectural Decorating Co., 226 U. S. 276, 283, 57 L. ed. 221, 33 Sup. Ct. 17 (1912).

2. "The passage of a new statute of limitations, giving a shorter time for the bringing of actions than existed before, even as applied to actions which had accrued, does not necessarily affect the remedy to such an extent as to impair the obligation of the contract within the meaning of the Constitution, provided a reasonable time is given for the bringing of such actions." McGahey v. Virginia, 135 U. S. 662, 705, 34 L. ed. 304, 10 Sup. Ct. 972 (1890). On what has been deemed a reasonable time in various cases, see notes in 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 528, 529, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 157.

HOME BUILDING & LOAN ASSN. v. BLAISDELL.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1934.

290 U. S. 538, 78 L. ed. 413, 54 Sup. Ct. 231, 88 A. L. R. 1481.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE HUGHES delivered the opinion of the Court.

Appellant contests the validity of Chapter 339 of the Laws of Minnesota of 1933, p. 514, approved April 18, 1933, called the Minnesota Mortgage Moratorium Law, as being repugnant to the contract clause (Art. I, § 10) and the due process and equal protection clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment, of the Federal Constitution. The statute was sustained by the Supreme Court of Minnesota, 189 Minn. 422, 448; 249 N. W. 334, 893, and the case comes here on appeal.

The Act provides that, during the emergency declared to exist, relief may be had through authorized judicial proceedings with respect to foreclosures of mortgages, and execution sales, of real estate; that sales may be postponed and periods of redemption may be extended. The Act does not apply to mortgages subsequently made nor to those made previously which shall be extended for a period ending more than a year after the passage of the Act (Part One, § 8). There are separate provisions in Part Two relating to homesteads, but these are to apply "only to cases not entitled to relief under some valid provision of Part One." The Act is to remain in effect "only during the continuance of the emergency and in no event beyond May 1, 1935." No extension of the period for redemption and no postponement of sale is to be allowed which would have the effect of extending the period of redemption beyond that date. Part Two, § 8.

The Act declares that the various provisions for relief are severable; that each is to stand on its own footing with respect to validity. Part One, § 9. We are here concerned with the provisions of Part One, § 4, authorizing the District Court of the County to extend the period of redemption from foreclosure sales "for such additional time as the court may deem just and equitable," subject to the above described limitation. The extension is to be made upon application to the court, on notice, for an order determining the reasonable value of the income on the property involved in the sale, or if it has no income, then the reasonable rental value of the property, and directing the mortgagor "to pay all or a reasonable part of such income or rental value, in or toward the payment of taxes, insurance, interest, mortgage * * * indebtedness at such times and in such manner" as shall be determined by the court. The section also provides that the time for redemption from foreclosure sales theretofore made, which otherwise would expire less than thirty days after the approval of the Act shall be extended to a date thirty days after its approval, and application may be made to the court within that time for a further extension as provided in the section. By another provision of the Act, no action, prior to May 1, 1935, may be maintained for a deficiency judgment until the period of redemption as allowed by existing law or as extended under the provisions of the Act has expired. Prior to the expiration of the extended period of redemption the court may revise or alter the terms of the extension as changed circumstances may require. Part One, § 5.

Invoking the relevant provision of the statute, appellees applied to the District Court of Hennepin County for an order extending the period of redemption from a foreclosure sale. Their petition stated that they owned a lot in Minneapolis which they had mortgaged to appellant; that the mortgage contained a valid power of sale by advertisement and that by reason of their default the mortgage had been foreclosed and sold to appellant on May 2, 1932, for $3,700.98; that appellant was the holder of the sheriff's certificate of sale; that because of the economic depression appellees had been unable to obtain a new loan or to redeem, and that unless the period of redemption were extended the property would be irretrievably lost; and that the reasonable value of the property greatly exceeded the amount due on the mortgage including all liens, costs and expenses.

On the hearing, appellant objected to the introduction of evidence upon the ground that the statute was invalid under the federal and state constitutions, and moved that the petition be dismissed. The motion was granted and a motion for a new trial was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court of the State reversed the decision of the District Court. 189 Minn. 422; 249 N. W. 334. Evidence was then taken in the trial court and appellant renewed its constitutional objections without avail. The court made findings of fact setting forth the mortgage made by the appellees on August 1, 1928, the power of sale contained in the mortgage, the default and foreclosure by advertisement, and the sale to appellant on May 2, 1932, for $3,700.98. The court found that the time to redeem would expire on May 2, 1933, under the laws of the State as they were in effect when the mortgage was made and when it was foreclosed; that the reasonable value of the income on the property, and the reasonable rental value, was $40 a month; that the bid made by appellant on the foreclosure sale, and the purchase price, were the full amount of the mortgage indebtedness, and that there was no deficiency after the sale; that the reasonable present market value of the premises was $6,000; and that the total amount of the purchase price, with taxes and insurance premiums subsequently paid by appellant, but exclusive of interest from the date of sale, was $4,056.39. The court also found that the property was situated in the closely built-up portions of Minneapolis; that it had been improved by a two-car garage, together with a building two stories in height which was divided into fourteen rooms; that the appellees, husband and wife, occupied the premises as their homestead, occupying three rooms and offering the remaining rooms for rental to others.

The court entered its judgment extending the period of redemption to May 1, 1935, subject to the condition that the appellees should pay to the appellant $40 a month through the extended period from May 2, 1933, that is, that in each of the months of August, September, and October, 1933, the payments should be $80, in two instalments, and thereafter $40 a month, all these amounts to go to the payment of taxes, insurance, interest, and mortgage indebtedness. It is this judgment, sustained by the Supreme Court of the State on the authority of its former opinion, which is here under review. 189 Minn. 448; 249 N. W. 893. * * *

We approach the questions thus presented upon the assumption made below, as required by the law of the State, that the mortgage contained a valid power of sale to be exercised in case of default; that this power was validly exercised; that under the law then applicable the period of redemption from the sale was one year and that it has been extended by the judgment of the court over the opposition of the mortgagee-purchaser; and that during the period thus extended, and unless the order for extension is modified, the mortgagee-purchaser will be unable to obtain possession, or to obtain or convey title in fee, as he would have been able to do had the statute not been enacted. The statute does not impair the integrity of the mortgage indebtedness. The obligation for interest remains. The statute does not affect the validity of the sale or the right of a mortgagee-purchaser to title in fee, or his right to obtain a deficiency judgment, if the mortgagor fails to redeem within the prescribed period. Aside from the extension of time, the other conditions of redemption are unaltered. While the mortgagor remains in possession he must pay the rental value as that value has been determined, upon notice and hearing, by the court. The rental value so paid is devoted to the carrying of the property by the application of the required payments to taxes, insurance, and interest on the mortgage indebtedness. While the mortgagee-purchaser is debarred from actual possession, he has, so far as rental value is concerned, the equivalent of possession during the extended period.

In determining whether the provision for this temporary and conditional relief exceeds the power of the State by reason of the clause in the Federal Constitution prohibiting impairment of the obligations of contracts, we must consider the relation of emergency to constitutional power, the historical setting of the contract clause, the development of the jurisprudence of this Court in the construction of that clause, and the principles of construction which we may consider to be established.

Emergency does not create power. Emergency does not increase granted power or remove or diminish the restrictions imposed upon power granted or reserved. The Constitution was adopted in a period of grave emergency. Its grants of power to the Federal Government and its limitations of the power of the States were determined in the light of emergency and they are not altered by emergency. What power was thus granted and what limitations were thus imposed are questions which have always been, and always will be, the subject of close examination under our constitutional system.

While emergency does not create power, emergency may furnish the occasion for the exercise of power. "Although an emergency may not call into life a power which has never lived, nevertheless emergency may afford a reason for the exertion of a living power already enjoyed." Wilson v. New, 243 U. S. 332, 348. The constitutional question presented in the light of an emergency is whether the power possessed embraces the particular exercise of it in response to particular conditions. Thus, the war power of the Federal Government is not created by the emergency of war, but it is a power given to meet that emergency. It is a power to wage war successfully, and thus it permits the harnessing of the entire energies of the people in a supreme coöperative effort to preserve the nation. But even the war power does not remove constitutional limitations safeguarding essential liberties. When the provisions of the Constitution, in grant or restriction, are specific, so particularized as not to admit of construction, no question is presented. Thus, emergency would not permit a State to have more than two Senators in the Congress, or permit the election of President by a general popular vote without regard to the number of electors to which the States are respectively entitled, or permit the States to "coin money" or to "make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts." But where constitutional grants and limitations of power are set forth in general clauses, which afford a broad outline, the process of construction is essential to fill in the details. That is true of the contract clause. The necessity of construction is not obviated by the fact that the contract clause is associated in the same section with other and more specific prohibitions. * * *

The inescapable problems of construction have been: What is a contract? What are the obligations of contracts? What constitutes impairment of these obligations? What residuum of power is there still in the States in relation to the operation of contracts, to protect the vital interests of the community? Questions of this character, "of no small nicety and intricacy, have vexed the legislative halls, as well as the judicial tribunals, with an uncounted variety and frequency of litigation and speculation." Story on the Constitution, § 1375.

The obligation of a contract is "the law which binds the parties to perform their agreement." Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 122, 197; Story, op. cit., § 1378. This Court has said that "the laws which subsist at the time and place of the making of a contract, and where it is to be performed, enter into and form a part of it, as if they were expressly referred to or incorporated in its terms. This principle embraces alike those which affect its validity, construction, discharge and enforcement. * * * Nothing can be more material to the obligation than the means of enforcement. * * * The ideas of validity and remedy are inseparable, and both are parts of the obligation, which is guaranteed by the Constitution against invasion." Von Hoffman v. Quincy, 4 Wall. 535, 550, 552. See, also, Walker v. Whitehead, 16 Wall. 314, 317. But this broad language cannot be taken without qualification. Chief Justice Marshall pointed out the distinction between obligation and remedy. Sturges v. Crowninshield, supra, p. 200. Said he: "The distinction between the obligation of a contract, and the remedy given by the legislature to enforce that obligation, has been taken at the bar, and exists in the nature of things. Without impairing the obligation of the contract, the remedy may certainly be modified as the wisdom of the nation shall direct." And in Von Hoffman v. Quincy, supra, pp. 553, 554, the general statement above quoted was limited by the further observation that "It is competent for the States to change the form of the remedy, or to modify it otherwise, as they may see fit, provided no substantial right secured by the contract is thereby impaired. No attempt has been made to fix definitely the line between alterations of the remedy, which are to be deemed legitimate, and those which, under the form of modifying the remedy, impair substantial rights. Every case must be determined upon its own circumstances." And Chief Justice Waite, quoting this language in Antonio v. Greenhow, 107 U. S. 769, 775, added: "In all such cases the question becomes therefore, one of reasonableness, and of that the legislature is primarily the judge."

The obligations of a contract are impaired by a law which renders them invalid, or releases or extinguishes them (Sturges v. Crowninshield, supra, pp. 197, 198) and impairment, as above noted, has been predicated of laws which without destroying contracts derogate from substantial contractual rights. In Sturges v. Crowninshield, supra, a state insolvent law, which discharged the debtor from liability was held to be invalid as applied to contracts in existence when the law was passed. See Ogden v. Saunders, supra. In Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1, the legislative acts, which were successfully assailed, exempted the occupant of land from the payment of rents and profits to the rightful owner and were "parts of a system the object of which was to compel the rightful owner to relinquish his lands or pay for all lasting improvements made upon them, without his consent or default." In Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. 311, state legislation, which had been enacted for the relief of debtors in view of the seriously depressed condition of business, following the panic of 1837, and which provided that the equitable estate of the mortgagor should not be extinguished for twelve months after sale on foreclosure, and further prevented any sale unless two-thirds of the appraised value of the property should be bid therefor, was held to violate the constitutional provision. It will be observed that in the Bronson case, aside from the requirement as to the amount of the bid at the sale, the extension of the period of redemption was unconditional, and there was no provision, as in the instant case, to secure to the mortgagee the rental value of the property during the extended period. McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. 608, Gantly's Lessee v. Ewing, 3 How. 707, and Howard v. Bugbee, 24 How. 461, followed the decision in Bronson v. Kinzie; that of McCracken, condemning a statute which provided that an execution sale should not be made of property unless it would bring two-thirds of its value according to the opinion of three householders; that of Gantly's Lessee, condemning a statute which required a sale for not less than one-half the appraised value; and that of Howard, making a similar ruling as to an unconditional extension of two years for redemption from foreclosure sale.

* * *

None of these cases, and we have cited those upon which appellant chiefly relies, is directly applicable to the question now before us in view of the conditions with which the Minnesota statute seeks to safeguard the interests of the mortgagee-purchaser during the extended period. And broad expressions contained in some of these opinions went beyond the requirements of the decision, and are not controlling. Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 399.

Not only is the constitutional provision qualified by the measure of control which the State retains over remedial processes, but the State also continues to possess authority to safeguard the vital interests of its people. It does not matter that legislation appropriate to that end "has the result of modifying or abrogating contracts already in effect." Stephenson v. Binford, 287 U. S. 251, 276. Not only are existing laws read into contracts in order to fix obligations as between the parties, but the reservation of essential attributes of sovereign power is also read into contracts as a postulate of the legal order. The policy of protecting contracts against impairment presupposes the maintenance of a government by virtue of which contractual relations are worth while,—a government which retains adequate authority to secure the peace and good order of society. This principle of harmonizing the constitutional prohibition with the necessary residuum of state power has had progressive recognition in the decisions of this Court.

While the charters of private corporations constitute contracts, a grant of exclusive privilege is not to be implied as against the State. Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 420. And all contracts are subject to the right of eminent domain. West River Bridge v. Dix, 6 How. 507. The reservation of this necessary authority of the State is deemed to be a part of the contract. * * *

The legislature cannot "bargain away the public health or the public morals." Thus, the constitutional provision against the impairment of contracts was held not to be violated by an amendment of the state constitution which put an end to a lottery theretofore authorized by the legislature. Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 819. See, also, Douglas v. Kentucky, 168 U. S. 488, 497-499; compare New Orleans v. Houston, 119 U. S. 265, 275. The lottery was a valid enterprise when established under express state authority, but the legislature in the public interest could put a stop to it. A similar rule has been applied to the control by the State of the sale of intoxicating liquors. Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 32, 33; see Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 664, 665. The States retain adequate power to protect the public health against the maintenance of nuisances despite insistence upon existing contracts. Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659, 667; Butchers' Union Co. v. Crescent City Co., 111 U. S. 746, 750. Legislation to protect the public safety comes within the same category of reserved power. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 170 U. S. 57, 70, 74; Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Miller, 221 U. S. 408, 414; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Goldsboro, 232 U. S. 548, 558. This principle has had recent and noteworthy application to the regulation of the use of public highways by common carriers and "contract carriers," where the assertion of interference with existing contract rights has been without avail. Sproles v. Binford, 286 U. S. 374, 390, 391; Stephenson v. Binford, supra.

The economic interests of the State may justify the exercise of its continuing and dominant protective power notwithstanding interference with contracts. * * *

A statute of New Jersey prohibiting the transportation of water of the State into any other State was sustained against the objection that the statute impaired the obligation of contracts which had been made for furnishing such water to persons without the State. Hudson Water Co. v. McCarter, 209 U. S. 349. Said the Court, by Mr. Justice Holmes (id. p. 357): "One whose rights, such as they are, are subject to state restriction, cannot remove them from the power of the State by making a contract about them. The contract will carry with it the infirmity of the subject matter." The general authority of the legislature to regulate, and thus to modify, the rates charged by public service corporations affords another illustration. Stone v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co., 116 U. S. 307, 325, 326. * * *

The argument is pressed that in the cases we have cited the obligation of contracts was affected only incidentally. This argument proceeds upon a misconception. The question is not whether the legislative action affects contracts incidentally, or directly or indirectly, but whether the legislation is addressed to a legitimate end and the measures taken are reasonable and appropriate to that end. Another argument, which comes more closely to the point, is that the state power may be addressed directly to the prevention of the enforcement of contracts only when these are of a sort which the legislature in its discretion may denounce as being in themselves hostile to public morals, or public health, safety or welfare, or where the prohibition is merely of injurious practices; that interference with the enforcement of other and valid contracts according to appropriate legal procedure, although the interference is temporary and for a public purpose, is not permissible. This is but to contend that in the latter case the end is not legitimate in the view that it cannot be reconciled with a fair interpretation of the constitutional provision.

Undoubtedly, whatever is reserved of state power must be consistent with the fair intent of the constitutional limitation of that power. The reserved power cannot be construed so as to destroy the limitation, nor is the limitation to be construed to destroy the reserved power in its essential aspects. They must be construed in harmony with each other. This principle precludes a construction which would permit the State to adopt as its policy the repudiation of debts or the destruction of contracts or the denial of means to enforce them. But it does not follow that conditions may not arise in which a temporary restraint of enforcement may be consistent with the spirit and purpose of the constitutional provision and thus be found to be within the range of the reserved power of the State to protect the vital interests of the community. It cannot be maintained that the constitutional prohibition should be so construed as to prevent limited and temporary interpositions with respect to the enforcement of contracts if made necessary by a great public calamity such as fire, flood, or earthquake. See American Land Co. v. Zeiss, 219 U. S. 47. The reservation of state power appropriate to such extraordinary conditions may be deemed to be as much a part of all contracts, as is the reservation of state power to protect the public interest in the other situations to which we have referred. And if state power exists to give temporary relief from the enforcement of contracts in the presence of disasters due to physical causes such as fire, flood or earthquake, that power cannot be said to be non-existent when the urgent public need demanding such relief is produced by other and economic causes.

Whatever doubt there may have been that the protective power of the State, its police power, may be exercised—without violating the true intent of the provision of the Federal Constitution—in directly preventing the immediate and literal enforcement of contractual obligations, by a temporary and conditional restraint, where vital public interests would otherwise suffer, was removed by our decisions relating to the enforcement of provisions of leases during a period of scarcity of housing. Block v. Hirsh, 256 U. S. 135; Marcus Brown Holding Co. v. Feldman, 256 U. S. 170; Edgar A. Levy Leasing Co. v. Siegel, 258 U. S. 242. The case of Block v. Hirsh, supra, arose in the District of Columbia and involved the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment. The cases of the Marcus Brown Company and the Levy Leasing Company arose under legislation of New York and the constitutional provision against the impairment of the obligation of contracts was invoked. * * *

It is manifest from this review of our decisions that there has been a growing appreciation of public needs and of the necessity of finding ground for a rational compromise between individual rights and public welfare. The settlement and consequent contraction of the public domain, the pressure of a constantly increasing density of population, the interrelation of the activities of our people and the complexity of our economic interests, have inevitably led to an increased use of the organization of society in order to protect the very bases of individual opportunity. Where, in earlier days, it was thought that only the concerns of individuals or of classes were involved, and that those of the State itself were touched only remotely, it has later been found that the fundamental interests of the State are directly affected; and that the question is no longer merely that of one party to a contract as against another, but of the use of reasonable means to safeguard the economic structure upon which the good of all depends.

It is no answer to say that this public need was not apprehended a century ago, or to insist that what the provision of the Constitution meant to the vision of that day it must mean to the vision of our time. If by the statement that what the Constitution meant at the time of its adoption it means to-day, it is intended to say that the great clauses of the Constitution must be confined to the interpretation which the framers, with the conditions and outlook of their time, would have placed upon them, the statement carries its own refutation. It was to guard against such a narrow conception that Chief Justice Marshall uttered the memorable warning—"We must never forget that it is a constitution we are expounding" (McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 407)—"a constitution intended to endure for ages to come, and consequently, to be adapted to the various crises of human affairs." Id., p. 415. When we are dealing with the words of the Constitution, said this Court in Missouri v. Holland, 252 U. S. 416, 433, "we must realize that they have called into life a being the development of which could not have been foreseen completely by the most gifted of its begetters. * * * The case before us must be considered in the light of our whole experience and not merely in that of what was said a hundred years ago." * * *

Applying the criteria established by our decisions we conclude:

1. An emergency existed in Minnesota which furnished a proper occasion for the exercise of the reserved power of the State to protect the vital interests of the community. The declarations of the existence of this emergency by the legislature and by the Supreme Court of Minnesota cannot be regarded as a subterfuge or as lacking in adequate basis. Block v. Hirsh, supra. The finding of the legislature and state court has support in the facts of which we take judicial notice. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. United States, 284 U. S. 248, 260. It is futile to attempt to make a comparative estimate of the seriousness of the emergency shown in the leasing cases from New York and of the emergency disclosed here. The particular facts differ, but that there were in Minnesota conditions urgently demanding relief, if power existed to give it, is beyond cavil. As the Supreme Court of Minnesota said, the economic emergency which threatened "the loss of homes and lands which furnish those in possession the necessary shelter and means of subsistence" was a "potent cause" for the enactment of the statute.

2. The legislation was addressed to a legitimate end, that is, the legislation was not for the mere advantage of particular individuals but for the protection of a basic interest of society.

3. In view of the nature of the contracts in question—mortgages of unquestionable validity—the relief afforded and justified by the emergency, in order not to contravene the constitutional provision, could only be of a character appropriate to that emergency and could be granted only upon reasonable conditions.

4. The conditions upon which the period of redemption is extended do not appear to be unreasonable. The initial extension of the time of redemption for thirty days from the approval of the Act was obviously to give a reasonable opportunity for the authorized application to the court. As already noted, the integrity of the mortgage indebtedness is not impaired; interest continues to run; the validity of the sale and the right of a mortgagee-purchaser to title or to obtain a deficiency judgment, if the mortgagor fails to redeem within the extended period, are maintained; and the conditions of redemption, if redemption there be, stand as they were under the prior law. The mortgagor during the extended period is not ousted from possession but he must pay the rental value of the premises as ascertained in judicial proceedings and this amount is applied to the carrying of the property and to interest upon the indebtedness. The mortgagee-purchaser during the time that he cannot obtain possession thus is not left without compensation for the withholding of possession. Also important is the fact that mortgagees, as is shown by official reports of which we may take notice, are predominantly corporations, such as insurance companies, banks, and investment and mortgage companies. These, and such individual mortgagees as are small investors, are not seeking homes or the opportunity to engage in farming. Their chief concern is the reasonable protection of their investment security. It does not matter that there are, or may be, individual cases of another aspect. The legislature was entitled to deal with the general or typical situation. The relief afforded by the statute has regard to the interest of mortgagees as well as to the interest of mortgagors. The legislation seeks to prevent the impending ruin of both by a considerate measure of relief. * * *

5. The legislation is temporary in operation. It is limited to the exigency which called it forth. While the postponement of the period of redemption from the foreclosure sale is to May 1, 1935, that period may be reduced by the order of the court under the statute, in case of a change in circumstances, and the operation of the statute itself could not validly outlast the emergency or be so extended as virtually to destroy the contracts.

We are of the opinion that the Minnesota statute as here applied does not violate the contract clause of the Federal Constitution. Whether the legislation is wise or unwise as a matter of policy is a question with which we are not concerned.

What has been said on that point is also applicable to the contention presented under the due process clause. * * *

Nor do we think that the statute denies to the appellant the equal protection of the laws. The classification which the statute makes cannot be said to be an arbitrary one. Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Savings Bank, 170 U. S. 283; Clark v. Titusville, 184 U. S. 329; Quong Wing v. Kirkendall, 223 U. S. 59; Ohio Oil Co. v. Conway, 281 U. S. 146; Sproles v. Binford, 286 U. S. 374.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Minnesota is affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

MR. JUSTICE SUTHERLAND, dissenting.

Few questions of greater moment than that just decided have been submitted for judicial inquiry during this generation. He simply closes his eyes to the necessary implications of the decision who fails to see in it the potentiality of future gradual but ever-advancing encroachments upon the sanctity of private and public contracts. The effect of the Minnesota legislation, though serious enough in itself, is of trivial significance compared with the far more serious and dangerous inroads upon the limitations of the Constitution which are almost certain to ensue as a consequence naturally following any step beyond the boundaries fixed by that instrument. And those of us who are thus apprehensive of the effect of this decision would, in a matter so important, be neglectful of our duty should we fail to spread upon the permanent records of the court the reasons which move us to the opposite view.

A provision of the Constitution, it is hardly necessary to say, does not admit of two distinctly opposite interpretations. It does not mean one thing at one time and an entirely different thing at another time. If the contract impairment clause, when framed and adopted, meant that the terms of a contract for the payment of money could not be altered in invitum by a state statute enacted for the relief of hardly pressed debtors to the end and with the effect of postponing payment or enforcement during and because of an economic or financial emergency, it is but to state the obvious to say that it means the same now.

* * *

The whole aim of construction, as applied to a provision of the Constitution, is to discover the meaning, to ascertain and give effect to the intent, of its framers and the people who adopted it. Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U. S. 662, 770. * * *

An application of these principles to the question under review removes any doubt, if otherwise there would be any, that the contract impairment clause denies to the several states the power to mitigate hard consequences resulting to debtors from financial or economic exigencies by an impairment of the obligation of contracts of indebtedness. A candid consideration of the history and circumstances which led up to and accompanied the framing and adoption of this clause will demonstrate conclusively that it was framed and adopted with the specific and studied purpose of preventing legislation designed to relieve debtors especially in time of financial distress. Indeed, it is not probable that any other purpose was definitely in the minds of those who composed the framers' convention or the ratifying state conventions which followed, although the restriction has been given a wider application upon principles clearly stated by Chief Justice Marshall in the Dartmouth College Case, 4 Wheat. 518, 644-645. * * *

If it be possible by resort to the testimony of history to put any question of constitutional intent beyond the domain of uncertainty, the foregoing leaves no reasonable ground upon which to base a denial that the clause of the Constitution now under consideration was meant to foreclose state action impairing the obligation of contracts primarily and especially in respect of such action aimed at giving relief to debtors in time of emergency. And if further proof be required to strengthen what already is inextinguishable, such proof will be found in the previous decisions of this Court. * * *

The present exigency is nothing new. From the beginning of our existence as a nation, periods of depression, of industrial failure, of financial distress, of unpaid and unpayable indebtedness, have alternated with years of plenty. The vital lesson that expenditure beyond income begets poverty, that public or private extravagance, financed by promises to pay, either must end in complete or partial repudiation or the promises be fulfilled by self-denial and painful effort, though constantly taught by bitter experience, seems never to be learned; and the attempt by legislative devices to shift the misfortune of the debtor to the shoulders of the creditor without coming into conflict with the contract impairment clause has been persistent and oft-repeated.

The defense of the Minnesota law is made upon grounds which were discountenanced by the makers of the Constitution and have many times been rejected by this Court. That defense should not now succeed because it constitutes an effort to overthrow the constitutional provision by an appeal to facts and circumstances identical with those which brought it into existence. With due regard for the processes of logical thinking, it legitimately cannot be urged that conditions which produced the rule may now be invoked to destroy it. * * *

It is quite true that an emergency may supply the occasion for the exercise of power, depending upon the nature of the power and the intent of the Constitution with respect thereto. The emergency of war furnishes an occasion for the exercise of certain of the war powers. This the Constitution contemplates, since they cannot be exercised upon any other occasion. The existence of another kind of emergency authorizes the United States to protect each of the states of the Union against domestic violence. Const. Art. IV, § 4. But we are here dealing, not with a power granted by the Federal Constitution, but with the state police power, which exists in its own right. Hence the question is, not whether an emergency furnishes the occasion for the exercise of that state power, but whether an emergency furnishes an occasion for the relaxation of the restrictions upon the power imposed by the contract impairment clause; and the difficulty is that the contract impairment clause forbids state action under any circumstances, if it have the effect of impairing the obligation of contracts. That clause restricts every state power in the particular specified, no matter what may be the occasion. It does not contemplate that an emergency shall furnish an occasion for softening the restriction or making it any the less a restriction upon state action in that contingency than it is under strictly normal conditions.

The Minnesota statute either impairs the obligation of contracts or it does not. If it does not, the occasion to which it relates becomes immaterial, since then the passage of the statute is the exercise of a normal, unrestricted, state power and requires no special occasion to render it effective. If it does, the emergency no more furnishes a proper occasion for its exercise than if the emergency were non-existent. And so, while, in form, the suggested distinction seems to put us forward in a straight line, in reality it simply carries us back in a circle, like bewildered travelers lost in a wood, to the point where we parted company with the view of the state court.

If what has now been said is sound, as I think it is, we come to what really is the vital question in the case: Does the Minnesota statute constitute an impairment of the obligation of the contract now under review? * * *

A statute which materially delays enforcement of the mortgagee's contractual right of ownership and possession does not modify the remedy merely; it destroys, for the period of delay, all remedy so far as the enforcement of that right is concerned. The phrase, "obligation of a contract," in the constitutional sense imports a legal duty to perform the specified obligation of that contract, not to substitute and perform, against the will of one of the parties, a different, albeit equally valuable, obligation. And a state, under the contract impairment clause, has no more power to accomplish such a substitution than has one of the parties to the contract against the will of the other. It cannot do so either by acting directly upon the contract, or by bringing about the result under the guise of a statute in form acting only upon the remedy. If it could, the efficacy of the constitutional restriction would, in large measure, be made to disappear. As this court has well said, whatever tends to postpone or retard the enforcement of a contract, to that extent weakens the obligation. * * *

I am authorized to say that MR. JUSTICE VAN DEVANTER, MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS and MR. JUSTICE BUTLER concur in this opinion.

NOTES

1. The principal case is discussed in Prosser, The Minnesota Mortgage Moratorium, 7 So. Cal. L. Rev. 353 (1934), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 359.

2. Following closely upon the decision in the Blaisdell case, two Arkansas statutes of 1933 were held invalid as impairing the obligations of prior contracts. In W. B. Worthen Co. v. Thomas, 292 U. S. 426, 78 L. ed. 1344, 54 Sup. Ct. 816, 93 A. L. R. 173 (1934) the challenged law exempted all moneys paid or payable to any resident of the state as the insured or beneficiary under a life insurance policy from seizure under judicial process. The court, through Chief Justice Hughes, pointed out that the relief sought to be afforded was neither temporary nor conditional. In placing insurance moneys beyond the reach of existing creditors, the act contained no limitations as to time, amount, circumstances, or need. While the legislature had sought to justify the exemption by reference to an emergency, the statute was not limited to the emergency and set up no conditions apposite to emergency relief. In W. B. Worthen Co. v. Kavanaugh, 295 U. S. 56, 79 L. ed. 1298, 55 Sup. Ct. 555, 97 A. L. R. 905 (1935) the invalidated legislation made over a prior state plan to enforce the payment of benefit assessments for municipal corporations. Under the new plan the time for payment after notice was enlarged from thirty days to ninety; the penalty was reduced from 20% to 3%; the return of the delinquent list, which till then had to be made forthwith, was to be withheld for another ninety days; the time to appear and answer after personal service, which had formerly been five days, was changed to six months; if service was constructive, there was to be publication for six months instead of fifteen days, and another six months was to elapse before the cause was to be heard; the decree when rendered was to give still another twelve months for payment, instead of ten days as theretofore, and an additional six months after the new default before the property could be sold; the time for redemption was fixed at four years from the sale, and the rate of interest (formerly 10% or 20%) was reduced to 6%, the statute reciting that the law previously in force did not provide an adequate period of redemption from land sales for delinquent taxes in municipal improvement districts; finally, under the new law, there was a repeal of a provision under which a purchaser had been given the right to go into possession during the term allowed for redemption and to hold such possession without accountability for rents.

The court said that while "a state is free to regulate the procedure in its courts even with reference to contracts already made" and that "moderate extensions of the time for pleading or for trial will ordinarily fall within the power so reserved" an entirely different situation is presented "when extensions are so piled up as to make the remedy a shadow."

In Faitoute Iron & Steel Co. v. Asbury Park, 316 U. S. 502, 86 L. ed. 1629, 62 Sup. Ct. 1129 (1942) a state statute was held valid under which a New Jersey city put through a composition with its bond creditors with respect to bonds outstanding when the statute was enacted. Under the composition the refunding bonds were the same in amount as the principal of the old bonds but at a lower rate of interest. The statute made the composition agreement binding on the consent of 85% of the creditors. In holding that the dissenters could not recover on their old bonds, the court distinguished W. B. Worthen v. Kavanaugh, supra, and said that in the statute under consideration there was evidence of "state intervention, carefully devised, worked out with scrupulous detail and with due regard to the interests of all the creditors, and scrutinized to that end by the state judiciary with the result that that which was a most depreciated claim of little value has, by the very scheme complained of, been saved and transmuted into substantial value."

3. In East New York Savings Bank v. Hahn, 326 U. S. 230, 90 L. ed. 34, 66 Sup. Ct. 69, 160 A. L. R. 1279 (1945) the Supreme Court upheld the renewal in 1943 of the New York Moratorium Law (first enacted in 1933), which suspended for a year the right of foreclosure for default in the payment of principal as to mortgages executed prior to July 1, 1932.

4. Statutes limiting the amount of a deficiency judgment against the mortgagor to the excess of the debt over the fair market value of the mortgaged property in cases where the mortgagee purchased at the foreclosure sale have been sustained as to prior mortgages in several decisions. Richmond Mortgage & Loan Corporation v. Wachovia Bank & Trust Co., 300 U. S. 124, 81 L. ed. 552, 57 Sup. Ct. 338, 108 A. L. R. 886 (1937); Honeyman v. Jacobs, 306 U. S. 539, 83 L. ed. 972, 59 Sup. Ct. 702 (1939); Gelfert v. National City Bank, 313 U. S. 221, 85 L. ed. 1299, 61 Sup. Ct. 898, 133 A. L. R. 1467 (1941). The Gelfert case involved a New York statute enacted in 1938 which did not purport to relieve a declared public emergency and was unrestricted in its application. But the court, holding that the principles of the earlier decisions were applicable, said: "The fact that an emergency was not declared to exist when this statute was passed does not bring within the protective scope of the contract clause rights which were denied such protection in Honeyman v. Jacobs."

COOMBES v. GETZ.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1932.
285 U. S. 434, 76 L. ed. 866, 52 Sup. Ct. 435.

MR. JUSTICE SUTHERLAND delivered the opinion of the Court.

This is a suit brought in a California superior court by petitioner, on behalf of himself and other creditors, to recover from respondent, a director in Getz Bros. & Company, a California corporation, the amount of an indebtedness upon an open account for goods sold to the corporation by petitioner's assignor. The basis of the liability sought to be enforced is found in the following provision of § 3, Art. XII, of the California Constitution of 1879:

"The directors or trustees of corporations and joint-stock associations shall be jointly and severally liable to the creditors and stockholders for all moneys embezzled or misappropriated by the officers of such corporation or joint-stock association, during the term of office of such director or trustee."

The bill alleges misappropriation and embezzlement of moneys of the corporation by its officers, with appropriate details to bring the respondent within the terms of the foregoing provision. The superior court sustained a demurrer to the complaint, for reasons not material here, and rendered final judgment accordingly. An appeal was taken to the state supreme court; and, while that appeal was pending, the provision of the state constitution above quoted was repealed. Thereupon, respondent moved to dismiss the appeal, on the ground that the cause of action had abated by reason of the repeal of the provision of law upon which it was based. The court sustained the motion and dismissed the appeal [Coombes v. Franklin] 1 P. (2d) 992; and subsequently denied a petition for rehearing, 4 P. (2d) 157.

In substance, it was held that the right accorded to corporate creditors was created by, and dependent alone upon, the constitutional provision, said to have the force of a statute; and that when that was repealed, the right fell with it, being still inchoate, not reduced to possession nor perfected by final judgment. It was conceded that the liability created by the constitution was in its nature contractual and, as a matter of law, entered into and became a part of every contract between the corporation and its creditors. But this contractual liability, it was said, was conditioned by the power reserved over corporate laws by § 1, Art. XII, of the constitution, as follows:

"All laws now in force in this state concerning corporations, and all laws that may be hereafter passed pursuant to this section, may be altered from time to time or repealed."

In virtue of this reservation of power, the state court held that the repeal of the liability provision was a known contingency constituting a part of the contract as much as the provision which imposed the liability. * * *

In substance, the contention of respondent here is that the reserved power provision, read into the contract as one of its terms, authorizes an extinction by repeal of the creditor's cause of action, unless previously reduced to final judgment.

The authority of a state under the so-called reserved power is wide; but it is not unlimited. The corporate charter may be repealed or amended, and, within limits not now necessary to define, the interrelations of state, corporation and stockholders may be changed; but neither vested property rights nor the obligation of contracts of third persons may be destroyed or impaired. * * * The right of this petitioner to enforce respondent's liability had become fully perfected and vested prior to the repeal of the liability provision. His cause of action was not purely statutory. It did not arise upon the constitutional rule of law, but upon the contractual liability created in pursuance of the rule. Although the latter derived its being from the former, it immediately acquired an independent existence competent to survive the destruction of the provision which gave it birth. The repeal put an end to the rule for the future, but it did not and could not destroy or impair the previously vested right of the creditor (which in every sense was a property right, Ettor v. Tacoma, 228 U. S. 148, 156; Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 124, 132) to enforce his cause of action upon the contract. Ettor v. Tacoma, supra; Hawthorne v. Calef, 2 Wall. 10; Steamship Co. v. Joliffe, 2 Wall. 450; Ochiltree v. Railroad Co., 21 Wall. 249, 252-253; Harrison v. Remington Paper Co., 140 Fed. 385, 390 et seq.; Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Myers, 133 Fed. 764, 767. * * *

Respondent, however, insists that long prior to the extension of credit to the corporation by petitioner's assignor, the decisions of the Supreme Court of California had established that the repeal of a law creating such a liability as that here involved extinguishes the cause of action; and that this amounted to a construction of the constitutional provision which entered into the contract and will be followed and applied by this Court. Warburton v. White, 176 U. S. 484, 495; Ennis Water Works v. Ennis, 233 U. S. 652, 657. But upon a careful consideration of the California cases referred to, we are of opinion that they fail to establish the premises upon which the conclusion is based. * * * [The discussion of the cases is omitted.]

The creditor extended credit to the corporation; and his action in so doing, under the state constitutional provision, brought into force for his benefit the constitutional obligation of the director, which, by becoming a director, the latter had voluntarily assumed and, thereby, in the eye of the law, created against himself a contractual liability in the nature of a suretyship. Harrison v. Remington Paper Co., supra, p. 388. Doubts which otherwise might have existed in respect of the character and effect of the transaction are no longer open. It is settled by decisions of this and other federal courts * * * that upon the facts here disclosed, a contractual obligation arose; and the right to enforce it, having become vested, comes within the protection of both the contract impairment clause in Art. 1, § 10, and the due process of law clause in the Fourteenth Amendment, of the Federal Constitution.

Decree reversed.

MR. JUSTICE CARDOZO, dissenting.

I am unable to concur in the reversal of this judgment. * * *

The Supreme Court of California has said that the liability thus created is contractual (Dean v. Shingle, 198 Cal. 652; 246 Pac. 1049); but only in a qualified sense, as the expression of a legal fiction, is the statement true, nor did the court that made it intend otherwise. The liability would not be destroyed though the directors when assuming office and repeatedly thereafter were to repudiate the obligation utterly.

They would be held for all their protestations upon a liability imposed by law. Indeed, they would have to answer to the creditors though they had ceased to be directors before the debts were in existence. If we put aside deceptive labels, borrowed from the law of quasi-contracts, the tangle is unraveled. The petitioner had a contract with the corporation and not with any one else (Crane v. Hahlo, 258 U. S. 142, 146), but annexed by law to the obligation of that contract was a liability purely statutory imposed on the directors (compare Christopher v. Norvell, 201 U. S. 216, 225; Bernheimer v. Converse, 206 U. S. 516, 529). The decisions in California, when analyzed, will be found to hold nothing to the contrary. They amount merely to this, that the liability created by the statute, which is enforceable also by the shareholders, is not penal but remedial, and is limited to the damage resulting to the corporation from the loss of the embezzled moneys as if the director were a surety to the corporation for the acts of its defaulting officer (Dean v. Shingle, supra; compare, Winchester v. Howard, 136 Cal. 432; 64 Pac. 692; 69 Pac. 77). In any event, this Court is not controlled by the label which the state court may affix to a liability growing out of a given state of facts. It determines for itself whether within the meaning of the Constitution the product is a contract to be protected by the power of the nation (Appleby v. New York, 271 U. S. 364, 380; Coolidge v. Long, 282 U. S. 582, 597). As to this, its judgment is guided by realities and not by words. The section of the Constitution whereby contracts are secured against impairment is aimed at true agreements, and not at quasi-contracts as distinguished from agreements implied in fact (Crane v. Hahlo, 258 U. S. 142, 146; Louisiana v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 288). Here whatever duty was assumed by a director through the acceptance of his office, was one that he owed in the first instance to the corporation itself, though the creditors and shareholders were privileged to enforce it (Dean v. Shingle, supra). Payment to the corporation before action brought would establish a defense, and even after action brought, any surplus remaining would go into the treasury. A distinction may exist between a liability cast upon directors and one cast upon the shareholders, who are quasi-partners in the venture (Corning v. McCullough, 1 N. Y. 47). To develop the implications of the distinction is unnecessary now.

I start then with the assumption that the petitioner had a contract with a corporation secured in certain contingencies by a statutory liability. I add the assumption that the State of California was not at liberty, after the contract had been made and a cause of action had accrued thereunder, to make the security defeasible if it was indefeasible in its origin. Either the article of the Constitution prohibiting the impairment of contracts (U. S. Constitution, Art. I, sec. 10) or the Fourteenth Amendment (which, however, is not invoked) might then stand in the way. * * * The difficulty with the petitioner's case is this, that his security in its origin was not vested, but contingent. The meaning of the California constitution is whatever the courts of California declare it to be. The obligation of the petitioner's contract is whatever the law of California attached to the contract at the hour of its making. Long before that time, the Supreme Court of that State had held that under the law of California a statutory cause of action, whether penal or remedial, may be canceled or modified by repeal or amendment until it has ripened into a judgment. * * * I assume for present purposes that the rule thus announced would be held of no effect if the statute and decisions declaring it had been made after Coombes became a creditor. Made as they were before that time, they were reservations or conditions limiting the statutory liability, and to be read into the statute, and hence into any contract to which the statute was an incident, as if written there in words. * * * "The claim of an irrepealable contract cannot be predicated upon a contract which is repealable" (Hammond Packing Co. v. Arkansas, 212 U. S. 322, 346). Either the petitioner took his cause of action subject to such infirmities or contingencies as were attached to it by the law of the State of its creation, or he did not take anything.

This view of the case puts aside as irrelevant the provision of the California constitution permitting the amendment of corporate charters, and sustains the repeal upon the ground that the liability by the law of its creation was defeasible in its origin.

MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS and MR. JUSTICE STONE join in this dissent.

NOTE

1. The validity of civil retrospective legislation may be attacked under the due process clauses of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments. Provisions of state constitutions also afford some protection against laws of this type. See, generally, Smith, Retroactive Laws and Vested Rights, 5 Tex. L. Rev. 231 (1927), 6 id. 409 (1928), 2 Selected Essays on Constitutional Law (1938), 266; Smead, The Rule Against Retroactive Legislation: A Basic Principle of Jurisprudence, 20 Minn. L. Rev. 775 (1936).

In Campbell v. Holt, 115 U. S. 620, 29 L. ed. 483, 6 Sup. Ct. 209 (1885) it was held that the repeal of a statute of limitations, which resulted in the revival of a cause of action based on contract, did not violate the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The court, through Justice Miller, said: "We are unable to see how a man can be said to have property in the bar of the statute as a defense to his promise to pay. * * * We can understand a right to enforce the payment of a lawful debt. The Constitution says that no state shall pass any law impairing this obligation. But we do not understand the right to satisfy that obligation by a protracted failure to pay. We can see no right which the promisor has in the law which permits him to plead lapse of time instead of payment, which shall prevent the legislature from repealing that law, because its effect is to make him fulfill his honest obligations." Justices Bradley and Harlan dissented.

In Chase Securities Corporation v. Donaldson, 325 U. S. 304, 89 L. ed. 1628, 65 Sup. Ct. 1137 (1945), where the statute of limitations was tolled in a pending suit to recover the purchase price of securities sold in violation of the Minnesota blue sky law, the court said: "The essential holding in Campbell v. Holt, so far as it applies to this case, is sound and should not be overruled. The Fourteenth Amendment does not make an act of state legislation void merely because it has some retrospective operation. What it does forbid is taking of life, liberty or property without due process of law. Some rules of law probably could not be changed retroactively without hardship and oppression, and this whether wise or unwise in their origin. Assuming that statutes of limitation like other types of legislation could be so manipulated that their retroactive effects would offend the Constitution, certainly it cannot be said that lifting the bar of a statute of limitation so as to restore a remedy lost through mere lapse of time is per se an offense against the Fourteenth Amendment."

CHAPTER XII
THE AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION

NATIONAL PROHIBITION CASES.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1920.
253 U. S. 350, 64 L. ed. 946, 40 Sup. Ct. 486.

MR. JUSTICE VAN DEVANTER [after quoting the text of the amendment clause of the Constitution, Article V, and the Eighteenth Amendment] announced the conclusions of the Court.

We here are concerned with seven cases involving the validity of that Amendment and of certain general features of the National Prohibition Law, known as the Volstead Act, c. 83, 41 Stat. 305, which was adopted to enforce the Amendment. The relief sought in each case is an injunction against the execution of that act. Two of the cases—Nos. 29 and 30, Original,—were brought in this Court, and the others in district courts. Nos. 696, 752, 788 and 837 are here on appeals from decrees refusing injunctions, and No. 794 from a decree granting an injunction. The cases have been elaborately argued at the bar and in printed briefs; and the arguments have been attentively considered, with the result that we reach and announce the following conclusions on the questions involved:

1. The adoption by both houses of Congress, each by a two-thirds vote, of a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution sufficiently shows that the proposal was deemed necessary by all who voted for it. An express declaration that they regarded it as necessary is not essential. None of the resolutions whereby prior amendments were proposed contained such a declaration.
2. The two-thirds vote in each house which is required in proposing an amendment is a vote of two-thirds of the members present—assuming the presence of a quorum—and not a vote of two-thirds of the entire membership, present and absent. Missouri Pacific Ry. Co. v. Kansas, 248 U. S. 276.
3. The referendum provisions of state constitutions and statutes cannot be applied, consistently with the Constitution of the United States, in the ratification or rejection of amendments to it. Hawke v. Smith, 253 U. S. 221.
4. The prohibition of the manufacture, sale, transportation, importation and exportation of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, as embodied in the Eighteenth Amendment, is within the power to amend reserved by Article V of the Constitution.

5. That Amendment, by lawful proposal and ratification, has become a part of the Constitution, and must be respected and given effect the same as other provisions of that instrument.

6. The first section of the Amendment—the one embodying the prohibition—is operative throughout the entire territorial limits of the United States, binds all legislative bodies, courts, public officers and individuals within those limits, and of its own force invalidates every legislative act—whether by Congress, by a state legislature, or by a territorial assembly—which authorizes or sanctions what the section prohibits. * * *

Giving effect to these conclusions, we dispose of the cases as follows:

In Nos. 29 and 30, Original, the bills are dismissed.

In No. 794 the decree [granting injunction] is reversed.

In Nos. 696, 752, 788 and 837 the decrees [refusing to grant injunctions] are affirmed.

[MR. CHIEF JUSTICE WHITE and MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS delivered separate concurring opinions. JUSTICES McKENNA and CLARKE delivered dissenting opinions.]

NOTES

1. Counsel contesting the validity of the Eighteenth Amendment in the above cases argued that there were certain implied restrictions upon the amending power which the Supreme Court should recognize and enforce. Specifically, they contended that the Eighteenth Amendment (1) invaded the police powers reserved to the states under the Tenth Amendment and directly encroached upon their right of local self-government, thus subverting the dual and federal system of government; and (2) was a police regulation of the conduct and life of the individual which had no place in the organic law.

2. On problems relating to Constitutional amendment and revision see, generally, Orfield, The Amending of the Federal Constitution (1942). See also, Marbury, The Limitations Upon the Amending Power, 33 Harv. L. Rev. 223 (1919); Frierson, Amending the Constitution of the United States: A Reply to Mr. Marbury, 33 Harv. L. Rev. 659 (1920); McGovney, Is the Eighteenth Amendment Void Because of its Contents? 20 Col. L. Rev. 499 (1920); Skinner, Intrinsic Limitations on the Power of Constitutional Amendment, 18 Mich. L. Rev. 213 (1920). For some suggestions as to the possible content of legislation by Congress on this subject, see Dowling, Clarifying the Amending Process, 1 Wash. & Lee L. Rev. 215 (1940).

LESER v. GARNETT.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1922.

258 U. S. 130, 66 L. ed. 505, 42 Sup. Ct. 217.

MR. JUSTICE BRANDEIS delivered the opinion of the Court.

On October 12, 1920, Cecilia Streett Waters and Mary D. Randolph, citizens of Maryland, applied for and were granted registration as qualified voters in Baltimore City. To have their names stricken from the list Oscar Leser and others brought this suit in the Court of Common Pleas. The only ground of disqualification alleged was that the applicants for registration were women, whereas the constitution of Maryland limits the suffrage to men. Ratification of the proposed Amendment to the federal Constitution, now known as the Nineteenth, 41 Stat. 362, had been proclaimed on August 26, 1920, 41 Stat. 1823, pursuant to Rev. Stat., § 205. The legislature of Maryland had refused to ratify it. The petitioners contended, on several grounds, that the Amendment had not become part of the federal Constitution. * * *

The first contention is that the power of amendment conferred by the federal Constitution and sought to be exercised does not extend to this Amendment, because of its character. The argument is that so great an addition to the electorate, if made without the state's consent, destroys its autonomy as a political body. This Amendment is in character and phraseology precisely similar to the Fifteenth. For each the same method of adoption was pursued. One cannot be valid and the other invalid. That the Fifteenth is valid, although rejected by six states including Maryland, has been recognized and acted on for half a century. See United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370; Guinn v. United States, 238 U. S. 347; Myers v. Anderson, 238 U. S. 368. The suggestion that the Fifteenth was incorporated in the Constitution, not in accordance with law, but practically as a war measure which has been validated by acquiescence, cannot be entertained.

The second contention is that in the constitutions of several of the thirty-six states named in the proclamation of the secretary of state there are provisions which render inoperative the alleged ratifications by their legislatures. The argument is that by reason of these specific provisions the legislatures were without power to ratify. But the function of a state legislature in ratifying a proposed amendment to the federal Constitution, like the function of Congress in proposing the amendment, is a federal function derived from the federal Constitution; and it transcends any limitations sought to be imposed by the people of a state. Hawke v. Smith, 253 U. S. 221; National Prohibition Cases, 253 U. S. 350, 386.

The remaining contention is that the ratifying resolutions of Tennessee and of West Virginia are inoperative, because adopted in violation of the rules of legislative procedure prevailing in the respective states. The question raised may have been rendered immaterial by the fact that since the proclamation the legislatures of two other states—Connecticut and Vermont—have adopted resolutions of ratification. But a broader answer should be given to the contention. The proclamation by the secretary certified that from official documents on file in the Department of State it appeared that the proposed Amendment was ratified by the legislatures of thirty-six states, and that it "has become valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution of the United States."

As the legislatures of Tennessee and of West Virginia had power to adopt the resolutions of ratification, official notice to the secretary, duly authenticated, that they had done so was conclusive upon him, and, being certified to by his proclamation, is conclusive upon the courts. The rule declared in Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 669-673, is applicable here. See also Harwood v. Wentworth, 162 U. S. 547, 562.

Affirmed.

NOTE

1. In United States v. Sprague, 282 U. S. 716, 75 L. ed. 640, 51 Sup. Ct. 220, 71 A. L. R. 1381 (1931) it was contended that the Eighteenth Amendment was void because it was ratified by state legislatures rather than by state ratifying conventions. The argument was to the effect that it was the intent of the framers that only proposed amendments effecting changes in the character of federal means or machinery should be held capable of ratification by legislatures. Amendments conferring on the United States new and direct powers over individuals, as in the Eighteenth Amendment, should be ratified by conventions. Moreover, it was asserted that the Tenth Amendment requires that amendments which reduce the powers reserved to the states can validly be ratified only by conventions composed of representatives specially chosen for this purpose, since legislatures are incompetent to surrender the people's liberties. The Supreme Court repudiated all these contentions, saying: "If the framers of the instrument had any thought that amendments differing in purpose should be ratified in different ways, nothing would have been simpler than so to phrase Article V as to exclude implication or speculation. The fact that an instrument drawn with such meticulous care and by men who so well understood how to make language fit their thought does not contain any such limiting phrase affecting the exercise of discretion by the Congress in choosing one or the other alternative mode of ratification is persuasive evidence that no qualification was intended." As regards the claim that the Tenth Amendment imposes some limitation on Article V, the opinion stated: "The Tenth Amendment was intended to confirm the understanding of the people at the time the Constitution was adopted, that powers not granted to the United States were reserved to the states or to the people. It added nothing to the instrument as originally ratified and has no limited and special operation, as is contended, upon the people's delegation by Article V of certain functions to the Congress."

COLEMAN v. MILLER.

Supreme Court of the United States, 1939.

307 U. S. 433, 83 L. ed. 1385, 59 Sup. Ct. 972, 122 A. L. R. 695.

Opinion of the Court by Mr. CHIEF JUSTICE HUGHES, announced by Mr. JUSTICE STONE.

In June, 1924, the Congress proposed an amendment to the Constitution, known as the Child Labor Amendment. In January, 1925, the Legislature of Kansas adopted a resolution rejecting the proposed amendment and a certified copy of the resolution was sent to the Secretary of State of the United States. In January, 1937, a resolution known as "Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 3" was introduced in the Senate of Kansas ratifying the proposed amendment. There were forty senators. When the resolution came up for consideration, twenty senators voted in favor of its adoption and twenty voted against it. The Lieutenant Governor, the presiding officer of the Senate, then cast his vote in favor of the resolution. The resolution was later adopted by the House of Representatives on the vote of a majority of its members.

This original proceeding in mandamus was then brought in the Supreme Court of Kansas by twenty-one members of the Senate, including the twenty senators who had voted against the resolution, and three members of the House of Representatives, to compel the Secretary of the Senate to erase an endorsement on the resolution to the effect that it had been adopted by the Senate and to endorse thereon the words "was not passed," and to restrain the officers of the Senate and House of Representatives from signing the resolution and the Secretary of State of Kansas from authenticating it and delivering it to the Governor. The petition challenged the right of the Lieutenant Governor to cast the deciding vote in the Senate. The petition also set forth the prior rejection of the proposed amendment and alleged that in the period from June, 1924, to March, 1927, the amendment had been rejected by both houses of the legislatures of twenty-six states, and had been ratified in only five states, and that by reason of that rejection and the failure of ratification within a reasonable time the proposed amendment had lost its vitality. * * *

The Supreme Court found no dispute as to the facts. The court entertained the action and held that the Lieutenant Governor was authorized to cast the deciding vote, that the proposed amendment retained its original vitality, and that the resolution "having duly passed the house of representatives and the senate, the act of ratification of the proposed amendment by the legislature of Kansas was final and complete." The writ of mandamus was accordingly denied. 146 Kan. 390; 71 P. 2d 518. This Court granted certiorari. 303 U. S. 632.

First. The jurisdiction of this Court.—[Here the opinion after pointing out that the question at issue arose under the federal Constitution, Article V, and was therefore a federal question, addressed itself to the sufficiency of the interest of the plaintiffs to invoke a decision. On this point the opinion stated that "the plaintiffs include twenty senators, whose votes against ratification have been overridden and virtually held for naught although if they are right in their contentions their votes would have been sufficient to defeat ratification. We think that these senators have a plain, direct and adequate interest in maintaining the effectiveness of their votes." The opinion cited Leser v. Garnett, 258 U. S. 130, as in point and said, "The interest of the plaintiffs in Leser v. Garnett as merely qualified voters at general elections is certainly much less impressive than the interest of the twenty senators in the instant case."

On this point four justices dissented, JUSTICES ROBERTS, BLACK, DOUGLAS and FRANKFURTER, the last writing a dissenting opinion.

This opinion denied the relevancy of Leser v. Garnett, saying that the law has long recognized that a private voter has a personal interest in his voting privilege by allowing him an action for damages, "private damage," against anyone who wrongfully prevents his exercising it, but that the senators exercised only a representative right, defeat of which was not a matter of private damage.]

Second. The participation of the Lieutenant Governor.—Petitioners contend that, in the light of the powers and duties of the Lieutenant Governor and his relation to the senate under the state constitution, as construed by the Supreme Court of the state, the Lieutenant Governor was not a part of the "legislature" so that under Article V of the Federal Constitution, he could be permitted to have a deciding vote on the ratification of the proposed amendment, when the senate was equally divided.

Whether this contention presents a justiciable controversy, or a question which is political in its nature and hence not justiciable, is a question upon which the Court is equally divided and therefore the Court expresses no opinion upon that point.

Third. The effect of the previous rejection of the amendment and of the lapse of time since its submission.

1. The state court adopted the view expressed by text-writers that a state legislature which has rejected an amendment proposed by the Congress may later ratify. The argument in support of that view is that Article V says nothing of rejection but speaks only of ratification and provides that a proposed amendment shall be valid as part of the Constitution when ratified by three-fourths of the States; that the power to ratify is thus conferred upon the State by the Constitution and, as a ratifying power, persists despite a previous rejection. The opposing view proceeds on an assumption that if ratification by "Conventions" were prescribed by the Congress, a convention could not reject and, having adjourned sine die, be reassembled and ratify. It is also premised, in accordance with views expressed by text-writers, that ratification if once given cannot afterwards be rescinded and the amendment rejected, and it is urged that the same effect in the exhaustion of the State's power to act should be ascribed to rejection; that a State can act "but once, either by convention or through its legislature."

Historic instances are cited. In 1865, the Thirteenth Amendment was rejected by the legislature of New Jersey which subsequently ratified it, but the question did not become important as ratification by the requisite number of states had already been proclaimed. The question did arise in connection with the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment. The legislatures of Georgia, North Carolina and South Carolina had rejected the amendment in November and December, 1866. New governments were erected in those States (and in others) under the direction of Congress. The new legislatures ratified the amendment, that of North Carolina on July 4, 1868, that of South Carolina on July 9, 1868, and that of Georgia on July 21, 1868. Ohio and New Jersey first ratified and then passed resolutions withdrawing their consent. As there were then thirty-seven states, twenty-eight were needed to constitute the requisite three-fourths. On July 9, 1868, the Congress adopted a resolution requesting the Secretary of State to communicate "a list of the States of the Union whose legislatures have ratified the fourteenth article of amendment," and in Secretary Seward's report attention was called to the action of Ohio and New Jersey. On July 20th Secretary Seward issued a proclamation reciting the ratification by twenty-eight States, including North Carolina, South Carolina, Ohio and New Jersey, and stating that it appeared that Ohio and New Jersey had since passed resolutions withdrawing their consent and that "it is deemed a matter of doubt and uncertainty whether such resolutions are not irregular, invalid and therefore ineffectual." The Secretary certified that if the ratifying resolutions of Ohio and New Jersey were still in full force and effect, notwithstanding the attempted withdrawal, the amendment had become a part of the Constitution. On the following day the Congress adopted a concurrent resolution which, reciting that three-fourths of the States having ratified (the list including North Carolina, South Carolina, Ohio and New Jersey), declared the Fourteenth Amendment to be a part of the Constitution and that it should be duly promulgated as such by the Secretary of State. Accordingly, Secretary Seward, on July 28th, issued his proclamation embracing the states mentioned in the congressional resolution and adding Georgia.

Thus the political departments of the Government dealt with the effect both of previous rejection and of attempted withdrawal and determined that both were ineffectual in the presence of an actual ratification. While there were special circumstances, because of the action of the Congress in relation to the governments of the rejecting States (North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia), these circumstances were not recited in proclaiming ratification and the previous action taken in these States was set forth in the proclamation as actual previous rejections by the respective legislatures. This decision by the political departments of the Government as to the validity of the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment has been accepted.

We think that in accordance with this historic precedent the question of the efficacy of ratifications by state legislatures, in the light of previous rejection or attempted withdrawal, should be regarded as a political question pertaining to the political departments, with the ultimate authority in the Congress in the exercise of its control over the promulgation of the adoption of the amendment.

The precise question as now raised is whether, when the legislature of the State, as we have found, has actually ratified the proposed amendment, the court should restrain the state officers from certifying the ratification to the Secretary of State, because of an earlier rejection, and thus prevent the question from coming before the political departments. We find no basis in either Constitution or statute for such judicial action. Article V, speaking solely of ratification, contains no provision as to rejection. Nor has the Congress enacted a statute relating to rejections. The statutory provision with respect to constitutional amendments is as follows:

"Whenever official notice is received at the Department of State that any amendment proposed to the Constitution of the United States has been adopted, according to the provisions of the Constitution, the Secretary of State shall forthwith cause the amendment to be published, with his certificate, specifying the States by which the same may have been adopted, and that the same has become valid, to all intents and purposes, as a part of the Constitution of the United States."

The statute presupposes official notice to the Secretary of State when a state legislature has adopted a resolution of ratification. We see no warrant for judicial interference with the performance of that duty. See Leser v. Garnett, supra, p. 137.

2. The more serious question is whether the proposal by the Congress of the amendment had lost its vitality through lapse of time and hence it could not be ratified by the Kansas legislature in 1937. The argument of petitioners stresses the fact that nearly thirteen years elapsed between the proposal in 1924 and the ratification in question. It is said that when the amendment was proposed there was a definitely adverse popular sentiment and that at the end of 1925 there had been rejection by both houses of the legislatures of sixteen States and ratification by only four States, and that it was not until about 1933 that an aggressive campaign was started in favor of the amendment. In reply, it is urged that Congress did not fix a limit of time for ratification and that an unreasonably long time had not elapsed since the submission; that the conditions which gave rise to the amendment had not been eliminated; that the prevalence of child labor, the diversity of state laws and the disparity in their administration, with the resulting competitive inequalities, continued to exist. Reference is also made to the fact that a number of the States have treated the amendment as still pending and that in the proceedings of the national government there have been indications of the same view. It is said that there were fourteen ratifications in 1933, four in 1935, one in 1936, and three in 1937.

We have held that the Congress in proposing an amendment may fix a reasonable time for ratification. Dillon v. Gloss, 256 U. S. 368. There we sustained the action of the Congress in providing in the proposed Eighteenth Amendment that it should be inoperative unless ratified within seven years. No limitation of time for ratification is provided in the instant case either in the proposed amendment or in the resolution of submission. But petitioners contend that, in the absence of a limitation by the Congress, the Court can and should decide what is a reasonable period within which ratification may be had. We are unable to agree with that contention.

It is true that in Dillon v. Gloss the Court said that nothing was found in Article V which suggested that an amendment once proposed was to be open to ratification for all time, or that ratification in some States might be separated from that in others by many years and yet be effective; that there was a strong suggestion to the contrary in that proposal and ratification were but succeeding steps in a single endeavor; that as amendments were deemed to be prompted by necessity, they should be considered and disposed of presently; and that there is a fair implication that ratification must be sufficiently contemporaneous in the required number of states to reflect the will of the people in all sections at relatively the same period; and hence that ratification must be within some reasonable time after the proposal. These considerations were cogent reasons for the decision in Dillon v. Gloss that the Congress had the power to fix a reasonable time for ratification. But it does not follow that, whenever Congress has not exercised that power, the Court should take upon itself the responsibility of deciding what constitutes a reasonable time and determine accordingly the validity of ratifications. That question was not involved in Dillon v. Gloss and, in accordance with familiar principle, what was there said must be read in the light of the point decided.

Where are to be found the criteria for such a judicial determination? None are to be found in Constitution or statute. In their endeavor to answer this question petitioner's counsel have suggested that at least two years should be allowed; that six years would not seem to be unreasonably long; that seven years had been used by the Congress as a reasonable period; that one year, six months and thirteen days was the average time used in passing upon amendments which have been ratified since the first ten amendments; that three years, six months and twenty-five days has been the longest time used in ratifying. To this list of variables, counsel add that "the nature and extent of publicity and the activity of the public and of the legislatures of the several States in relation to any particular proposal should be taken into consideration." That statement is pertinent, but there are additional matters to be examined and weighed. When a proposed amendment springs from a conception of economic needs, it would be necessary, in determining whether a reasonable time had elapsed since its submission, to consider the economic conditions prevailing in the country, whether these had so far changed since the submission as to make the proposal no longer responsive to the conception which inspired it or whether conditions were such as to intensify the feeling of need and the appropriateness of the proposed remedial action. In short, the question of a reasonable time in many cases would involve, as in this case it does involve, an appraisal of a great variety of relevant conditions, political, social and economic, which can hardly be said to be within the appropriate range of evidence receivable in a court of justice and as to which it would be an extravagant extension of judicial authority to assert judicial notice as the basis of deciding a controversy with respect to the validity of an amendment actually ratified. On the other hand, these conditions are appropriate for the consideration of the political departments of the Government. The questions they involve are essentially political and not justiciable. They can be decided by the Congress with the full knowledge and appreciation ascribed to the national legislature of the political, social and economic conditions which have prevailed during the period since the submission of the amendment.

Our decision that the Congress has the power under Article V to fix a reasonable limit of time for ratification in proposing an amendment proceeds upon the assumption that the question, what is a reasonable time, lies within the congressional province. If it be deemed that such a question is an open one when the limit has not been fixed in advance, we think that it should also be regarded as an open one for the consideration of the Congress when, in the presence of certified ratifications by three-fourths of the States, the time arrives for the promulgation of the adoption of the amendment. The decision by the Congress, in its control of the action of the Secretary of State, of the question whether the amendment had been adopted within a reasonable time would not be subject to review by the courts. * * *

The state officials should not be restrained from certifying to the Secretary of State the adoption by the legislature of Kansas of the resolution of ratification.

As we find no reason for disturbing the decision of the Supreme Court of Kansas in denying the mandamus sought by petitioners, its judgment is affirmed but upon the grounds stated in this opinion.

Affirmed.

Concurring opinion by MR. JUSTICE BLACK, in which MR. JUSTICE ROBERTS, MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER and MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS join.

Although, for reasons to be stated by MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, we believe this cause should be dismissed, the ruling of the Court just announced removes from the case the question of petitioners' standing to sue. Under the compulsion of that ruling, MR. JUSTICE ROBERTS, MR. JUSTICE FRANKFURTER, MR. JUSTICE DOUGLAS and I have participated in the discussion of other questions considered by the Court and we concur in the result reached, but for somewhat different reasons.

The Constitution grants Congress exclusive power to control submission of constitutional amendments. Final determination by Congress that ratification by three-fourths of the states has taken place "is conclusive upon the courts." In the exercise of that power, Congress, of course, is governed by the Constitution. However, whether submission, intervening procedure or Congressional determination of ratification conforms to the commands of the Constitution, call for decisions by a "political department" of questions of a type which this Court has frequently designated "political." And decision of a "political question" by the "political department" to which the Constitution has committed it "conclusively binds the judges, as well as all other officers, citizens and subjects of * * * government." Proclamation under authority of Congress that an amendment has been ratified will carry with it a solemn assurance by the Congress that ratification has taken place as the Constitution commands. Upon this assurance a proclaimed amendment must be accepted as a part of the Constitution, leaving to the judiciary its traditional authority of interpretation. To the extent that the Court's opinion in the present case even impliedly assumes a power to make judicial interpretation of the exclusive constitutional authority of Congress over submission and ratification of amendments, we are unable to agree.

The state court below assumed jurisdiction to determine whether the proper procedure is being followed between submission and final adoption. However, it is apparent that judicial review of or pronouncements upon a supposed limitation of a "reasonable time" within which Congress may accept ratification; as to whether duly authorized state officials have proceeded properly in ratifying or voting for ratification; or whether a State may reverse its action once taken upon a proposed amendment; and kindred questions, are all consistent only with an ultimate control over the amending process in the courts. And this must inevitably embarrass the course of amendment by subjecting to judicial interference matters that we believe were intrusted by the Constitution solely to the political branch of government.

The Court here treats the amending process of the Constitution in some respects as subject to judicial construction, in others as subject to the final authority of the Congress. There is no disapproval of the conclusion arrived at in Dillon v. Gloss, that the Constitution impliedly requires that a properly submitted amendment must die unless ratified within a "reasonable time." Nor does the Court now disapprove its prior assumption of power to make such a pronouncement. And it is not made clear that only Congress has constitutional power to determine if there is any such implication in Article V of the Constitution. On the other hand, the Court's opinion declares that Congress has the exclusive power to decide the "political questions" of whether a State whose legislature has once acted upon a proposed amendment may subsequently reverse its position, and whether, in the circumstances of such a case as this, an amendment is dead because an "unreasonable" time has elapsed. No such division between the political and judicial branches of the government is made by Article V which grants power over the amending of the Constitution to Congress alone. Undivided control of that process has been given by the Article exclusively and completely to Congress. The process itself is "political" in its entirety, from submission until an amendment becomes part of the Constitution, and is not subject to judicial guidance, control or interference at any point.

Since Congress has sole and complete control over the amending process, subject to no judicial review, the views of any court upon this process cannot be binding upon Congress, and insofar as Dillon v. Gloss attempts judicially to impose a limitation upon the right of Congress to determine final adoption of an amendment, it should be disapproved. If Congressional determination that an amendment has been completed and become a part of the Constitution is final and removed from examination by the courts, as the Court's present opinion recognizes, surely the steps leading to that condition must be subject to the scrutiny, control and appraisal of none save the Congress, the body having exclusive power to make that final determination.

Congress, possessing exclusive power over the amending process, cannot be bound by and is under no duty to accept the pronouncements upon that exclusive power by this Court or by the Kansas courts. Neither state nor federal courts can review that power. Therefore, any judicial expression amounting to more than mere acknowledgment of exclusive Congressional power over the political process of amendment is a mere admonition to the Congress in the nature of an advisory opinion, given wholly without constitutional authority.

[MR. JUSTICE BUTLER in a dissenting opinion said: "Upon the reasoning of our opinion in that case [Dillon v. Gloss], I would hold that more than a reasonable time had elapsed and that the judgment of the Kansas Supreme Court should be reversed. * * * As the Court, in the Dillon case, did directly decide upon the reasonableness of the seven years fixed by the Congress, it ought not now, without hearing argument upon the point, hold itself to lack power to decide whether more than thirteen years between proposal by Congress and attempted ratification by Kansas is reasonable." MR. JUSTICE McREYNOLDS joined in this opinion.]

NOTE

1. Chandler v. Wise, 307 U. S. 474, 83 L. ed. 1407, 59 Sup. Ct. 992 (1939) dealt with questions similar to those in Coleman v. Miller, involving the validity of the ratification of the Child Labor Amendment by Kentucky, the Court of Appeals of that State having held it invalid. But the Supreme Court held that after the Governor "had forwarded the certification of the ratification of the Amendment to the Secretary of State of the United States there was no longer a controversy susceptible of judicial determination." Mr. Justice Black and Mr. Justice Douglas, concurring, referred to the opinion by the former in the Coleman case, adding: "We do not believe that state or federal courts have any jurisdiction to interfere with the amending process." Justices McReynolds and Butler were in favor of affirming the Kentucky judgment on the authority of Dillon v. Gloss.

CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA<sup>1</sup>

---

WE THE PEOPLE of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

ARTICLE. I.

SECTION: 1. All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

SECTION. 2. The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature.

No Person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the Age of twenty five Years, and been seven Years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

Representatives and direct Taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective Numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole Number of free Persons, including those bound to Service for a Term of Years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three fifths of all other Persons. The actual Enumeration shall be made within three Years after the first Meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent Term of ten Years, in such Manner as they shall by Law direct. The Number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty Thousand, but each State shall have at Least one Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire shall be entitled to chuse three, Massachusetts eight, Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations one, Connecticut five, New-York six, New Jersey four, Pennsylvania eight, Delaware one, Maryland six, Virginia ten, North Carolina five, South Carolina five, and Georgia three.

When vacancies happen in the Representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such Vacancies.

The House of Representatives shall chuse their Speaker and other Officers; and shall have the sole Power of Impeachment.

SECTION. 3. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six Years; and each Senator shall have one Vote.

---

<sup>1</sup> The draft of the Constitution was submitted to Congress on Sept. 17, 1787 and by Congress to the states on Sept. 28, 1787. The ninth state ratified on June 21, 1788. The Constitution went into effect on March 4, 1789.

The text followed is that appearing in the United States Code.

Immediately after they shall be assembled in Consequence of the first Election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three Classes. The Seats of the Senators of the first Class shall be vacated at the Expiration of the second year, of the second Class at the expiration of the fourth Year, and of the third Class at the expiration of the sixth Year, so that one third may be chosen every second Year; and if Vacancies happen by Resignation, or otherwise, during the Recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary Appointments until the next Meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such Vacancies.

No Person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty Years, and been nine Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no Vote, unless they be equally divided.

The Senate shall chuse their other Officers, and also a President pro tempore, in the Absence of the Vice President, or when he shall exercise the Office of President of the United States.

The Senate shall have the sole Power to try all Impeachments. When sitting for that Purpose, they shall be on Oath or Affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside: And no Person shall be convicted without the Concurrence of two thirds of the Members present.

Judgment in Cases of Impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from Office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States: but the Party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to Indictment, Trial, Judgment and Punishment, according to Law.

SECTION 4. The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of chusing Senators.

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every Year, and such Meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by Law appoint a different Day.

SECTION 5. Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members, and a Majority of each shall constitute a Quorum to do Business; but a smaller Number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the Attendance of absent Members, in such Manner, and under such Penalties as each House may provide.

Each House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly Behaviour, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member.

Each House shall keep a Journal of its Proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such Parts as may in their Judgment require Secrecy; and the Yeas and Nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, at the Desire of one fifth of those present, be entered on the Journal.

Neither House, during the Session of Congress, shall, without the Consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other Place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

SECTION 6. The Senators and Representatives shall receive a Compensation for their Services, to be ascertained by Law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place.

No Senator or Representative shall, during the Time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil Office under the Authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the Emoluments whereof shall have been encreased during such time; and no Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office.

SECTION 7. All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills.

Every Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a Law, be presented to the President of the United States; If he approves he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his Objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the Objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such Reconsideration two thirds of that House shall agree to pass the Bill, it shall be sent, together with the Objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that House, it shall become a Law. But in all such Cases the Votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and Nays, and the Names of the Persons voting for and against the Bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively. If any Bill shall not be returned by the President within ten Days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the Same shall be a Law, in like Manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their Adjournment prevent its Return, in which Case it shall not be a Law.

Every Order, Resolution, or Vote to which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.

SECTION. 8. The Congress shall have Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States; but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;

To borrow Money on the credit of the United States;

To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes;

To establish a uniform Rule of Naturalization, and uniform Laws on the subject of Bankruptcies throughout the United States;

To coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign Coin, and fix the Standard of Weights and Measures;

To provide for the Punishment of counterfeiting the Securities and current Coin of the United States;

To establish Post Offices and post Roads;

To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries;

To constitute Tribunals inferior to the supreme Court;

To define and punish Piracies and Felonies committed on the high Seas, and Offences against the Law of Nations;

To declare War, grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal, and make Rules concerning Captures on Land and Water;

To raise and support Armies, but no Appropriation of Money to that Use shall be for a longer Term than two Years;

To provide and maintain a Navy;

To make Rules for the Government and Regulation of the land and naval Forces;

To provide for calling forth the Militia to execute the Laws of the Union, suppress Insurrections and repel Invasions;

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining, the Militia, and for governing such Part of them as may be employed in the Service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively, the Appointment of the Officers, and the Authority of training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress;

To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding ten Miles square) as may, by Cession of particular States, and the Acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like Authority over all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be, for the Erection of Forts, Magazines, Arsenals, dock-Yards, and other needful Buildings;—And

To make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.

SECTION. 9. The Migration or Importation of such Persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the Year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a Tax or duty may be imposed on such Importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each Person.

The Privilege of the Writ of Habeas Corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in Cases of Rebellion or Invasion the public Safety may require it.

No Bill of Attainder or ex post facto Law shall be passed.

No Capitation, or other direct, Tax shall be laid, unless in Proportion to the Census or Enumeration herein before directed to be taken.

No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State.

No Preference shall be given by any Regulation of Commerce or Revenue to the Ports of one State over those of another: nor shall Vessels bound to, or from, one State, be obliged to enter, clear, or pay Duties in another.

No Money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in Consequence of Appropriations made by Law; and a regular Statement and Account of the Receipts and Expenditures of all public Money shall be published from time to time.

No Title of Nobility shall be granted by the United States: And no Person holding any Office of Profit or Trust under them, shall, without the Consent of the Congress, accept of any present, Emolument, Office, or Title, of any kind whatever, from any King, Prince, or foreign State.

SECTION. 10. No State shall enter into any Treaty, Alliance, or Confederation; grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal; coin Money; emit Bills of Credit; make any Thing but gold and silver Coin a Tender in Payment of Debts; pass any Bill of Attainder, ex post facto Law, or Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts, or grant any Title of Nobility.

No State shall, without the Consent of the Congress, lay any Imposts or Duties on Imports or Exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection Laws: and the net Produce of all Duties and Imposts, laid by any State on Imports or Exports, shall be for the Use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such Laws shall be subject to the Revision and Controul of the Congress.

No State shall, without the Consent of Congress, lay any Duty of Tonnage, keep Troops, or Ships of War in time of Peace, enter into any Agreement or Compact with another State, or with a foreign Power, or engage in War, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent Danger as will not admit of delay.

ARTICLE. II.

SECTION. I. The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his Office during the Term of four Years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same Term, be elected, as follows

Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or Person holding an Office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by Ballot for two Persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted. The Person having the greatest Number of Votes shall be the President, if such Number be a Majority of the whole Number of Electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such Majority, and have an equal Number of Votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately chuse by Ballot one of them for President; and if no Person have a Majority, then from the five highest on the List the said House shall in like Manner chuse the President. But in chusing the President, the Votes shall be taken by States, the Representation from each State having one Vote; A quorum for this Purpose shall consist of a Member or Members from two thirds of the States, and a Majority of all the States shall be necessary to a Choice. In every Case, after the Choice of the President, the Person having the greatest Number of Votes of the Electors shall be the Vice President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal Votes, the Senate shall chuse from them by Ballot the Vice President.

The Congress may determine the Time of chusing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States.

No Person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any Person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.

In Case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by Law provide for the Case of Removal, Death, Resignation or Inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what Officer shall then act as President, and such Officer shall act accordingly, until the Disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

The President shall, at stated Times, receive for his Services, a Compensation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the Period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that Period any other Emolument from the United States, or any of them.

Before he enter on the Execution of his Office, he shall take the following Oath or Affirmation:—"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

SECTION. 2. The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States; he may require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the executive Departments, upon any Subject relating to the Duties of their respective Offices, and he shall have Power to grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offences against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment.

He shall have Power, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, to make Treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law: but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments.

The President shall have Power to fill up all Vacancies that may happen during the Recess of the Senate, by granting Commissions which shall expire at the End of their next Session.

SECTION. 3. He shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary Occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in Case of Disagreement between them, with Respect to the Time of Adjournment, he may adjourn them to such Time as he shall think proper; he shall receive Ambassadors and other public Ministers; he shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed, and shall Commission all the Officers of the United States.

SECTION. 4. The President, Vice President and all civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors.

ARTICLE. III.

SECTION. 1. The judicial Power of the United States, shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The Judges, both of the supreme and inferior Courts, shall hold their Offices during good Behaviour, and shall, at stated Times, receive for their Services, a Compensation, which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office.

SECTION. 2. The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority;—to all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls;—to all Cases of admiralty and maritime Jurisdiction;—to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party;—to Controversies between two or more States;—between a State and Citizens of another State;—between Citizens of different States,—between Citizens of the same State claiming Lands under Grants of different States, and between a State, or the Citizens thereof, and foreign States, Citizens or Subjects.

In all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, and those in which a State shall be Party, the supreme Court shall have original Jurisdiction. In all the other Cases before mentioned, the supreme Court shall have appellate Jurisdiction, both as to Law and Fact, with such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make.

The Trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by Jury; and such Trial shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the Trial shall be at such Place or Places as the Congress may by Law have directed.

SECTION. 3. Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying War against them, or in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort. No Person shall be convicted of Treason unless on the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or on Confession in open Court.

The Congress shall have Power to declare the Punishment of Treason, but no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attained.

ARTICLE. IV.

SECTION. 1. Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general Laws prescribe the Manner in which such Acts, Records and Proceedings shall be proved, and the Effect thereof.

SECTION. 2. The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States.

A Person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice, and be found in another State, shall on Demand of the executive Authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having Jurisdiction of the Crime.

No Person held to Service or Labour in one State, under the Laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in Consequence of any Law or Regulation therein, be discharged from such Service or Labour, but shall be delivered up on Claim of the Party to whom such Service or Labour may be due.

SECTION. 3. New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the Jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the Junction of two or more States, or Parts of States, without the Consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress.

The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to Prejudice any Claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

SECTION. 4. The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government, and shall protect each of them against Invasion; and on Application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic Violence.

ARTICLE. V.

The Congress, whenever two thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose Amendments to this Constitution, or on the Application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments, which, in either Case, shall be valid to all Intents and Purposes, as Part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress; Provided that no Amendment which may be made prior to the Year One thousand eight hundred and eight shall in any Manner affect the first and fourth Clauses in the Ninth Section of the first Article; and that no State, without its Consent, shall be deprived of its equal Suffrage in the Senate.

ARTICLE. VI.

All Debts contracted and Engagements entered into, before the Adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution, as under the Confederation.

This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; and all Treaties made, or which shall be made, under the Authority of the United States, shall be the supreme Law of the Land; and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any Thing in the Constitution or Laws of any State to the Contrary notwithstanding.

The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the Members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial Officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by Oath or Affirmation, to support this Constitution; but no religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any Office or public Trust under the United States.

The Ratification of the Conventions of nine States, shall be sufficient for the Establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the Same.

ARTICLES IN ADDITION TO, AND AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PROPOSED BY CON- GRESS, AND RATIFIED BY THE LEGISLATURES OF THE SEVERAL STATES, PURSUANT TO THE FIFTH ARTICLE OF THE ORIGINAL CONSTITU- TION.

ARTICLE [I.]<sup>a</sup>

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

ARTICLE [II.]

A well regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be infringed.

ARTICLE [III.]

No Soldier shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house, without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

<sup>a</sup> The first ten amendments were proposed by Congress on Sept. 25, 1789 and ratified by sufficient states by Dec. 15, 1791.

ARTICLE [IV.]

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

ARTICLE [V.]

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

ARTICLE [VI.]

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defence.

ARTICLE [VII.]

In Suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise reexamined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.

ARTICLE [VIII.]

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

ARTICLE [IX.]

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

ARTICLE [X.]

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

[ARTICLE XI.]<sup>a</sup>

The Judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State.

<sup>a</sup> Proposed Sept. 5, 1794, and declared ratified Jan. 8, 1798.

[ARTICLE XII.]<sup>4</sup>

The Electors shall meet in their respective states, and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate;—The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted;—The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by states, the representation from each state having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.——The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President, shall be the Vice-President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list, the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

ARTICLE XIII.<sup>5</sup>

SECTION 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

SECTION 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

ARTICLE XIV.<sup>6</sup>

SECTION 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

SECTION 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the Executive and Judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

<sup>4</sup> Proposed Dec. 12, 1803, and declared ratified Sept. 25, 1804.

<sup>5</sup> Proposed Feb. 1, 1865, and declared ratified Dec. 18, 1865.

<sup>6</sup> Proposed June 16, 1866, and declared ratified July 21, 1868.

SECTION 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

SECTION 4. The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations and claims shall be held illegal and void.

SECTION 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

ARTICLE XV.*

SECTION 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

SECTION 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

ARTICLE XVI.*

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

ARTICLE [XVII.]†

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution.

* Proposed Feb. 27, 1869, and declared ratified March 30, 1870.

† Proposed July 12, 1909, and declared ratified Feb. 25, 1913.

‡ Proposed May 16, 1912, and declared ratified May 31, 1913.

ARTICLE [XVIII.]<sup>10</sup>

SECTION 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

SEC. 2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

ARTICLE [XIX.]<sup>11</sup>

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

ARTICLE [XX.]<sup>12</sup>

SECTION 1. The terms of the President and Vice President shall end, at noon on the 20th day of January, and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the 3d day of January, of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

SEC. 2. The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall begin at noon on the 3d day of January, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

SEC. 3. If, at the time fixed for the beginning of the term of the President, the President elect shall have died, the Vice President elect shall become President. If a President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice President elect shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

SEC. 4. The Congress may by law provide for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the House of Representatives may choose a President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them, and for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the Senate may choose a Vice President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them.

SEC. 5. Sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on the 15th day of October following the ratification of this article.

SEC. 6. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission.

<sup>10</sup> Proposed Dec. 3, 1917, and declared ratified Jan. 29, 1919.

<sup>11</sup> Proposed May 19, 1919, and declared ratified Aug. 26, 1920.

<sup>12</sup> Proposed March 3, 1932, and declared ratified Feb. 6, 1933.

ARTICLE [XXI.]<sup>13</sup>

SECTION 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

ARTICLE [XXII.]<sup>14</sup>

SECTION 1. No person shall be elected to the office of the President more than twice, and no person who has held the office of President, or acted as President, for more than two years of a term to which some other person was elected President shall be elected to the office of the President more than once. But this Article shall not apply to any person holding the office of President when this Article was proposed by the Congress, and shall not prevent any person who may be holding the office of President, or acting as President, during the term within which this Article becomes operative from holding the office of President or acting as President during the remainder of such term.

SEC. 2. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress.

<sup>13</sup> Proposed Feb. 20, 1933, and declared ratified Dec. 5, 1933.

<sup>14</sup> Proposed March 24, 1947, and declared ratified March 1, 1951.

INDEX

References are to Pages.

A

ADMINISTRATIVE POWER,

- aliens, 718-720, 723-725.
- censorship, 924-929, 988-997.
- due process limitation, 699-709, 718-725, 728, 855-856.
- enforcement, 58-60.
- fact-finding, 75-76, 720-725, 728.
- hearings, 705-709, 718, 723-725.
- nature of, 138-143.
- penalties, imposition of, 720-723.
- rate-making, 89-90, 97, 855-856.
- tax and public debt collection, 699-709.
- zoning law variances, 840.

ADMISSION TO THE BAR,

See BAR, ADMISSION AND DISBARMENT.

ADVERSARY PROCEEDING,

See CASES AND CONTROVERSIES.

ADVERTISING,

- as free speech, 933.
- state regulation, 1048-1052.

ADVISORY OPINIONS, 57.

AFFECTED WITH A PUBLIC INTEREST,

See PUBLIC INTEREST, AFFECTED WITH A.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACTS, 394-403, 549-556.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION,

- affecting commerce, 528, 549-556.

ALIENS,

- detention, 332-339, 719.
- discrimination,
  - business licenses, 1125-1128, 1134-1136.
  - employment, 1129-1134.
  - land use and ownership, 1136-1139.
- due process protection, 332-341, 718-720, 723-725.
- enemy aliens, 439-447, 458.
- equal protection of the laws, 1125-1139.
- exclusion, 329-330, 332-339, 720-725.
- expulsion, 328-332, 339-340.
- nationals distinguished, 320.
- registration, 332, 339-340, 575.

References are to Pages.

ALLEGIANCE,

See also LOYALTY OATHS.

- flag salute, compulsory, 998-1005.
- naturalized citizens, 322-328.
- non-resident citizens, 328.
- oath of, 321.
- resident aliens, 314-320.

AMENDING POWER,

See CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS; POLITICAL QUESTIONS.

ANTI-TRUST LAWS,

- holding companies, 490-498.
- insurance business, 475-482.
- labor relations, 532-533.
- rule of reason, 497.
- state, 1040-1043.

APPEAL,

See also JUDICIAL REVIEW.

- criminal cases, 274, 734, 751.
  - by the state, 768-773.
- military cases, 431-438.
- not a right of due process, 734, 751.

APPORTIONMENT,

- Congressional, 70-71.
- taxation, 382-383.

ARBITRATION OF LABOR DISPUTES,

See LABOR RELATIONS.

ARMED FORCES,

See MILITARY COURTS; MILITARY LAW; MILITARY SERVICE, COMPULSORY; WAR POWER.

ARTICLES OF WAR, 433, 441-446.

ASSEMBLY, PEACEABLE,

- free speech protection, 943-950.

ATTORNEYS' FEES,

- statutory allowance, 1031-1036.

AVOIDANCE OF CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES,

See CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES.

B

BANKRUPTCY,

See INSOLVENCY LAWS.

BANKS,

- national, 355-367.
  - state regulation, 230-233, 830-834.
  - state taxation, 233-238, 366-367.

References are to Pages.

BAR, ADMISSION AND DISBARMENT, 60-61, 131.

BASEBALL,

not commerce, 482.

BILLS OF ATTAINDER,

loyalty oaths, 966-971.

BITUMINOUS COAL ACTS, 537.

BLUE SKY LAWS, 834.

BRIDGES AND DAMS,

federal regulation, 416-425, 557, 562.

BUILDING RESTRICTIONS,

See ZONING LAWS.

C

CASES AND CONTROVERSIES, 54-87.

CATHOLIC SCHOOLS,

state aid, 1006-1016.

CEMETERIES,

state regulation, 823-824.

CENSORSHIP,

See also FIRST AMENDMENT.

motion pictures, 924-929.

newspapers, 918-924.

public activities, 945-950, 988-997.

CERTIFICATES OF PUBLIC CONVENIENCE AND NECESSITY, 626-628, 630-634.

CERTIORARI, WRIT OF,

See U. S. SUPREME COURT.

CHAIN STORE TAX, 1056.

CHECKS AND BALANCES,

See SEPARATION OF POWERS.

CHILD LABOR,

federal regulation, 391-394, 543-544.

state regulation, 888.

CHILD LABOR AMENDMENT, 1228-1236.

CHILD LABOR TAX CASE, 391-394.

CHINESE,

See also ALIENS.

citizenship, 314-320.

equal protection of the laws, 1106, 1125-1128.

References are to Pages.

CHURCH AND STATE, SEPARATION OF,

See also RELIGION, FREEDOM OF.

Catholic schools, free transportation to, 1006-1016.
public schools, religious instruction, 1016-1024.

CITIES AND TOWNS,

legislative classification, 1029-1031.

CITIZENS,

state,

federal citizens distinguished, 343-349.
privileges and immunities, 283-297.
residents distinguished, 294, 295-297.

United States,

enemy belligerents, 444, 446-447.
exclusion from military areas, 449-458.
expatriation, 458-459.
military service, duty of, 426-431.
privileges and immunities, 341-354, 734, 752-759.

CITIZENSHIP,

birth, 314-321.

Chinese, 314-320.

Indians, 317, 320-321.

naturalization, 318-319.

denial and cancellation of, 321, 322-328, 340.

Negroes, 317, 320.

non-residents, 328.

women, 321, 351-354.

CIVIL LIBERTIES,

See also DUE PROCESS OF LAW; EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS; PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES.

denial of,

involuntary servitude, 1165-1172.

violence, 1072, 1076-1081.

equality in,

education, 1096, 1099-1112.

employment, 1129-1134.

housing, 1112-1125.

jury duty, 1071, 1088-1095.

licenses and permits, 1125-1128, 1134-1136.

public accommodations, 1062-1070, 1096-1099.

suffrage, 1071-1072, 1139-1164.

federal rights distinguished, 1070-1072.

Fifth Amendment protection, 1110-1112.

in U. S. Territories, 211-212.

private rights distinguished, 1062-1072.

separate but equal doctrine, 1096-1112.

CIVIL RIGHTS ACTS, 780, 1062-1072.

CLASSIFICATION,

See EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS; STATUTES; TAXATION.

References are to Pages.

CLAYTON ACT, 131-135.

CLEAR AND PRESENT DANGER, 908-909, 913-917, 933-943, 973-988.

CLEMENCY,

See EXECUTIVE POWER.

COLOR OF LAW, 1076-1080, 1154.

COMITY CLAUSE,

See PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES.

COMMERCE POWER,

See also CONGRESS; FOREIGN COMMERCE; INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

agriculture, 528, 549-556.
bridges and dams, 416-425, 557, 562.
child labor, 543-544.
commodity exchanges, 527.
common carriers, 474, 511-522, 567-575, 628.
concurrent, state and federal, 557-562, 570-575.
contract carriers, 474.
convict labor, 506-510, 587.
corporations, 490-496.
crime, 474-475, 498-501.
drummers, 486, 652-656.
due process limitation, 808-810.
electricity, 474, 603-607.
employers' liability, 511-514, 569.
fish and game, 596.
food and drugs, 562-567, 574-575, 577, 808-810.
gambling devices, 500-501.
insurance business, 289, 475-482.
intoxicating liquors, 472-474, 500-506.
labor, 482, 487-489, 506-516, 528-549, 569, 575, 895-896, 901-902.
manufacturing, 497.
milk, 527-528, 581-587, 588-595, 808-810.
mining, 537.
monopolies, 475-482, 490-498, 523-527.
motor vehicles, 498-501, 628.
navigation, 419, 463-470, 557-562.
negotiable instruments, 475.
newspapers, 538, 549, 923-924.
oil and gas, 474, 486, 595-596, 605-606.
oleomargarine, 575-577.
poultry trade, 536.
racial segregation, 596-599, 1098-1099.
radio broadcasting, 474, 924.
railroads, 511-522, 538-539, 567-569, 901.
sales of goods, 484-487, 497, 523-527, 549-556, 562-567, 575-577, 581-587.
shipping, coastal, 570-574.
steel industry, 528-536.
stockyards, 497, 523-527.
stolen goods, 474, 498-500.
telegraph messages, 482-483.
unfair competition, 498.

References are to Pages.

COMMERCE POWER—Continued.

wages and hours, 539-549, 895-896.
water power projects, 557.

COMMODITY EXCHANGES,

federal regulation, 527.

COMMON CARRIERS,

See also INTERSTATE COMMERCE; MOTOR VEHICLES; RAILROADS; RATE-MAKING.

in interstate commerce, 474, 511-522, 567-575, 628.
racial segregation, 1096-1099.
state regulation, 596-602, 607-624, 626-628, 630-634.

COMMON LAW,

in constitutional construction, 314-320, 701-702, 729-734, 850-851, 937-938.
in federal courts, 274-281.

COMPACT CLAUSE, 305-313.

COMPENSATION FOR PRIVATE PROPERTY,

See DUE PROCESS OF LAW; EMINENT DOMAIN.

COMPETITION, UNFAIR,

See ANTI-TRUST LAWS; UNFAIR COMPETITION.

CONDEMNATION,

See EMINENT DOMAIN; POLICE POWER.

CONFESSIONS, COERCED, 759-768.

CONFLICT OF LAWS,

penal statutes, 215-219.
statutes of limitation, 297-301.

CONFRONTATION OF WITNESSES,

right to,
criminal defendants, 752.
government employees, 972-973.

CONGRESS,

See also COMMERCE POWER; FEDERAL POWER; FOREIGN COMMERCE; INTERSTATE COMMERCE; LEGISLATIVE POWER; TAXATION; WAR POWER.
aliens, power over, 319-340, 439-447, 458, 719-725.
amending process, power over, 70, 1228-1236.
army power, 426-431.
commerce power,
agriculture, 528, 549-556.
business organization, 289, 475-482, 490-498.
common carriers, 474, 511-522, 567-575, 628.
communications, 474, 482-483, 538, 549, 923-924.
concurrent, 557-562, 570-575.
crime, 474-475, 498-501.
due process limitation, 808-810.
electricity and water power, 474, 557, 603-607.

References are to Pages.

CONGRESS—Continued.

- commerce power,
  - employers' liability, 208-210, 511-514, 569.
  - exclusive, 269-271, 470-472, 482-486, 517-522, 562-569, 574-575, 596-609.
  - food and drugs, 562-567, 574-575, 577, 808-810
  - industry and trade, 497, 523-536, 539-548.
  - intoxicating liquors, 472-474, 500-506.
  - intrastate activities, 472, 497, 514-515, 517-539, 544-549, 551-554.
  - labor, 482, 487-489, 506-516, 528-549, 569, 575, 895-896, 901-902.
  - mining, 537.
  - navigation, 419, 463-470, 557-562.
  - oil and gas, 474, 486, 595-596, 605-606.
  - price regulation, 527-528, 536, 549-556, 871-872.
  - railroads, 511-522, 567-569.
  - transportation, 474, 498-501, 511-522, 567-575, 628.
- counterfeiting, power to punish, 221-224.
- currency power, 367-380.
- delegation of power,
  - President, 166-172, 536.
  - states, 569.
- elections, power over, 1139-1142.
  - direct primary, 1146-1155.
- federal property, power to dispose of, 416-426.
- House Committee on Un-American Activities, 189-198.
- implied powers, 355-371.
- judiciary power,
  - special tribunals, creation of, 119-122, 124.
  - Supreme Court jurisdiction, 28-32, 54-57.
- militia power, 429-431.
- naturalization, power over, 319-321, 322-328.
- postal power,
  - due process limitation, 924.
- power granted by Thirteenth Amendment, 1069-1070.
- power granted by Fourteenth Amendment, 1062-1072.
- power granted by Fifteenth Amendment, 1139-1142.
- securities, power to regulate, 834.
- spending power, 394-416.
- states, power over,
  - court jurisdiction, 28, 215-219.
  - state action, 204-208.
  - taxation, 249-252, 255-256.
- tax power, 380-416.
- territories, power to govern, 208-212.
- war power, 426-462.

CONSCRIPTION,

See MILITARY SERVICE, COMPULSORY.

CONSERVATION OF NATURAL RESOURCES,

See NATURAL RESOURCES.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS,

- limitations on subject matter, 1226, 1228.
- pendency after submission, 1228-1236.

References are to Pages.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS—Continued.

ratification, 70, 1227-1236.
validity, 1225-1228.

CONSTITUTIONAL COURTS,

legislative courts distinguished, 57, 118-125.

CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES.

See also CASES AND CONTROVERSIES; FEDERAL QUESTION; JUDICIAL REVIEW; POLITICAL QUESTIONS; U. S. SUPREME COURT.

avoidance of, 35-46.
estoppel to raise, 75-76.
parties to,
    citizens, 71-74, 81-82.
    corporations, 425.
    necessary, 84-85.
    states, 76-87, 90-94, 426.
    taxpayers, 79-82, 1024.
    United States, 488-489.

CONTEMPT,

criminal,
    civil contempt distinguished, 131-135, 148-149.
    pardon, 144-148.
jury trial not a right of due process, 735-738.
power to punish,
    free speech limitation, 935-943.
    judicial, 60, 131-135, 148, 735-738.
    legislative, 179-189.

CONTRACT CARRIERS,

federal regulation, 474.
state regulation, 864.

CONTRACT CLAUSE,

impairment of contracts,
    breach of contract distinguished, 1180-1181.
    consent to suit, withdrawal by state, 1203.
    judicial action not prohibited, 1178-1180.
    insolvency laws, 1202-1203.
    mortgage moratorium laws, 1205-1219.
    police power, exercise of, 1181-1184, 1188-1193, 1196-1198.
    property, exemption from debt, 1203-1204, 1218.
    remedy, abolition of, 1198-1203.
    remedy and procedure, changes of, 1198-1205, 1218-1219.
    rent control, 1198.
    repeal of existing laws, 1219-1224.
    statute of limitations, change of, 1205, 1223-1224.
    statutory rates, increase by public utility, 1194-1196.
    taking distinguished, 1198.
    tax exemption, repeal of, 1187.
    value, decrease in, 1181-1184.
obligation of contract,
    existing laws at formation, 1198-1203, 1219-1224.
    statutory rates, 1194-1196.

References are to Pages.

CONTRACT CLAUSE—Continued.

- private contracts,
  - debt, 1203-1219.
  - riparian rights, 1196-1198.
- public contracts,
  - corporate charters, 1176-1178, 1184-1190.
  - debt, 1198-1203.
  - franchises, 1178, 1181-1184, 1190-1196.
  - interstate compacts, 1176.
  - judgments, 1177.
  - public office, 1177.
  - statutes, 1173-1178, 1181-1224.
    - gratuities distinguished, 1187-1188.
    - implied negative covenants, 1181-1184.
    - licenses distinguished, 1188-1190.
    - statutory liabilities, 1219-1224.
    - tax exemptions, 1184-1188.

CONTRACT, LIBERTY OF, 840-844, 856-871, 875-902.

CONVICT LABOR,

- federal regulation, 506-510, 587.

CORPORATIONS,

See also COMMERCE POWER; DUE PROCESS OF LAW; FOREIGN CORPORATIONS; STATES; TAXATION.

- as citizens, 286-290.
- as persons, 1057-1061.
- holding companies, 490-496.
- state regulation,
  - contract clause protection, 1176-1178, 1184-1193.
  - equal protection limitation, 1037-1038, 1057-1062.
  - stock ownership, 813-815.
- state taxation,
  - equal protection limitation, 1055-1056.
  - franchise tax, 639-640, 642, 661-662.
  - income tax, 663-665.

COUNSEL, RIGHT TO ASSISTANCE OF, 738-746.

COURT OF CLAIMS, 120, 124, 125-131.

COURT OF CUSTOMS AND PATENT APPEALS, 118-122, 124.

COURTS,

See also FEDERAL COURTS; LEGISLATIVE COURTS; JUDICIAL POWER; JUDICIAL REVIEW; STATE COURTS; U. S. SUPREME COURT.

- de facto, 108-109.

COURTS-MARTIAL,

See MILITARY COURTS.

CREDITORS' RIGHTS,

- contract clause protection, 1198-1224.

CRIME,

- in interstate commerce, 474-475, 498-501.

References are to Pages.

CRIMINAL ANARCHY AND SYNDICALISM, 902-917, 943-946.

CRIMINAL CASES,

- appeal, 274, 734, 751.
  - by the state, 768-773.
- comment on failure to testify, 752-759.
- confrontation of witnesses, 752.
- counsel, right to, 738-746.
- cruel and unusual punishment, 774.
- detention, unlawful, 760.
- double jeopardy, 768-774.
- due process of law, 718-720, 729-734, 738-789.
- fair trial, 746-752.
- forced confessions, 759-768.
- fraud by prosecutor, 760-761.
- grand jury, 720, 729-734.
- impartial judge, 751.
- judicial trial, 718-720.
- jury trial, 704, 734.
- pardon, 144-148.
- penal statutes, standard of guilt in, 786-789, 917, 981-982, 1076-1080.
- presence of defendant, 752.
- pre-sentence investigation, 752.
- public trial, 751.
- search and seizure, 775-786.
- self-incrimination, 752-759, 766-768.
- statutory presumptions, 789, 1165-1172.

CRIMINALS, HABITUAL,

- sterilization of, 1043-1047.

CRUEL AND UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT,

- whether protected by due process, 774.

CURRENT OF COMMERCE DOCTRINE, 497, 523-528, 531, 536, 647.

D

DEBT,

- legislative relief,
  - contract clause limitation, 1203-1219.
- personal service for,
  - involuntary servitude, 1165-1172.

DECLARATORY JUDGMENTS,

- constitutionality, 62-66.

DEFAMATION,

- not protected as free speech, 950-959.

DELEGATION OF POWER,

See CONGRESS; LEGISLATIVE POWER.

DENATURALIZATION,

See NATURALIZATION.

References are to Pages.

DEPORTATION,

See ALIENS.

DIRECT TAXES, 381-383.

DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT,

aliens, 1129-1134.

union members, 899-902.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,

status, 208-211.

DOUBLE JEOPARDY,

appeal by the state, 768-773.

discharge of jury before verdict, 773.

5th amendment not applicable to states, 272-274.

liquor prosecutions, 272-274.

mistrial, 774.

not protected by due process, 768-774.

DRAFT,

See MILITARY SERVICE, COMPULSORY.

DRED SCOTT DECISION, 317, 320.

DRUMMERS,

in interstate commerce, 486, 652-656.

DUE PROCESS OF LAW,

See also CIVIL LIBERTIES; FIFTH AMENDMENT;
FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT; STATES.

custom and tradition, effect of, 821-824.

definition, 351.

procedural,

administrative proceedings, 699-709, 718-725.

condemnation proceedings, 774, 829-830.

criminal cases, 718-720, 729-734, 738-786.

definition, 699-703, 729-734.

denial of,

counsel, failure to appoint, 743-746.

detention, unlawful, 760.

forced confession, 759-768.

fraud by prosecutor, 760-761.

mob coercion, 746-750.

search and seizure, unreasonable, 775-786.

essential,

confrontation of witnesses, 752.

counsel, assistance of, 738-746.

cruel and unusual punishment, protection against, 774.

fair trial, 746-752.

forced confession, exclusion of, 759-768.

judicial trial in criminal cases, 718-720.

jurisdiction of court, 710-713.

impartial judge, 751.

notice, 709-713.

presence of defendant, 752.

public trial, 751.

References are to Pages.

DUE PROCESS OF LAW—Continued.

- procedural,
  - non-essential,
    - appeal, 734, 751.
    - counsel, assistance of, 745.
    - double-jeopardy, protection, 768-774.
    - forced confession, exclusion, 768.
    - grand jury indictment, 729-734.
    - illegally-obtained evidence, exclusion, 775-781, 786.
    - jury trial, 704, 734, 735-738.
    - self-incrimination, privilege, 752-759, 766-768.
  - retroactive decisions, 713-717.
  - substantive due process distinguished, 704.
  - summary proceedings,
    - aliens, exclusion of, 723-725.
    - aliens, imprisonment of, 718-720.
    - attachment, 704.
    - condemnation of illegal property, 726-728.
    - contempt of court, 735-738.
    - penalties, imposition of, 720-723.
    - public debts, collection of, 699-704.
    - public nuisances, abatement of, 726-728.
    - residents, deportation of, 725.
  - tax assessments, 705-709, 713-718.
- right to,
  - aliens, 332-341, 718-720, 723-725.
  - criminal defendants, 718-720, 729-734, 738-789.
  - military prisoners, 431-438.
- substantive,
  - assembly, right of, 943-950.
  - business regulation, 802-807, 813-815, 824-825, 830-834, 840-844, 848-902.
  - church and state, separation of, 1006-1025.
  - contract, liberty of, 840-844, 856-871, 875-902.
  - contract rights, impairment of, 1203, 1219-1224.
  - education, 845-848, 1006-1024, 1110-1112.
  - penal statutes, 786-789, 917, 981-982, 1076-1080.
  - press, freedom of the, 742, 902-909, 918-924, 930-943, 950-960, 973-988.
  - price regulation, 863-871.
  - property, condemnation of, 726-728, 810-812, 830.
  - property, taking under eminent domain, 742-774, 816-823, 825-830.
  - property, use and ownership, 790-802, 810-815, 818, 821-830, 834-840.
  - rate-making, 848-856.
  - reasonable restraints,
    - bank deposits, guaranty fund, 830-834.
    - billboards, 840.
    - building restrictions, 840.
    - canvassing and soliciting, 992.
    - cemeteries, location of, 823-824.
    - contract carriers, 864.
    - diseased trees, 810-812.
    - employers' liability, 889.
    - employment agencies, 872-874.
    - employment, equality in, 896-902.
    - fees and commissions, 872-874.

References are to Pages.

DUE PROCESS OF LAW—Continued.

- substantive,
  - reasonable restraints,
    - filled milk, 808-810.
    - food and drugs, 802-805, 808-810, 813-816.
    - foreign insurance companies, 841, 844.
    - group defamation, 950-959.
    - industry, location of, 824-825, 834-840.
    - insurance business, 834, 863.
    - intoxicating liquors, 795-802.
    - loyalty oaths, 966-972.
    - milk prices, 864-871.
    - oleomargarine, 802-804.
    - pamphlet distribution, 950-959.
    - parades, 933.
    - party wall rights, 821-823.
    - picketing for unlawful purpose, 965-966.
    - public utility rates, 848-856, 864.
    - rent control, 862-863.
    - riparian rights, 790-794, 830.
    - speech and press, 902-917, 933, 950-960, 965-987, 992, 997, 1024-1025.
    - sterilization of defectives, 848.
    - street and park meetings, 997, 1024-1025.
    - subversive activities, 902-917, 966-987.
    - vaccination, compulsory, 847-848.
    - wages and hours, 875-879, 886-896.
    - worthless securities, 834.
- religion, freedom of, 988-1025.
- speech, freedom of, 742, 902-917, 924-943, 960-988.
- statutory presumptions, 789.
- tax laws, 651-652, 707-708, 804.
- thought, freedom of, 998-1005.
- unreasonable restraints,
  - breach of peace statutes, 992-994.
  - canvassing and soliciting, 930-933, 988-997.
  - corporate stock, ownership of, 813-815.
  - employment agencies, 815.
  - fees and commissions, 815, 863.
  - flag salute, compulsory, 998-1005.
  - foreign contracts, making and performance, 840-844.
  - foreign languages, instruction in, 845-847.
  - gasoline prices, 864.
  - ice, manufacture of, 864.
  - milk prices, 863.
  - mining rights, 825-829.
  - pamphlet distribution, 930-933, 996.
  - peaceful picketing, 960-966.
  - public meetings, 943-950.
  - public school attendance, compulsory, 848.
  - religion, freedom of, 988-1005, 1016-1024.
  - shoddy in bedding, use of, 805-807.
  - speech and press, 918-943, 946-950, 960-966, 988-997.
  - wages and hours, 856-862, 879-886, 899-900.
  - weights and measures, 815-816.

References are to Pages

E

EDUCATION,

- racial segregation, 1096, 1099-1112.
- state regulation,
  - church schools, aid to, 1006-1016.
  - flag salute, compulsory, 998-1005.
  - foreign language instruction, 845-847.
  - religious instruction, 1016-1024.
  - school attendance, 848.

EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT,

See also INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

- validity, 1225-1226.

ELECTIONS,

See SUFFRAGE.

ELECTRIC POWER,

- in interstate commerce, 474.
- state regulation, 603-607.

EMERGENCY POWERS,

See PRESIDENT; WAR POWER.

EMERGENCY PRICE CONTROL ACT OF 1942, 215-219, 462.

EMINENT DOMAIN,

- contract clause not a limitation, 1198.
- federal power, 219-221.
- just compensation,
  - due process protection, 742, 774, 816-818, 829-830.
  - losses, federal liability for, 819, 830.
- police power distinguished, 790-795, 798-799, 819-821, 825-830.
- property subject to,
  - contract rights, 819.
  - easements, 816-818.
  - security interests, 818.
  - sub-surface rights, 825-829.
- taking,
  - airplanes, low-flying, 830.
  - condemnation for public improvements, 816-818.
  - consequential loss distinguished, 819-821.
  - definition, 818, 819-821.
  - direct appropriation, 819-821, 830.
  - excessive regulation, 825-829.
  - reciprocity of advantage rule, 822, 827, 829.
  - regulation of use distinguished, 825-830.
- valuation,
  - question of fact, 817-818.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY,

- federal regulation, 208-210, 511-514, 569.
- state regulation, 889.

References are to Pages.

EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES,
state regulation, 815, 872-874.

EMPLOYMENT, DISCRIMINATION IN,
See DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT.

EQUALITY OF STATES, 204-208.

EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS,
classification,
advertising, 1048-1052.
agriculture, 1040-1043.
aliens, 1129-1139.
corporations, 1037-1038.
criminals, 1043-1047.
foreign corporations, 1057-1062.
non-residents, 1035-1036.
railroads, 1031-1035, 1036-1037.
women, 1029-1031.
court jurisdiction and procedure, 1026-1029.
discrimination,
race and national origin, 1062-1164.
exceptions and exemptions, 1029-1031, 1038-1043.
within the jurisdiction, 1057-1062.

EQUITY JURISDICTION, FEDERAL,
See FEDERAL COURTS; INJUNCTIONS; U. S. SUPREME COURT.

ERIE DOCTRINE, 274-281.

ERROR, WRIT OF,
See U. S. SUPREME COURT.

ESPIONAGE ACT OF 1917, 909.

ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, See CHURCH AND STATE, SEPARATION OF.

ESTATE TAX,
See SUCCESSION TAX.

EXCISE TAX,
See also TAXATION.
definition, 384-385.

EXECUTIVE AGREEMENTS,
See PRESIDENT; TREATY POWER.

EXECUTIVE POWER,
See also ADMINISTRATIVE POWER; PRESIDENT; TREATY POWER; WAR POWER. judicial control over, 135-138, 149-166, 301-305.
martial law, proclamation of, 448-449.
pardon, 144-148.
subversive groups, designation of, 973.
veto, 149.

EXHAUSTION OF STATE JUDICIAL REMEDIES, 53-54.

References are to Pages.

EXPORTS,

See also IMPORTS; FOREIGN COMMERCE.

state taxation, 640-642.

EXTRADITION,

See FUGITIVES FROM JUSTICE; INTERSTATE RELATIONS.

F

FAIR HEARING,

due process protection, 705-709, 718, 723-725.

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT, 539-549, 895-896.

FEDERAL ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE ACT, 728-729.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934, 785, 924.

FEDERAL COURTS,

See also COURT OF CLAIMS; COURT OF CUSTOMS AND PATENT APPEALS; JUDICIAL POWER; JUDICIAL REVIEW; STATE COURTS; U. S. SUPREME COURT.

evidence, illegally obtained, 781-786.

habeas corpus, issuance of, 53, 305.

jurisdiction, 35-37, 109-112, 118-131.

condemnation suits, 221.

equity, 44-46, 94-97, 131-135, 1075.

removal from state courts, 16-20.

state law,

diversity cases, 274-281.

power to decide, 281.

FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT,

state compensation laws excluded, 569.

state court jurisdiction, 297.

FEDERAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND HARBOR WORKERS ACT, 569.

FEDERAL POWER,

See also ADMINISTRATIVE POWER; COMMERCE POWER; CONGRESS; EXECUTIVE POWER; JUDICIAL POWER; LEGISLATIVE POWER; PRESIDENT; SUPREMACY CLAUSE; TAXATION; TREATY POWER; U. S. SUPREME COURT; WAR POWER.

aliens, 328-341, 439-447, 458, 575, 718-725.

contracts, obligation of, 1203.

eminent domain, 219-221.

inherent, 224-228.

international law, 221-224.

interstate and foreign commerce, 463-698.

intrastate commerce, 472, 497, 514-515, 517-539, 544-549, 551-554.

non-resident citizens, 328.

police power, 498-510, 808-810, 819-821, 830, 973-987.

regulation,

commerce power, 269, 271, 289, 419, 463-575, 577, 596-602, 607-609, 628.

tax power, 386-403.

war power, 426-462.

References are to Pages.

FEDERAL POWER—Continued.

- states,
  - state action, power to compel, 301-312.
  - state activities, regulation of, 269-271.
  - state activities, taxation of, 241-242, 259-268.
  - state officers, taxation of, 238-242, 249.
- subversive activities, 973-987.
- supremacy, 172-179, 212-219, 233-238, 249-252, 355-367.

FEDERAL PREEMPTION,

See COMMERCE POWER; INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

FEDERAL QUESTION, 32-49, 50-54.

FEDERAL SAFETY APPLIANCE ACT, 269-271, 514-515, 567-569.

FEDERAL-STATE RELATIONS, 204-283, 341-349.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,

- as quasi-legislative body, 138-143.

FERGUSON-McCARRAN ACT OF 1945, 481-482.

FIFTEENTH AMENDMENT,

See also SUFFRAGE.

- not applicable to acts of individuals, 1139-1142.
- self-executing, 1144.
- state action,
  - election officials, 1071, 1142-1164.
  - political parties, 1156-1164.

FIFTH AMENDMENT,

See also DOUBLE JEOPARDY; DUE PROCESS OF LAW; EMINENT DOMAIN; GRAND JURY INDICTMENT; SELF-INCRIMINATION.

- contract impairment prohibited by, 1203.
- military trials, application to, 437, 444-447.
- not applicable to states, 272-274, 703.
- not embodied in 14th Amendment, 768-773.
- racial segregation in District of Columbia, 1110-1112.

FIRST AMENDMENT,

See also ASSEMBLY, PEACEABLE; CHURCH AND STATE, SEPARATION OF; PRESS, FREEDOM OF; RELIGION, FREEDOM OF; SPEECH, FREEDOM OF.

- clear and present danger test, 908-909, 913-917, 933-943, 973-988.
- freedom of thought, 998-1005.
- included in due process, 902-1025.
- preferred position doctrine, 933-934, 996.
- previous restraints on free expression,
  - censorship, 924-929, 988-997.
  - conspiracy statutes, 986.
  - injunctions, 918-923.
  - licenses and permits, 945-950, 988-997.
- protection a question of law, 981.

FISH AND GAME,

- state regulation, 596.

References are to Pages.

FOOD AND DRUGS,

in interstate commerce, 562-567, 574-575, 577, 808-810.
state regulation, 562-567, 575-577, 591-596, 802-805, 813-816.

FOREIGN COMMERCE,

See also COMMERCE POWER; CONGRESS; IMPORTS; INTERSTATE COMMERCE; STATES.
scope, 484.
state regulation, 566-567, 581, 599, 625.
state taxation, 566-567, 581, 634-642.

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS,

See also CORPORATIONS.

due process protection, 711-712.
state discrimination, 1057-1062.
state regulation, 281-283, 286-295, 475-482.
state taxation, 639-640, 647-652, 658-662.

FOREIGN RELATIONS,

See FEDERAL POWER; PRESIDENT; TREATY POWER; SOVEREIGNTY, EXTERNAL.

FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT,

See also CIVIL LIBERTIES; DUE PROCESS OF LAW; EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS; PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES.

federal bill of rights not included, 768-773.
liberty, definition of, 842-843.
not applicable to acts of individuals, 1062-1072, 1082-1088.
purpose, 316-318, 345, 347-348.
state action,
administrative practice, 1088-1095, 1102-1110, 1125-1128.
cities, 1073-1075, 1112-1114.
color of law, 1076-1080.
courts, 1071.
enforcement of restrictive covenants, 1115-1125.
police officers, 1076-1081.
state officers, illegal acts of, 1073-1076.
violation,
conspiracy, 1070-1072, 1081-1088.
inaction, 1081.

FOURTH AMENDMENT,

See also SEARCH AND SEIZURE.

included in due process, 775-781.

FRANCHISES,

contract clause, effect of, 1178, 1181-1184, 1190-1196.

FRANCHISE TAX, 639-640, 642, 661-662.

FRAUD,

police power protection, 802-804, 808-810, 815-816, 834, 988-997.

FRAZIER-LEMKE ACT OF 1934, 818.

FREE SPEECH,

See SPEECH, FREEDOM OF.

References are to Pages.

FRIENDLY SUITS,

See CASES AND CONTROVERSIES.

FUGITIVES FROM JUSTICE,

interstate commerce, 500.

interstate rendition, 301-305.

FULL FAITH AND CREDIT,

See CONFLICT OF LAWS; INTERSTATE RELATIONS

G

GAMBLING DEVICES,

in interstate commerce, 500-501.

GAMBLING TAX, 386-393, 780-781.

GENERAL WELFARE CLAUSE, 394-403, 414.

GOLD CLAUSE CONTRACTS, 371-380.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES,

See OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES.

GRAIN ELEVATORS,

state regulation, 848-855.

GRAIN FUTURES ACT OF 1922, 527.

GRAND JURY INDICTMENT,

infamous crime, 720.

not a right of due process, 729-734.

right to,

military personnel, 437, 444-447.

state criminal defendants, 729-734

GRANGER CASES, 855.

GROUP DEFAMATION,

not protected as free speech, 950-959.

H

HABEAS CORPUS,

federal courts, 53, 305.

military prisoners, 431-438, 442.

state courts, 53-54.

state prisoners, 746-750.

suspension of, 448-449.

HATCH ACT, 971.

HIGHWAYS,

state regulation, 621, 626-634, 710, 818.

HOLDING COMPANIES,

See ANTI-TRUST LAWS; MONOPOLIES.

References are to Pages.

HOUSING,

racial segregation, 1112-1125.

I

IMMIGRATION,

See ALIENS.

IMMIGRATION AND NATIONALITY ACT OF 1952, 321, 1139.

IMMUNITY FROM SUIT,

legislators, 198-203.

states, 90-94.

IMMUNITY FROM TAXATION,

See FEDERAL POWER; FOREIGN COMMERCE; INTERSTATE COMMERCE; STATES; TAXATION.

IMPLIED POWER,

Congress, 355-371.

IMPORT-EXPORT CLAUSE,

See EXPORTS; FOREIGN COMMERCE; IMPORTS; STATES; TAXATION.

IMPORTS,

federal power exclusive, 271.

state taxation, 566-567, 581, 634-640.

INCOME TAX,

See also TAXATION.

federal,

state employees, 238-242.

state,

gross income, 640-642, 688-690.

federal employees, 242-249.

net income, 663-665.

16th Amendment, effect of, 383.

INDIANS,

citizenship, 317, 320-321.

INDICTMENT,

See GRAND JURY INDICTMENT.

INDIRECT TAXES,

See TAXATION.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS,

See LABOR RELATIONS.

INDUSTRY AND TRADE, LOCATION OF,

state regulation, 824-825, 834-840.

INHERENT POWER,

federal, 224-228.

judicial, 133-135.

President, 149-166.

References are to Pages.

INHERITANCE TAX,

See SUCCESSION TAX.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM, 66-70.

INJUNCTIONS,

- executive action, 135-137.
- federal officers, 97.
- illegally-obtained evidence, 780.
- interstate commerce, interference with, 487-489.
- labor disputes, 135, 487-489, 575, 964-966.
- liquor prosecutions, 737-738.
- newspapers, suppression of, 918-923.
- state officers, 90-96, 1075.
- state statutes, enforcement of, 82-94, 1073-1075, 1130.

INSOLVENCY LAWS,

- contract clause limitation, 1202-1219.
- due process limitation, 818.
- reasonable exercise of police power, 830-834.

INSPECTION AND QUARANTINE LAWS,

- obstructing commerce, 574, 578-581, 591-596.

INSULAR POSSESSIONS,

See TERRITORIES.

INSURANCE BUSINESS,

- as commerce, 289, 475-482.
- state regulation, 834, 863.

INTERGOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS,

See FEDERAL-STATE RELATIONS; INTERSTATE RELATIONS; SUPREMACY CLAUSE; TAXATION.

INTERNATIONAL LAW,

See FEDERAL POWER; LAW OF WAR; SOVEREIGNTY, EXTERNAL; TREATY POWER.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE,

See also COMMERCE POWER; CONGRESS; FOREIGN COMMERCE; STATES.
"affecting commerce," 528-539, 548.

burdens and obstructions,

- combinations in restraint of trade, 475-482, 490-498, 523-527.
- federal administrative regulation, 523-539.
- injunctive relief, 487-489, 498.
- racial segregation, 1098-1099.
- state court jurisdiction, 626.
- state regulation,
  - highway safety laws, 609-612.
  - inspection and quarantine laws, 574, 578-581, 591-595.
  - motor carriers, 626-628.
  - natural resources, 595-596.
  - price control, 581-591.
  - rate-making, 599-607.
  - train limit laws, 612-624.

References are to Pages.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE—Continued.

- burdens and obstructions,
  - state taxation,
    - goods in transit, 643-647.
    - gross receipts tax, 688-698.
    - privilege taxes, 652-657, 659-662, 665-668, 697-698.
    - sales tax, 685-687.
- continuity of commerce,
  - commencement, 484-486, 643-647.
  - termination, 486-487, 642-643, 647.
- definition of commerce, 463-472, 530-531.
  - intrastate commerce distinguished, 657-659.
- incidents of, 484-487, 497, 523-527.
- "occupation of the field," 567, 575.
- price regulation,
  - milk prices, 527-528, 581-587, 588-590.
  - poultry prices, 536.
  - wheat prices, 549-556.
- "production for commerce," 544-545, 549, 551-554.
- prohibition of traffic,
  - fugitives from justice, 500.
  - gambling devices, 500-501.
  - impure food and drugs, 562-567, 808-810.
  - intoxicating liquors, 472-474, 500-506.
  - kidnapped persons, 500.
  - products of,
    - child labor, 543-544.
    - convict labor, 506-510, 587.
    - sub-standard labor, 539-548.
  - stolen goods, 474, 498-500.
  - women, 474.
- sales,
  - adulterated and misbranded goods, 562-567.
  - agricultural marketing quotas, 549-556.
  - by sample, 652-657.
  - current of commerce, in the, 497, 523-527.
  - incidents of commerce, 484-487.
  - livestock, 523-527.
  - original package sales, 505, 562-567, 575-577, 581-587.
- state regulation, 463-634.
- state taxation, 486, 642-698.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT, 496, 518-519, 602.

INTERSTATE RELATIONS,

See also TAXATION.

- compacts, 305-313.
- full faith and credit, 313.
- privileges and immunities, 283-301.
- rendition, 301-305.

INTERSTATE RENDITION,

See FUGITIVES FROM JUSTICE; INTERSTATE RELATIONS.

References are to Pages.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS,

- 18th Amendment,
  - double jeopardy, 272-274.
  - state and federal power, 272-274.
- injunctions, 737-738.
- interstate commerce, 472-474, 500-506.
- state regulation,
  - not limited by commerce clause, 506.
  - not limited by due process, 795-802.

INTRASTATE COMMERCE,

- federal regulation, 472, 497, 514-515, 517-539, 544-549, 551-554.

INVOLUNTARY SERVITUDE,

- compulsory military service distinguished, 430-431.
- personal service for debt, 1165-1172.

J

JUDGMENTS,

- due process limitation, 816-818.

JUDICIAL POWER,

See also CASES AND CONTROVERSIES; FEDERAL COURTS; JUDICIAL REVIEW; POLITICAL QUESTIONS; STATE COURTS; U. S. SUPREME COURT.

- advisory opinions, 57.
- bar, admission and disbarment, 60-61, 131.
- cases and controversies, 54-87.
- contempt, punishment of, 60, 131-135, 148, 735-738.
  - free speech limitation, 935-943.
- executive action, compulsion of, 135-138, 301-305.
- inherent, 133-135.
- jurisdiction a requirement of due process, 710-713
- legislative control, 28-32, 54-57, 118-131, 215-219, 1026-1029.
- rules of procedure, 125.

JUDICIAL REVIEW

See also JUDICIAL POWER; U. S. SUPREME COURT.

- administrative fact-finding, 75-76, 720-725, 728.
- aliens,
  - detention, 458.
  - exclusion and expulsion, 330, 332-339, 458.
- amending process, 70, 1228-1236.
- executive power of the President, 135-138, 149-166.
- exhaustion of state remedies, 53-54.
- legislative classification, 1026-1062, 1129-1139.
- legislative courts, 124, 130.
- military courts, 431-438.
- nature and development, 1-117.
- rate-making, 89-90, 97, 855-856.
- restraints on free expression, 902-1025.
- state constitutions, 24-28.
- statutes, 1-10, 21-24, 54-57.

References are to Pages.

JUDICIAL TRIAL,

criminal cases, 718-720

JURY DUTY, EXCLUSION FROM, 1071, 1088-1095.

JURY TRIAL,

contempt proceedings, 735-738.
directed verdict, 735.
equity courts, 131-135.
impartial jury, 1095.
military courts, 437, 444-447.
not a federal privilege or immunity, 734.
not a right of due process, 704, 734.
unanimous verdict, 734.
waiver of, 734.

JUSTICIABLE QUESTION,

See CASES AND CONTROVERSIES; POLITICAL QUESTIONS.

K

KU KLUX ACT, 1071, 1083-1086.

L

LABOR RELATIONS,

See also STRIKES; WAGES AND HOURS; YELLOW-DOG CONTRACTS.

affecting commerce, 487-489, 575.
federal regulation, 482, 487-489, 506-516, 528-549, 569, 575, 895-896, 901-902.
state regulation,
    anti-closed shop laws, 896-901.
    compulsory arbitration, 575, 856-862.
    discrimination against union members, 899-902.
    liberty of contract, interference with, 856-862, 875-902.
    picketing, peaceful, 960-966.
    picketing, stranger, 964-965.

LABOR UNIONS,

federal regulation,
    non-communist affidavits, 971-972.
state regulation,
    free speech limitation, 946-950.

LAW OF NATIONS,

See CONGRESS; FEDERAL POWER; LAW OF WAR; TREATY POWER.

LAW OF WAR, 439-449.

LEGAL TENDER CASES, 367, 371.

LEGISLATIVE COURTS,

constitutional courts distinguished, 57, 118-125.

LEGISLATIVE IMMUNITY,

See IMMUNITY FROM SUIT.

References are to Pages.

LEGISLATIVE POWER,

- classification,
  - equal protection limitation, 1026-1062, 1129-1139.
  - presumption of reasonableness, 1036-1038.
- contempt, punishment of, 179-189.
- contracts, impairment of, 1173-1178, 1181-1193, 1196-1224.
- delegation,
  - administrative bodies, 203.
  - executive department, 166-172, 536.
  - interstate agencies, 305-312.
- divorces, granting of, 131.
- implied, 179-183.
- investigative, 179-183, 189-203.
- rate-making, 87-90, 848-856, 863-864.
- reasonable exercise,
  - determination as conclusive, 902-917, 950-959, 971-972.
  - determination as non-conclusive, 918-934, 943-945, 960-964, 966-971, 973-987.
- restraints on free expression, 902-988.
- retroactive laws, 1203-1204, 1218, 1219-1224.

LIBERTY OF CONTRACT,

See CONTRACT, LIBERTY OF.

LIBERTY OF SPEECH AND PRESS,

See PRESS, FREEDOM OF THE; SPEECH, FREEDOM OF.

LICENSE TAX,

- state, 652-656, 995-996.

LOYALTY OATHS, 966-971.

M

MANDAMUS,

See U. S. SUPREME COURT.

MANN ACT, 474.

MANUFACTURING,

- as commerce, 497.

MARTIAL LAW, 448-449.

See also MILITARY COURTS; WAR POWER.

MASTER AND SERVANT,

See EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY; LABOR RELATIONS; WAGES AND HOURS;
WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

MEAT INDUSTRY AND TRADE,

- federal regulation, 497, 523-527.

MIGRATORY BIRD TREATY ACT, 172-175.

MILITARY COURTS,

- jurisdiction, 438, 439-449.
- occupation courts, 438.

References are to Pages.

MILITARY LAW,

civil law distinguished, 431-449.

MILITARY POWER,

See WAR POWER.

MILITARY SERVICE, COMPULSORY, 426-431.

MILK,

federal regulation, 527-528, 581-595, 808-810.

state regulation, 581-595.

prices, 581-591, 863, 864-871.

MINIMUM WAGE,

See WAGES AND HOURS.

MINING,

as commerce, 537

state regulation, 825-829.

MINISTERIAL ACTS,

discretionary acts distinguished, 136.

MISCEGENATION STATUTES,

unconstitutionality, 1125.

MONOPOLIES,

obstructing commerce, 475-482, 490-498, 523-527.

state regulation, 1040-1043.

MOTION PICTURES,

free speech protection, 924-929.

MOTOR CARRIERS,

state taxation, 665-668.

MOTOR VEHICLES,

in interstate commerce, 498-501, 628.

state regulation, 621, 626-634.

non-resident motorists, 709-713.

MUNICIPAL ORDINANCES,

See STATUTES.

N

NATIONAL BANKS,

See BANKS.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY ACT OF 1933, 536.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT, 528-539, 901-902.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT, 737-738.

NATIONALS,

citizens and aliens distinguished, 320-321.

expulsion, 340-341.

References are to Pages.

NATURAL GAS,

See OIL AND GAS.

NATURALIZATION,

denial and cancellation, 321, 322-328, 340.

NATURAL RESOURCES,

as common property, 1134.

state conservation, 595-596, 1038-1040.

NAVIGATION,

as commerce, 419, 463-470, 557-562.

NECESSARY AND PROPER CLAUSE, 355-366.

NEGROES,

citizenship, 317, 320.

contract rights, 1072.

exclusion from juries, 1071, 1088-1094.

lynching and violence, 1072, 1080.

segregation,

common carriers, 1096-1099.

hotels and theaters, 1062-1070.

housing, 1112-1125.

public schools, 1096, 1105, 1107-1112.

universities, 1099-1106.

suffrage, denial of, 354, 1071-1072, 1139-1164.

grandfather clauses, 1142-1146.

literacy tests, 1142-1146.

poll tax, 1146.

white primary, 1146-1164.

NEWSPAPERS,

See also PRESS, FREEDOM OF THE.

federal regulation, 538, 549, 923-924.

judicial regulation by contempt power, 935-943.

state regulation, 918-923.

NINETEENTH AMENDMENT,

See also SUFFRAGE.

validity, 1226-1228.

NON-RESIDENTS,

citizenship, 328.

due process protection, 709-713.

equal protection of the laws, 1035-1036.

NORRIS-LA GUARDIA ACT, 135, 902.

NUISANCES, ABATEMENT OF,

due process of law, 726-728.

O

OCCUPATION OF THE FIELD,

See INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

References are to Pages.

OFFICERS,

- de facto, 97-99, 102-108.
- liability of, 99-102.
- state,
  - color of law, 1076-1080, 1154.
  - illegal acts,
    - as state action, 1073-1076.
    - federal criminal jurisdiction, 1080.
    - federal equity jurisdiction, 1075.
- suits against, 90-96, 1075.

OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES,

- federal,
  - tenure of office, 138-143.
  - loyalty dismissals, 972-973.
- loyalty oaths, 966-971.
- state,
  - contract clause protection, 1177.

OIL AND GAS,

- federal regulation, 474, 486, 662, 697-698.
- state regulation, 595-596, 605-606, 1038-1040.

OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS INSURANCE, 412-416.

OLEOMARGARINE,

- federal regulation, 575-577.
- state regulation, 802-805.

ORIGINAL PACKAGE DOCTRINE, 505, 566-567, 581-587, 634-640.

P

PACKERS AND STOCKYARDS ACT OF 1921, 523-527.

PARDONS,

See EXECUTIVE POWER.

PEACABLE ASSEMBLY,

See ASSEMBLY, PEACABLE.

PENAL STATUTES,

See DUE PROCESS OF LAW; STATUTES.

PEONAGE, 1165-1172.

PICKETING,

- free speech protection, 960-966.

POLICE POWER,

See also STATES.

- federal, 498-510, 808-810, 819-821, 830.
- subversive activities, 973-987.
- state,
  - business and occupations, 802-807, 813-815, 824-825, 830-834, 840-844, 848-902.
  - commerce power, conflicts with, 570-575, 581-634.

References are to Pages.

POLICE POWER—Continued.

state,

- contract clause not a limitation, 1181-1184, 1188-1193, 1196-1198.
- definition, 790-795.
- education laws, 845-848, 1006-1024.
- eminent domain distinguished, 790-795, 798-799, 819-821, 825-830.
- food and drug laws, 802-805, 808-810, 813-816.
- health laws, 847-848, 879-886.
- peaceable assembly, 943-950.
- property, condemnation of, 726-728, 810-812, 830.
- property, use and ownership of, 790-802, 810-815, 818, 821-830, 834-840.
- religious activities, 988-1005.
- speech and press, 902-943, 946-971, 988-997.
- subversive activities, 902-917, 966-972.

POLITICAL QUESTIONS, 66-71, 78, 1228-1236.

POLL TAX, 1146.

PRESIDENT,

See also EXECUTIVE POWER; WAR POWER.

- appointment and removal powers, 138-143, 973.
- foreign relations, conduct of, 166-175.
- inherent powers, 149-166.
- judicial review of executive action, 135-138, 149-166.
- national emergency powers, 149-166.
- war powers, 431, 442, 448, 458.

PRESS, FREEDOM OF THE,

See also SPEECH, FREEDOM OF.

- censorship, 918-923.
- due process protection, 742, 918-987.
- limitations,
  - group defamation, 950-959.
  - subversive activities, 902-909, 973-987.
- pamphlet distribution, 930-933, 950-959.
- pending litigation, comment on, 935-943.
- postal power, limitation on, 924.
- previous restraints, 918-923, 986.
- public officials, criticism of, 918-923.

PRICE REGULATION,

See also COMMERCE POWER; DUE PROCESS OF LAW; RATE-MAKING; STATES.

- commerce, protection of, 527-528, 536-537, 549-556, 871-872.
- state, 581-591, 862-864.
- wartime price control, 459-462.

PRISONERS OF WAR, 443-444.

PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES,

See also CITIZENS.

- 14th Amendment not applicable to acts of individuals, 285-286.
- non-residents, 290-301.
- state citizens, 283-297.
- United States citizens, 341-354, 734, 752-759.

References are to Pages.

PRIVILEGE TAX, 656-662, 665-668, 690-698.

PROCEDURE,

See DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

PROHIBITION,

See INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

PROPERTY TAX,

See TAXATION.

PUBLIC INTEREST, AFFECTED WITH A, legislative declaration, conclusive, 864-871.

not conclusive, 856-862, 864.

origin of doctrine, 848-855.

test of economic legislation, abandoned as, 872-875.

PUBLIC OFFICERS,

See OFFICERS.

PUBLIC UTILITIES,

See COMMERCE POWER; COMMON CARRIERS; ELECTRIC POWER; OIL AND GAS; RAILROADS; RATE-MAKING.

Q

QUARANTINE LAWS,

See INSPECTION AND QUARANTINE LAWS.

R

RACIAL SEGREGATION,

common carriers, 1098-1099.

hotels and theaters, 1062-1070.

housing, 1112-1125.

restrictive covenants, 1114-1125.

interstate commerce, 596-599, 1098-1099.

public schools and universities, 1096, 1099-1112.

RADIO BROADCASTING,

as commerce, 474.

federal licensing, 924.

state taxation, 696.

RAILROADS,

federal regulation,

labor relations, 511-516, 538-539, 901.

rates, intrastate, 517-522.

safety measures, 514-515, 567-569.

state regulation,

assessment for improvements, 818.

due process limitation, 816-818.

full train crew laws, 620-621.

legislative classification, 1031-1037.

rates, 599-602, 855-856.

rights of way, condemnation of, 816-818.

References are to Pages.

RAILROADS—Continued.

- state regulation,
  - safety, 609-624.
  - train limit laws, 612-624.
- state taxation, 671-675, 688-690, 1052-1054.

RAILWAY LABOR ACT, 538-539, 901.

RATE-MAKING,

- administrative power, 89-90, 97, 855-856.
- due process limitation, 848-856, 863-864.
- federal power, 517-522, 602.
- legislative power, 848-856, 863-864.
- public interest, affected with, 848-855, 856-862, 864-875.
- state power, 599-607, 848-856, 863-864.
- statutory rates as contracts, 1194-1196.

RECONSTRUCTION ACTS, 135-137.

RELEASED TIME RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION, 1016-1024.

RELIGION, FREEDOM OF,

See also CHURCH AND STATE, SEPARATION OF; PRESS, FREEDOM OF THE;
SPEECH, FREEDOM OF.

- atheists, 1016-1024.
- conscientious objectors, 995.
- due process protection, 988-1025.
- Jehovah's Witnesses, 988-1005, 1024-1025.
- limitations,
  - fraud, 988-997.
  - public peace and safety, 997.
- Mormons, 995.
- previous restraints, 988-997.

RELOCATION OF JAPANESE-AMERICANS, 449-458.

REMOVAL OF ACTIONS, 16-20.

RENDITION,

See FUGITIVES FROM JUSTICE.

RENEGOTIATION ACT OF 1942, 462.

RENT CONTROL, 459-462, 862-863.

REPUBLICAN FORM OF GOVERNMENT, 66-71.

RESERVED POWERS,

See STATES.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE,

See ANTI-TRUST LAWS.

RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS, 1114-1125.

RETROACTIVE DECISIONS, 713-717.

RETROACTIVE LAWS, 386, 1203-1204, 1218, 1219-1224.

RIGHT TO WORK LAWS, 896-901.

References are to Pages.

RIPARIAN RIGHTS,

state regulation, 790-794, 830.

RULE-MAKING POWER,

See JUDICIAL POWER.

RULES OF DECISION ACT, 274-281.

S

SALES OF GOODS,

in interstate commerce, 484-487, 497, 523-527, 549-556, 562-567, 575-577, 581-587, 641, 652-657, 678-687.

SALES TAX, 641, 678-687.

SEARCH AND SEIZURE,

evidence, admissibility of, 775-786.

lawful arrest, incident to, 784-785.

wire-tapping, 785-786.

SEGREGATION,

See RACIAL SEGREGATION.

SELECTIVE SERVICE,

See MILITARY SERVICE, COMPULSORY.

SELF-INCRIMINATION,

5th Amendment not applicable to states, 274.

not a federal privilege or immunity, 752-758.

not a right of due process, 752-759, 766-768.

registration for federal gambling tax, 389-390, 392, 393.

witnesses before Congressional committees, 189-196.

SEPARABILITY OF STATUTES,

See STATUTES.

SEPARATE BUT EQUAL DOCTRINE, 1096-1112.

SEPARATION OF POWERS, 87-90, 118-172.

See also EXECUTIVE POWER; LEGISLATIVE POWER; JUDICIAL POWER.

SHERMAN ACT,

See ANTI-TRUST LAWS.

SHIPPING, COASTAL,

federal regulation, 570-574.

SMITH ACT, 973-987.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT, 403-416.

SOVEREIGNTY,

external, 169-175, 328-332.

federal and state, 356-358.

SPECIAL LEGISLATION,

See EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS; STATUTES.

References are to Pages.

SPEECH, FREEDOM OF,

See also FIRST AMENDMENT; PRESS, FREEDOM OF THE; RELIGION, FREEDOM OF.

- canvassing, 930-933.
- commercial advertising not privileged, 933.
- due process protection, 742, 918-987.
- limitation,
  - public peace and safety, 933, 945-946, 960-966.
  - subversive activities, 902-917, 966-987.
- motion pictures, censorship of, 924-929.
- parades, 933.
- picketing, 960-966.
- previous restraints, 924-929, 945-950, 986, 988-997.
- public meetings, 943-950.
- radio stations, licensing of, 924.
- witnesses before Congressional committees, 189-196.

SPENDING POWER,

See CONGRESS; GENERAL WELFARE CLAUSE.

STANDING TO SUE,

See CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES.

STATE ACTION,

See FIFTEENTH AMENDMENT; FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT.

STATE COURTS,

- contempt power,
  - free speech limitation, 935-943.
- federal law, enforcement of, 215-219, 297.
- habeas corpus in, 53-54.
- jurisdiction,
  - Congressional power over, 28, 215-219.
  - federal constitutional questions, 9, 24-28.
- jurisdiction and procedure, diversity of,
  - not a violation of equal protection, 1026-1029.
- legislative control, 1026-1029.
- review by U. S. Supreme Court, 32-35, 37-40, 760.

STATE OFFICERS,

See OFFICERS.

STATES,

- aid to church schools, 1006-1016.
- contracts, impairment of, 1173-1224.
- discrimination,
  - aliens, 1125-1139.
  - citizens of other states, 283-286, 300.
  - foreign corporations, 281-283, 1057-1062.
  - interstate commerce, 517-522, 578-587, 591-596, 652-657.
  - Negroes, 1062-1125.
  - non-resident motorists, 628-630.
  - non-residents, 290-301, 709-713, 1035-1036.
- equality, 204-208.
- immunity from suit, 90-94.
- inspection and quarantine laws, 468, 578-581, 591-595.

References are to Pages.

STATES—Continued.

- local creditors, protection of, 290-295.
- militia, 428-431.
- police power, 570-634, 726-728, 790-795, 798-972, 988-1024, 1181-1184, 1188-1193, 1196-1198.
- proprietary functions,
  - governmental functions distinguished, 241-242, 259-268.
- rate-making, 599-607, 848-856, 863-864.
- ratification of constitutional amendments, 70, 1227-1236.
- regulation,
  - advertising, 1048-1052.
  - aliens, 575.
  - animals and plants, 578-581, 810-812.
  - baking industry and trade, 879-886.
  - banks, 830-834.
  - bedding, manufacture of, 805-807.
  - billboards, 840.
  - building and zoning laws, 834-840.
  - canvassing and soliciting, 930-933, 988-997.
  - cemeteries, 823-824.
  - child labor, 888.
  - common carriers, 596-602, 607-624, 626-628, 630-634.
  - contract carriers, 864.
  - corporations,
    - equal protection limitation, 1037-1038.
    - stock ownership, 813-815.
  - courts, 1026-1029.
  - drug stores, 813-815.
  - education, 845-848, 998-1024.
  - electric power rates, 603-607.
  - employers' liability, 889.
  - employment agencies, 815, 872-874.
  - exports, interstate, 595-596.
  - federal government, activities affecting, 249, 256-258.
  - federal instrumentalities, 230-233.
  - federal officers, 228-230.
  - fees and commissions, 815, 863, 872-874.
  - food and drugs, 562-567, 575-577, 591-596, 802-805, 813-816.
  - foreign commerce, 566-567, 581, 599, 625.
  - foreign corporations, 286-295.
    - unconstitutional conditions, 281-283.
  - foreign insurance companies, 475-482, 841, 844.
  - grain elevators, 848-855.
  - group defamation, 950-959.
  - highways, 621, 626-634, 710, 818.
  - imports, interstate, 580-587, 591-595.
  - industry, location of, 824-825, 834-840.
  - insurance business, 834, 863.
  - interstate commerce, 463-634.
  - intoxicating liquors, 272-274, 506, 795-802.
  - labor relations,
    - anti-closed shop laws, 896-901.
    - compulsory arbitration, 575, 856-862.
    - discrimination in employment, 896-902.

References are to Pages.

STATES—Continued.

- regulation,
  - labor relations,
    - picketing, 960-966.
  - labor unions, 946-950.
  - land use and ownership, 1136-1139.
  - milk, 581-595.
  - mining, 825-829, 875-879.
  - monopolies, 1040-1043.
  - motion pictures, 924-929.
  - motor vehicles, 621, 626-634.
  - natural resources, 595-596, 605-606, 1038-1040, 1134, 1136.
  - newspapers, 918-923, 935-943.
  - oil and gas, 595-596, 605-606, 1038-1040.
  - olcomargarine, 802-804.
  - pamphlet distribution, 930-933, 950-959, 996.
  - parades, 933.
  - party walls, 821-823.
  - prices,
    - gasoline, 864.
    - milk, 581-591, 863, 864-871.
  - public meetings, 943-950.
  - railroads,
    - equal protection limitation, 1031-1037.
    - rates, 599-602, 855-856.
    - safety, 609-624.
  - religious activities, 988-997, 998-1005, 1024-1025.
  - rent, 862-863.
  - riparian rights, 790-794, 830.
  - securities, 834.
  - speech and press, 902-943, 946-971, 988-997.
  - street and park meetings, 997, 1024-1025.
  - street railways, 607-609.
  - sub-surface rights, 825-829.
  - subversive activities, 902-917, 966-972.
  - suffrage and elections, 1139-1164.
  - wages and hours, 856-862, 875-896, 899-900, 1029-1031.
  - water and drainage, 818, 830.
  - weights and measures, 815-816.
- reserved powers, 173, 224-228, 471.
- sovereignty, 356-358.
- suits against, 90-94.
  - state officers, 1075.
- surrender of power,
  - police power, 1181-1184, 1188-1193.
  - tax power, 1184-1187.
- taxation,
  - chain stores, 1056.
  - corporations, 639-640, 642, 661-665, 1055-1056.
  - due process limitation, 651-652, 713-718.
  - equal protection limitation, 1052-1057.
  - exemption from, 1184-1188.
  - exports, 640-642.
  - federal employees, 242-249.

References are to Pages.

STATES—Continued.

taxation,

- federal government, activities affecting, 241, 252-256.
- federal instrumentalities, 233-238, 249-252, 355-367.
- federal property, 254, 255, 268.
- foreign commerce, 566-567, 581, 634-642.
- foreign corporations, 639-640, 647-652, 658-662.
- foreign insurance companies, 481-482.
- franchise tax, 639-640, 642, 661-662.
- gasoline tax, 668-671.
- gross receipts, 640-642, 673, 684, 688-698.
- imports, 566-567, 581, 634-640.
- income, gross, 640-642, 688-690.
- income, net, 663-665.
- inspection fees, 581.
- interstate commerce, 486, 642-698.
  - "cumulative burdens" test, 690-697.
  - valuation and apportionment, 647-652, 663-665, 688-698.
- license tax, 652-656.
- motor carriers, 665-668.
- non-residents, 294-295, 1035-1036.
- privilege tax, 656-662, 665-668, 690-698.
- property tax,
  - situs, 486, 642-647.
  - valuation, 647-652.
- railroads, 671-675, 688-690, 1052-1054.
- sales tax, 641, 678-687.
- unemployment compensation tax, 889.
- use tax, 671-678, 686-687.

STATUTES,

classification,

- agriculture, 1040-1043.
  - aliens, 1129-1139.
  - cities and towns, 1029-1031.
  - court jurisdiction and procedure, 1026-1029.
  - criminals, 1043-1047.
  - employment, place and type, 1029-1031.
  - foreign corporations, 1057-1062.
  - hazardous activities, 1031-1035.
  - hotels and restaurants, 1029-1031.
  - monopolies, 1040-1043.
  - natural resources, 1038-1040.
  - non-residents, 1035-1036.
  - paid advertising, 1048-1052.
  - property,
    - farm land, 1037-1038.
    - railroad rights of way, 1036-1037.
  - women, 1029-1031.
- contract clause limitation, 1173-1178, 1181-1224.
- gratuities distinguished, 1187-1188.
  - implied negative covenants, 1181-1184.
  - insolvency laws, 1202-1203.

References are to Pages.

STATUTES—Continued.

- contract clause limitation,
  - licenses distinguished, 1188-1190.
  - mortgage moratorium laws, 1205-1219.
  - retroactive exemption from debt, 1203-1204, 1218.
  - retroactive repeal, 1219-1224.
  - statutory liabilities, 1219-1223.
  - tax exemptions, 1184-1188.
- due process limitation,
  - assembly, regulation of, 943-950.
  - business regulation, 802-807, 813-815, 824-825, 830-834, 840-844, 848-902.
  - education laws, 845-848, 1006-1024.
  - food and drug laws, 802-805, 808-810, 813-816.
  - health laws, 847-848, 879-886.
  - insolvency laws, 818, 830-834.
  - non-resident motorist statutes, 709-713.
  - penal statutes, 786-789, 917, 981-982, 1076-1080.
  - price regulation, 863-871.
  - property use and ownership laws, 790-795, 810-815, 818, 821-830, 834-840.
  - public utility rates, 848-856.
  - religious activities, regulation of, 988-1005, 1024-1025.
  - speech and press, regulation of, 742, 902-988.
  - tax laws, 651-652, 705-709, 804.
  - wage and hour regulation, 856-862, 879-886.
- injunctive relief against, 82-94, 1073-1075, 1130.
- mandatory words, 303.
- non-resident motorist statutes, 628-630, 709-713.
- repeal, retroactive,
  - contract clause limitation, 1219-1224.
- unconstitutionality, 1-10.
  - effects of, 97-117.
    - criminal cases, 99-104, 112.
  - partial, 115-117.
  - penal statutes, 786-789, 917, 981-982, 1076-1080.

STATUTORY PRESUMPTIONS,

- due process limitation, 789.
- equal protection limitation, 1138.
- 13th Amendment limitation, 1165-1172.

STERILIZATION,

- criminals, 1043-1047.
- defectives, 848.

STOCKYARDS,

- federal regulation, 497, 523-527.

STOLEN GOODS,

- in interstate commerce, 474, 498-500.

STREAM OF COMMERCE,

See CURRENT OF COMMERCE DOCTRINE.

STREET RAILWAYS,

- federal regulation, 607-609.

References are to Pages.

STRIKES,

affecting commerce, 487-489, 575.

SUBMERGED LANDS ACT OF 1953, 426.

SUBSTANTIVE DUE PROCESS,

See DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES,

membership in subversive groups, 910-917, 966-971.
revolution, advocacy of, 902-909, 973-987.

SUCCESSION TAX,

federal,
constitutionality, 380-382.

SUFFRAGE,

Congressional elections, 1146-1156.
denial,
    race, 354, 1071-1072, 1139-1164.
    sex, 351-354.
not a federal Constitutional right, 1142.
not a right of citizenship, 351-353.
primary elections, 1146-1164.

SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS,

See DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

SUPREMACY CLAUSE,

See also FEDERAL POWER.

state tax power, effect on, 233-238, 249-252, 355-367.
treaties, effect on, 172-179.

SUPREME COURT,

See U. S. SUPREME COURT.

T

TAFT-HARTLEY ACT, 971-972.

TAX AND PUBLIC DEBT COLLECTION,

due process of law, 704, 705-709.

TAXATION,

classification,
    chain stores, 1056.
    corporations, 1055-1056.
    railroads, 1052-1054.
    securities, 1055.
    trading stamps, use of, 1055.
    warehouses, 1055.
direct taxes,
    apportionment, 382-383.
    definition, 381, 383.
federal,
    estate tax, 386.

References are to Pages.

TAXATION—Continued.

- federal,
  - gift tax, 385.
  - occupational tax, 386-394.
  - processing tax, 394-403, 411-412.
  - regulation by, 386-403.
  - retroactive, 386.
  - social security tax, 403-416.
  - succession tax, 380-382.
- imposts, 634-642.
- indirect taxes,
  - definition, 381.
  - uniformity, 381-382.
- intergovernmental immunity, 238-256, 259-268.
- public purpose, 1006-1016.
- state,
  - chain stores, 1056.
  - domestic corporations, 663-665.
  - due process limitation, 651-652, 707-708, 713-718, 804.
  - exemption from, 1184-1188.
  - exports, 640-642.
  - foreign commerce, 566-567, 581, 634-642.
  - foreign corporations, 639-640, 647-652, 658-662.
  - franchise tax, 639-640, 642, 661-662.
  - gasoline tax, 668-671.
  - gross receipts, 640-642, 673, 684, 688-698.
  - imports, 566-567, 581, 634-640.
  - income, gross, 640-642, 688-690.
  - income, net, 663-665.
  - interstate commerce, 486, 642-698.
    - "cumulative burdens" test, 690-697.
    - valuation and apportionment, 647-652, 663-665, 688-698.
  - license tax, 652-656.
  - motor carriers, 665-668.
  - privilege tax, 656-662, 665-668, 690-698.
  - property tax,
    - situs, 486, 642-647.
    - valuation, 647-652.
  - railroads, 671-675, 688-690.
  - sales tax, 641, 678-687.
  - unemployment compensation tax, 889.
  - use tax, 671-678, 686-687.

TELEGRAPH MESSAGES,

- in interstate commerce, 482-483, 661-662.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY, 81-82, 143, 416-425.

TENTH AMENDMENT,

- as limitation on the amending power, 1226, 1228.

TERRITORIES,

- constitutional protection in, 211-212.
- power of Congress to govern, 208-211.

References are to Pages.

THIRTEENTH AMENDMENT,

See also INVOLUNTARY SERVITUDE.

applicable to act of individuals, 1070, 1172.

self-executing, 1069-1070.

THOUGHT, FREEDOM OF,

protected by First Amendment, 998-1005.

TIDELANDS OIL,

See SUBMERGED LANDS ACT OF 1953.

TRANSFER TAX,

See SUCCESSION TAX.

TRANSPORTATION ACT OF 1920, 516, 519-520.

TREASON, 458-459.

TREATIES,

conflict with Acts of Congress, 178.

conflict with state law, 176-178.

TREATY POWER, 172-179.

TRIAL BY JURY,

See JURY TRIAL.

TRUSTS, INDUSTRIAL,

See ANTI-TRUST LAWS; MONOPOLIES.

TWELFTH AMENDMENT, 1156.

TWENTY-FIRST AMENDMENT, 506.

U

UNCERTAINTY

criminal statutes, 786-789, 917, 981-982, 1076-1080.

UNCONSTITUTIONAL CONDITIONS,

foreign corporations, 281-283.

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION, 403-411, 889.

UNFAIR COMPETITION,

obstructing commerce, 498.

UNIFORM CODE OF MILITARY JUSTICE, 433.

UNITED NATIONS CHARTER, effect on internal law, 178, 1138-1139.

U. S. SUPREME COURT,

See also ADVISORY OPINIONS; CASES AND CONTROVERSIES; FEDERAL QUESTION; JUDICIAL POWER; JUDICIAL REVIEW; POLITICAL QUESTIONS.

constitutional issues, avoidance of, 35-46.

jurisdiction,

Acts of Congress, 1-10.

References are to Pages.

U. S. SUPREME COURT—Continued.

- jurisdiction,
  - appellate, 11-20, 28-32, 54-57, 124, 130.
  - certiorari, 18-19, 124.
  - Congressional power over, 28-32, 54-57.
  - interstate controversies, 305-313.
  - original, 31-32, 82-87, 227.
  - state constitutions, 305-312.
  - state court decisions, 32-35, 37-40, 760.
  - writ of error, 11-19, 32-35.
- mandamus, power of,
  - federal officers, 1-10.
  - state courts, 11-20.
  - state officers, 301-305.
- Reorganization bill of 1937, 10.

UNREASONABLE SEARCH AND SEIZURE,

See SEARCH AND SEIZURE.

USE TAX, 671-678, 686-687.

V

VACCINATION, COMPULSORY, 847-848.

W

WAGE AND HOUR LAW,

See FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT.

WAGES AND HOURS,

- federal regulation, 539-549, 895-896.
- state regulation, 856-862, 875-896, 899-900.

WAR CONTRACTS,

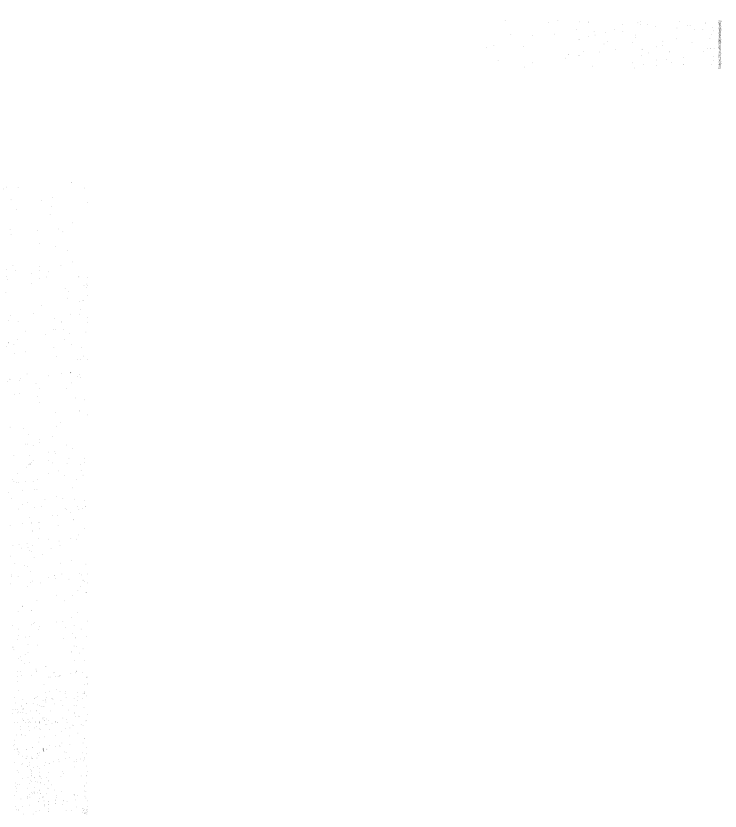

- renegotiation, 462.

WAR CRIMES, 439-449.

WAR POWER,

- citizens, exclusion from military areas, 449-458.
- military courts, 431-449.
- military service, compulsory, 426-431.
- President,
  - as commander in chief, 442.
  - blockade, declaration of, 431.
  - enemy aliens, detention and expulsion, 458.
  - habeas corpus, suspension of, 448.
  - militia, call to federal service, 431.
- price control, 462.
- rent control, 459-462.
- seizure of private property, 149-166.
- termination of, 459-462.
- war crimes, punishment of, 439-449.

WEBB-KENYON ACT, 501-506.

References are to Pages.

"WHITE PRIMARY," 1146-1164.

WHITE SLAVE TRAFFIC ACT, 474.

WILSON ACT, 501-506.

WIRE-TAPPING, 785-786.

WITNESSES,

See CONFRONTATION OF WITNESSES; SELF-INCRIMINATION; SPEECH, FREEDOM OF.

WOMEN,

citizenship, 321, 351-354.

equal protection of the laws, 1029-1031.

hours of labor, 886-888, 1029-1031.

suffrage, 351-354.

wages, 889-895.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION, 569, 889.

See also EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

WRIT OF CERTIORARI,

See U. S. SUPREME COURT.

WRIT OF ERROR,

See U. S. SUPREME COURT.

WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS,

See HABEAS CORPUS.

Y

YELLOW-DOG CONTRACTS, 24-28, 899, 901-902.

Z

ZONING LAWS,

reasonable exercise of police power, 834-840.

